+ Nation 130:186 F 12 '30 500w

"A book which is vague without being pervasive, indirect without being subtle, complicated without being organized, wasteful without being racy. As for the writing, it has an air of having been translated, rather badly, from a vivid original. The idiom is not English; the hopes and images have just that taste of flatness, of conventionality, which mars a journeyman's translation. The book is a poor expression of what must have been an intense vision —three hundred years in the life of a family. No better example could be found of a work of fiction which is not a novel. It is a large mouthful of predigested, but indigestible, history; it is a sociological commodity." R. P. Blackmur

— New Repub 62:53 F 26 '30 370w

"There are fine and moving things in the book, but there are too many long and not particularly significant tracts dividing them. Mr. Komroff can write, but he is not yet master of his material. And it is not really quite so simple to prove that aristocracy is degenerate."

— + New Statesman 35:308 Je 14 '30 250w

"As social philosophy, 'Coronet' does not stand the test; confused and illogical in its ideational content, it carries the reader round in a circle and lands him nowhere. But as a sort of historical panorama, unfolded with a skill that can arouse only admiration, Mr. Komroff's book deserves the readers it undoubtedly will have."

+ — N Y Times p9 Ja 12 '30 700w

"The story is always highly entertaining, and the transition from Paris to Russia and back again is not difficult. The seeping of new ideas into the family, bringing about the dilution of aristocratic pretentions, is admirably described. The Florentine chapter has everything in the concrete; the Napoleonic chapters are easily the best. But the characters are rarely realized." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p13 Ja 3 '30 1100w

"Manuel Komroff is a fine story teller and a master at descriptive detail. Komroff's irony is weak, but his handling of the age-old themes of greed, lust for power and vague idealism is powerful and effective. This reviewer found Coronet splendid reading but scarcely a triumph of the novelist's art."

+ — Outlook 154:69 Ja 8 '30 850w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:12 F '30

Pratt p40 summer '30

"This novel of adventure has the richness of background, the strength of individual characterization, the sweep, and narrative interest, that the revived historical romance of the last few years has too frequently lacked. It belongs with that excellent, and not sufficiently appreciated, story, 'General Crack,' and if it is by no means so original as the historical stories of the German, Feuchtwanger, it is closer to the ideal of pleasure giving which was the star of Sir Walter Scott." H. S. Canby

+ Sat R of Lit 6:633 Ja 11 '30 800w

"Color, drama, the absorbing play of intellects are skillfully combined to produce a story of generous proportions and genuine appeal. The work reveals effective development of atmosphere, strong description and good characterization."

+ Spring'd Republican p7e Mr 2 '30 500w

Times [London] Lit Sup p682 Ag 28 '30 650w

KÖNIG VON UND ZU WARTHAUSEN, FRIEDRICH KARL, freiherr von. See Koenig-Warthausen, F. K.

KOOTZ, SAMUEL MAURICE. Modern American painters. 64p,60pl $5 Brewer
2

759.1 Painting—United States. Painters, American 30-31297

A discussion of modern art movements and a brief history of American painting, with an analysis of the prevalent artistic dearth in general, is followed by individual studies, with reproductions from their work, of the following American painters of today: Peter Blume; Charles Demuth; Preston Dickinson; Arthur G. Dove; Marsden Hartley; Yasuo Kuniyoshi; John Marin; Georgia O'Keeffe; Charles Sheeler; Maurice Sterne; Max Weber.

Reviewed by Matthew Josephson
Books p5 Ja 4 '31 1150w

"Mr. Kootz is one of the critics who belligerently and explosively repeat the commonplaces of the modern movement as if they had never been said before. His book, however, has two valuable features. The first is the information which Mr. Kootz has personally gathered from the artists of whom he treats. The second is the wealth of illustration, consisting in this case of sixty well chosen and well printed reproductions of American paintings, most of which are now dispersed among private collections."

+ — New Repub 65:199 D 31 '30 180w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:14 D '30 20w

"The handsome illustrations in this book are preceded by a text which interestingly presents a limited point of view. The opening section is a clear summary of the immediate past of painting in France; it is too brief to tell the whole truth, but it drives straight at the heart of the matter. When, in the second section, Mr. Kootz turns to an analysis of the American background, he becomes censorious through insufficient historical knowledge. . . Of Americans before today he mentions only Eakins, Homer, and Ryder, and his treatment of them, lacking balance and finality, is only to argue against some temporary exaggerations at the time their works were shown at the Museum in quesion."

— + Sat R of Lit 7:482 D 27 '30 350w

KOPELOFF, NICHOLAS. Man vs. microbes. 311p il $5 Knopf

616.01 Bacteriology. Contagion and contagious diseases. Bacteria, Pathogenic. Micro-organisms 30-6969

"A survey of all important microbes, both disease-producing bacteria and those which are helpful to mankind, written for the information of the layman."—Publishers' Weekly

"Where the matter has not been touched up to make it striking or amusing it is admirable. The author has taken a great deal of trouble to bring so much intrinsically interesting and useful information together. A book of this scope is needed by every health officer. Schools and public libraries ought to have it. It will broaden the minds of those who read it, for its scope is broad. It is crammed with the knowledge with which man's relations with the microbes, good and bad, are carried on." G. A. Soper

+ Am J Pub Health 20:1164 O '30 320w

Booklist 27:143 D '30

"The book is of great value and shows complete thoroughness in its preparation. It could easily serve as a handbook in bacteriology in medical schools. I know of no other work of equal scope and up-to-dateness which covers the subject for the non-medical reader." Logan Clendening, M.D.

KOPELOFF, NICHOLAS—Continued

+ Books p6 Mr 30 '30 650w

"Here is an excellent account of man's microbe enemies, of the means which have been developed for fighting them, and of the extent to which their potencies for evil are likely to be overcome in the future. Addressing himself to the average reader rather than to the student or specialist, Dr. Kopeloff brings in a rich array of material for the illustration of his theme." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 24 '30 540w

Cleveland Open Shelf p109 Jl '30

"The author has packed a summary of current information upon the relation of man to microbes into a very small number of pages. The language is clear and readily understandable. The book is readable and will carry a good conception of certain phases of bacteriology to users who would not consult the technical literature of the subject." Charles Thom

+ Ind & Eng Chem 22:918 Ag '30 450w

"The present reviewer can give only a layman's opinion of this book, but since it kept her doctor an hour and a half from his patients without drawing from him any criticism of its accuracy, she feels justified in saying that it can be read with at least as much confidence as most works of popularized science—probably with more confidence." L. L. I.

+ Nation and Ath 47:737 S 13 '30 350w

"Dr. Kopeloff writes this kind of book for the reading of laymen very well indeed, with neat turns of phrase, simple but graphic explanation, easy style and a constant infusion of interest that make it a fascinating narrative."

+ N Y Times p27 Mr 9 '30 320w

Pratt p16 summer '30

Sat R 149:734 Je 7 '30 550w

KOPPANYI, THEODORE. Conquest of life. (Appleton new world of science ser.) 263p il $2 (6s) Appleton

570 Biology 30-23664

The fundamental concepts of biology, its most recent experiments and discoveries, and its relation to embryology, evolution, heredity, and physiology, told in readable and interesting style for the layman.

Booklist 27:192 Ja '31

"Told for the layman with skill, clarity, and readability."

+ J Home Econ 22:926 N '30 50w

"An authoritative account written in an extraordinarily interesting style of the story, the methods and the purposes of biology."

+ N Y Times p18 O 5 '30 420w

St Louis 28:292 D '30

KRAFT, CARL and STARKWEATHER, LOUIS POMEROY. Analysis of industrial securities. 307p $5 Ronald

332.6 Securities. Industry 30-8367

"The aim of the authors of this work was 'to develop a technique of analytical procedure for the determination of the value of industrial enterprises, which they have found satisfactory in the investment banking business.' The point of view of the investment analyst is taken. The distinctive features of this book are (1) a comparative study of the various methods in use for analyzing the credit or investment worth of a company, (2) the development of the authors' technique into a complete analysis, (3) a well-selected group of companies used to illustrate amply the method of analysis presented."—Ann Am Acad

"Those who invest their own funds or the funds of others should find this volume very helpful. It offers no easily applicable formula, but presents a sound method and procedure for investment analysis which if followed intelligently should go a long way toward avoiding excessive losses, too often the result of ill-considered investments." W. C. Schluter

+ Ann Am Acad 150:312 Jl '30 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p69 My '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:14 My '30 170w

St Louis 28:261 N '30

KRAPPE, ALEXANDER HAGGERTY. Science of folk-lore. 344p $4 Dial press [10s 6d Methuen]

398 Folklore

"A scholarly and comprehensive presentation of the science of folklore; a critical study by a man who has been a long-time and devoted student of his subject. In eighteen chapters the different forms of folklore are discussed, the characteristics and genesis of each form given and a statement of the various theories which have been proposed to account for the given forms."—Outlook

Boston Transcript p2 N 29 '30 480w

Nation and Ath 48:114 O 18 '30 80w

Nature 126:644 O 25 '30 280w

N Y Times p10 N 9 '30 320w

"It is likely that this book will arouse no little controversy among folklore students, as Mr. Krappe is sturdily individual in his point of view and his conclusions frequently are in marked disagreement with those of other schools."

Outlook 156:508 N 26 '30 100w

"A great deal of labour and some sound thought have gone to its composition, together with no little presumption and some rather crude humour. A science must ultimately deal with causes, and the author has rarely gone beyond generalities. In fact, no true science of folk-lore is yet possible. The arrangement of the book is well thought out, and the examples are mainly novel; the book will repay reading, even if it does not compel agreement by the instructed."

+ — Sat R 150:424 O 4 '30 100w

Spec 145:508 O 11 '30 180w

KRASNOV, PETR NIKOLAEVICH. Kostia the Cossack; tr. from the Russian by Olga Vitali and Natalie Tsytovitch; ed., with a foreword by Henry Irving Brock. 508p $3.50 Duffield

30-27764

Placing his setting in seventeenth century Russia, General Krassnoff follows, in this historical romance, the adventures of young Kostia of Moscow, who joins the Cossacks, fights the Turks, and rescues his charming sister, who has been kidnapped by the Tartars.

"The book is crowded with every sort of objective detail of color, movement, fabric, jewel—everything clearly and perfectly seen, even to the design embroidered on the hem of a gown. It is all minute and splendid and exact, so that you have only to read it to know how to costume, set and act any seventeenth century Russian ballet. The strained coincidences of plot and the too great elaboration of detail may tire you, but the clear, bright edge of every object and the thrilling pace of youthful adventure will delight on every page." Bernice Kenyon

+ — Books p14 D 7 '30 500w

"It is the reviewer's impression that 'Kostia' is a better knit and a more amusing story than most of the General's later works. . . It is all overpeppered, overcolored, overstuffed with heroicized Oriental sweets. Yet (with the exception of its first part with its too lengthy descriptions) it all reads amusingly, even very amusingly at times. General Krassnoff certainly has a felicitous sweep of imagination and a gift of making the reader believe (at least while one reads) in most fantastic situations and developments."

+ — N Y Times p17 N 2 '30 420w

"It is a good story for anybody who happens to be in the mood, and especially to be recommended for young people who want pleasantly to build up the background of that present-day Russia which is doing its best to pull up its roots and destroy its backgrounds altogether."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:241 O 18 '30 280w

KRASNOV, PETR NIKOLAEVICH. Yermak [2] the conqueror; tr. by Zinaida and Arthur Ruhl. 206p il $2 Duffield
30-27714

A stirring tale, for boys, of the burning of Moscow during the reign of Czar Ivan the Terrible in sixteenth century Russia, and of the conquest of Siberia by the Cossacks. The episodes are presented from the point of view of Fedya, a fourteen-year-old boy.

"The general is strongest when he is reporting what he has known and felt, the life and songs of his adored Cossacks, the tragedy of the revolution and the civil war in Russia. But he is still weak in craftsmanship and defective in imagination." Stephen Graham
— + Books p8 N 30 '30 420w

"There are stirring deeds that will hold the attention of readers in spite of the unfamiliarity of the setting. The book is convincing because the author is writing of the country and the heroic legends he knows and loves, and the tale is picturesque with the half-barbaric splendor of the times that he describes. The book is distinguished in appearance and the illustrations are particularly fine. For older boys and girls." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p26 D 14 '30 250w

"The excellent English translation by Zinaida and Arthur Ruhl, as well as the fine appearance of the book, well illustrated by William Siegel, will doubtless add much to its success." Nicholas Sergievsky
+ Sat R of Lit 7:325 N 15 '30 320w

Reviewed by Beulah Amidon
Survey 65:341 D 15 '30 40w

KRAUS, ARTHUR JAMES ISRAEL. Sick society. 206p $2 Univ. of Chicago press [9s Cambridge univ. press]
301 Sociology. Division of labor 30-11535

"The writer has divided his book into two parts or 'books,' entitled respectively 'Sick society' and 'Human efficiency or the sociology of the division of labor.' Part I consists largely of an analysis of the organizing force that dominates society. . . In the second half of the book we find an attempt to apply the concepts previously elaborated. The author sets forth a theory of human efficiency, which, if properly applied, would, in his estimation, alleviate human suffering. He introduces the concept 'atom of labor' and divides labor into such groups as detail workers, creative detail workers and idea workers. The proper coördination of these groups would go far toward eliminating the evils of 'sick society.'" —Am Econ R

Reviewed by G. B. Mangold
Am Econ R 20:159 Mr '30 300w

Reviewed by E. B. Reuter
Am J Soc 36:158 Jl '30 350w

St Louis 28:93 Ap '30

"The disfigurement of the book by needlessly obscure and unintelligible passages is a pity, because the author is much in earnest and has something to say. . . There are too many words that require explanation, and unfortunately the explanation suffers from the same defect."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p202 Mr 13 '30 850w

KREYMBORG, ALFRED, ed. Lyric America; an anthology of American poetry (1630-1930). 632p $5 Coward-McCann
811.08 American poetry—Collections 30-30795

An anthology of American poetry covering three centuries, which contains about six hundred poems selected from the best works of some two hundred and sixty poets.

Booklist 27:197 Ja '31
Boston Transcript p4 D 10 '30 600w
New Repub 65:146 D 17 '30 100w

"Naturally, Mr. Kreymborg, in spite of the generous space given to the younger groups in his new anthology, seems old-fashioned and a bit sentimental. The value of his present book rests upon the arrangement of the material that he has at hand. A general chronological order is followed, modified by an internal grouping of the poems into literary movements. In this respect his anthology is superior to any recent attempt to gather the entire range of American poetry into a single volume." Horace Gregory
+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 22 '30 700w

"Save for offering a rather larger prospectus than usual, more documentary evidence of an early Colonial poetry, a very inclusive list of those writing poetry in America today, this anthology has little reason for existence." E. L. Walton
— + N Y Times p17 D 21 '30 450w

"The book is packed with poetry that deserves reading. Alfred's name on it means that the poems have been chosen with intelligence." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p9 N 22 '30 480w

"Mr. Kreymborg has produced a solidly inclusive work. . . As this area has already been a good deal anthologized, Mr. Kreymborg is to be congratulated on having strictly exercised a balanced personal judgment, even though we do not always agree, and he has done his work among the most modern with a decided idiosyncrasy of his own applied to an extremely comprehensive knowledge of what is being written." W. R. Benét
+ Sat R of Lit 7:310 N 8 '30 1450w

KREYMBORG, ALFRED. Our singing strength; an outline of American poetry (1620-1930). 643p $5 Coward-McCann
811.09 American poetry—History and criticism 29-23359

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:151 Ja '30

"It is a titanic work, and one, with few exceptions, excellently executed." Groff Conklin
+ Bookm 70:685 F '30 520w

"The book shows enormous reading, enormous research into sometimes very dead poets, and an amazing familiarity with the names of living poets; it shows almost nothing of an original point of view in criticism of these poets or an ability to judge verse writers according to their relative importance. Mr. Kreymborg is considerate of even the dead, and when he moves among the living he is very fearful indeed of treading on toes." E. L. Walton
— + Nation 130:132 Ja 29 '30 280w

"There is ample evidence that the author has read practically every line of American poetry and that he has been moved by his reading; and yet industry and sensibility and enthusiasm will not take the place of insight, discrimination, intelligence. . . This work is one of those mischievously pious, utterly well meant documents which, like the writings of Poe's contemporary, Griswold, may have the effect of misleading public information and judgment for a quarter of a century. In the place of Griswold's malice (Mr. Kreymborg is uniformly benevolent), there is a gift for sentimental epithet that will seize the public fancy, and hold it for a long time." Allen Tate
— New Repub 62:51 F 26 '30 1500w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:13 F '30

KREYMBORG, ALFRED—Continued

"The idea back of [the] book is admirable. Mr. Kreymborg has done, however, only a reasonably good job with his idea. . . The thing that chiefly annoys me is the style. It has none of the satisfying rhythm that one looks for in all the work of a poet, especially a poet whose verse is notable for rhythmic qualities." N. A. Crawford

— Poetry 36:110 My '30 470w

St Louis 28:107 Ap '30

"When the poet speaks one necessarily listens with great interest, but when he tries to do the spade work of the academic historian one can only regret his wasted effort." Theodore Baird

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:731 F 15 '30 1200w

"The outstanding quality of this poet's book about poets is its nearness to its subjects, its understanding familiarity. Taking the book as a whole its faults seem relatively unimportant. It is not only the first complete study of American poetry, it is the most human study of American poets." Carl Carmer

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 14:177 F '30 800w

Wis Lib Bul 26:66 F '30

"The book is well written and interesting. When we remember that its author was protagonist in some rather violent literary struggles, we are agreeably surprised at the general fairness and catholicity of his judgments. . . Mr. Kreymborg, with the modesty of the true scholar, realizes the temporary nature of many of his verdicts. It is only fair to say also that, considered as temporary, tentative verdicts, most of them are exceedingly good." F. E. Pierce

+ Yale R n s 19:596 spring '30 450w

KROUT, JOHN ALLEN. Annals of American sport. (Pageant of America, v 15) Liberty bell ed 360p il subs only Yale univ. press

790 Sports 29-22307

Pictorial history of the development of sport in America. The record ranges from wild turkey hunting, thru horse racing, baseball, football and other sports of today, to Boy scout work and national parks.

"It is an indispensable reference work which ought to be in every school, college, and public library, and in private libraries as well. It vitalizes our history, suggests new materials and new points of view, and should have a great influence on the rewriting of our history." M. W. Jernegan

+ Am Hist R 35:880 Jl '30 270w

Booklist 26:197 F '30

"Mr. Krout, ranging as he does from cockfighting to football, from bear-baiting to bicycling and mountain-hiking, has written a history that stands quite by itself in the degree of its interest and significance."

+ Nation 130:22 Ja 1 '30 70w

"Dr. Krout gives us pictures of many a famous match and of nearly all the great champions. He shows us a skating rink of 1875, a bicycle tournament of 1886, Dwight Davis playing tennis, Spalding's baseball party at the Sphinx in 1889, and international polo at Newport in 1886. The spirited text which accompanies these pictures is the only good short history of American sport now in existence." Allan Nevins

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1011 My 3 '30 450w

KRUPP, ALFRED. Krupp, a great business man seen through his letters; ed. by Wilhelm Berdrow; tr. by E. W. Dickes. 416p $5 Dial press [25s Gollancz]

B or 92 30-15767

The career and character of Alfred Krupp, German steel magnate, are outlined in this volume thru a series of his letters, written between 1826 and 1887. Krupp took up his father's work at the age of fourteen, and, following early lean years of debt and depression, built up his great business and reached the pinnacle of his ambition. The letters indicate also his relations to the German government, his attitude toward England, and his labor policies, as well as traits of loyalty, persistence and generosity in contrast to the ruthless and autocratic in his nature.

Reviewed by A. P. Usher

Am Hist R 36:145 O '30 950w

Reviewed by Howard Becker

Ann Am Acad 151:306 S '30 220w

Booklist 27:101 N '30

Bookm 71:vii Ag '30 80w

"The method has the advantage of avoiding the false veneer of the glib success romance. Out of Herr Krupp's letters issues gradually an authentic portrait of the man and an arresting picture of the Via Dolorosa along which he staggered to great riches and world-wide fame. Its weakness lies in the complete lack of answering correspondence. The effect is that of a telephone conversation overheard at one end of the line. One has to call upon one's imagination in piecing out the full purport of the interchange, with the help, to be sure, of brief explanations by the editor." W. M. Houghton

+ — Books p5 Je 8 '30 970w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 14 '30 820w

Reviewed by J. G. Gazley

Current Hist 32:637 Jl '30 600w

Nation 131:384 O 8 '30 230w

"Alfred Krupp was a man of one idea. This idea was steel, and steel more particularly as it may be used for the destruction of human life on a large scale. The theme is a harsh one, and the reader will hardly find one flower growing in the metallic precincts of Krupp's mind. But the letters, as they lumber on, form an almost complete bridge across the history of capitalism, for, while the early ones show Krupp trying to find orders which will keep eight German workmen employed, the last ones are full of elaborate plans for saving twenty thousand workmen from the temptations of Socialism." Haslam Mills

Nation and Ath 47:352 Je 14 '30 670w

"The publishers are justified in claiming that this book is an important contribution to the history of industrialism, capitalism and war during the nineteenth century. It is also a fascinating biography of the man who founded the greatest ironworks in the world."

+ New Statesman 35:154 My 10 '30 800w

Reviewed by John Bakeless

N Y Evening Post p8m Je 28 '30 750w

Reviewed by R. C. Feld

N Y Times p5 Je 29 '30 1400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:67 O '30

"It is a great story—one that impresses us as more characteristic of America than of Europe, at any rate a story that Americans can appreciate. Alfred Krupp's relations with Bismarck and von Roon in the period of the Franco-Prussian War make an interesting chapter." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 82:11 Ag '30 100w

St Louis 28:218 S '30

Reviewed by G. Hirschfeld

Sat R of Lit 7:55 Ag 16 '30 850w

Spec 144:646 Ap 12 '30 120w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 1250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p329 Ap 17 '30 1600w

KRUPSKAYA, NADEZHDA KONSTANTINOVA (MME NIKOLAI LENIN). Memories of Lenin; tr. by E. Verney [from the 2d Russian edition]. 213p $1.50 Int. pub. [5s Lawrence]

B or 92 Lenin, Nikolai [30-27949]

Lenin's wife and life-companion, who worked with him in his efforts to emancipate the Russian working class, writes these biographical memoirs. This, the first series of the reminiscences, covers the period from 1894 to 1908. Lenin is portrayed at work in Petersburg, in exile in Siberia, Munich, London and Geneva, and back again in St. Petersburg, from whence he withdrew to Finland. The appendix contains an account of Lenin's method of work and the kind of literature he liked.

Books p22 O 26 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p2 O 4 '30 200w

Reviewed by E. F. Brown

Current Hist 33:xxiv O '30 180w

"The serious value of these memoirs is due to the fact that Krupskaya after all was closer to Lenin than anybody else. And yet there is an impersonality in her account that is almost uncanny. Plenty of descriptions of his ways of work, of reading and recreation and so on; yet it does not make any clearer the central mystery of Lenin's character."

+ — New Statesman 35:652 Ag 30 '30 800w

"The book has much in common with another important biography—'The Later Years of Thomas Hardy'—even though the two volumes deal with men of widely different character and position. Both are unsentimental, unliterary intimate portraits written by women who have served their husbands as secretaries and co-workers. Both books contain excellent source material for future biographies, and, quite without pretention, splendid examples of how realistic biographies should be written." Horace Gregory

+ N Y Evening Post p8s S 13 '30 650w

"It is invaluable because it gives a minute and circumstantial picture of that discipline which gave revolutionists, who would ordinarily be looked upon as harmless, and somewhat ridiculous, people, the power and capacity to break a dynasty, a social order and a religion and to redirect civilization over a large area of the world." Isidor Schneider

+ N Y World p3e O 26 '30 450w

"This is a book to be treated with respect. No one could write of Lenin's day-to-day life and methods of work with the same authority as his widow, and it is a pleasure to find that a document of such value should be entirely trustworthy. The writer reveals herself as a conscientious woman with a matter-of-fact mind. . . The expert in intimate biography of the modern psychological school will shake his head over missed opportunities, but the sober historian will tender his grateful thanks, tinged, maybe, with some surprise that Mme. Krupskaya should have been able to maintain this business-like tone."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p563 Jl 10 '30 1800w

KRUTCH, JOSEPH WOOD. Five masters; a study in the mutations of the novel. 328p $3.50 Cape

809.3 Fiction—History and criticism. Boccaccio, Giovanni. Cervantes Saavedra, Miguel de. Richardson, Samuel. Beyle, Marie Henri. Proust, Marcel 30-29285

A study of the development of the novel thru a critical interpretation of the lives, personalities, and works of five master writers: Boccaccio, Cervantes, Richardson, Stendhal, and Proust. Mr Krutch maintains that each of these novelists, as the result of his character and experience, caused an important mutation in the theory and history of the novel.

Booklist 27:197 Ja '31

"Mr. Krutch's mingling of biography and criticism, psychology and esthetics needs no apology. With the exception of an overdose of unnecessary quotations in the section devoted to Richardson, the individual studies are remarkably complete and impartial, and from them emerges an admirable outline history of the novel's development." Justin O'Brien

+ Bookm 72:436 D '30 550w

"I vastly admire the probity of Mr. Krutch's mind, the high seriousness of his attitude in treating of matters of art and intellect, the emancipated candor of his opinions and the skill and grace with which he is able to resolve an immense amount of research into the unity and coherence of an entertaining commentary." Burton Rascoe

+ Books p1 O 26 '30 1650w

"The book is worth reading, not as a collection of isolated essays but as an integral whole, as a study of The Novel by one whose outlook on life is pre-eminently the outlook of many serious people in the world today, people not given to overdue optimism or who believe that humanism is the cure of all evils. It transcends from a mere literary study into a criticism of human values, the while it gives in brief form important if not new biographical information on the lives of five outstanding writers." Karl Schriftgiesser

+ Boston Transcript p1 D 3 '30 1050w

"Surely this book is his most admirable work and the one which brings into clearest focus the best qualities of his mind. It is far more restrained and logically impregnable than 'The Modern Temper' and far freer of current intellectual jargon than his book on Poe." C. P. Fadiman

+ Nation 131:617 D 3 '30 950w

"Though 'Five Masters' is primarily a sort of popularization written for the benefit of the semi-educated, for the benefit, one imagines, of the victims of our educational system, men and women who know the names of the world's great writers but have never got round to reading their books. It is sound popularization, for it does not try to be, nor can it be used as, a substitute for first-hand knowledge of the works of the writers it describes; it tries to be and is a stimulus to reading and a guide to make that reading intelligent." Granville Hicks

+ New Repub 65:50 N 26 '30 1100w

"Mr. Krutch has risen here to more sharpness of analysis, independence of thought and conciseness of form than in his preceding works. It is a book which has substantial merits. Behind each essay there lies sufficient scholarship; and unlike many contemporary biographers, Mr. Krutch never forces his own ideas upon the master he describes—he scrupulously accepts his subject's rules of the game. His sentences flow with smooth ease, and his narrative is calm, restrained and often graceful." Alexander Nazaroff

+ N Y Times p2 N 16 '30 1350w

"These essays will be, and should be, widely read for they are both brilliant and solid."

+ Outlook 156:468 N 19 '30 80w

KUEBLER, KATHARINE. Hansel the gander. 45p il $2 Morrow

30-23229

Hansel was the wisest gander in the little Bavarian village where he lived. He belonged to Elsa, the schoolmaster's daughter, and she was very fond of Hansel. One time he was stolen, but Elsa found him and brought him home, altho he had been shut up in a pen by the man who stole him. After that no one dared bother Hansel again.

Booklist 27:109 N '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p134 N '30

"A simple, pleasant little story. The illustrations are the most important part of the book. The full-page plates are delightful in coloring, the black and white drawings clever and humorous and both together admirably suggest the atmosphere of the little village in a Bavarian valley where the scene of the story is laid." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p20 S 14 '30 80w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker

Outlook 156:586 D 10 '30 40w

St Louis 28:275 N '30

KUNITZ, STANLEY J. Intellectual things. 63p $2 Doubleday, Doran

811 30-13440

By stripping from his lyric material all false pretentions and non-essential decorations, Mr Kunitz reduces his writing to an expression of the essential core, the pure fact of thought. His images, crystal clear, reflect the emotion of mind, the passion of intellect. Many of the poems in this first volume appeared originally in the Dial, the New American caravan, the Nation, the New republic, and other publications.

KUNITZ, S. J.—Continued

Booklist 27:58 O '30

"Mr. Kunitz has written in the light of a truth that is undoubtedly and resplendently true for certain contemporaries. He has been able to do what no one else has been able to do—and he has written with astonishing fullness and care. . . 'Intellectual Things' may be read, criticized, built into the mind, used, added to life." Genevieve Taggard
+ Books p2 Jl 13 '30 1600w

"Stanley Kunitz's poetry, even upon rereading, gives the curious impression of a divorcement from life. And in this the poet is very much in the main trend of the times. He handles romantic themes without anything other than an intellectual emotion. His theme is beauty, and he is capable of stirring up in his reader considerable vibration of feeling without once being passionate himself. . . Mr. Kunitz attempts to 'make thinking beautiful,' glamorous, almost, we might say, romantic in itself. And he succeeds, partly because he knows his own limitations—and this type of lyricism has them—and never sings too stridently or importantly." E. L. Walton
+ Nation 130:709 Je 18 '30 650w

"Mr. Kunitz is basically sound. His faults, though they invade a good many poems in one measure or another, are mainly, one gathers, incidental to one of the most ambitious struggles taking place in the field of contemporary verse. . . The experience with which Mr. Kunitz deals is normal, rich and complex; he is firm on his feet, and, now and again, quick on them. He has experimented with a syntactic instrument which, when he controls it, enables him to achieve tremendously vigorous syntheses." Yvor Winters
+ — New Repub 63:77 Je 4 '30 850w

"It is fairly safe to assume that Mr. Kunitz will be praised for the 'meta-physical' quality of his verses, for his obscurity and for his constipated line. These are plainly his defects. His lyrical ardor, his desire to live purely and without division of himself, his devotion to his muse—these are his virtues, too often smothered in a cage of words. . . We hope that in his second book Mr. Kunitz will not neglect his very real bird to go beating around the metaphysical bush." Edwin Seaver
+ — N Y Evening Post p11m My 17 '30 280w

"There is something slightly reminiscent of Blake in Mr. Kunitz's poetry. . . This young American, with his first volume of verse, has brought something of a new tone, a fresh outlook."
+ N Y Times p23 Je 1 '30 420w

"To call him thoughtful does not, of course, imply that his work is emotionless; rather, it is a way of saying that his emotional responses to beauty are sifted through a serious and active intellect. He is not an original philosopher, but his imagination tends to occupy itself with the metaphysical implications of experience. His themes are substantial, his lines are lean and hard, his figures of speech are carefully conceived. We touch here a restless mind, a mind determined to probe beneath surfaces and ill-content until it states with precision what it finds." Granville Hicks
+ N Y World p7m Je 1 '30 150w

"Enough of the probing seriousness and curiosity of a keen poetic intelligence is exhibited in this first volume to warrant a considerable confidence in the talents of the author, and in his future work. With a public career little more than a year old, he has issued a collection marked by unquestionable faults and insecurities, but one in which a trait of real lyric individuality emerges." M. D. Z.
+ — Poetry 36:218 Jl '30 950w

"There is a new poet. His first book, 'Intellectual Things,' is an event. How much he may give us in the future is on the knees of the gods, but one thing is sure: Here is a man immediately asserting his own fresh utterance, modern and yet very old, intricate and metaphysical and yet undeniably full of the sagacity of the true seer, the poet born. . . One quality of his commands our admiration, his spiritual discipline. And, though he is Donneish he is never donnish. The strict flame burns with intense heat. One can never mistake the accent that so rarely occurs. Mr. Kunitz's is entirely his own, new and yet somehow as familiar as the whisper of our blood. It is a great accent, and his words sorcerize. First acquaintance with his words is an exciting adventure. They involve a great intricacy of meditation. His phrase can assume finality. After witnessing so much fumbling experimentation it is profoundly pleasing to observe such agility. Mr. Kunitz has gained the front rank of contemporary verse in a single stride." W. R. Benét
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1208 Jl 19 '30 500w

KUNKEL, FRITZ. Let's be normal! The psychologist comes to his senses; tr. by Eleanore Jensen. 299p $3 Washburn
137 Character. Personality. Psychoanalysis
29-21378

Viewing the development of personality and behavior from a common sense attitude, rather than the elaborately mechanistic, the author, who is a leading German psychologist, "attempts to make understandable the inter-relationships and development of all forms of human behavior."

"A volume in which the logic is so closely woven and the thought so clearly presented that the argument emerges with something of the esthetic completeness of a demonstration in geometry. Dr. Kunkel tests human character by a standard which is as ingenious as it is sane. He has fashioned a key which unlocks many doors."
+ Books p18 D 1 '29 200w
Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '29 550w

"Another timely translation, extraordinarily compact with ripe wisdom." E. T. Devine
+ Outlook 154:630 Ap 16 '30 30w
St Louis 28:63 Mr '30

Reviewed by F. W. Binkley
Sat R of Lit 6:671 Ja 25 '30 320w

KUNS, RAY F. Aviation engines. 198p il $2 Am. technical soc.
629.183 Airplanes—Motors 30-14375

"A practical treatise covering operation and maintenance of modern airplane engines, including carburetor and magneto adjustments, lubrication, and ignition operations."—Subtitle

Booklist 27:54 O '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p138 N '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:31 Jl '30

KUPRIN, ALEKSANDR IVANOVICH. Yama [The pit]; tr. from the original Russian by Bernard Guilbert Guerney; foreword by Arthur Garfield Hays. 447p $3.50 B. G. Guerney, 136 W. 23d st., N.Y. [10s 6d Hamilton]
30-1954

"Alexander Kuprin and Maxim Gorky, together with Andreev, Chirikov, Skitalets and a few other brilliant men were known as Young Russia a generation ago. The title of the tale—for it can hardly be called a novel—is, in fact, yama, which means a pit. The real import of the name, however, is Yamskaya or Carter's Row, a notorious red light thoroughfare of old Kiev, where the action of the story takes place. This street was lined by official brothels." Myron Zaslaw (N Y World). Kuprin's novel was written and published in Russia between 1909 and 1915. The translator-publisher announces the present version as the "only legitimate edition in English."

Reviewed by Dorothy Brewster
Books p10 Ja 26 '30 1150w

"A sentimental, humane, photographic, and very moral depiction of life in a brothel. . . The worst features of this artistically indifferent book are the luridness of the jacket, the obtrusiveness of the translator, and the absurd extravagances of the introduction."
— Nation 130:277 Mr 5 '30 60w

"'Yama' is Kuprin's longest and, perhaps, most popular novel. . . There is, in Mr. Kuprin's narrative, genuine humanity; in places there is fine humour. But the novel has its serious shortcomings. It is badly constructed and it abounds in repetition. It is much longer than it ought to be. At times the author becomes sentimental and forces compassion upon the reader. Finally, such chapters as those containing the interminable philosophizing of the reporter Platonov (who is the exponent of the author's views) on the life of prostitutes are decidedly dull."
— + N Y Times p7 Mr 2 '30 550w

"Kuprin is a realist with no squeamishness at depicting the more sordid phases of existence, but whose intuitive sympathy with human beings makes him confident that to know all is to forgive all. His powers of characterization are remarkable; he apprehends what is behind the masks human beings wear and portrays them with merciless truth." Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 D 19 '29 500w

Reviewed by Myron Zaslaw
N Y World p11 D 23 '29 280w

Sat R 150:793 D 13 '30 230w

"Kuprin's narrative is characterized by its complete frankness and lack of sentimentality; the heavy, slogging, tireless thoroughness with which the author gives, in narrative form, case-histories of a considerable gallery of prostitutes, which might remind some American readers of their own Mr. Dreiser."
Sat R of Lit 6:722 F 8 '30 380w

"Despite the frankness of its propaganda, it never loses sight for a moment of the humanity of its unhappy characters, nor attempts to hide the qualities that keep them, in their private lives, affectionate and ordinary human beings. The figures of this huge, gloomy canvas are not caricatures or monsters. They suffer from their environment: they are hysterical, high-pitched, sentimental: they come to miserable ends: but they live, and never fall to be the puppets of a treatise. M. Kuprin has lodged his genius under the Red Light, and left it free to work unprompted. The present reviewer has had to do with many young men and boys. If he were anxious about one of them, he would give him this book."
+ Spec 145:912 D 6 '30 250w

KUZNETS, SIMON SMITH. Secular movements in production and prices; their nature and their bearing upon cyclical fluctuations. (Hart, Schaffner & Marx prize essays) 536p il $3.50 Houghton

338 Business cycles. Economics. Prices. Industry 30-11869

"The present investigation attempts to inquire into the nature of the longtime movements in production and prices, as well as into their influence on cyclical fluctuations. It attempts to establish some uniformly observed characteristics of the so-called secular movements, and in the process to draw analytic distinctions between different groups of these movements. The latter are studies as they appear in the available statistical series of various countries. The aim is to formulate these movements in such a way as not only to reveal their common characteristics, but also to facilitate measurements of the relation between cyclical oscillations and the underlying secular changes."—Pref.

Reviewed by G. R. Davies
Am Econ R 20:787 D '30 750w

"Although this volume represents the fruits of a tremendous amount of very technical statistical calculation, technique is wisely kept in the background. There is a minimum of mathematics to terrify the reader. The statistician, however, will find a short chapter on statistical methods worthy of his attention. In this, the properties of the Gompertz curve are discussed and its application to many of the economic series justified on theoretical grounds. . . Altogether, this essay is a very interesting and valuable contribution of a quantitative economist to the literature of dynamic economics." D. H. Davenport
+ Ann Am Acad 152:415 N '30 380w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 28 '30 480w

Survey 64:281 Je 15 '30 50w

KYLE, ANNE D. Prince of the Pale Mountains. 250p il $2 Houghton

29-23886

How the waif Peter Rosso lived in a little Italian village, but dreamed of a kingdom in the distant land of the pale mountains, which were visible from his village, and how his dream materialized that summer when he traveled with Walter the Romany in his little pedler cart.

Booklist 26:208 F '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p48 Mr '30

"At times the melodramatic quality of the story is somewhat overworked, but on the whole the book is wholesome in tone and the element of mystery will make it popular." A. T. Eaton
+ — N Y Times p24 Ja 19 '30 200w

Sat R of Lit 6:791 Mr 1 '30 180w

Wis Lib Bul 26:109 Mr '30

KYNE, PETER BERNARD. Golden dawn. 275p $2 Cosmopolitan bk. [7s 6d Hodder]

30-8164

An accident in childhood left Penelope Gatlin with a disfigured nose. A shock in later years, added to her early experience, proved too great a burden to be borne and Penelope became at times Nance Belden of the underworld. A kind-hearted chief of police, an understanding trained nurse and a doctor with rare patience became her friends, aided Penelope-Nance and saved her.

Books p10 My 18 '30 150w

"Although it touches upon the underworld it is never sordid. It is wholesome and entertaining story telling and it will be enjoyed not only by Mr. Kyne's regular readers, but by others who, habitually following the modern writers of fiction along the dark journey of realism may find in it a welcome change and an evening's pleasant entertainment." A. B. T.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 5 '30 450w

N Y Times p25 Je 1 '30 120w

"A briskly moving conglomeration of absurdities."
+ Outlook 155:26 My 7 '30 20w

Pratt p38 autumn '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p670 Ag 21 '30 320w

KYNE, PETER BERNARD. Outlaws of Eden. 341p $2 Cosmopolitan bk.

30-24351

Story of the difficulties encountered by Nate Tichenor and Lorraine Kershaw, inheritors of an ancient blood feud, in defending and developing Eden Valley, a section of land in the wilderness of Northern California.

Bookm 72:xiv O '30 100w

"Besides getting a great deal of pioneer material off his chest (early history of the Kershaws), Mr. Kyne spins a pleasant yarn of modern love and lovers." Will Cuppy
Books p14 N 2 '30 80w

KYNE, P. B.—Continued

Boston Transcript p6 O 22 '30 400w

"During the first half of this book the reader decides that he has stumbled upon a course in riparian law taught conversationally—the dreariest legal discussion that ever masqueraded as an adventure story. Then things pick up and action runs neck and neck with water rights. . . There is no one who can create a scene of excitement better than Peter B. Kyne, which makes it the more regrettable that he should allow himself to run on about 'the modus operandi for acquiring the water.'"

+ — N Y Times p20 O 19 '30 280w

L

LA DAME, MARY. Filene store; a study of employes' relation to management in a retail store. (Industrial relations ser.) 541p $2.50 Russell Sage foundation

331.152 Filene's, William, sons company. Employees' representation in management. Department stores—Employees. Filene co-operative association 30-9327

A survey of the employment policies of the Filene retail store in Boston, describing the functions of the employee cooperation plan.

Reviewed by J. B. Ewing

Am Econ R 20:525 S '30 650w

"Miss La Dame's study is excellently conceived, well organized, a transcript of real facts met at first hand, and fair in tone. It manifests scientific detachment and reveals an ability to balance evidence and reach positive conclusions." A. J. Todd

+ Am J Soc 36:334 S '30 550w

"An incisive and impartial analysis of a system of employe representation referred to so often and so copiously that, without reason, it assumed, in part at least, a reality which was actually nonexistent. The book is well written and has a comprehensive synopsis and a good index." Boris Emmet

+ Ann Am Acad 151:294 S '30 850w

Booklist 26:342 Je '30

N Y Times p17 Ag 31 '30 380w

"[A] quarter century's experience is here reviewed and analyzed with the painstaking care which characterizes the publications for which Miss van Kleeck is responsible." E. T. Devine

+ Outlook 156:232 O 8 '30 100w

Pratt p10 summer '30

St Louis 28:205 S '30

Special Lib 21:344 N '30

Survey 64:281 Je 15 '30 100w

LAFAYETTE, MARIE JOSEPH PAUL ROCH YVES GILBERT DE MOTIER, marquis de. Letters of Lafayette and Jefferson; with an introd. and notes, by Gilbert Chinard. (Johns Hopkins studies in int. thought) 443p il $8.50 Johns Hopkins [38s Oxford]

B or 92 Jefferson, Thomas 30-131

During his sojourn in Europe and after his return to America, Jefferson formed many international friendships and acquaintances with famous foreigners. The letters he exchanged with Lafayette during a most important period of history are interesting additions to our knowledge of the mind of Jefferson.

"Although the book is not likely to prove popular reading it was well worth compiling, and Professor Chinard has done his own work on it with his usual qualities, too infrequently combined, of scholarship and sanity."

+ Nation 130:711 Je 18 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p199 Mr 13 '30 2000w

LA FOLLETTE, SUZANNE. Art in America. 361p pl $5 (21s) Harper

709.73 Art—United States—History. Art, American 29-29377

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:193 F '30

"The study is an honest and realistic description of the triumph of ugliness in the American civilization." Thomas Craven

+ Books p3 Ja 12 '30 1000w

"There is no more useful handbook in the general field of American art."

+ Christian Century 47:532 Ap 23 '30 250w

Christian Science Monitor p7 F 8 '30 800w

J Home Econ 22:222 Mr '30 130w

"With admirable clarity Miss La Follette has so organized a forbidding mass of data as to indicate each artist's place in the evolution of art in this country without allowing the individuals to obscure our view of that evolution as a whole. Lucid plan combines with clear and vigorous style, honest judgments free alike from panegyric and patronage, and first-hand knowledge of the whole field to make a book that should be read by everyone who is seriously interested in the cultural history of America." O. S. Coad

+ Nation 131:326 S 24 '30 750w

"Miss La Follette's book is the first attempt that has been made to give a complete and comprehensive picture of the development of the arts in America. Her work is a genuine success. . . This is not merely the first adequate history of the arts in America; it supplants, at least for the general reader, all the existing special volumes. Our philanthropic foundations which seek to promote the cause of the arts in this country could do much worse with their funds than to subsidize a cheap popular edition of this handsomely illustrated book." Lewis Mumford

+ New Repub 62:77 Mr 5 '30 1200w

New Statesman 35:286 Je 7 '30 200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:21 Mr '30

St Louis 28:71 Mr '30

"This is a stimulating, briskly-phrased book for the general reader. It would be easy to say that Miss LaFollette has attempted to cover too much, that she might have left some of her fields for other books. The other books are not written. Now they may be. . . Miss LaFollette has used her eyes, digested many books, articles, letters and conversations. She must be put with Lewis Mumford and Walter Pach, sturdy lumbermen who clear the brush so that the trees may prosper." F. L. Kellogg

+ Survey 64:46 Ap 1 '30 450w

Wis Lib Bul 26:102 Mr '30

LAFOND, ANDRE. Impressions of America; tr. from the French by Lawrence Riesner; introds. by Ralph Beaver Strassburger and Lucien Romier. 207p $2.50 Foundation Ralph Beaver Strassburger, 60 Broadway, N. Y.

917.3 United States—Description and travel. United States—Social life and customs 30-17386

"M. Lafond is the publisher of the 'Journal de Rouen.' His collection of two-score brief articles written for his paper during his recent stay in this country has been translated, and we are now at liberty to see what we look like to a French newspaper publisher."—N Y Evening Post

Reviewed by F. T. Marsh

Books p19 Ag 24 '30 480w

Boston Transcript p1 Jl 26 '30 450w

"It seems to me that M. Lafond's statements in general are about as realistic as his observation that Broadway, 'when it arrives in The Bronx, takes a rectilineal direction, south to north.'" Edwin Seaver

— N Y Evening Post p8m Je 21 '30 170w

"For the writing of this volume M. Lafond received the prize awarded every year by the Strassburger Foundation 'as the most meritorious journalistic contribution to Franco-American friendship.' Certainly any one reading his book should be more reluctant than ever to have any breach occur in our present amiable relations with France. But, on the face of the evidence, the Strassburger prize was handed to him on a silver platter, without what could be described as evidence of intense cerebration on his part."

— N Y Times p9 Jl 13 '30 330w
St Louis 28:216 S '30

LA FOUCHARDIERE, GEORGES DE. Poor sap; tr. from the French by Forrest Wilson. 234p $2.50 7s 6d) Knopf

30-28173

"The three principal characters are a wife-ridden clerk, his mistress, a street walker, and her lover, a gigolo racketeer. It is a sophisticated urban comedy."—N Y Evening Post

"A deal of ironic satire on art and other matters flavors the whole agreeably, if you care for tiny souls and their troubles. Mr. Wilson's translation amounts almost to collaboration, so delicate was his task of rendering three sorts of Parisian speech into English. He appears to have solved his problems readily enough; in the case of the gigolo by turning whole chapters into current American slang."

Books p23 O 19 '30 250w

"It is a hilarious, preposterous, melodramatic farce, written in a series of semi-dramatic monologues. The book is a riot of swift action and color admirably translated into American slang." Horace Gregory

+ N Y Evening Post p5d O 18 '30 180w

"Monsieur de la Fouchardière is a French newspaper man and columnist, a feuilletoniste of talent. Facile, entertaining, sardonic, timely, sophisticated, vivacious, he is the clayfooted god of the young Parisian intellectuals who read his fluent column in L'Oeuvre. We are not entirely unprepared therefore to find his novel equipped with all of the characteristic journalese graces. Nor are we disappointed. For in 'Poor Sap,' Monsieur de la Fouchardière has resorted to the perennially useful triangle theme, injected an ingenious technique, and surrounded the resulting story with the lightning of Gallic irony and the practiced prose of an expert craftsman."

+ N Y Times p33 N 16 '30 450w
Sat R 150:489 O 18 '30 250w

"No one, probably least of all the author, would pretend that 'La Chienne' was to be taken very seriously as an example of the modern French novel. It aims solely to present a narrative full of action, lurid enough to strike the attention, and sufficiently well motivated to be credible. This it does with undoubted success, even throwing in a certain amount of more subtle satire."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:401 N 29 '30 450w

LA GANKE, FLORENCE. Patty pans; a cook book for beginners. 268p il $1.75 Little

641.5 Cookery—Juvenile literature 29-23386

"Miss LaGanke is a staff writer on home economics for the Cleveland Plain Dealer. In the columns of that paper she first used much of the material in this book. There seems good reason to suppose that the experiments in cookery which appealed to Cleveland children should also find favor in Boston or Seattle. Miss LaGanke's book has all the makings of a sort of juvenile 'Fanny Farmer.' It is built on sound recipes. It recounts them clearly, explains why the given ingredients react or combine to produce desirable results, and finds room besides for a great deal of practical advice for the young but aspiring cook."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 26:167 Ja '30

"Simple but entirely adequate cook-book that puts in all the directions which other such guides are unwise enough to leave out." M. L. Becker

+ Bookm 70:445 D '29 50w
Boston Transcript p3 Ja 11 '30 350w
Cleveland Open Shelf p159 D '29

"Detailed and sensible directions for a variety of suitable, attractive dishes combined with a mild story to whet the youthful curiosity."

+ J Home Econ 21:936 D '29 50w

"This is not only a practical but highly delightful cook book for very young ladies who are just starting in to help mother. Every detail is taken care of, and the recipes and menus given are not too elaborate. The illustrations are jolly ones, showing all the kitchen utensils in various humorous attitudes." O. M. Fuller

+ N Y World p11m D 22 '29 80w
St Louis 28:20 Ja '30
Wis Lib Bul 26:108 Mr '30

LAHEY, G. F. Gerard Manley Hopkins. 182p $3 (7s 6d) Oxford

B or 92 Hopkins, Gerard Manley [30-25469]

A short biography of a 19th century English poet. "Born in Essex in 1844, Gerard Hopkins reached Oxford just as the Movement begun by John Henry Newman was at its height; there he came into contact with Jowett, Pater, Pusey and others among the intellectual leaders, but it was Newman who from his retreat at Birmingham exerted the greatest influence on the brilliant young scholar. His conversion to the Roman Catholic Church took place when he finished his course, and immediately he entered the Jesuit order. In 1884 he was appointed to the chair of Greek at the then Royal University of Ireland where he remained until his death in 1889." (Bookm)

"This brief biographical study, written as a complement to the new edition of Hopkins's poems announced for fall publication, appears as the first satisfactory introduction to the work of an unjustly ignored poet. . . Father Lahey's book, as any good presentation should, gives just enough of Hopkins's verse to whet the reader's appetite and leave him eager to discover for himself the more important poems." Justin O'Brien

+ Bookm 71:447 Jl '30 320w

Reviewed by Gerald Sykes

N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 9 '30 450w

Reviewed by H. L. Binsse

Sat R of Lit 7:33 Ag 9 '30 1950w

"Little has hitherto been known of the poet's character and life. Father Lahey's short biographical study—which includes two interesting critical chapters on Hopkins as literary craftsman and artist—does something to fill this gap. Though not much that lies below the surface is here revealed to us (and the real clue to the poet's inner experience is probably lost in that spiritual journal which he destroyed before his death) we are glad to have these notes of the career of an artist and mystic who can never be widely appreciated; but will never be forgotten by those who can savour his peculiar combination of mystical rapture, difficult thought, and often eccentric craftsmanship." Evelyn Underhill

+ Spec 145:318 S 6 '30 450w

LAIDLAW, LOUISE BURTON. Wishing on a ² comet, and collected poems. 133p $2 Dodd

811 30-30424

A first volume of lyrics which indicates Miss Laidlaw's interest in affairs of contemporary importance—the discovery of a new planet, Lindbergh's flight, the work of the astronomer, etc.

"This is not good poetry, and yet one is not sorry to have read it, partly for the horrible example of its awkwardness, very like Wordsworth at his worst, but more for the engaging personality that shows through it, enthusiastic, impatient, gay, energetic, full of high ideals, and hero-worship."

LAIDLAW, L. B.—Continued

— + Bookm 72:vii D '30 50w

Reviewed by Charles Divine

Books p20 D 14 '30 150w

"Her verse has freshness and vivacity. . . There is a great deal for Miss Laidlaw to learn, but she seems to form her own ideas and sometimes happens upon quite interesting ones. At any rate, there is animation in her book, though a tendency toward the didactic is to be deplored. Occasionally she falls into the extremely banal. A few more years of reading and experiencing will doubtless greatly better her style." W. R. Benét

— + Sat R of Lit 7:249 O 18 '30 100w

LAIDLER, HARRY WELLINGTON, and THOMAS, NORMAN MATTOON, eds. Socialism of our times; a symposium. 377p 50c Vanguard press

335 Socialism 29-22230

"A symposium by more than thirty writers. The material is grouped under: (1) what socialists want; (2) socialism in the light of American and Russian developments; (3) tactics and next steps; (4) socialist theory."—Am Econ R

Am Econ R 19:757 D '29 80w

Booklist 26:264 Ap '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:12 F '30 160w

St Louis 28:66 Mr '30

"Altogether the best exposition of the American socialism of today."

+ Wis Lib Bul 25:407 D '29

LAIGHTON, OSCAR. Ninety years at the Isles ^{2} of Shoals. 154p il $1.60 Beacon press

B or 92 Isles of Shoals

Reminiscences of a long life of ninety years, much of it spent on the Isles of Shoals, off the coast of New Hampshire. The author is a brother of the poet, Mrs Celia Thaxter.

"This simple narrative, written with friendliness and sense of humor and from life-long intimate acquaintance with the subject, must warmly appeal to the many who know the fascinating little archipelago off the Maine and New Hampshire coast." S. A. R.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 23 '30 650w

N Y Times p19 Ja 4 '31 200w

LAING, ALEXANDER KINNON. End of roaming. 484p $2.50 Farrar

30-23891

When Richard Melville entered high school he developed a passion for chemistry. But the ideals implanted by a roving and romantic uncle, and the encouragement of a high school art teacher, turn his thoughts toward the pursuit of beauty. His interests henceforth are divided between a career in the laboratory and the more or less bohemian life of the artist. His love affairs with various girls have much to do with his emotional instability. Marriage, and the death of his young wife, bring no security of purpose; and we find Richard at the end of the story throwing over his venture as an artist to work in a chemical laboratory.

"The book is the product of an undisciplined energy and is done with such a prodigality of detail that it is difficult to judge whether mere facility and a good eye and memory or genuine talent has produced it." Guy Holt

+ — Bookm 72:xviii S '30 200w

"Since this is Mr. Laing's first novel it is perhaps unfair to expect him to solve the problem raised by many other college novels. Richard Melville's adventures are scarcely more than a rather loosely written collection of episodes, opinions and judgments of a very young man." Horace Gregory

— Books p17 S 21 '30 600w

"This story of the twenty-five years of a boy's life, is rather an ambitious attempt, and it shows much thoughtful analysis—yet one's reaction several hours later is that it is largely a waste of words. Over-analysis is fatal to illusion and as a certain amount of illusion is necessary to sympathy, Mr. Laing has made it rather hard going for his young hero. He has felt very deeply about certain phases of a boy's life, but the sex element is allowed to dominate it too completely. The lack of understanding between the boy and his parents on this score is well done—indeed a large part of the book is well done, yet it falls to win sympathy."

— + Boston Transcript p5 O 11 '30 320w

"'End of Roaming' can hardly be said to represent the disillusionment of fine, high-aspiring youth, for in the youth in this book there is nothing to be lost but a series of literary influences, which have not even the virtue of being well disguised and well relayed." K. W.

— New Repub 64:188 O 1 '30 180w

"In 'End of Roaming' Mr. Laing has shown a degree of common sense not always found among those making their first entry into the field of fiction. Mr. Laing has written about what he knows, namely, the development of a boy through youth and adolescence to eventual maturity. It is true that Laing is somewhat too meticulous of collegiate detail; the book might well have been pruned here, and, indeed, elsewhere, as it is about 100 pages too long. But a reader will quickly perceive what chapters may be hurried through so that the effect of the whole shall not be one of tedium."

+ — N Y Times p7 Ag 31 '30 620w

"It is not often that so pleasing a first novel or one written with such finish, comes our way. If the book is not altogether successful, that is not surprising in a first book, particularly in one which attempts to cover so much ground as this one. Laing shows himself an interesting writer, whose work (one feels sure) can and will grow." Clinton Simpson

+ N Y World p3e N 2 '30 350w

"For the little mouse of meaning that is brought forth, the novel is far too long and awkward. Whole episodes and groups of characters could and should have been omitted. But still there is usually a strong current of vitality and a wide sweep of background. Having got all this out of his system, Mr. Laing may do a better job with his next novel. He has already a definite facility in composition, as well as a kind of indignation that may in time grow powerful, tending possibly towards either passion or satire."

— + Sat R of Lit 7:253 O 18 '30 550w

LAING, MRS JANET. Villa Jane. 312p $2 Century [7s 6d Hodder]

29-18555

Anothera Montmorency, companion to Miss Figgis, hears from that eccentric old lady the details of the marriage of her niece, Clara, to Claude Fennimore—and how a queer old woman has tried, by message, to warn Clara's friends that Fennimore is a murderer. Anothera, taking upon herself the fascinating rôle of private detective, undergoes some harrowing experiences at the Villa Jane, a lonely cottage in Scotland whither Claude Fennimore was supposed to have taken his bride.

"A first-class mystery. An unusually neat and subtle sense of humor characterizes the writing."

+ Bookm 71:xxix Mr '30 70w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p22 F 9 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p2 F 26 '30 380w

"Masquerading under this stodgy and unattractive title the author tells a cleverly conceived mystery story that rides along with a well-sustained suspense and an apparently unusually callous killer of four or five wives, only to terminate in an anti-climax. It is unfortunate that the author has fallen into the error of several other English writers of mystery tales by failing to develop her story along legitimate lines and puncturing the balloon of mystery."

+ — N Y World p10m F 23 '30 120w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:189 Ja 29 '30 50w

"In smooth, easy and witty style, Janet Laing has written a story of queer events in an isolated villa on the shores of Scotland."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 30 '30 220w

Times [London] Lit Sup p341 Ap 25 '29 320w

LAIRD, DONALD ANDERSON, and MULLER, CHARLES GEOFFREY. Sleep; why we need it and how to get it. 214p il $2.50 Day [6s Williams & Norgate]

613.79 Sleep. Insomnia 30-11078

Presents a series of experimentally determined facts about sleep, which are the results of several years of research under the direction of Dr Laird at the psychological laboratory at Colgate university. Some of the questions asked and answered are: Why should work make us tired? Why do some people make us tired? What happens to us while we sleep? How can we get to sleep most quickly? How much sleep do we need?

"The short snappy sentences serve as excellent stimulation to counteract the soporific nature of the subject matter so that at no time is there any tendency for the attention to lag, and although not 'primarily adventure or detective' cannot be used as suggested by its authors in the chapter, 'When It's Hard to Get to Sleep.' . . Anyone with an introspective or reflective turn of mind would find this fascinating reading, and one feels urged to recommend the whole book. The instructions for obtaining relaxation are found detailed and simple. One wonders if following them would be sufficient to bring about a degree of relaxation in those who really need it. To one who has never had any difficulty in getting to sleep, or in remaining asleep, the entire book sounds plausible and the instructions reasonable." H. P. Langner

+ Am J Pub Health 20:1261 N '30 550w

Booklist 26:345 Je '30

"For a long time it has been the practice of the newer psychology to ignore almost completely the physical basis and chemical processes underlying the psyche and to build entire new systems of psychology upon the explorations of a single, or at best a few, individuals into a realm which is as dark and vague as its designation, 'the unconscious.' Consequently it is both refreshing and assuring to read the work of a psychologist who has gone back to machines and the laboratory. . . The authors have between them presented results of involved experimentation in a popular manner and however much or little one may be able to adopt the recommendations of 'Sleep,' the book will serve to emphasize the importance of sleep, and the right kind of sleep." Louis Johnson, M.D.

+ Books p2 Mr 30 '30 700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p109 Jl '30

J Home Econ 22:500 Je '30 70w

N Y Times p10 Ap 20 '30 400w

"No doubt some of you have consulted physicians to determine how you can sleep against the noise of the city. This book gives a great deal of helpful advice for about half of a physician's fee. In fact, it is extremely likely that some doctors will read it to get a few good suggestions to sell over again—and I won't blame them." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p16 Mr 21 '30 550w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 155:106 My 21 '30 200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:72 O '30

Pratt p16 autumn '30

"This book makes no pretense at scientific exhaustiveness; it is merely a skimming of the results obtained [in the psychological laboratory of Colgate University] and a codification of those facts into a few generalizations that should be both helpful and interesting to the lay public. We commend it to you if you are on the lookout for a book that will keep you wakeful until you deem it time to go to bed, and that will allow you to drop off to pleasant slumbers the moment your head touches the pillow."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:840 Mr 22 '30 650w

"It's a worth while study and a sensible presentation, and may serve to convince the lay public that experimental psychology is alertly concerned to round out knowledge to the benefit of human working days and restful nights." Joseph Jastrow

+ Survey 64:441 Ag 15 '30 280w

LAIRD, JOHN. Idea of value. 384p $5.50 Macmillan [18s Cambridge univ. press]

121 Worth. Value [29-27645]

The author, who is regius professor of moral philosophy in the University of Aberdeen, gives first an historical account of the views of philosophers with regard to value, from Hobbes to the present day, concluding with a presentation of his own position.

Reviewed by P. T. Homan

Am Econ R 20:261 Je '30 500w

"This book is one which every serious student of value theory will welcome whole-heartedly. For one thing it supplies a want in English philosophical literature which has long been felt, namely, a history of the idea of value in modern philosophy. In the second place, the book contains certain genuine contributions of its own which should mark, I think, a distinct stage in our thought on some very perplexing questions. Finally it is an eloquent and convincing argument for the doctrine of absolute values as the kernel of value theory." W. M. Urban

+ J Philos 27:288 My 22 '30 3500w

Reviewed by H. N. Wieman

J Religion 10:290 Ap '30 450w

"Professor Laird writes exceedingly well—he is something of a philosophic wit—and the historical survey is admirably done." C. E. M. Joad

+ Nation and Ath 45:832 S 28 '29 160w

"No one who is interested in these frontier problems of ethics and economics should miss Professor Laird's book, for it is the first book in English which really tackles the problems with both sciences in view." J. D. M.

+ New Statesman 34:sup viii O 12 '29 450w

St Louis 28:3 Ja '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p650 Ag 22 '29 1200w

LAISTNER, MAX LUDWIG WOLFRAM. Survey of ancient history to the death of Constantine. 613p il $3.80 Heath

930 History, Ancient 29-19310

A textbook for college courses in the political history of ancient civilizations. The first twelve chapters deal with the history of mankind from prehistoric times to the Persian wars. The six following chapters cover the period up to the Hellenistic age, with special emphasis upon Greek culture and philosophy. The last fourteen chapters deal with the rise and fall of the Roman Empire.

"By incorporating in a single volume the newer material hitherto available only in periodicals and expensive special treatises with the traditional narrative based on ancient literary documents, Professor Laistner has achieved his purpose of giving an interpretation adequate for university students and not uninteresting to the general reading public. . . Taken as a whole the book is stimulating, especially to one already somewhat familiar with the field. To a novice, the mass of detail and the allusive method of treatment are rather embarrassing. There is an excellent bibliography." Herbert Wing, Jr.

LAISTNER, M. L. W.—Continued
+ Am Hist R 35:389 Ja '30 350w

"The merits of Mr. Laistner's book, in the large portion that comprises the Greeks and the Romans, are negative. And the style befits the matter: fluent, free from the stereotyped expressions and worn metaphors that beset historians, it is impersonal, colourless. . . What is missing is the dynamic touch, the awakening of wonder and enthusiasm. There are works of information and works of power. Mr. Laistner, misliking all generalizations that are brilliant and incomplete, has not cared to raise his book from the one class to the other."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p910 N 14 '29 1050w

LAMB, HAROLD. The crusades; iron men and saints. 368p il $3 Doubleday, Doran [10s 6d Butterworth, T.]
940.18 Crusades 30-7974

A popular history of the first crusade, which centers interest on its preachers and leaders and ends with the death of Baldwin, who was its last leader.

"This is the best popular account of the First Crusade. . . The scholar will find nothing new and will detect some errors in fact. A glance at the selected bibliography shows that Lamb used the best sources but not always in the best editions." D. C. M.
+ — Am Hist R 35:904 Jl '30 130w
Booklist 26:307 My '30

Reviewed by John Chamberlain
Bookm 71:234 Ap '30 650w

"His book has glamour and a continuous surge of interest. Mr. Lamb manages to disencumber the principal figures of their antiquity and to give them identifying personalities; his battle narratives are vivid; he knows how to quote from contemporary documents, not to be quaint, but to be convincing, and he knows how to make single and continuous a movement that was as disorderly as the Middle Ages, from which it sprang." Isidor Schneider
+ Books p3 Mr 2 '30 1500w

Reviewed by G. R. B. Richards
Boston Transcript p3 Je 7 '30 1900w

"The fascination of the Cross is never lost for people who have been subject to its influence in any form. The progress of the Cross to Jerusalem is the story of the Crusades that thrilled us in our childhood and later, in our history classes. Now it is retold with a wealth of narrative power that should recapture the delight of our youth. Mr. Lamb seldom allows his pen to run away with historical accuracy. He has produced a powerful pageant of the movement that transformed Europe and opened the way for the Renaissance." J. C. T.
+ Cath World 131:634 Ag '30 350w

"A vivid piece of writing. 'The Crusades' is a human document of much interest, not only for its painting of the crowded canvas of a dramatic period of history, but also for the reflections it rouses upon the long and curiously slow struggle in this human race of ours between the ancient and brutish instincts and the ideas of Christianity." W. R. Bowie
+ Churchman p17 Ag 2 '30 220w
Cleveland Open Shelf p58 Ap '30

Reviewed by Donald Douglas
New Repub 63:105 Je 11 '30 280w

"It is a stirring narrative, rich in crashing, tumultuous battlescapes whose vigor recalls those of its author's 'Ghengis Khan' and 'Tamerlane.' The political backgrounds are not overlooked, and the dozen or so men who were the leaders of this sanguinary Pilgrim's Progress stand out as convincing individual personalities against the active tapestry of their epic. It is as coherent and sequential an account of one of the most incoherent and variously motivated episodes of history as could be given." F. H. Martens
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 29 '30 580w

Reviewed by T. R. Ybarra
N Y Times p9 Mr 23 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Bellamy Partridge
N Y World p10m Mr 23 '30 180w

"Mr. Lamb has given time to the study of his subject and has brought to it intelligence and imagination. He is carefully objective, and chary of ascribing to his eleventh century subjects motives and reactions such as twentieth century men might be expected to have. His book is full of gusto and feeling and is extremely readable."
+ Outlook 154:508 Mr 26 '30 350w
Pratt p32 autumn '30

"It would be unfair to judge this book by the criteria of scientific history. Mr. Lamb has written for all of us who are still young enough to be stirred by wonder and by courage. Of these things he tells with scholarship enough, and with unflagging vigor. By design, this is a popular book. Historians would do well to welcome, without too many questions, any adherent to their ranks who can and does make history really popular. " Garrett Mattingly
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:892 Ap 5 '30 1400w

"The poet in Dr. Lamb seizes on vivid incidents, but the scholar in him keeps them in their due place. His knowledge of the time—those strange 117 years between the rising of the first tidal wave towards Jerusalem and the pathetic Children's Crusade of 1212—is great indeed, and there is material here gathered together almost for the first time that should be of assistance to other chroniclers. But we cannot honestly say that Dr. Lamb has told a good story."
+ — Spec 144:947 Je 7 '30 450w
Springf'd Republican p16 Ag 29 '30 650w

"Mr. Lamb writes interestingly and informatively, but at times a little irritatingly."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p425 My 22 '30 1080w

LAMB, WINIFRED. Greek and Roman bronzes. (Illustrated lib. of archaeology) 261p $7.50 Dial press [25s Methuen]
739 Bronzes, Greek. Bronzes, Roman 30-8341

"The work is both a text for the specialist, and a general account for the amateur. The beginnings of the chapters are devoted to descriptions which, when taken together, form a complete simplified account of the development of the Greek and Roman bronzes; while particular groups receive more intensive consideration subsequently. Two classes of bronzes are distinguished in the discussion, figures and decorative pieces. . . A distinct and separate feature of the volume, however, is a set of ninety-six varied plates. These are apart from a number of illustrations in the text."—Boston Transcript

"Besides being a scholarly thesis in the best sense of the word, it is marked by the interest of its exposition and the clarity of its descriptions."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 29 '30 200w

"Miss Lamb has laid all students under an obligation by writing an excellent book on the history of artistic bronzes—excluding statues—from Minoan to Roman times, and by illustrating it with several hundred well-chosen examples. Miss Lamb is the first author to attempt a review of the whole subject, the material for which is buried in periodicals and monographs while the bronzes themselves are dispersed over the world, but she has succeeded admirably."
+ Spec 143:256 Ag 24 '29 430w

"Miss Lamb's book in spite of its staccato style is welcome and useful."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p548 Jl 3 '30 1050w

LAMBART, DAPHNE. Shard. 298p $2.50 Putnam [7s 6d Blackwood]

30-9310

The Shards,—Jenepher, Kathleen, and Vivian, are three English orphans who have position and money and one characteristic in common: hardboiled selfishness. Jenepher, brilliant and beautiful, forms a strange friendship with Lily Strachey—until the advent of Michael. It is not Jenepher who suffers from the ensuing complication. Kathleen, a little weaker but no less selfish, plans to marry—and in a cruel moment abandons her lover. Vivian, who has grown up to be quite a philanderer, does nevertheless marry lovely Marianne; but the extreme self-centeredness of the Shards results only in tragedy for her.

"'Shard' is a novel of a new younger generation, written, I take it, by a member of it. Slight and inconsequential as it is, it strikes a note which is rapidly becoming familiar to our ears, a note which is indicative of the drift which the latest light and popular fiction is taking. But the rock on which it is founded remains the same, now and forever—the same for 'Shard' as for those dear, forgotten Victorian thrillers bound in paper. At bottom it is as sentimental as they were." F. T. Marsh

Books p10 Ap 20 '30 650w

"Daphne Lambart is an English woman with a facile pen, yet one feels behind the ease of her work a richness of background seldom found in the contemporary American writer. There is excellent selection of incident which gives sufficient information to reveal the characters vividly. In description Miss Lambert believes in the adequacy of suggestion—and her deftness bears out her belief."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 24 '30 190w

"One wonders whether Shard is entirely on the surface. If it reaches any depths they are the depths of selfishness. Certainly the writing is swift, vivid, clear-cut. It is filled with description—short, complete snatches of description that make of the story a series of concrete, indelible pictures, pictures of the beautiful, ruthless Shards."

N Y Times p9 My 4 '30 300w

"It is a book of insight and accuracy, written in a staccato style; not exactly a pleasant book, but a book of great talent. Miss Lambart is detached from her characters; she gives them the whole stage, and allows them to live their lives without interposing her own comments. She singles out each of the three in turn, and shows their incursions into life and their retreat into the old family solidarity; a method which leaves the reader with an impression of concentration and lustre." Alan Porter

+ Spec 143:604 O 26 '29 130w

"Miss Lambart wrote this novel before she was twenty years of age, and certainly it has an unconsidered charm, a lack of logicality, that confound our reasonings, and make us accept the high-spirited conclusions of youth."

Times [London] Lit Sup p1004 N 28 '29 280w

LAMBERT, MARY R., and WALKER, R. Old Boston (England) [Eng title: Boston. Tattershall and Croyland]. 139p il $2.50 Houghton [6s Blackwell]

942.53 Boston, England

A history of Boston, England, of its beautiful historic church, and the surrounding countryside. The authors have made use of all possible documents in the attempt to make the history complete and to "recapture the spirit of past ages."

N Y Times p26 S 14 '30 180w

"Dr. Cotton, the vicar of Boston, Lincolnshire, with some of his Puritan parishioners, was one of the founders of Boston, Massachusetts, three centuries ago. Thus there should be more than a local appeal in this attractive and scholarly volume. The authors' historical account of the town and its noble church of St. Botolph, with the majestic tower known as 'Boston Stump,' is competently done."

+ Spec 145:173 Ag 2 '30 200w

"'Old Boston' deals mainly with the Boston of the Middle Ages and will afford any one a pleasant excursion into a medieval English town. The chapter on topography would be better, for American readers, if a map had been appended. There are drawings of old Boston's famous buildings and descriptive chapters. 'Old Boston' is an engaging local history, compiled from original sources."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 S 13 '30 1000w

"This little work should appeal strongly, though not exclusively, to Americans. The best proof of the success of the book is the unity of impression that is made by the authors in describing the various factors, geographical, climatic, historical, religious and industrial, which have made Fenland what it is. Much of the detailed information will be fresh to most people."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p745 S 25 '30 800w

LAMKIN, NINA B. Good times for all times; a cyclopedia of entertainment with programs, outlines, references and practical suggestions for home, church, school and community. 377p il $4 French

793 Amusements. Entertaining 29-29838

Entertainment suggestions for all occasions. The lists include ten ready programs for the home, neighborhood parties, high school parties, programs for men's and women's organizations, churches and communities, boy's and girl's clubs, and holidays. There are also directions for costumes and costuming, and on producing a play. The appendix contains selected bibliographies of plays, readings, dances, etc.

Booklist 26:304 My '30

"An immense book making little less than an encyclopedia on entertainment of every sort for old and young; I never saw one with such elaborate and useful documentation."

+ Outlook 155:347 Jl 2 '30 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:46 Je '30

St Louis 28:141 My '30

LAMPLUGH, ANNE. Flower and vase. 92p il $1.75 Scribner [5s Country Life]

716 Floral decoration. Floriculture

[30-26619]

"A study of flower decoration in the home. Contains suggestions for flower arrangements for every type of room and for all sorts of backgrounds, with excellent illustrations. At each chapter-end there is a table showing the gardener what flowers are available that month in greenhouse, garden or country lane, and what should be planted, and listing for the non-gardener seasonable flowers in the shops. Unusual features are the miniature table-gardens and recipes for sweet-jar, rose jam and the like."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Booklist 26:385 Jl '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p58 Ap '30

St Louis 28:213 S '30

"The instructions, following the course of the seasons, are very complete. Exception must be taken to one piece of advice given—to go into the country and return with armfuls of autumn-tinted boughs. The destruction of rural woodlands is disastrous enough in many places already, without the broadcasting of such inconsiderate counsel as this."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1061 D 12 '29 200w

LANDAU, ROM. Pilsudski and Poland; tr. by Geoffrey Dunlop. 305p il $5 Dial press [18s Jarrolds]

B or 92 Pilsudski, Józef. Poland—Politics and government 29-25940

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by D. L. Hunt
Ann Am Acad 150:317 Jl '30 230w

Booklist 26:277 Ap '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p59 Ap '30

"The volume is interesting and important. It deals with an outstanding figure in the politics of Europe in the last two decades—a personality around which, more than any other, has revolved the highly dramatic life of a re-created post-war nationality." F. A. Ogg
+ Current Hist 32:8 Ap '30 1350w

"Keeping in mind that the author makes no pretense at having produced a definitive, historically-unimpeachable biography, the volume takes rank as one of the most delightful of recent psychoanalytical, hero-worshipping, undocumented pen portraits. The book gives a splendid picture, by a romantic Poie, of the mystical and romantic stuff of which the New Poland is made."
+ Hist Outlook 21:137 Mr '30 200w

Nation and Ath 46:865 Mr 22 '30 380w

Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 154:669 Ap 23 '30 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:22 Mr '30

St Louis 28:112 Ap '30

"The best evidence for the essential truth of his portrait is that the man he depicts seems equal to the great achievement which stands to the credit of Marshal Pilsudski."
+ Sat R 149:146 F 1 '30 220w

"This life of a hysterical patriot is a nauseating affair, described in the language of cheap melodrama."
— Spec 144:208 F 8 '30 160w

Times [London] Lit Sup p143 F 20 '30 350w

"A less imaginative and a more critical study of Pilsudski's character and his place in Polish history would have served better to explain both Pilsudski and Poland. A convincing book on Poland still remains to be written."
Times [London] Lit Sup p259 Mr 27 '30 1650w

LANDON, HERMAN. Three brass elephants. 328p $2; pop ed 75c Liveright 30-4849

"A curious old house overlooking the East River in New York is the scene of most of the happenings in this story of mystery. It is an ugly house, and its ugliness is the result of a deliberate plan, for it was built for the purpose of making neighboring property less desirable. This house has a disappearing room. When the secret of the room is discovered, as it eventually is, the other mysteries connected with this strange old house are mysteries no longer."—N Y Times

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p15 F 2 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 26 '30 400w

"The story is as full of mystery as an egg is of meat, but we do wish that the author had explained in more detail how that disappearing room worked."
+ — N Y Times p24 F 9 '30 170w

"In Herman Landon's mystery-horror story, many venerable standbys, reboiled but otherwise little altered, are to be met with and readily recognized. . . Familiar hocus-pocus sets up the ancient plot, which has frankly a few moments of genuinely hair-raising suspense and not much of anything that should commend the book to those demanding novelty in yarns of this kind." E. C. Beckwith
— N Y World p11m Ja 12 '30 120w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:109 Ja 15 '30 80w

LANDON, HERMAN. Voice in the closet. 349p $2 Liveright 30-15097

While young Mrs Forbes was entertaining at tea in her Park Avenue drawing-room her middle-aged millionaire husband was murdered in the next room. Detective Lieutenant Delmar had charge of the case and nearly lost his life on several occasions. There were several suspects, and at least three of them tried to remove Delmar. But in the last analysis it was Delmar who won.

Bookm 71:xviii Jl '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 Je 8 '30 80w

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 26 '30 300w

Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p4s Je 7 '30 190w

"We should have liked it better had the author not found it necessary to end it with one of those tiresome round-ups of all the suspects."
— + N Y Times p24 Je 1 '30 230w

"This is good, plain food, not too highly seasoned; and if it doesn't keep you awake, at least it won't disagree with you." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 155:228 Je 11 '30 130w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 21 '30 80w

LANG, ANTHONY, pseud. See Vahey, J. G. H.

LANGBRIDGE, ROSAMOND GRANT (MRS JOSEPH SMITH FLETCHER). Charlotte Brontë, a psychological study. 260p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [8s 6d Heinemann]

B or 92 Brontë, Charlotte 29-24051

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by G. F. Whicher
Books p13 F 2 '30 520w

St Louis 28:17 Ja '30

"Although Miss Langbridge's iconoclasm is timely, her interpretation is hardly satisfactory. She finds what she is looking for, but her book is a personal impression rather than an objective study. There are more complicated factors in Charlotte Brontë's make-up than are dreamt of in Miss Langbridge's narrow psychology." Frederic Milner
— Sat R of Lit 6:843 Mr 22 '30 1000w

"The book is full of sparkling sentences, and is throughout lively and provocative."
+ Spec 144:64 Ja 11 '30 350w

"The value of her book is seriously impaired by its excessive concentration; she finds repression lurking in every corner and never gives the wretched thing a rest; she is an example of the obsession of obsession-seeking. . . It is really lamentable that a writer so fresh, infectious and sincere should have so little experience of the equilibrium of truth."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p41 Ja 16 '30 500w

LANGDON-DAVIES, JOHN. Man and his universe. 341p il $5 (16s) Harper

113 Cosmology. Evolution. Science—History 30-18599

A narrative outline of science containing the story of the evolution of knowledge—man's struggle to adjust his beliefs to changes brought about by world progress.

Booklist 27:49 O '30

"He has produced a sound, scholarly book, well worth reading by the thoughtful." Gerald Wendt
+ Books p1 Jl 20 '30 1600w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 16 '30 1000w

"Of all the epitomes recently published, this by Langdon-Davies is one of the most useful. Also, it is one of the most reliable. . . His book is completely popular in form. By such tests as I am able to make, however, I find its factual foundation to be secure. And the popular style as it is here handled is not a display of verbal cleverness, but a genuine contribution to understanding." Paul Hutchinson

+ Christian Century 47:1123 S 17 '30 750w

"He has accomplished a remarkably vivid portrayal, which will outrank, in thrills, most of the fiction of the day and impart a wealth of information. From the day of primitive man, through the mediaeval period, the first renaissance to Newton, Dalton and Darwin and the new renaissance to Einstein he writes a moving drama." J. V. Z.

+ Churchman p28 Ag 2 '30 150w

"The book has its defects. It opens badly. The first few pages suggest a scientific bumptiousness which is almost totally absent in the chapters which follow. . . But once the author gets into his stride, it is impossible to accord him anything but praise." Geoffrey West

+ Nation and Ath 48:437 D 27 '30 500w

"An example of popularization at its worst. If the author is to be given credit for intelligence, then the book can be regarded only as a deliberate attempt to pander to cheap religious instincts by representing the history of science as a quest for God and for the solution of the riddle of human destiny. It does not in any sense contribute to a clarification of religious problems, none of which is considered on its merits; it merely titillates the emotions of the reader by parading the history of science and inviting his imagination to draw false metaphysical conclusions." Benjamin Ginzburg

— New Repub 64:106 S 10 '30 1650w

"He has a happy knack of hitting on the curious in his researches, and his story becomes amusing as well as informative. He is accurate, too; and that is no easy matter when an author is surveying whole fields of physics and biology, with glances at medicine and psychology. He is also commendably discriminate in his choice of authorities. But what transforms the book out of the ordinary is the author's enthusiasm for his subject, an enthusiasm which is understood when he confesses a belief that science is both poetry and religion."

+ New Statesman 36:22 O 11 '30 1050w

"A book of exceptional power and lucidity." Charles Johnston

+ N Y Times p1 Jl 13 '30 1050w

"It is another popularizer of information. But so far as we have seen, it is the first book of that class which is written in a finished and graceful style. It should be acceptable both to that host of undiscriminating readers which wants its scraps of information no matter how cheaply or clumsily offered, and that smaller but more finicking group which wants the same scrappy food but cannot stomach it unless well cooked and cleverly served." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:428 Jl 16 '30 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:71 O '30

St Louis 28:234 O '30

Reviewed by F. A. Clement

Sat R 150:642 N 15 '30 450w

"It is very certain that the historical presentation of man's changing picture of the universe in Langdon-Davies's book clears up many difficulties and will prove of great worth in the establishing of a sound philosophy of life. The book is especially noteworthy because of the clear way in which the relation of science and religion is presented." B. W. Kunkel

+ Sat R of Lit 7:135 S 20 '30 1000w

Spec 145:468 O 4 '30 950w

Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 25 '30 930w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1011 N 27 '30 1650w

LANGER, MRS SUSANNE KATHERINA (KNAUTH). Practice of philosophy; with a prefatory note by Alfred N. Whitehead. 225p $2 Holt

100 Philosophy. Logic 30-17619

A short exposition of the aims, methods and actual achievements of philosophy. The author discusses the kind of training that is essential to the understanding of philosophical problems, takes up the problems most accessible to the beginner's understanding, and, thru a study of the logic of relations, shows the student how to appreciate and interpret the content of philosophical doctrine.

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 30 '30 450w

"Mrs. Langer (who teaches philosophy at Radcliffe College) has written an introduction to philosophy that differs greatly from most books of similar intent. She has written a book that is interesting (which most introductions to philosophy are not). . . The unique feature of her book is a competent (though elementary) explanation of what so-called symbolic logic has been up to in recent years and of the significance of this logic for other branches of philosophy. . . I would rename Mrs. Langer's book. She has not really written a book that describes 'the practice of philosophy.' She has rather written a book that makes vividly clear 'the practice of contemporary logic.' But within these limits she has written so well that many may profit from following her thought through her absorbing pages." S. P. Lamprecht

+ Sat R of Lit 7:140 S 20 '30 1050w

LANGER, WILLIAM LEONARD. Franco-Russian alliance, 1890-1894. (Harvard hist. studies) 455p $4.50 Harvard univ. press

940.28 Europe—Politics. Franco-Russian alliance 29-25161

"Though the epoch discussed by Professor Langer is from 1890-1894, he begins his monograph with a survey of European affairs in 1888, when William II became emperor of a united Germany, developed by his grandfather into a mighty nation, with Otto Von Bismarck, one of the world's greatest statesmen, still at hand to advise and guide him. A whole chapter is devoted to an explanation of Bismarck's system and a view of the political conditions prevailing in Europe at the time."—Boston Transcript

"Mr. Langer is to be especially congratulated on the skill with which he makes the reader see the situation as it presented itself at any given moment to a particular government rather than as it appears to the historian who knows what is going to happen. Another excellent feature is the impression created of the principal actors." B. E. Schmitt

+ Am Hist R 35:608 Ap '30 900w

"A careful and intelligent study based upon all available pertinent material, including particularly that in the archives at Vienna. The bibliography is extraordinarily complete and well annotated." A. H. L.

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:788 Ag '30 200w

Reviewed by S. B. Fay

Books p12 Je 1 '30 160w

"Professor Langer has given us a lucid and vivid exposition of the reasons for the political alliances between the different nations. It is certainly an invaluable aid to all students of the history of the latter part of the nineteenth century, and it is so clearly and concisely written that it can be read with keen enjoyment by anyone who desires to follow the sequence of events of that period and their relation to our own time." G. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 1 '30 650w

"The present reviewer has gone through no study of late nineteenth century diplomacy that envisages more clearly the complicated milieu in which Bismarck and Caprivi, Freycinet and Ribot, Thiers, Salisbury, Rosebery and Crispi groped their way. Professor Langer approaches his problem as much from the German, the British and Italian angle as from the French or Russian." Alexander Baltzly

+ Current Hist 31:1052 Mr '30 800w

"The importance of the Franco-Russian Alliance in the pre-war European system has long been recognized, and the lack of a thorough and

LANGER, W. L.—Continued
scholarly study of its creation and rôle in European affairs has been keenly felt. This situation, at least, in so far as the establishment of the alliance is concerned, has been remedied by the publication of Professor Langer's book. . . For the general reader, who may easily get lost in the mass of detail and intrigue, the volume might be improved by a summarizing paragraph at the end of each chapter and a chronological table in the appendix. All in all, however, the volume is a very valuable contribution to the recent diplomatic history of Europe." F. L. Benns
+ — Hist Outlook 21:235 My '30 550w

Reviewed by William MacDonald
Nation 130:428 Ap 9 '30 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:33 Ap '30

St Louis 28:130 My '30

"In this clear and scholarly account of a very intricate period of diplomatic history the author has availed himself of the wealth of official material published in France and Germany after the War. What is chiefly lacking, as he himself admits, is Russian material, but what still remains to be published is unlikely to change the main lines of the argument."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p359 My 1 '30 1000w

LANGSAM, WALTER CONSUELO. Napoleonic wars and German nationalism in Austria. (Studies in hist., economics and public law) 241p $3.75 Columbia univ. press

943.6 Austria—History. Austria—Politics and government. Germans in Austria. Austria—Nationality 30-20876

The story of the growth of a nationalistic movement in Austria, as in Germany, prior to 1815. The author is instructor in history in Columbia University.

"Professor Langsam has written in many ways a pioneering volume, for little has been done with the history of Austrian movements between 1806 and 1815. His work is thorough and scholarly, and he includes many illuminating footnotes, a large bibliography and other aids for the student. He studies very profoundly and intensely a period which contains a significant part of the explanation of later movements in European history." R. K. M.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 19 '30 750w

"Dr. Langsam's combination of sound scholarship and literary ability makes this book a treat to the reviewer." J. F. Scott
+ Hist Outlook 21:394 D '30 480w

LANHAM, EDWIN MOULTRIE. Sailors don't care. 302p $2.50 Cape 30-20355

A boy of seventeen ships aboard the tramp steamer, Arden. This is the story of the young sailor's experiences on board and in the various ports of China and Japan. Ned accompanies some of the sailors to cafés and dives on shore, at one time misses his ship and becomes a beachcomber in Hankow, and ends up in post-war Germany, where a girl named Rita is very good to him.

" 'Sailors Don't Care,' indeed pretends to few of the virtues of factual autobiography. It amounts, rather, to a sea tale of not unusual cut, containing its share of nautical types, immoral landlubbers and lively happenings—including a typhoon. A final episode concerns night life in Hamburg and a crisis in young Ned's adolescence."
Books p13 Ag 24 '30 200w

Boston Transcript p5 O 4 '30 320w

"Very much more readable than reviewable sailor's log."
+ — N Y Times p32 S 28 '30 180w

LANIER, HENRY WYSHAM. O rare content; being Herman Shaw Rylieny's adventures in living on the old New England farm: 311p il $2.50 Sears

630.1 Country life 30-9103

"A nervous wreck of a city man, sentenced by his doctor to six months on an old [New Hampshire] farm, regains health and a cheerful if slightly cynical outlook by this experience and his humorous narration of what he saw and heard in exile makes the tissue of the book."—R of Rs

"Henry W. Lanier, who seems to possess a gift for telling other men's tales, has put Mr. Rylieny's thoughts and adventures into lively and continuously entertaining prose."
+ Books p14 Je 29 '30 80w

Boston Transcript p3 My 10 '30 700w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:15 Jl '30 150w

"There is smartness here, no attempt at sophistication, no wisecracks, no epigrams, just the astonished musings of a man who has discovered that there is such a thing as farm life in New England, and who wonders how such a thing could have existed for so long without his knowing about it."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1095 My 31 '30 100w

LARDNER, RING W., and KAUFMAN, GEORGE S. June moon, a comedy in a prologue and three acts. 187p $2 (7s 6d) Scribner

812 30-9769

A modern drama in which the hero, a song hit writer from Schenectady, is very nearly trapped into marriage by an unscrupulous woman but is saved just in time by the sweet young girl whom he really loves.

Booklist 26:349 Je '30

" 'June Moon', one of the current successes of the theatrical season, is a thoroughly dishonest play, as well as a thoroughly amusing one. To call this play a satire is to belittle the word below all meaning, because, to the very thing it pretends to satirize—the banality, sentimentality and general cheap vulgarity of popular songs and Tin Pan Alley—it yields completely in the end, finishing with a sentimental about-face, a rose-water path of happy hokum, that would make even G. M. Cohan blush. Never was there a more bare-faced denial of an author's mood and vision, for the sake of catching pennies, than in this play. 'June Moon' will make a lot of money. But in his heart Lardner must be ashamed of it." W. P. Eaton
— Books p17 Je 29 '30 250w

St Louis 28:215 S '30

"There is something almost overwhelming in the satirical vision with which the vulgarity and tawdriness of the song-writer's trade are here condensed in a small group of typical characters. The translation into terms of drama is far from perfect; indeed, the technical flaws are so apparent that they must interfere with even an uncritical playgoer's enjoyment of the play. But, if there is far too often no reason why the characters do the particular things they do at the particular time and place, one phase of American life is portrayed with deep, if disquieting, significance."
+ — Springf'd Republican p14 My 28 '30 200w

LARRIMER, MARY. Life of Paul of Tarsus. 242p $5 Lothrop

225.9 Paul, Saint 30-542

"An imaginative sketch of St. Paul's life from his infancy to his martyrdom."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"One would class this as a book of inspiration rather than information. It is artistic. The customs of the Jews, the life of the times and picturesque geography are clearly woven into the story. Yet one cannot help feeling that it is a good specimen of journalistic work rather than a piece of scholarship."

— + Boston Transcript p3 Mr 1 '30 280w

"It is a little difficult to grasp the precise purpose of this study, if it is more than to provide a graphic sketch of St. Paul's life by an imaginative use of the Acts of the Apostles."

Times [London] Lit Sup p195 Mr 6 '30 80w

LARRIMORE, LIDA, pseud. See Turner, L. L.

LARSON, FRANS AUGUST. Larson, duke of Mongolia. 296p il $3.50 Little

915.17 Mongolia 30-26620

"Frans Larson was created a Mongol Duke by the Emperor of Mongolia and has enjoyed rights equal to those of a prince's son. He has lived among Mongols in commoner's yurta and monarch's palace for thirty-five years, and is filled with admiration for the charm, character, simplicity and generosity of the people. He writes with hearty enthusiasm of life in the open, of horse racing, of hunting the wild boar, of wolves, of wrestling matches, of fox hunting, and with affectionate understanding of the men with whom he so happily threw in his lot."—N Y Times

Booklist 26:393 Jl '30

Bookm 71:viii Jl '30 80w

"Interesting, sensible but commonplace book. The simplicity and candor of the author are, however, very attractive." Isidor Schneider

+ — Books p13 Je 8 '30 450w

"For thirty-five years identified as no other foreigner has been with the inner life of Mongolia, Mr. Larson writes with a special authority of land and people. . . It would seem that among modern Occidentals, only Miss Gertrude Bell and Colonel Lawrence have so identified themselves with the life of an Oriental people as Mr. Larson with that of the Mongolians." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p10 Ap 26 '30 1100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p104 Jl '30

"The charm of this biography lies in its warmth, its directness, and the writer's hearty appreciation of a people who know so much better than the rest of us how to get the best out of life. The book exudes the joy of living, it hasn't a dull page." Rosalind Ivan

+ N Y Times p4 Ap 27 '30 700w

"In a simple, unadorned style, in harmony with the people and the land, he tells the story of the Mongols, a fresh, salty story, some of its chapters like verses out of a minstrel's tale." Nathaniel Peffer

+ N Y World p5m Je 29 '30 320w

St Louis 28:216 S '30

"The political history of Mongolia and its relations with China and Russia are necessarily treated rather briefly, but the description is adequate and explains the virtual independence of Mongolia at the present time. This book is authentic, and at the same time it is a romance." L. J. Robbins

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1173 Jl 5 '30 600w

Springf'd Republican p10 Je 11 '30 100w

LASKER, BRUNO, ed. Jewish experiences in America; suggestions for the study of Jewish relations with non-Jews. 309p $2 Inquiry

296 Jews in the United States. Jews—Political and social conditions 30-32744

The book, which is intended for Jewish study groups, provides discussion materials and methods for the analysis of the racial prejudice against the Jew in America and its causes. Part one is an outline for study and discussion. Part two is illustrative material consisting of extracts from the writings of a score of well-known American Jews. Part three provides a reading list; part four, suggestions for discussion leaders; and part five, a group of attitude and opinion tests.

"This volume on the Jewish adventure in America, although it was designed primarily for informal discussion groups in Jewish clubs and community centers, contains a number of articles that have vitality both for the thinking modern Jew and for the thoughtful gentile interested in race relationships. The book is sponsored by the Inquiry, an undenominational organization whose publications, we are told, aim 'to promote deeper insight into the causes of social friction and more effective methods for dealing with it.' " Ruth Sapin

+ Books p20 N 2 '30 850w

St Louis 28:288 D '30

"The objectivity of the book is demonstrated in that it sets out to propose no panacea, and in the selection of material the dice are not loaded. . . One puts the book down with a feeling that he has not finished with it. There is more probing to be done in reasoning out behavior patterns, more reflective contemplation necessary in exploring the perplexities of intercultural and intra-cultural groupings. Mr. Lasker has given us a volume for our shelf on human relations which will be useful for some time to come." E. R. Clinchy

+ World Tomorrow 13:473 N '30 450w

LASKER, EMANUEL. Encyclopedia of games; v 1, Card strategy. 346p $3.50 Dutton

793 Games. anal. v. 1 Cards 30-423

A book on card strategy, being the first volume in a series of two devoted to intellectual games. After discussing the psychology of types of players, the author furnishes a scientific system of calculation for and the means of mastering card games such as poker, bridge, whist, piquet and casino.

Booklist 26:193 F '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:46 Je '30

Pratt p26 autumn '30

"Dr. Lasker is not merely a player, but a philosopher of play as well. That is what makes his writing helpful and important to those less fortunate than he in manipulation." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 81:12 F '30 230w

Springf'd Republican p10 My 14 '30 170w

LASKI, HAROLD JOSEPH. Dangers of obedience, and other essays. 293p $3 (10s 6d) Harper

320.4 Political science. United States—Politics and government. Education 30-12885

Of the ten papers composing this volume of essays, seven may be roughly classed as political and three as educational. The unifying motif is the danger of acquiescence with governmental incompetence and corruption, the failure to protest against wrong and injustice. Contents: The dangers of obedience; The American political system; The recovery of citizenship; Teacher and student; The academic mind; Foundations, universities, and research; A portrait of Jean Jacques Rousseau; A plea for equality; Machiavelli and the present time; Can business be civilized?

Reviewed by J. M. Gaus

Am Pol Sci R 24:1049 N '30 1100w

Booklist 27:12 S '30

"These essays, provocative as they are, contain dubious first principles—excepting of course those on teacher and student and on the American political system. Everything Mr. Laski writes is pleasant and easy to read. There is no fog in his rhetoric. Given his assumption, the rest emerges easily, thanks to a style as rhythmic as it is lucid. Beyond that, we can only point out, Mr. Laski has erred chiefly in indifference to, certainly not ignorance of, those 'eternal laws' which he professes to believe are 'irrelevant to my argument'."

+ — Bookm 71:459 Jl '30 800w

LASKI, H. J.—Continued

"Everyone of those essays is worth reading and pondering. Mr. Laski is, as he no doubt intends to be, a provocative writer. He courts comeback. But this generation should be grateful for his mind, his literary quality and his relentless energy of expression. . . Whatever may be thought of his philosophy, Mr. Laski shouldn't be forgiven for his failure to apply to the modern world his own wide knowledge of history." H. L. McBain

+ — Books p1 My 4 '30 1100w

"His illustrations are varied and vivid but his conclusions are seldom very convincing, possibly because of the modern practice of lack in positive construction, being content with negative destruction. Knowing that the individual by himself is likely to be overwhelmed if he resists his society, Mr. Laski advises individuals to organize themselves in groups powerful enough to be effective. But of course, as soon as any such group has been organized there begins again the problem of the individual within the group, and this is just the recurring problem that does not make his argument very convincing to say nothing of conclusive." H. C. Suter

— + Christian Century 47:1087 S 10 '30 350w

"Mr. Laski has the merit of saying his say in form so striking and graceful as to make it worth while as literature even where it fails as science. If in justification of him and of the rest of us it be replied that we do not yet know what the next step is, the proper rejoinder is that if we do not know, we ought to spend our time finding out rather than writing books that universalize our ignorance through beauty of form. There is something at once arresting and discouraging in having at this stage such a book from Mr. Laski. There is hardly an idea in the book that has not already been well enough said by contemporaries whose time and energy count socially for less than do this author's." T. V. Smith

— + Int J Ethics 41:115 O '30 1050w

"The present Laski miscellany exhibits the typical professor of political theory. . . All he does is to voice the criticisms of the present political system that have been heard so often that they have become commonplaces, and to offer constructive proposals that can hardly be called more than evasions. His basic ideas are so weak that he is always being carried away by the current of his themes, a fault that is also to be attributed in part to the demands of popular magazine writing. The result is often a farrago of inconsistencies. One is often at a loss to guess whether Professor Laski thinks that democracy has succeeded splendidly or failed dismally." William Seagle

— Nation 131:156 Ag 6 '30 1750w

" 'Dangers of Obedience' is scarcely a profound book. There are no dazzlingly new ideas, but there is a brilliant application of some sound old ones to the new needs of our own day; and so vehement is their statement that one can readily imagine a sufficiently stodgy conservative reading the book with rapidly rising wrath, under the impression that he has here encountered a new and particularly devilish brand of radicalism." John Bakeless

+ N Y Evening Post p10m My 3 '30 900w

"It is not often that one finds between the covers of a single volume such an entertaining combination of acute observation, pungent criticism and optimistic suggestiveness on the one hand, and of half truths, insubstantial generalizations on the other as graces this collection of fugitive papers." William MacDonald

+ — N Y Times p12 My 25 '30 2000w

Reviewed by G. E. G. Catlin

N Y World p7m Je 1 '30 940w

Reviewed by E. T. Devine

Outlook 155:227 Je 11 '30 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:69 O '30

St Louis 28:204 S '30

"Of Machiavelli and Rousseau Mr. Laski writes in a strain of rather provocative originality. When, however, Mr. Laski writes on matters of present politics it is impossible to commend him. The same muddle-headedness, shallowness and lack of coherent thinking that is so conspicuous in his 'Liberty in the Modern State' mars the whole work." Cyril Martin

— + Sat R 149:693 My 31 '30 860w

"While Mr Laski's irony in this volume has now and then to be discounted, his political criticism and social analysis nearly always deserve attention."

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 My·2 '30 750w

Times [London] Lit Sup p444 My 29 '30 860w

Reviewed by D. S. Muzzey

Yale R n s 20:414 winter '31 750w

LASKI, HAROLD JOSEPH. Liberty in the modern state. 288p $3 Harper [7s 6d Faber]

323.44 Liberty. Political science 30-28458

Dividing his subject into four parts, entitled the nature of liberty, freedom of the mind, liberty and social power, and the outlook for liberty, Professor Laski, of the University of London, states his views on the relationship between liberty and authority in the state.

" 'Liberty in the Modern State' has some claims to become a modern classic. It is written with an epigrammatic sparkle as well as with rare clarity and with the conviction of one who never doubts his own faith. In the best sense it is a work of high partisanship." W. Y Elliott

+ Books p6 O 26 '30 1000w

"Professor Laski's book is a bright piece of skirmishing in the field of popular political science. . . What is most deeply disappointing is that in an account of liberty under modern conditions, he has been content to discuss it under the old stereotyped forms. The only restraints upon liberty that he considers are the restraints imposed through the organized power of the state. . . But surely, today, the restraints which most vitally affect the modern man are no longer those imposed by governments. . . We venture to suggest that this book is, in many respects, a quarter of a century out of date." R. A. Scott-James

— Christian Science Monitor p5 My 31 '30 700w

"Professor Laski's analysis and condemnation of existing tyrannies cannot but whet the appetite and sharpen the intellect of every lover of liberty, be he idealist or anarchist. Yet it is important to eliminate inconsistencies in theory lest sooner or later they lead to blunders in practice." W. M. Ball

+ — Int J Ethics 41:240 Ja '31 1050w

Reviewed by Edmund Blunden

Nation and Ath 47:143 My 3 '30 1000w

New Statesman 35:122 My 3 '30 1050w

"His book throughout is inspired by the aching needs of humanity. No work on liberty has ever breathed a finer spirit." E. S. Bates

+ N Y Evening Post p4d O 18 '30 850w

"Professor Laski has written a brilliant defense of liberty. Not since John Stuart Mill published his famous essay has any English writer offered so searching an analysis of the nature of political liberty, or pleaded so earnestly and, on the whole, convincingly for its largest practical application." William MacDonald

+ N Y Times p30 N 30 '30 650w

"This is an exasperating book. Professor Laski writes as a pundit with all the assumed confidence of one who knows, and he probably thinks that he has impartially discussed this problem. But his book is about as partial and prejudiced as it could be. It would have been far better to have avowed frankly that this was a partisan treatment of the subject, for as such it is at least interesting." Cyril Martin

— Sat R 149:593 My 10 '30 800w

Spec 144:909 My 31 '30 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p444 My 29 '30 860w

LATHROP, CORNELIA PENFIELD, ed. Black
2 Rock, seaport of old Fairfield, Connecticut, 1644-1870; pages of history incl. the Journal of William Wheeler. 214p il $4 Tuttle, Morehouse & Taylor

974.6 Black Rock, Connecticut 30-18188

"A Connecticut diarist whose quaint records of a community have some value as social history is introduced to the public in 'Black Rock.' Of this book of 214 pages the 'Journal' of William Wheeler fills 105. The remaining contents, supplied by the editor, embrace historical and genealogical material relating to the town of Fairfield and particularly the section of it adjacent to Black Rock harbor."—Springf'd Republican

N Y Times p25 S 14 '30 500w
St Louis 28:247 O '30
Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 20 '30 1400w

LATIMER, MARGERY BODENE. This is my body. 351p $2.50 Cape

30-4852

"Miss Latimer's heroine is an hysterical, egocentric girl whose talk is all of the 'realities' of life, but who has not learned the reality of her own insignificance. She 'would rather be a great writer than a moral woman,' (aims which appear to her incompatible), but she has a moral woman's body and soul. She pursues her ambition through a co-educational college with its opportunities for superficial sex experience, and on into Greenwich Village with its equal opportunities for the same. The novel abounds in scenes of recrimination and misunderstanding at home and of hypocrisy in class rooms and deans' offices, in descriptions of poetry society meetings and in pale orgies of talk about love, life and art."—Outlook

"The theme of the book, namely the reactions of a sensitive young person to reality, is one that requires taste and judgment to be properly handled. In this case the treatment is so definitely neurotic as to divert the reader's attention from such literary qualities as her writing may possess." G. T. Hellman
— Bookm 71:216 Ap '30 150w

"Probably few people will read this book without snorts of irritation, contemptuous groans, gestures of impatience and other signs of malaise. It is without doubt the most exasperating book I have ever read. But I am confident (partly for this very reason) that it is a novel of rare and permanent value. . . For the most part, the fanaticism of this book overtops balance and humor and shrinks their common virtue to a shred. It must be admitted that when it fails, it fails badly. . . At the very least it must be admitted that 'This Is My Body' is something more than 'just another book.'" M. C. Dawson
+ — Books p2 F 16 '30 950w

Nation 130:552 My 7 '30 180w

"Probably the main fault with the novel is that the truculent attitude of the central character toward her family, and toward people everywhere, almost certainly alienates sympathy from her. This is unfortunate, for it makes the book a disturbing, even painful, one to read. Yet there is in it some very effective writing, impassioned, moving, often powerful. Miss Latimer's penetration into motives and character, her emotional sensitivity and her cultivation of an individual prose style stand out sharply above her present material." W. B.
— + New Repub 62:227 Ap 9 '30 230w

"There are so many good things about 'This Is My Body' that it would be a pity if readers were to be scared from the book by its annoying honesty and perhaps hysterical insistence on the divine rightness of youth. Miss Latimer's book, it seems to me, is rather to be taken as an autobiographic fragment than as a novel. . . There is much that is unnecessary in her book, but unnecessary only from the esthetic point of view. There is nothing sensational or ignoble or false." Edwin Seaver
+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 12 '30 280w

"Margery Latimer has a fine and genuine talent, and her craftsmanship, at moments, is superb. Her dialogue is direct and lifelike, and some of her minor characters—Mrs. Glore, the landlady, for instance, and the dean of men at the university—are sharply and effectively vignetted. The only character, perhaps, which falls definitely short of reality is that of Megan Foster, who fails to appear clearly through the confused mass of subjective impressions gathered around her. Too much, rather than too little artistic energy, has gone into her portrait."
+ — N Y Times p9 Mr 2 '30 800w

"Plot there is none in the conventional sense. The proof of excellent workmanship lies in the fact that you are never conscious of a pronounced 'lit'ry' style. Latimer's people may go a little Gertrude Stein occasionally and fling fantastic chains of words about carelessly, but this does no harm. The whole is one long quivering cry of agony from a supersensitive soul. . . Margery Latimer has caught in her net of words something we all are born with and made it into a person." Eleanor Wakefield
+ — N Y World p10m F 23 '30 650w

"Its subject is one which would try the skill of a far better writer. The entirely subjective story of a frenzied adolescent, it lacks the relief of solid maturity. . . This Is My Body is tragedy: but tragedy of a sort which becomes real and poignant only in the hands of a master." F. L. Robbins
— Outlook 154:148 Ja 22 '30 260w

"Now and then one comes upon a book whose aim is so lofty that it seems unjust to call it a failure, ranking it below all the storybooks that succeed in being pleasant pastime, and yet whose execution falls so far short of its aim that there is nothing else to do. 'This Is My Body' is such a book."
— + Sat R of Lit 6:1073 My 24 '30 640w

LATOUR, THERESE LOUIS. Princesses, ladies
2 and républicaines of the Terror; pref. by Joseph Barthelemy. 350p pl $5 Knopf [15s Routledge]

920.7 France—History—Revolution. France—Biography. Woman—Biography

"Madame Latour here does for French society of the Revolution period what she had already done for French society in the reigns of Louis XIV. and XV., presenting it to us as reflected in a series of character sketches of famous Frenchwomen of the time."—New Statesman

"Just as Mme. Latour treats the Revolution as though it were an avoidable incident in the life of the court, so does she treat the work of these women, who had taken an active and serious part in the Revolution, as though it were an incident in their love-lives. There is a great deal of material here, but Mme. Latour is too anxious to make it colorful. In this she succeeds, if one can overlook the obvious efforts to please her public." Jenny Ballou
— + Books p18 D 14 '30 450w

"The appeal is to a popular audience, but if the technique is simple—it is sometimes exasperatingly so—and too suave, the history is sound, the outlines are correct, and without respect for titles or character each sitter receives in turn Madame Latour's entire, urbane and unbiassed attention. Princess Lamballe or Madame Tallien, Charlotte Corday or Madame Roland, Théroigne de Méricourt or Delphine de Sabran, Marquise de Custine, it is all one to the artist, who puts down the essential facts, and then sentimentalises them. But the likeness is there, and we do see these ladies in and as part of their age."
+ — New Statesman 36:122 N 1 '30 150w

"Mme. Latour's previous works dealing in similar fashion with prominent, picturesque and scandalous personalities of French history of the eighteenth century have proved her to be scholarly and accurate in her collection and treatment of her material and clever, skilful and sometimes brilliant in her narrative. This new book shows her at her best in all these qualities. . . She never sacrifices the dignity of her narrative to its drama and its deeply emotional appeal. She remains always, except now and then when moved by sympathy for extreme suffering, the calm observer, the critical student of history, the objective historian."

LATOUR, T. L.—Continued

+ N Y Times p22 N 2 '30 380w

LATTIMORE, OWEN. High Tartary. 370p il $4 Little

915.16 Turkestan—Description and travel 30-24835

The High Tartary thru which the author and his wife travelled in 1927 is the name he gives to the territory in Chinese Turkestan stretching from the Altai to the Pamirs. The author's chief interest in the trip—apart from the interest he feels in these strange Orientals and their customs—lies in a comparison between the trade and travel routes that are now in use and those of ancient times.

Booklist 27:153 D '30

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

Bookm 72:xviii N '30 280w

"Altogether it makes a fascinating and well packed book. The writing, however, is uneven. Mr. Lattimore gives evidence of having read many books. He refers to some of them but does not mention the one that has plainly most influenced his style, Doughty's 'Travels in Arabia Deserta.' Mr. Lattimore falls frequently into a manner as elaborate and archaic as Doughty's, but he cannot sustain it, nor is it ever so extraordinarily personal and vivid as Doughty's. Like Doughty he frequently uses obsolete words, but not with the same justification. There is surely no place for Chaucer's English, which Mr. Lattimore uses occasionally, in an account of travel in regions so remote in time and place from Chaucer's England." Isidor Schneider

— + Books p22 N 2 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p2 O 8 '30 750w

New Repub 65:173 D 24 '30 100w

St Louis 28:300 D '30

" 'High Tartary' is no haphazard travel book. It brilliantly reflects scholarship, painstaking research into the histories of the nomadic inhabitants of the plains and mountains of Central Asia and a lively interest in human nature. The depth of its background is astonishing, for the narrative is constructed in the light of more than an amateur's knowledge of the history, archeology, ethnology and political economy of little-known tribes. Mr. Lattimore has traveled much, but he has also read much."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 O 24 '30 580w

"Mr. Lattimore writes with knowledge and insight, in a delightful style. High Tartary ranks among the important travel books." J. C. Nelson

+ Survey 65:171 N 1 '30 220w

LAUGHLIN, CLARA ELIZABETH. So you're going to Germany and Austria! and if I were going with you these are the things I'd invite you to do. 546p il $4 Houghton [10s 6d Methuen]

914.3 Germany—Description and travel. Austria—Description and travel 30-10348

In the summer of 1929 the author traveled over five thousand miles by motor in Germany, Austria, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, incorporating the results of her investigations in this, the sixth in her series of European guidebooks. Fifteen of the chapters are devoted to Germany, the first five of which are given to western Germany and the Rhine, six to northern Germany, and four to southern Germany. Austria has nine chapters, including the Tyrol and the Danube. There is one chapter each on Budapest and on Czechoslovakia.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 Ag 23 '30

Booklist 26:353 Je '30

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

Bookm 71:xv Jl '30 40w

"The latest of the series is portable and practical. The author has the faculty of covering a great deal of ground with the least apparent exertion; her intention seems to be to present the intricacies of foreign travel comprehensively, yet without making them appear too formidable."

+ Books p12 My 4 '30 280w

Cleveland Open Shelf p93 Je '30

N Y Times p23 My 4 '30 230w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:55 Je '30

Pratt p30 summer '30

Sat R 150:210 Ag 16 '30 80w

"Chatty, informative, and reasonably comprehensive. The author has packed a good deal of history into her descriptions, and more biography."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1182 Jl 5 '30 50w

"Apart from the defect of hurry the book has considerable merit. A dozen delightful tours might be planned from it, and the historical, like the practical information is accurate and concise."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p556 Jl 3 '30 220w

World Tomorrow 13:277 Je '30 30w

LAUT, AGNES CHRISTINA. Overland trail; the epic path of the pioneers to Oregon. 358p il $3.50 Stokes

978 Oregon trail. West—Description and travel. Overland journeys to the Pacific. Frontier and pioneer life 29-28794

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 F 8 '30

Reviewed by E. S. Meany

Ann Am Acad 149:208 My '30 400w

Booklist 26:351 Je '30 50w

Cleveland Open Shelf p45 Mr '30

"Endeavoring to combine history with present conditions in a picture which would show both the pioneer and the grown-up stages of an important section of the country, Miss Laut has achieved little more than a jumble. In her pages the past jostles the present rather than runs along beside it or blends with it, the effect not being helped by the author's tendency to gush. . . Her story is neither clear nor comprehensive. For a proper historical record one must turn elsewhere."

— Nation 130:306 Mr 12 '30 200w

N Y Times p42 D 1 '29 430w

Pratt p33 autumn '30

St Louis 28:79 Mr '30

"Miss Laut possesses a large fund of historical information. Her narrative is enlivened with a generous amount of anecdote and fact drawn from the annals of the explorers, fur-traders, Indian fighters, and early Oregon settlers. But she does not marshal her information in systematic form, nor is it either as full or as precise as formal history would demand. . . In short, Miss Laut has furnished us a superior kind of guide book. While often carelessly written and confused in arrangement, it is continuously entertaining."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:767 F 22 '30 400w

LAVER, JAMES. English costume of the nineteenth century. 88p il $2 Macmillan [6s Black, A. & C.]

391 Costume 30-12375

The evolution of clothing for men and women during a period of one hundred years, illustrated with many line drawings. The author describes changes in costume, including design and materials used, from the muslin draperies of the French directory period to the elaborately full skirts and poke bonnets of the 1850s, and the wasp-waists, trains and semi-tailored effects of the nineties.

J Home Econ 22:319 Ap '30 80w
Pratt p13 autumn '30

"Miss Brooke and Mr. Laver provide no practical help for the wardrobe mistress or dressmaker who requires historical information by the yard and patterns to a scale; but there is a clarity in the illustrations and a friendly chattiness in the text that conjure up the genteel atmosphere of that century far more successfully than many lengthier books on the subject. And the grouping and coy posturing of some of Miss Brooke's Victorian family gatherings (particularly the children and men) should make a producer long to stage a nineteenth-century costume play, and set any imaginative actor or actress longing to play in it." I. H. B.
+ Sat R 148:758 D 21 '29 500w

LAVER, JAMES. Whistler. 318p il $5 Cosmopolitan bk. [15s Faber]
B or 92 Whistler, James Abbott McNeill 30-32612

Whistler's latest biographer brings forward no new facts or conjectures. While in no way slighting the picturesque in his personality and career, Mr Laver draws a credible figure of the artist and views his work with a well-tempered appreciation. Illustrated with 22 reproductions of pictures by the artist and his associates.

"In what might almost serve as a text-book, Laver attempts to evaluate the Whistler legend, opposing the partisanship of the Pennells on the one extreme to the criticism of Roger Fry and Julius Meier-Graefe on the other. His portrait of Whistler is masterly, a combination of Don Quixote on the field of battle, and Cyrano with his panache."
+ Bookm 72:428 D '30 230w

"If I question some of his personal opinions, I do not deny the interest of his book, for he makes excellent use of his authorities and material, and Whistler, whether alive or dead, never gave anybody a chance to be dull in his company. Nor could the age in which he lived be charged with dullness. . . Trivial misrepresentations I might point out, but, after all, they are trivial, and on important facts Mr. Laver's story is accurate. It is also picturesque, inevitably, for his hero was one of the most picturesque men who ever lived, and his background one of the most picturesque periods in the history of art." E. R. Pennell
+ Books p5 N 16 '30 1050w

"If you always have heard about Whistler and have been thinking that some day you would like to know more, this is the book to read. His best epigrams, pleasanter virtues, more violent quarrels, essential love affairs, rare friendships and inevitable greatness are all told expertly. Mr. Laver both gossips and expounds. The result is a short but adequate account of that fantastic being, James Abbot McNeill Whistler, that is both funny and accurate." Kate Brewster
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p15 D 13 '30 450w

"A well written and well produced book. [Mr. Laver's] book was thoroughly well worth writing." Raymond Mortimer
+ Nation and Ath 48:268 N 22 '30 950w

"Mr. Laver's book on Whistler is readable, and has the right note of friendly malice that is to be expected from the young in writing about the ex-young; but it is not the book about Whistler that was wanted. We really do need a serious investigation into Whistler's merits as a painter. Mr. Laver rightly dismisses the Pennells' efforts to acclaim him as the greatest artist of the nineteenth century, but does not seriously discuss his claims."
+ — New Statesman 36:150 N 8 '30 380w

"Laver's is emphatically the best Whistler biography, a really first-rate job." Louis Sherwin
+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 8 '30 500w

Reviewed by Richard Le Gallienne
N Y Times p3 D 14 '30 1900w

"The book is exceedingly well done and should be prized for its physical aspects as well as its contents. Illustrated with many beautiful reproductions of the work of Whistler and his associates, the book is printed in large, readable type on buff paper and pleasingly bound."
+ Outlook 156:508 N 26 '30 150w

"Mr. James Laver's unbiased and admirably balanced biographical and critical study supplies a long-felt need. He deserves our warmest thanks for writing so critical and so understanding a study of Whistler." David Fincham
+ Spec 145:735 N 15 '30 550w

2 LAVRIN, JANKO. Studies in European literature. 222p $1.50 Smith, R.R. [5s Constable]
804 Literature—History and criticism. Romanticism [30-8527]

"The present book consists of studies of about a dozen nineteenth-century authors (some of them linked in pairs), Russian, French, German, Scandinavian. All of them are described by Mr. Lavrin as romantics. The book opens with an essay 'On Romantic Mentality,' which is largely devoted to Rousseau, and in which Mr. Lavrin explains why certain periods are romantic periods and why novelists and poets and philosophers who write during one of those periods are romantic novelists and poets and philosophers. Then follow his studies of various great figures of the century."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

"This is of the type of book which, though its subject-matter and its main thesis is extremely interesting, fails to be the good book it ought to be, because the thought is unresolved. It irritates the reader into thinking instead of being a clear exposition. . . The geography, as it were, is extremely well done; Mr. Lavrin knows his country thoroughly, and should make any reader anxious to become more familiar with it. Where we feel doubtful is where Mr. Lavrin tackles the geology, or, shall we say, the excavating? Everybody knows how bitterly archæologists differ on the meaning of things found below the ground." Bonamy Dobrée
— + Nation and Ath 45:740 S 7 '29 750w

"Mr. Lavrin has done better work than this in the critical field. His first paper, on the Romantic mentality, makes clear a number of points regarding that movement of literature and ideas, but it moves forward to so elaborate a classification of 'types' ('sentimental-contemplative,' 'emotional-Dionysian,' 'analytical solipsist,' etc.) that one is repelled by the atmosphere of the literary clinic which begins to arise. Nor has Mr. Lavrin always helped his own purpose by adopting a method of criticism by pairs—Ibsen and Shaw—Huysmans and Strindberg, Dostoevsky and Proust, etc—the analogies and contrasts which he can thus detect become too often academic and gratuitous. All in all, a disappointing book."
— New Statesman 34:204 N 16 '29 180w

"Mr. Lavrin has refreshed the obsolescent vocabulary of pedagogical criticism and has spruced up the old sign posts of 'romantic,' 'classic,' 'realist' and 'symbolist' with the fresh and fashionable paint of modern psychology. For all of that, he writes about Balzac, Heine, Turgenev, Ibsen, Shaw, Baudelaire, Huysmans, Strindberg, Tolstoy, Nietzsche, Chekhov, Maupassant, Dostoevsky and Proust in a fashion that is sober, intelligent, informative and at moments illuminating. He treats literature in the well-mannered and pleasantly human tradition of Matthew Arnold, Arthur Symons and Augustine Birrell." R. K. Wood
+ — N Y World p5m Ag 24 '30 320w
Pratt p27 summer '30
St Louis 28:268 N '30

LAVRIN, JANKO—Continued

"Lavrin sets out ambitiously and at first seems to have some notion of original speculation. But he neither develops the ghost of an idea that he raises in his initial essay nor reaches the conclusion his publishers promise. This is one of those books that I put down wondering why they were ever written." E. Shanks

— Sat R 148:272 S 7 '29 1250w

"Mr. Lavrin's love of psychoanalytic terms and explanations is not the searchlight he seems to think it is. It is all very well to talk at length of a writer's egotism, introspection, sensitiveness, subjective ideals and inverted romanticism, and to discuss in this connexion the nature of artistic and other sorts of reality; what still remains is the merit of the poetry or the fiction he wrote. There is hardly a single critical estimate in the whole of Mr. Lavrin's book. It is, in fact, a fair example of the more unfortunate side of what is called romantic criticism—at least, it is an indication of the way romantic criticism, we think, should not be written."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p649 Ag 22 '29 1000w

LAWRENCE, ARNOLD WALTER. Classical sculpture; revision by B. I. Lawrence. 419p pl $5 (15s) Cape

733 Sculpture, Greek. Sculpture, Roman [29-24473]

"Comprehensive but not catalogic account of the thousand years of pagan art. It begins with the earliest times and closes with the establishment of Christianity."—St Louis

"One of the most interesting and authoritative works on sculpture in the English language. It is a monumental job, elaborately and intelligently illustrated, and for a work involving infinite technical difficulties, delightful. And it is full of unconventional judgments."

+ Books p19 My 18 '30 220w

"Altogether, he has given us a very human, readable, and profitable book; and the gallery of 160 plates he appends is a delightful addition to it."

+ Nation and Ath 45:80 Ap 20 '29 300w

"Mr. Lawrence is at his best when describing a well-known work like the Laocoön; he sees his object with a fresh and unprejudiced eye and records his impressions with vivacity. The fact that he sometimes misinterprets his evidence and gets his picture a little out of drawing does not seriously impair the value of a readable and on the whole reliable book."

+ — New Statesman 33:153 My 11 '29 950w

"Sobriety and scholarly caution have not sufficed to rob the text of a flavor of real freshness. 'Classical Sculpture' is essentially an individual contribution, not a mere eclectic rehashing."

+ N Y Times p25 My 11 '30 200w

St Louis 28:72 Mr '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p1042 D 12 '29 400w

"The illustrations are well chosen and the author has tried to avoid hackneyed subjects. This book, though a serviceable text-book, is not up to the high standard of Miss Richter's."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p141 F 20 '30 300w

LAWRENCE, ARTHUR STUART CLARK.
2 Soap films; a study of molecular individuality; with a foreword by Sir William Bragg. 141p il $5 Industrial bk. co., inc., 280 Broadway, N.Y. [12s 6d Bell, G.]

539 Soap. Soap-bubbles. Capillarity. Molecules [29-13737]

"Full appreciation of this work will require a considerable knowledge of chemistry and physics. The subjects covered are surface tension, soap, soap films, the black film, soap solutions, soap molecules, the composition and structure of the film, the purification of oleic acid, and the color and thickness of films. Mr. Lawrence's experience was gained as assistant to the late Sir James Dewar, whose researches 'on the properties of soap films are well known for their variety, beauty, and importance.' "—N Y New Tech Bks

"Everyone interested in the intriguing subject of soap films—and everyone who dips into the pages of this unusual little book will find he is fascinated by it—will be under a debt of gratitude to Mr. A. S. C. Lawrence for having brought together in such readable form so much material of high scientific value which is not available elsewhere." J. W. McBain

+ Am Chem Soc J 52:4178 O '30 280w

N Y New Tech Bks 14:43 Jl '29

"The book as a whole indicates admirably the many-sided nature of the problems involved in the study of soap films, and gives an excellent idea of the main lines of research which such study has opened up. The book contains sixteen plates and a coloured frontispiece, besides numerous line-diagrams."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p430 My 30 '29 1050w

LAWRENCE, DAVID. Other side of government. 285p $2 Scribner

353 United States—Politics and government 29-28686

Mr Lawrence, writing from his experience as a Washington newspaper correspondent, presents in this book the spirit of governmental activities rather than their functions or technical aspects; and makes clear the ways in which government aids in furthering the interests of the people. He explains, from a human point of view, the relationship of government to business, agriculture, ships, highways, air transport, river control, etc.

"This book is frankly a popular exposition intended to give the layman an insight into government as an instrument of sympathetic coöperation in solving national problems."

Am Pol Sci R 24:512 My '30 130w

Booklist 26:264 Ap '30

Bookm 71:563 Ag '30 280w

Boston Transcript p3 D 14 '29 280w

Christian Century 47:243 F 12 '30 170w

Cleveland Open Shelf p38 Mr '30

"Mr. Lawrence writes simply and clearly and to the point, without waste of words, and his chapters are all short and compact. There is hardly any citizen of the country, present or about to be, who would not feel his conception of government very much clarified and enlarged, sometimes even somewhat revolutionized, by this illuminating exposition."

+ N Y Times p40 D 1 '29 450w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 154:190 Ja 29 '30 70w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:24 Mr '30

Pratt p11 autumn '30

St Louis 28:67 Mr '30

Sat R of Lit 6:762 F 22 '30 350w

"There is little in Mr. Lawrence's book for the student of national administration. Generally speaking, the author stops just about where close thinking starts, with respect to such problems as an efficient bureaucracy versus a stumbling democracy, delegation of legislative and judicial power, finality of administrative decisions, and similar questions. This is not a serious criticism, however, if, indeed, it is a criticism at all. When a gunner hits the target at which he aimed we do not find fault with him for poor marksmanship. The book clearly is directed at the man who is unfamiliar with government. As the editor of The United States Daily, Mr. Lawrence is in a good position to fill this need. He knows his subject, yet has the newspaper sense of what is interesting to the man who knows nothing about it." H. P. Jones

Survey 63:597 F 15 '30 550w

Wis Lib Bul 26:38 Ja '30

LAWRENCE, DAVID HERBERT. Assorted articles. 258p $2.50 Knopf [6s Secker]
824 30-11417

A collection of informal sketches and essays, published posthumously, in which D. H. Lawrence comments with sagacious wit and common sense upon contemporary problems. The relationships of men and women, the economic and social conditions of the modern man and woman, the machine age, art, sex, and religion are discussed by the author from an individual point of view.

Booklist 26:388 Jl '30

"Lawrence is far from being the ideal essayist, and the value of these collected papers is chiefly a reminiscent one. Viewed alone they have neither sparkle nor profundity, and their style is seldom distinctive. Yet there is in this posthumous publication enough of the man to make them worth reading, enough of the man who has given us more breath-taking glimpses of a particular beauty than there is any evidence we deserve. . . These articles show a perplexed, sensitive person groping his way through life, secure in little more than the conviction that beauty may reside in the living flame between men and women, men and men." Lorine Pruette
+ — Books p2 Ap 27 '30 1350w
Boston Transcript p3 Je 7 '30 350w

"The fugitive pieces gathered here add little to Lawrence's message to the world. No matter what his ostensible topic may be, Lawrence keeps returning to his central doctrines—that life must be a direct sensuous contact with people and with nature, that life must be a flow, that sex must be a flow, a real flow of sympathy, generous and warm, that we must stick up for our own instinctive feelings against the things we are taught, that we have shut Life out from our living, and that we must struggle down to the heart of things. He was a prophet of our day. He impressed his personality and his doctrines on his generation by returning with passionate insistence to the same everlasting preachments. He was against routine, against mechanization, against stock emotions, against everything that was sheeplike and safe and 'nice' and dull. He was a prod and a gadfly, and he set an example of splendid courage. He felt that we were all somehow trapped by civilization, and he shook the bars of the cage and shouted for release." Henry Hazlitt
Nation 130:519 Ap 30 '30 650w
Nation and Ath 47:148 My 3 '30 320w

Reviewed by Sherwood Anderson
New Repub 63:22 My 21 '30 1650w

"D. H. Lawrence was an artist and a social reformer, but he was rarely one or the other entirely. Too often he was a reformer in his art, and an artist in his reforming. As a result, his art often suffered and his reforming was often misunderstood." Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 26 '30 350w

"The book seems to be less the Lawrence of controversy than anything that has hitherto come from his pen. It is on the whole an engaging little book, more simple and more direct in style than was Lawrence's wont, in short, the sort of little book that would make one rather like the author whoever he might be."
+ N Y Times p2 My 11 '30 700w

"On every page is the wonder of a man speaking, never from his head like a remembered, memorized college text, but speaking simply the words he had earned from his life and the risks he took. No matter what he is saying there is always the splendor of his simple language and the immediacy of his experience." Margery Latimer
+ N Y World p10m Ap 27 '30 950w

"Most of the articles were written for newspapers and reviews, but the real essential Lawrence is there in all of them as plainly as he is in the novels and poems. In fact, a reading of the book would serve very well as an introduction to his work and his beliefs for anyone who knew little of them, just as it will serve to clarify and simplify some points in his philosophy for those who know his writing well already. His 'Autobiographical Sketch' tells us in nine pages more about himself than we are likely to learn from sheaves of obituary notices and biographies."
+ Sat R 149:532 Ap 26 '30 120w

Reviewed by Arthur Colton
Sat R of Lit 6:1043 My 17 '30 1200w

"The essays are not equal to his longer work, and it is only as a postscript to it that they must be received."
Spec 144:743 My 3 '30 150w

"The accustomed themes are here, but all the anti-human elements, the hatreds that disturb his dramatization of instincts and senses, reach now to a serene and not intolerant survey of the ways of his fellows. It is a sensible, good-humored view of the world, expressed with the poetic animation that was the mark of Lawrence's finest work."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p315 Ap 10 '30 550w

LAWRENCE, DAVID HERBERT. The virgin and the gipsy. 175p $2.50 Knopf [6s Secker]
30-30568

"When D. H. Lawrence died last year [in France], he left the unrevised manuscript of a novel, The Virgin and the Gipsy. . . In a stiff little tale of the daughter of a narrow, stultifying church household who falls in love with a gipsy, we find again Lawrence's pure maiden and untamed male, and his 'self-righteous moralist as the menace to twentieth century virility': and in the climax, his accustomed use of symbolism."—Outlook

"At first reading the story seems not ended, but certain bits of internal evidence imply that it is, although it might well have developed into the typical Lawrence novel. That the ending would have been made a trifle more conclusive seems fairly certain. In its vigor and its lucidity, in its detached skill of characterization, it suggests that D. H. Lawrence had by no means come to the end of his activity." Lorine Pruette
+ — Books p3 N 23 '30 850w

" 'The Virgin and the Gipsy' is a restatement of Lawrence's sexual philosophy in terms so simple that the book is little more than a parody of that philosophy which, in so many volumes, he propounded with such persuasive insight. . . We have here either a work whose intended slightness is betrayed by its being misnamed a novel and bloated to look like something bigger than it is, or a work whose incompleteness is publicly exposed without sufficient explanation. Had it been published alone in a slighter, more modest volume as a minor and unpretentious work, or in a volume of collected posthumous items as the fragment of an unfinished novel, no word could be said against it and, indeed, few words about it. In its present form it indicates that Lawrence's powers were failing as his death approached, and this, if we may judge from the high quality of 'The Escaped Cock,' is far from true." Lionel Trilling
+ — Nation 131:710 D 24 '30 1050w

" 'The Virgin and the Gipsy,' with its hackneyed story, its hasty writing, is not so much an example as an exposé of Lawrence's method. It is unfortunate that a career which began with 'Sons and Lovers' had to end with this book, for it seems that Lawrence deserved a better fate than to have it published." Robert Cantwell
— New Repub 65:171 D 24 '30 550w

"Sometimes out of the trouble of his harassed figures Lawrence made stories of rare and disturbed beauty; and The Virgin and the Gypsy will rank high among his later work."
+ New Statesman 35:650 Ag 30 '30 450w

"In spite of all the fiery writing in the book, no person is real. No person is ever real in a Lawrence novel; every character is an intellectual conception of the novelist, given flesh and form so that it may do its part in expressing his ratiocinations on a thesis. Never-

LAWRENCE, D. H.—Continued
theless the dénouement of 'The Virgin and the Gypsy' is one of the most dramatic of scenes. Moreover, it is strikingly original; one will search novels in vain for any parallel. Hence the casual reader, with no interest in the Lawrence philosophy, may look forward to the ending to carry him past the unrealities that precede." Percy Hutchison
+ — N Y Times p9 N 30 '30 650w

"There is a powerful climax, but many of the characters are reminiscent and we must feel that Lawrence worked too much with old material and did not get a chance to revise and elaborate the story before he died." Harry Hansen
+ — N Y World p12 N 21 '30 180w

"In The Virgin and the Gipsy, as in all Lawrence's last books, the author's obsession is too much for his art. His characters have no life. He no longer lets them speak or act for themselves. To be certain that they shall speak and act according to his obsession, he does all the work for them." F. L. Robbins
— Outlook 156:584 D 10 '30 700w
Sat R 150:560 N 1 '30 350w

"For Lawrence—the later Lawrence—this is a quiet book, screaming at nobody. It is full of the extraordinary, sensuous beauty which nobody but Lawrence could quite encompass. The gipsy in his green jersey, the encampment in the quarry, the floods coming down, the old grandmother drowned, the policeman in the ruined room in the morning, whence the naked gipsy had fled—all these things dwell in the mind with the uneasy suggestion of an undefined symbolism." V. Sackville-West
Spec 144:1056 Je 28 '30 200w

"One cannot truly criticize the book for one does not know what revisions he would have made, where he would have cut and where amplified. One feels he would have amplified it without vitiating the lively simplicity of its composition and the beautiful economy of narrative, the sureness of its passage through character and event. One misses perhaps the full ring of that hammer-on-anvil style, which made pages and pages of his work seem like the dark forge of Vulcan, sparking and flaming to the powerful, animal rhythms of his poetic genius. One finds a great deal more than a sketch for a long novel, something a little less than an idyll caught out of the shadows of a grey, mind-tortured world." V. S. Pritchett
+ — Spec 145:990 D 20 '30 580w

"The queer little story, coldly regarded, seems absurd, and it ends abruptly; we do not know what more, if anything, will happen to Yvette and the gipsy. But it is told with extraordinary precision, in the liveliest words; and the Derbyshire landscape in the background, as well as an oddly married couple of characters whom Lawrence seems to introduce simply from a love of uncommon people, are as vivid as the rest."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p861 O 23 '30 600w

LAWRENCE, WILLIAM. Life of Phillips
2 Brooks. (Creative lives) 151p $2 (7s 6d) Harper

B or 92 Brooks, Phillips 30-25131

The author, who knew Phillips Brooks well and succeeded him as bishop of Massachusetts, writes this life from memories that reach back to his own boyhood days and Phillips Brooks's first years in the ministry. The great preacher's living presence is felt in this book and the effect which his preaching produced.

Booklist 27:204 Ja '31

"It is amazing that in so brief a work the author can convey so successfully the impression of the enormous physical stature, the magnetic and magnificent personal presence, the passionate and burning eloquence and the exalted spirit of one of the supreme religious leaders in American history. One might wish that there were more biographical details in this book, for it is sketchy in the extreme, but these details are all accurately recorded in Dr. Allen's standard work. Bishop Lawrence has undoubtedly erred on the right side in focusing his attention not so much upon telling to his readers the story of a life as conveying to them the impression of a personality." J. H. Holmes
+ Books p26 D 7 '30 450w

"No one else could have written his life so intimately and understandingly as Bishop Lawrence, his successor as bishop of Massachusetts. This biography is not a work of research. Its data are drawn from a single previously published life, supplemented by the author's own memories and estimates. It is this personal element that gives it special value."
+ Christian Century 47:1564 D 17 '30 200w

LAZARON, MORRIS S. Seed of Abraham; ten Jews of the ages. 327p il $2.50 Century

922.96 Jews—Biography 30-12398

Critical appreciation and interpretations of ten Jews whom Rabbi Lazaron considers the greatest in history: Moses, David, Jeremiah, Mary, Jesus, Spinoza, Heinrich Heine, Karl Marx, Benjamin Disraeli, Theodor Herzl.

Reviewed by Ruth Sapin
Books p9 S 7 '30 400w

"It is a portrait gallery of widely varying personalities and startling contrasts and for that reason, doubtless, all the more interesting. At any rate, Rabbi Lazaron makes a fascinating book out of his pen pictures, for he deals with each of his subjects frankly, sincerely and with a warm glow of feeling that gives it life and color."
+ N Y Times p26 My 25 '30 420w
St Louis 28:217 S '30

LEA, FANNIE HEASLIP. Happy landings. 307p $2 Dodd

30-12291

The aviator whom Malou loved had been killed when his plane crashed. Malou determines to carry on in her career, and leaves for Hollywood to enter the talkies. On her way she meets Jed Traill, another ex-flying ace, and falls in love with him. Starring in the same picture, they gain fame together, and a happy landing is achieved.

Booklist 26:398 Jl '30
Books p10 Ag 31 '30 120w

"Mrs. Lea has written an affecting love story, the only redeeming feature of which is the hero. Judged from an ethical point of view, to say the least, the moral lacks uplift."
— Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '30 280w

"The author wins a measure of distinction in her novel by picturing Hollywood without the usual frills accorded it by fiction writers. She does not paint it as a den of iniquity or as a land of fantastic glamour but as a very busy corner in a work-a-day world."
+ — N Y Times p24 Je 8 '30 150w
Springf'd Republican p7e Je 15 '30 250w

LEACH, PAUL R. That man Dawes; the story
2 of a man who has placed his name high among the great of the world in this generation because he ruled his life by common sense. 349p il $4 Reilly & Lee

B or 92 Dawes, Charles Gates 30-29262

"Mr. Leach, who is a political writer on The Chicago Daily News, has written quite completely the story of General Dawes's life, so far as its outward developments are concerned, from his childhood down to the events of the London Naval Conference early in the present year."—N Y Times

Reviewed by Boyden Sparks
Books p5 D 14 '30 500w

"There is in it much that is generally known and a whole lot that has not been common property. It is a real effort that is engrossing and authentic. It is thoroughly and entertainingly done."

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 26 '30 600w

"[His] has been a life full of important events, a stirring life, and Mr. Leach tells its story in a vigorous, colorful, journalistic style that misses no dramatic situation and stresses every appeal to the emotional interests of the reader. Anecdotes, stories of this and that, are used plentifully throughout the narrative. And so, altogether, Mr. Leach has made a very readable book about a man who has won the affection, the sincere regard, the confidence, the thoroughgoing belief in his integrity and the amused admiration of practically all his fellow-citizens."
+ N Y Times p19 D 28 '30 300w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 N 26 '30 650w

LEACH, WILLIAM HERMAN. Church publicity; a complete treatment of publicity opportunities and methods in the local church. 270p il $2.25 Cokesbury press

250 Church advertising. Publicity 30-3793

Practical methods of successful advertising for the use of the modern church are suggested in this book by the editor of Church Management. The author includes church printing, church advertising and church publicity under the general heading of religious publicity, and in his opening chapter discusses the background for the latter. He writes also of publicity values in church symbolism, use of newspapers for display advertising, publicity for the minister, the value of good printing, publicity thru mail, word-of-mouth, and thru other churches, financial and convention publicity, etc.

"Mr. Leach has compressed more information about methods of getting favorable publicity for local church work than was ever before assembled under one cover. The preacher who is ambitious to be a prophet and nothing but a prophet may scorn to take seriously this matter of publicity. But even the major prophets were good advertisers."
+ Christian Century 46:1580 D 18 '29 130w

"There is much use of materials which actually have been used by churches; but these materials seem rather carelessly arranged. Indeed, one feels that we have here a compilation of materials which have accumulated in the author's files, selected chiefly on account of their mechanical effectiveness, arranged topically with rather indifferent success, and presented with a series of brief and somewhat hurriedly dictated introductions. . . The author's position in the publicity field give his words the authority of technical experience, and his book will be welcomed by those who seek guidance in applying modern publicity principles to church advertising." C. T. Holman
— + J Religion 10:304 Ap '30 650w

St Louis 28:129 My '30

LEACOCK, STEPHEN BUTLER. Laugh with Leacock; an anthology of the best work of [the author] (Eng title: Leacock book). 339p $2.50 Dodd [5s Bodley Head]

817 30-28083

A representative selection of Leacock's humorous essays, sketches and parodies, from his published work during the past twenty years.

Booklist 27:197 Ja '31

Books p45 D 7 '30 250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p139 N '30

"Those who enjoy Stephen Leacock greatly at his best will be glad to have this well-selected anthology, which will enable them to keep to the high spots of his urbane and quizzical deridings of human nature's follies. The editor has made judicious selection of over thirty of the most popular and enjoyable of Leacock's sketches, essays, stories, yarns of various sorts."
+ N Y Times p28 O 19 '30 250w

"Those of us who have at times despaired because the professor talked too fluently to talk wittily will welcome this book, in which he talks at his best." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p9 O 4 '30 280w

St Louis 28:299 D '30

Sat R 150:318 S 13 '30 380w

"As a bedside book, we can think of no better than these selections. The extracts are short, entertaining, and absurd, and will surely produce the right atmosphere for sleep."
+ Spec 145:362 S 13 '30 50w

LEANG-LI, T'ANG. See T'ang Leang-li.

LEBAR, JOHN, pseud. See Wright, G. M.

LEBERMANN, NORBERT. New German fairy 2 tales; tr. by Frieda Bachmann. 247p il $2 Knopf

Fairy tales 30-23228

Modern German fairy tales written, we are told, for the author's own children, who after reading Grimm, Anderson, and Hauff, "demanded more."

"While these stories lack the freshness and spontaneity of the old folktales, they are, after all, astonishingly good and sympathetic imitations. Only some one who thoroughly knows and enjoys the classics of fairy tale literature could have been so successful in writing stories today according to the time-honored formula. The translation is excellent and the illustrations have the simplicity and humor that appeal to children." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p19 D 28 '30 120w

" 'The New German Fairy Tales' are a bit Grimmish without being Grimm. One feels these are good imitations of the old tales with their tailors and cobblers and potentates and talking animals, but they are not as refreshing nor as well put together. They have been told by a father to his children, and in their action and drama will hold a child's interest. There is almost a bewilderment of events in some of the stories, and one feels a lack of artistic form." E. C. Miller
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:438 D 6 '30 320w

LE CORBUSIER, pseud. See Jeanneret, C. E.

LEE, BOURKE. Death Valley. 210p il $4 Macmillan

979.48 Death Valley, California. Paiute Indians. California—Gold discoveries 30-13437

Death Valley, so named during the migrations to the gold fields of California in 1849, is a curious geological basin that has claimed many lives. The author gives an account of the Valley's early inhabitants, the Paiute Indians, and their customs and legends. The section entitled Lost immigrants describes the hazardous adventures and tragedies of gold-rush parties, followed by a history of the period of mining in the region for its natural resources. The book concludes with a survey of Death Valley's plants and animals and of its geological history.

Booklist 27:59 O '30

Books p14 Je 22 '30 480w

Reviewed by P. H. Boynton
New Repub 63:213 Jl 9 '30 200w

"Entertaining monograph, which combines primitive folklore with pioneer history, descriptive fervor with cool data, and humor with horror. No phase of Death Valley life is overlooked, from the 150 varieties of insects to the latest mining boom at Leadfield." R. C. B. B.
+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 10 '30 150w

LEE, BOURKE—Continued

"Mr. Lee has made a thorough and loving study of the desert, telling of its climate and superficial appearance, its early inhabitants, the experiences of some of the early emigrants who blundered into it, its mining booms and mining towns, its plants and animals, and its geographical reason for being. He writes with terseness and with an appropriately dry humor. There is no doubt that he knows his valley thoroughly in all of its aspects."

+ N Y Times p15 Je 1 '30 1100w

Reviewed by C. J. Finger

N Y World p7m Jl 20 '30 100w

Outlook 154:590 Ap 9 '30 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:80 N '30

St Louis 28:217 S '30

"A splendid book made invaluable by its scientific attack, its dramatic sweep, its unusually fine descriptive passages and its narrative-like quality." S. D. G.

+ Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 13 '30 1300w

Reviewed by M. M. Quaife

Yale R n s 20:400 winter '31 150w

LEE, CUTHBERT. Contemporary American portrait painters; illustrating and describing the work of fifty living painters. ltd de luxe ed 108p il $10 Rudge

757 Portrait-painters, American. Portraits, American 29-13843

"Cuthbert Lee has gathered together representative portraits, by fifty Americans, most of whom have attained a high place not only in this branch of art, but in landscape painting, in illustration and even in sculpture. Each portrait is accompanied by a gracefully worded comment from Mr. Lee on the artist's life and attainments. The collection affords such diversity of talent as George de Forest Brush, Robert W. Vonnoh, Albert Sterner, Cecilia Beaux, Raymond P. R. Neilson, Karl Anderson and Jean MacLane."—Bookm

---

Booklist 27:56 O '30

"Considered solely as a specimen of fine printing, this latest offering from the house of William Edwin Rudge is valuable. In addition, it provides—as no other book has even attempted to provide—a competent and entertaining guide to the field of portraiture as it is cultivated in present-day America."

+ Bookm 69:xv Ag '29 180w

"Mr. Lee's standard would seem to be not the excellence of the painting, but the excellent character of the subjects, all of whom are handsome, well bred and more distinguished than the artists. The collection is highly flattering to the sitters, and perhaps useful as a social document, but it cannot be commended as representative of the best tendencies in American painting."

— Books p16 Mr 30 '30 280w

Reviewed by E. A. Jewell

N Y Times p22 O 6 '29 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:41 My '30

Pratt p25 summer '30

St Louis 28:139 My '30

LEE, CUTHBERT. Early American portrait painters; the fourteen principal earliest native-born painters. 350p il $10 Yale univ. press

757 Portrait-painters, American. Portraits, American 30-701

"The author concerns himself with fourteen painters: Robert Feke, Joseph Badger, Matthew Pratt, John Singleton Copley, Benjamin West, Charles Willson Peale, James Peale, Ralph Earle, Gilbert Stuart, Joseph Wright, John Trumbull, Mather Brown, Robert Fulton and Edward Greene Malbone—here listed in the order of their date of birth. After a preliminary survey of the times and a summing up of the salient characteristics of the men included, Mr. Lee takes up his subjects one by one, devoting to each a chapter."—N Y Times

---

"An interesting and fully documented sourcebook on early American painting."

+ Bookm 71:xxi Ap '30 100w

"The material shows every evidence of careful sifting, and the large bibliography ought to prove extremely valuable for purposes of reference."

+ N Y Times p25 My 11 '30 160w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:41 My '30

R of Rs 82:14 D '30 20w

St Louis 28:213 S '30

Reviewed by W. S. Rusk

Yale R n s 20:422 winter '31 500w

LEE, FRANK HAROLD, ed. Folk tales of all ₂ nations. 947p $3 Coward-McCann [8s 6d Harrap]

398 Folklore 30-32182

A volume of more than 900 pages in which are collected practically every type of folktale or legend from some sixty-odd countries scattered over all the world.

Booklist 27:189 Ja '31

"Collected in a huge volume, these folk tales of 'every clime and kindred and nation from afar' resemble a bag containing the winds that blow from the four corners of the earth." Laura Benet

N Y Times p10 D 21 '30 500w

LEE, MARY. 'It's a great war.' 575p $3 Houghton

29-22421

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:161 Ja '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p46 Mr '30

Nation 130:76 Ja 15 '30 130w

Nation and Ath 46:682 F 15 '30 160w

Reviewed by Martha Gellhorn

New Repub 61:306 F 5 '30 250w

"Miss Lee, even with her narrow view, might have made a very good little book about what she saw of the war; a natural tendency towards solemnity has led her into making a very long and mostly a very bad one." E. S.

— New Statesman 34:503 Ja 25 '30 1100w

"In all the literature of the war which I have read—English, French, German—no one has succeeded better in recreating the gradual descent into hell which is the inevitable fate of the man who goes to war. . . I would say that Mary Lee, first, and John Dos Passos, second, have made the only American contributions to war literature." A. H. Gibbs

+ N Y Times p16 Ja 26 '30 470w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:86 D '29

Pratt p40 spring '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p124 F 13 '30 300w

Wis Lib Bul 26:43 Ja '30

"Miss Lee's book comes near inviting superlatives. Though it might be criticized because of its length—its meticulous concern with details, its staccato and at times repetitive style—Its a Great War is one of the most comprehensive, absorbing, and unflattering pictures of America at war that has yet been written." G. E. M.

+ — World Tomorrow 13:278 Je '30 420w

LEE, PORTER RAYMOND, and others. Mental hygiene and social work. 309p $1.50 Commonwealth fund

361 New York school of social work. Social service. Child study. Mental physiology and hygiene 29-24604

"The Bureau of Children's Guidance was established by the New York School of Social Work in 1921. This book is not an analytical study but a descriptive account of the work of the Bureau as a center for the treatment of problem children and the training of social workers. Part 2 is devoted to education for psychiatric social work. An appendix gives useful charts and forms used by the organization."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Reviewed by S. A. Queen
Ann Am Acad 149:sup206 My '30 100w
Booklist 26:380 Jl '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p40 Mr '30
J Home Econ 22:221 Mr '30 70w
St Louis 28:91 Ap '30

"I know of no other writing which has presented the parent-child relationship with such clarity and soundness. The authors have drawn no sharp line between normal and abnormal, the adjusted and the maladjusted, the good and the bad. The same logical reasoning seeks to explain conduct that is socially approved as that which society looks upon as undesirable." D. A. Thom, M.D.
+ Survey 64:200 My 15 '30 320w

LEE, SIR SIDNEY. Elizabethan, and other essays; ed. by Frederick S. Boas. 366p il $6 (18s) Oxford
824 English literature—History and criticism [30-26621]

A collection of the late Sir Sidney Lee's most memorable contributions to criticism. They consider Modern language research; The perspective of Shakespeare and the Italian Renaissance; Shakespeare and the Inquisition; The teaching of the Huguenots; The American Indians in Elizabethan England; The path to Jamestown; etc.

Booklist 26:388 Jl '30

"The reader wades through these heavy pages (at least the conscientious reviewer does) more and more gasping for air as the loaded periods unroll themselves, till the critical faculty is stifled in the atmosphere of academic safety. Not a spark of humor enlivens the scene, no flash of imagination yeasts the dull dough. One agrees—the vital issue has not been touched; one disagrees—but what is there to disagree about; A worthy man, a learned man, a solid man, who did much good in his day. By all means let him rest in peace." Bonamy Dobree
— Nation and Ath 46:708 F 22 '30 700w

"Making his way through the straits and windings of literary waters that have been often charted but as often disputed, Sir Sidney Lee sheds the light of a sober but illuminating commentary in this volume of posthumous essays." S. A. Coblentz
N Y Times p5 My 11 '30 700w

"These studies are peculiarly illustrative of the strength and the weakness of Lee's mind, because they show both the power of assimilating and arranging facts which was of great value in the historical side of his work, and also his tendency, even in subjects other than literature and culture, to concentrate too closely on the order of time, and to forget that nothing is ever merely repeated."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p57 Ja 23 '30 1400w

LEEMING, JOSEPH. Things any boy can make; the boy's own book of homemade toys. 196p il $2 Century
790 Handicraft. Toys 29-18386

"Contains explicit directions for making simple and amusing toys. Among others describes a simple moving picture theater, a tin-can locomotive, a periscope, and walnut shell boats."—Wis Lib Bul

Booklist 26:316 My '30
St Louis 27:344 D '29

"A reviewer's enthusiasm may often be attributed to a wistfulness aroused by the contents of the book he is reviewing. This at least was our experience in reviewing the book at hand. The only unusual thing we did which added to our enthusiasm for this delightful little book was to make with our own hands all the ingenious articles the author has invented for boys to make. Mr. Leeming modestly intends this book for young children, but we think it also an excellent therapeutic device for those busy men who never have time to play."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:881 Mr 29 '30 200w
Wis Lib Bul 25:375 N '29

LE GALLIENNE, RICHARD. There was a ship. 325p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran
30-7560

The setting for this historical romance of love and high adventure is England during the reign of Charles II. Henry Dionysus (Di) Mountjoy Norreys Lancaster is the dashing hero, who begins his career by winning the love of a gypsy girl, Gaya—but who marries lovely Lady Calliope York. An exciting voyage, under the leadership of jolly Captain Thurber, in search of hidden treasure, and a capture by the pirates of Algiers, are golden links in the chain of Mr Le Gallienne's romantic yarn.

Bookm 71:xxvii Ap '30 40w

"It would be fatal to criticize so fragile a fable. You must either like it or leave it alone. Mr. Le Gallienne is of that school of historians who believe that conversation in those days was mainly composed of 'oddsfish' and 'Beshrew me' and similar ejaculations. The first part of the book is by far the better written and one reader at least enjoyed, without any uneasy qualms, the verses scattered through the volume." William McFee
Books p15 Mr 23 '30 650w

"It is a beautifully conceived romance, and it is doubtful if anyone could have told it half so well as Richard Le Gallienne." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p1 Mr 22 '30 450w
Cleveland Open Shelf p64 Ap '30

"In his new novel the poet's prose reflects something of the rich glamour and glow of his verse." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p8s F 22 '30 100w
N Y Times p7 F 23 '30 850w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:467 Mr 19 '30 80w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:40 My '30

"Richard Le Gallienne's latest book is frankly and recklessly romantic. There is no pretense at philosophy or ethical discourse, but to compensate for what has become all too common, it has a lightness and grace that is infrequent nowadays. It is not even a historical novel but rather a lovely harlequinade in which everyone—and the reader—enjoys himself hugely."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:809 Mr 8 '30 350w

LEHMANN, ROSAMOND (MRS WOGAN PHILLIPS). Note in music. 319p $2.50 Holt [7s 6d Chatto]
30-26958

To Grace Fairfax, married, childless and approaching middle-age, the beauty and youth of Hugh Miller is like a bright note in music, bringing not only a wistful nostalgia for past love, but the desire to carry on in the future. Something of the same experience comes to Gerald MacKay, who momentarily forgets his scholasticism and his too complacent wife by failing for a little while in love with Hugh's charming sister Clare. The subtlest emotions of these upper middle-class English people are drawn by Miss Lehmann against a descriptive background of tender beauty.

Booklist 27:104 N '30
Bookm 72:174 O '30 280w

"Miss Lehmann has a singularly bright talent for realizing character in its infinite variety. . . Both the story itself, and the manner of its writing, indicate that in the last three years the author has become more painstaking, more brooding, less vigorous and fecund." F. H. Britten
Books p5 S 7 '30 800w

LEHMANN, ROSAMOND—Continued
Boston Transcript p2 S 17 '30 1350w
Cleveland Open Shelf p147 D '30

"Miss Lehmann has taken a wrong turning: the soul, and not the world, is her true material: and the world of this novel is poor and easy game. . . Yet, in spite of everything, the book has charm: what will the next be like?" K. John
— + Nation and Ath 48:22 O 4 '30 420w

"There was nothing in 'Dusty Answer' to prepare one for as excellent a piece of work as Miss Lehmann's second novel proves to be. The plot of the book is slim, but by skillful construction and impressive economy of both incident and emotion, the author has managed to keep it in sharp relief. Yet there is no hint of a tour de force. The characters—except for their names, which seem to be chosen so much at random that they never identify themselves with their owners—have a subjective reality that gives importance to their most trivial contacts. Undoubtedly Miss Lehmann has read Virginia Woolf as well as Andre Gide and Marcel Proust; there are greater sins and worse masters. She has learned a great deal from them, but she never fails to distinguish between technical processes and personal mannerisms. She is a disciple, not an imitator, and her apprenticeship has reinforced her originality." R. G.
+ New Repub 64:331 N 5 '30 200w

"A Note in Music is a light-weight book; but it has distinction, of a slightly tenuous sort. Miss Lehmann has a limitation common amongst the large band of young-women novelists—an inability to penetrate far beyond a particular social class and beyond her own sex. A bolder, larger theme might bring out a deeper strength that seems to be latent in the best of Miss Lehmann's writing."
— + New Statesman 35:622 Ag 23 '30 230w

"While it is not as deeply felt a story as 'Dusty Answer,' 'A Note in Music' is more capably told. Excrescences have been pruned away; the coordinating intelligence is more in evidence. Less emotionally satisfying than 'Dusty Answer,' the very lessening of intensity in 'A Note in Music' argues well for Miss Lehmann's future as a novelist." John Chamberlain
+ — N Y Times p4 S 7 '30 500w

Reviewed by V. P. Ross
Outlook 156:66 S 10 '30 650w

"There are yeasty bubbles of wisdom that rise ever and again through the stodgy mass of the tale, revealing the sure power working within. Miss Lehmann has imaginative insight; she writes competently and often with distinction. But unfortunately in this novel she has allowed herself to be circumscribed by a theme that, to become important, must be transcended." Grace Frank
— + Sat R of Lit 7:137 S 20 '30 480w

"A banal, blasé and pretentious book about nothing." V. S. Pritchett
— Spec 145:421 S 27 '30 200w

"The author shapes her material under the guidance of fresh and honest perceptions delicately and imaginatively conveyed. Herein lies the distinction of her work, and its lesson for other young writers of novels. Faulty and faltering though her story is, it at least represents fresh and honest creation. . . Miss Lehmann's perception of moods surpasses her conception of characters in the round."
+ — Springf'd Republican p7e S 7 '30 520w

"Miss Lehmann has written a disappointing second novel, although it has gleams that retrieve it from banality, from a constantly threatening dullness, from a certain carelessness of workmanship, and from what one feels to be a recurring indifference on the part of the writer as to what happened next. Her married couples are as real as possible, and she can indicate character by a few economical strokes. . . But half the time the story seems blurred and uncertain."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p698 S 4 '30 550w

LEIGH, GERTRUDE. New light on the youth of Dante; the course of Dante's life prior to 1290 traced in the Inferno, cantos 3-13. 278p $5 Houghton [15s Faber]
851 Dante Alighieri [30-708]

As a result of thirty years' intensive study of the Inferno, Miss Leigh derives the theory that the autobiography of Dante's early years as well as references to political events of the time lie hidden under the allegory of his journey thru the infernal regions. She also maintains that the poem is a satire on the age in which Dante lived and the debased religious rule imposed by the papacy.

"Her book is readable, ingenious and extremely persuasive." T. C. Chubb
+ Books p12 Je 1 '30 600w
Boston Transcript p2 My 14 '30 700w
Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 1 '30 220w

"Much in it will startle, relatively little will please. In her work there is scant verification and much hypothesis. Her aim is to force some facts plus many gratuitous assumptions into a new frame of interpretation. To do so she expends much ingenuity to arrive at conclusions which at times are little short of fantastic. What we thought we knew about Dante is here often warped and strained out of all recognition." Christian Gauss
— New Repub 63:50 My 28 '30 230w

"This is an ambitious book: it would demolish the most vital conclusion of six centuries of Dante criticism. In many ways, it is a brilliant book, a plausible book, but it is not a convincing one." Walter Littlefield
+ — N Y Times p2 Je 8 '30 1400w

Reviewed by Evelyn Underhill
Spec 144:167 F 1 '30 750w

"Miss Leigh has spent thirty years in the preparation of this interesting, if polemical, book, and has stated her case with so much skill and moderation that even if we are not convinced we none the less feel that she has taught us a good deal in the course of her exposition."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p273 Mr 27 '30 1250w

LEINSTER, MURRAY. Scalps, a murder mystery. 320p $2 Brewer
30-20811

Donovan, notorious gangster and proprietor of a San Francisco night club, determines that Sammy Dawson, aviator, shall be taken for a ride. The game goes on, via automobile and airplane, but Sammy holds the upper hand thruout, and wins the girl he loves.

Bookm 72:xxiv D '30 50w

"A harmless and somewhat immature brew of love and bafflement." Will Cuppy
Books p10 Ag 31 '30 130w
Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '30 180w

Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 30w

Reviewed by Bruce Rae
N Y Times p26 S 21 '30 180w

"A good, rapid-fire tale of the hit and run variety." W. R. Brooks
Outlook 155:630 Ag 20 '30 150w

Reviewed by R. I. Center
Sat R of Lit 7:379 N 22 '30 30w

LEJEUNE, JOHN ARCHER. Reminiscences of a marine. 488p il $4 Dorrance
B or 92 United States.Marine corps 30-33127

"For forty-one years General Lejeune has followed the career of a Marine, from the early days in the Philippines, through the Spanish-American War, and on to France. . . Following the Armistice he joined the Army of Occupation, and later returned to the United States to become full Corps Commandant, an appointment sustained by three presidents. His life history, which is in a great measure the history of the Marine Corps, is not only interesting from the standpoint of a warrior, but is a tribute to the hardfighting Marines."—Bookm

Bookm 72:v N '30 180w

"The book is as readable and fascinating as any romance, though it is only a transcript of the strenuous life of a brilliant but modest soldier."

+ Boston Transcript p1 N 15 '30 300w

"To read his story of 'The Second Division's' behavior in action in the Belleau Woods, an old fighting ground before he took command, in the St. Mihiel sector, in the battle of Blanc Mont Ridge, and in the Meuse Argonne is to recognize that he has a gift for graphic narrative and can write about military operations without leading the reader into a maze and leaving him there bewildered, which is the wont of most of the war historians." H. E. Armstrong

+ N Y Times p24 N 16 '30 1100w

LEMAITRE, JULES. On the margins of old books; tr. by Clarence Stratton. 322p $3 Coward-McCann

29-23353

A number of short stories inspired by the study of the classics—the Iliad and Odyssey, the Bible, the Chansons de Gestes, Don Quixote, La Fontaine, the Decameron, Pantagruel, and others. Among the best of these imaginary tales is the one that tells how the Virgin Mary refused angelic aid in order that her son should know from childhood the natural pangs and sufferings of humankind.

Bookm 71:xvi Mr '30 50w

"The firm outlines and clear coloring of M. Le Maitre's work are a delight to the artistic sense. One feels that he loves and respects his medium as well as his subject, that he has borrowed from the classics not only hints for the substance of his narratives but that nobility of spirit that underlies the grand style." G. F. Whicher

+ Books p10 F 16 '30 600w

"Some books simply will not wait their turn on the reviewer's shelf. He looks up to rest his eyes from the book that he is dutifully reading, one of these intriguing volumes gives him a languid, beckoning glance, and he comes back to earth two or three hours later when he has finished it. Back to earth—not wholly or all at once but trailing clouds of glory. This is that kind of book. I don't say that it is a great book; probably it isn't, but fascinating out of all proportion to its importance."

+ Christian Century 47:53 Ja 8 '30 160w

Cleveland Open Shelf p96 Je '30

Reviewed by J. T. Shipley

Nation 131:382 O 8 '30 300w

" 'On the Margins' captures much of the travail of life in words of reflective beauty. It is the happy flowering of a rare and intelligent mind. It is one of Cabell's 'rereadable books.' If this year witnesses the publication of another book so wise and witty, it will be most unusual indeed. For here is a man of letters who has surveyed the past and caught some of the finest quality of the ages." Edwin Clark

+ N Y Times p2 Mr 16 '30 1000w

"These little tales are pleasant enough, harmless enough: even, in spite of a clumping translation, readable enough. But, like Professor Erskine's novels, they bore one with their graceful vacuity, irritate with their conscious cleverness. It is a waste of time to write such books, and I can't understand the desire to translate them. If one knows the classics, he will not be interested in them; if one does not, they offer a perilously trivial substitute." Dudley Fitts

— Sat R of Lit 6:732 F 15 '30 750w

LE MAY, ALAN. One of us is a murderer. 321p $1 Doubleday, Doran

30-16606

In a clearing in the South American jungles six men and two women happened to be staying one night. Before morning one man was murdered. It became apparent one of the number was a murderer, but it was difficult to discover which one. Two more murders and some mysterious disappearances followed in swift succession and then the two young geologists, rivals for the hand of Jane Corliss, joined forces and cleared up the mystery.

Bookm 72:xxvi N '30 80w

"Most unpleasant situation, and very well handled!"

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 30 '30 280w

Reviewed by Bruce Rae

N Y Times p26 S 21 '30 200w

Reviewed by Bernice Whittemore

Outlook 155:389 Jl 9 '30 120w

Reviewed by W. C. Weber

Sat R of Lit 6:1164 Je 28 '30 50w

"This is a thriller which really is thrilling from the first page to the last. . . The characterization is above the average and the story is deftly contrived and written with tremendous pace."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p785 O 2 '30 200w

LEMMON, ROBERT STILL. Old Doc Lemmon. 180p il $2 Midwest co., 1624 Harmon pl., Minneapolis, Minn.

814 30-8512

Old Doc Lemmon is a backwoods New England horse-doctor who is nearing his fourscore years. The automobile is rapidly destroying his business so the "old doc" sits back on his farm and philosophizes on life.

Books p13 My 11 '30 500w

"Every one to whom the out-of-doors speaks alluringly in its tongue of many melodies will find satisfaction and delight in this little book of Old Doc Lemmon's sayings."

+ N Y Times p23 Mr 30 '30 450w

LENANTON, MRS CAROLA MARY ANIMA (OMAN). Miss Barrett's elopement. 372p $2.50 Holt [7s 6d Hodder]

Browning, Mrs Elizabeth (Barrett)—Fiction. Browning, Robert—Fiction 30-6731

Mrs Lenanton makes a sly and lively novel of the life of Elizabeth Barrett, invalid daughter of a retired Jamaica planter, from the age of twenty-six, when she was already recognized as a poet among her acquaintances, to her elopement at forty with Robert Browning, after a whirlwind courtship.

Booklist 26:357 Je '30

"Fictionized biography offers many pitfalls to the unwary. It is so easy to falsify, to warp, or to caricature. The author of 'Miss Barrett's Elopement' may not have fathomed the inmost nature of her people and her period. She may have preferred to slide along the polished surfaces. Of these surfaces, at least, she has caught and set down a delicate reflection." V. P. Ross

+ Books p2 F 23 '30 700w

Reviewed by Frances Bartlett

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 15 '30 1300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p77 My '30

"Mrs. Lenanton, who has previously busied herself with the historical, has marked ability in reconstructing the past scene. She has acute perception for the piquant. But her characters are no more lifelike than in biography done in the traditional historical manner."

N Y Times p24 Mr 23 '30 700w

"In this novel we have literary virtuosity, the ultimate refinement of the ridiculous and the

LENANTON, C. M. A.—Continued
glamor undimmed by familiarity of that amazing love story, the marriage of the Brownings."
+ Outlook 154:387 Mr 5 '30 200w
Pratt p40 summer '30
Reviewed by O. W. Firkins
Sat R of Lit 6:918 Ap 12 '30 700w
Reviewed by Garrett Mattingly
Sat R of Lit 6:1089 My 31 '30 600w

"There is any amount of talk and bustle and literary chit-chat; a number of well-known figures appear, posing in characteristic attitudes; and the social and domestic oddities of early Victorian days are continuously stressed, until the impression is that of a well-acted period charade rather than a story of real life. Mrs. Lenanton evidently knows her period and her subject well, within the limitations of her theme, and her book should please those who like a charming love story all the better because it happens to have been true."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1060 D 12 '29 250w

LENIN, NIKOLAI. Collected works; v 4, The Iskra period, 1900-1902; [tr. by J. Fineberg; ed. by Alexander Trachtenberg]. rev ed 2 pts 336;317p ea $4 Int. pub.

335 Bolshevism. Iskra (periodical) (28-6510)

Volume four of Lenin's complete works contains, in two books, his writings during the Iskra period, 1900-1902. Iskra (the Spark) was a treatise in which Lenin first announced his political principles, containing the original ideas which led up to the formation of the Bolsheviks and Mensheviks in 1903. The second book of this volume also contains Lenin's famous tract, What is to be done?

"Instructive as this early work is of the development of communist ideology and tactics, it is even more revealing in the light which it throws upon the workings of one of the great minds of the twentieth century." S. M. Rosen
+ Am J Soc 36:323 S '30 380w
Am Pol Sci R 24:516 My '30 180w
Reviewed by V. F. Calverton
Current Hist 32:202 Ap '30 850w

"It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of these volumes to any one who, for any reason whatever, wants to understand the Bolshevik revolution. Lenin's famous book, 'What Is To Be Done?' ('What To Do?' would be a better translation) will be seen in the future to have marked a turning point in the whole history of Socialism both theoretical and practical. It is the Magna Charta of Bolshevism. It is the fundamental textbook of Lenin's science of revolutionary engineering—far more important than any other book or pamphlet Lenin wrote." Max Eastman
+ N Y Evening Post p11m F 8 '30 750w
Reviewed by V. M. Dean
Sat R of Lit 6:802 Mr 8 '30 320w
Times [London] Lit Sup p218 Mr 13 '30 180w

LENIN, NIKOLAI. Selections; v 2. The Bolshevik party in action, 1904-1914 (Eng title: Fight for the programme; party organization and tactics, 1904-1914). 398p $1.50 Int. pub. [3s 6d Lawrence]

308 Bolshevism. Russia—Politics and government

The second of a series of volumes containing selections from the works of Lenin—the most characteristic and important of his writings and speeches. The series is planned with the aim of presenting the evolution of Lenin's ideas.

"A long shelf full of Lenin's works constitute the Communist bible, and are thus the most voluminous of the sacred writings of any creed, not excepting the Talmud. International Publishers are bringing out a translation, one of the most monumental of current publishing ventures. It will take years to accomplish, and before it is done the publishers are issuing four books of selections of which the present volume is No. 2. There will doubtless be a rather restricted reading public in America for the whole thirty volumes, though they have sold by the millions in Russia." H. R. Knickerbocker
N Y Evening Post p10m My 10 '30 250w
N Y Times p25 S 7 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1086 D 19 '29 230w

LENSKI, LOIS (MRS ARTHUR COVEY). Washington picture-book. unp $2 Coward-McCann

917.53 Washington, D.C.—Juvenile literature 30-12696

In which a little boy and girl visit places of interest in Washington, D.C. and accomplish a few unusual feats. Told largely in pictures.

"I find the whole book far more effective and amusing than the New York picture book of this artist—'The Wonder City.' The Owls wish that Miss Lenski would draw her Jimmy and Joan with more of a sense of life and fun. They are properties rather than personalities, and bear no intelligent relation to the sights they see, the adventures they have and the children they represent. Sharpness of characterization would work wonders and add measurably to the length and strength of the appeal of these picture books of American cities." A. C. Moore
+ — Books p8 My 4 '30 250w

"The pictures are, on the whole, more attractive than those in Miss Lenski's 'The Wonder City, A Picture Book of New York.' The children, however, are still pert and smug, and it is doubtful if the drawings of Jimmy and Joan sliding down the banisters in the Congressional Library, banging the piano at Mount Vernon and climbing ladders in the Arts and Industries Museum are really childlike in humor."
— + N Y Times p17 Je 22 '30 100w
St Louis 28:220 S '30

"The drawing is pleasant and just sufficiently humorous, and the episodes are enough in number to whet the appetite without cloying it. The color reproductions in flat tints are excellent, simple and positive as a child's crayon work. The book will obviously not appeal to youngsters of the size of Jimmy and Joan, but a girl of thirteen, who picked up the book before I could get a chance to write this review, was entranced by it." Carl Rollins
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1078 My 24 '30 270w

LEONARD, JONATHAN NORTON. Crusaders of chemistry; six makers of the modern world. 307p il $2.75 Doubleday, Doran

925.4 Chemistry—History. Chemists 30-27991

Biographical studies of the intellect and work of six men "whose lives are red-letter pages in the history of science": Bacon, who invented the microscope; Paracelsus, the "medical Luther"; Boyle, who discovered the properties of gases; Priestley, the clergyman who became the first great chemist in America; Cavendish, discoverer of the compound naturo of water; and Lavoisier, who first found out how oxygen really acts, and who was condemned to death during the French Revolution.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 My 31 '30

Booklist 27:204 Ja '31

"Although it is meant for popular reading and will have a strong popular appeal because of the author's dramatic handling of his material, his vivid style and his gift of forceful and striking phraseology, the book is on an intellectual level high enough to make it interesting also to those who are more or less adepts in the study and practice of chemical science."
+ N Y Times p26 O 19 '30 380w

"It was Mr. Leonard's intention to portray a few dramatic episodes in the lives of some of the early prophets of the scientific method. This he has done well. Nothing further need be claimed for the book." Bernard Jaffe
+ Sat R of Lit 7:264 O 25 '30 750w

LE QUEUX, WILLIAM. Crinkled crown. 320p $2 Macaulay [3s 6d Ward, Lock]
29-22139

All about desperate Bolshevik plots, the British secret service (represented by a daring young man, Captain Easterbee), a member of the Brotherhood of Anarchists and his beautiful daughter Pauline, and trouble in Moscow, whither the hero is carried in the cause of international intrigue.

Bookm 71:xx Je '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p20 Ap 20 '30 120w

"Readers who are curious to learn just how bad the mystery novel can be at its worst are confidently commended to 'The Crinkled Crown.'" E. B. Beckwith
— N Y World p11m Ap 6 '30 70w

Times [London] Lit Sup p477 Je 13 '29 150w

LE QUEUX, WILLIAM. Rat trap. 312p $2 Macaulay
30-21776

Frank Aylmer, a young Englishman with plenty of leisure and money, meets the engaging Mrs Quentin at a fashionable hotel in Ostend. He falls in love with her and when he discovers that Quentin is not her husband determines to fathom the mystery. His knowledge of criminology is helpful in foiling the efforts of this super-criminal.

Bookm 71:xxx Mr '30 60w

"A neat performance flavored with sentimental romance." Will Cuppy
+ Books p18 Ja 26 '30 100w

Reviewed by Bruce Rae
N Y Times p20 S 7 '30 150w

"Plausible and not over stuffed." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:350 F 26 '30 50w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 30 '30 100w

LEROUX, GASTON. Man of a hundred faces (Eng title: Man of a hundred masks). 256p $2 Macaulay [7s 6d Cassell]
30-14090

Albert Rose, a poor young lawyer, defended the case of Charles Durin, a valet who had stolen a stick pin from his wealthy Scotch employer, Sir Archibald Skarlett. Durin, who proved to be the famous "man of a hundred faces" in one of his many disguises, intrigued his lawyer to play yet another part for him—that of companion and protector to Lady Helena Skarlett, the beautiful but villainous accomplice of Durin's many lawless adventures.

"A feverish Gallic yarn." Will Cuppy
Books p14 My 11 '30 100w

"Gives the reader with a taste for light French melodrama in the Arsene Lupin manner as pleasant an hour or two as he is likely to find elsewhere. Not exactly believeable in any of its parts, and not meant to be 'The Man of a Hundred Faces' has suaver motivation—and a plot which, for all its intricacy, requires less credulity—than most." Dashiell Hammett
+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 10 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 155:69 My 14 '30 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p461 My 29 '30 100w

LESHER, SHIRLEY BERTON. Barrel of clams. 232p il $2 Harcourt
30-20073

The story of a young girl who spent a winter in a summer cabin on a Maine island, trying to earn her own living by her writing. Failing in that she took to digging clams for a living and writing when she had time. After much hard work and one narrow escape from death, her book was finally finished and accepted.

"The book is well written, yet it is empty because a talent for living is not joined to the gift for writing. She can report what people do and say, but she cannot show us what they are, bring them to life for us, because she has not gained from life the insight and the sympathetic understanding that go past the label of occupation, of race, of financial status to the individual human being." E. B. Marquess
+ — Books p8 Ag 17 '30 1700w

"Of its sort, it is a good story, with pleasing incident, attractive background, and enough interest in its narrative of hardship overcome and determination rewarded to carry the reader along agreeably. But we think the Guild does an injustice to the maturity of the upper reaches of the class of girls for whom it is intended by deeming this the kind of book they should be reading." Amy Loveman
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:39 Ag 9 '30 450w

"Excellent as is the literary construction and effective the set-up of the book with its wood cuts by Mr. Gorgoza, we feel a word of warning should be issued to parents about to purchase this book for would-be literary off-spring that they may be tempted to go and do likewise." A. D. Marvin
+ — Survey 65:341 D 15 '30 180w

LETTS, MALCOLM HENRY IKIN. Wayfarer on the Rhine. 245p il $3 Houghton [7s 6d Methuen]
914.3 Rhine river and valley 30-21188

Included in this travel-itinerary on the Rhine is as much as may conveniently be visited by the tourist during a short Rhine holiday. The book deals with the valley between Cologne and Mainz, including Aix-la-Chapelle, Frankfort, Heidelberg, Worms and Speyer.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 71:xiii Ag '30 100w

Books p12 Jl 6 '30 50w

"This book should prove a stimulating introductory volume for the student or tourist intending to spend some time in Germany. One is provided here with a well-ordered account of the towns along the Rhine from Cologne to Worms, with special stress on the historical background of the communities, and the architectural glories which one would normally observe on a leisurely trip down or along the central river of Germany." Halsey Raines
+ N Y Times p11 Ag 3 '30 250w

St Louis 28:216 S '30

"Mr. Letts has that enthusiasm for his subject which does so much to carry readers along with the author, and his book will certainly convince waverers of the attractions of the Rhineland. It is a criticism of the book that, too much concerned with the past to the neglect of the present, it gives little account of the effect of the war and of the Armies of Occupation, or of other modern conditions. Yet, despite this lack of data, a traveller might fare very much worse than rely on this book. It has excellent maps and panoramic views, and it is well illustrated."
+ — Sat R 149:498 Ap 19 '30 250w

"Mr. Letts' book is a good piece of dignified and persuasive writing." V. S. Pritchett
+ Spec 144:750 My 3 '30 150w

"The author knows every inch of the country himself and his advice can be safely followed."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p329 Ap 17 '30 100w

LEVIN, MEYER. Frankie and Johnnie. 212p $2 Day
30-10090

Frankie and Johnnie fell in love. Frankie was in high school and Johnnie earned twenty-five dollars a week in a mail-order house. Johnnie called on Frankie twice a week and took her out riding in his father's car, or to the Tivoli. Johnnie thought about getting married, but there were lots of reasons why they couldn't.

LEVIN, MEYER—Continued
They went together about a year, then they fell out gradually, and Johnnie began going around with other girls so that he could forget about what a sweet kid Frankie was.

Bookm 71:xi Je '30 100w

"Levin has concocted a book out of emotion sufficient for a short story, thought enough for a good paragraph, the right amount of wit to sparkle in an epigram, and plenty of straightforward, uninteresting detail to fill two hundred pages." Robert Raynolds
— Books p11 My 4 '30 300w

"High-school emotion may not be as weighty a subject as romantic imperialism, but Mr. Levin's portrayal is skillful and unexaggerated, neither sentimental nor hard-boiled."
+ New Repub 63:81 Je 4 '30 100w

"Meyer Levin has written an unpretentious little love story and has done it very well indeed." H. G.
+ N Y Evening Post p10m My 3 '30 450w

"His job is workmanlike throughout and the finished narrative bears every semblance of credibility but the exposition is little more interesting for that. The author has resolutely refused to give his subjects even a modicum of sympathy and since their experiences are scarcely significant, one finds it difficult to remain interested in them. The highly documented realism of the tale does little to relieve it from tedium."
— + N Y Times p9 Je 1 '30 300w

"It is a tawdry tale of cheap apartment houses, moving picture theatres and sloppy soda fountains, a fleshly romance into which, strangely enough, Mr. Levin has written no small amount of tenderness and dignity. It is a second novel to be proud of." Bellamy Partridge
+ N Y World p11m Mr 30 '30 280w

"Brutal and frank as it is, the story has its point and an uncomfortable likeness to life. If Mr. Levin's second book is something of a disappointment it is solely because the richness of matter in 'Reporter' is here almost too rigorously reduced." Theodore Purdy, Jr.
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:992 Ap 26 '30 350w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 18 '30 170w

LEVIN, SCHMARYA. Youth in revolt; tr. by Maurice Samuel. 294p $3.50 Harcourt [21s 6d Routledge]

B or 92 Jews in Russia. Jews in Germany
30-7307

Continuation of his autobiography, begun in Childhood in Exile (Book Review Digest, 1929). "This second volume carries on its author's personal fortunes through the eighties and nineties, in and out of high schools and universities, and from Russia to Germany. But it is much more than a personal record. Along with the youthful Levin we come to grips with Russian history and Jewish sufferings; we pass through the terrible period of the pogroms; we go deeply into the whole Jewish question; and we make contacts with the social revolutionary forces. Dr. Levin writes from the standpoint of the profoundly sincere Jewish Nationalist." (Nation)

Booklist 26:355 Je '30

"The importance of 'Youth in Revolt' is mainly historical. Artistically it is not so gratifying as its predecessor, despite the many passages of sublime beauty, profound humor and keen observation. It lacks the concentration of 'Childhood in Exile.' What it gains in social breath it loses in emotional intensity. The tenderness, the charm, the freshness of the childhood period are gone, and the glory and pathos of youth in revolt are not sufficiently evoked." Joshua Kunitz
— + Books p19 Mr 23 '30 800w

Boston Transcript p2 My 3 '30 380w

"Here is an autobiography that is something infinitely more than the parading of one's own little ego. . . We urge the reading of this book upon all those who honestly seek to understand the Jew, and we urge it especially upon those who are a bit impatient with the restless mentality of the Jew, his salty cynicism, and his impatience with dreamstuff and illusion even while lost in a heroic dream. Dr. Levin, in writing his autobiography, is giving us a ringing portrayal and interpretation of Jewish life and thought of the last century." B. D. Cohon
+ Christian Century 47:1090 S 10 '30 420w

Cleveland Open Shelf p94 Je '30

Reviewed by F. T. Marsh
Nation 130:463 Ap 16 '30 300w

Reviewed by H. L. Nathan
Nation and Ath 47:655 Ag 23 '30 100w

Reviewed by M. P. Levy
New Repub 65:24 N 19 '30 680w

New Statesman 36:30 O 11 '30 100w

"A wealth of experiences, richly illumined by a keen and colorful personality, is packed within the pages of this book. Whether one is interested in Dr. Levin's cause or sympathetic to his beliefs is not important. He is not the proselytizer here, not the active reformer. He is the narrator and the things he has to tell and his manner of telling them places this book in the forefront of contemporary autobiographical literature."
+ N Y Times p20 My 25 '30 500w

St Louis 28:218 S '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p569 Jl 10 '30 1050w

LEVINE, WILLIAM (WILL LEVINREW, pseud.). Murder from the grave. (Scarlet thread mystery) 265p $2 McBride
30-25825

"A modern mystery woven around the descendants of the Borgia family living in New York and New Jersey. Professor Brierly makes a scientific investigation and shows how it is possible for a dead man to commit a murder. The story is rounded out by Jimmy Hale, a tabloid reporter, who follows the professor while covering the murder for his paper."—Bookm

---

Bookm 72:xxiv S '30 60w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p16 S 14 '30 130w

"All in all, the plot is well worked out, there are no loose ends apparent, and the Brierly enthusiast has another interesting and consistent story to add to the growing list."
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 4 '30 220w

"A thoroughly satisfactory story of which the author has made the most, although the newspaper touches are not entirely true to life." Bruce Rae
+ — N Y Times p26 S 21 '30 180w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:69 S 10 '30 100w

Sat R of Lit 7:478 D 20 '30 50w

LEVINE, WILLIAM (WILL LEVINREW, pseud.). Murder on the Palisades. 345p $2 McBride [7s 6d Gollancz]
30-5403

"A cryptic message is sent to a New York newspaper, announcing the imminent death of Conrad Manx, the son of a well known physician dwelling in a lonely spot on the Palisades. The death, the communication stated, would be by meningitis. Three weeks later the death occurs. This strange message and its verification rousing the curiosity of the editor, he calls in the eminent Professor Brierly and a brilliant young reporter for conference. The stage now being set for mystery and murder, the tale proceeds, furnishing fresh crimes and new suspects in nearly every chapter."—Boston Transcript

---

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p15 F 2 '30 180w

"Plausibility is not taken into consideration too seriously in the explanation of all these remarkable happenings, but lacking this element, the solution is ingenious and one which has not been overworked. The author's style is rather better than that of many of the widely increasing army of would-be thrill bearers, and for that some latitude should be allowed him."

+ — Boston Transcript p2 My 3 '30 220w

"In spite of the reputed hectoring and bullying methods of the American police force, its members, judging by Mr. Will Levinrew, seem to allow the amateur investigator to ride roughshod over them to an extent undreamed of in our philosophy. Personally, I should describe Professor Brierly as a follower of Mr. Philo Vance, rather than a rival of Dr. Thorndyke, for he has the same tendency to lecture the police and the same deplorable habit of allowing a succession of murders to occur before he sees fit to name the criminal whom he has suspected from the beginning." Marjorie Towers

— Nation and Ath 47:597 Ag 9 '30 350w

N Y Times p20 Ap 6 '30 220w

"Each murder is quite plausible, but the story as a whole is incredible." W. R. Brooks

+ — Outlook 154:189 Ja 29 '30 80w

Reviewed by W. C. Weber

Spec 145:698 N 8 '30 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p613 Jl 24 '30 100w

LEVINREW, WILL, pseud. See Levine, W.

LEVY, NEWMAN (FLACCUS, pseud.), and HELD, JOHN, jr. Saturday to Monday. 79p il $1.35 (5s) Knopf

811 30-15823

"Newman Levy's poems and John Held's pictures celebrate the dubious joys of week-end visitors and their hosts."—Publishers' Weekly

"Pleasing jingles in celebration of the week-end woes of hosts and guests. The subjects, which include everything from the invitation to the far from heartbroken departure, are gayly and thoroughly illustrated by Mr. Held in his most meritorious manner."

+ Books p10 Je 1 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p154 D '30

Reviewed by M. M. Waterman

N Y Times p16 Jl 27 '30 240w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 My 29 '30 250w

St Louis 28:215 S '30

LEVY, SARAH. Beloved! [O mon goye]; tr. by William A. Drake. 216p $1 Simon & Schuster

30-28177

The problem of interracial marriage stands as theme to this novel of the love of a Jewess for a gentile whose uncle is a Jesuit. The story is frankly autobiographical.

"It is doubtful whether this novel will enjoy any greater success in America than it did in its native country. Surely the present almost literal translation, through which the undomesticated French idioms peek mischievously out at the reader from every page, does little to enhance its value."

— Bookm 72:307 N '30 180w

"The book is wholesale autobiography with few reticences. Mme. Levy expands herself in a steamy, relaxing bath of self-analysis. She laments for her race. She laments for the living and for herself, with somewhat the same heaven-pity-women undertones that you find in the Dorothy Parker stories. . . Scanning this tale of a passionate adventure, you are tempted to announce that what Mme. Levy defines as Jewish and what she defines as 'goyish' can be boxed, for the most part, as the familiar outcropping of the female and male spirit. Thus the book, 'Beloved,' although it tackles an interracial quandary, really transcends the races and stands simply as another amusing annal among the archives of love affairs."

— Books p20 N 2 '30 550w

"It follows the usual Gallic pattern, but is agreeably and wittily written; one's only quarrel with the author is that she has put altogether too much emphasis on the property instinct as the most conspicuous trait in the Jewish character. The climaxes in the story are built about her heroine's preoccupation with houses and strings of pearls. The translation is good."

+ — New Repub 65:117 D 10 '30 80w

"Mme. Levy writes beautifully. Much of the time she is not writing prose at all but pure poetry. Her own feeling is strong, and she does not try to curb it. If she can write as well of impersonal things as she has of this very personal life she will be some one to be reckoned with in French literature; another Colette, perhaps, or even greater. 'Beloved' is a book that can be read alike by Jew and Gentile, for it will mean much to both."

+ N Y Times p7 N 23 '30 500w

LEWIS, CHARLES LEE. Admiral Franklin Buchanan, fearless man of action. 300p il $3.50 Norman, Remington co.

B or 92 Buchanan, Franklin 30-9603

"The life story of a naval officer who 'went South' in the Civil War. He was the first Superintendent of the Naval Academy, fleet captain to Perry on his expedition to Japan, captain of the Virginia (Merrimac) in her victory over the Union fleet in Hampton Roads, and finally commander of [the] Tennessee in the battle of Mobile Bay."—Sat R of Lit

Boston Transcript p2 F 12 '30 1450w

Sat R of Lit 6:808 Mr 8 '30 400w

LEWIS, CLARENCE IRVING. Mind and the world-order. 446p $3 (10s 6d) Scribner

121 Knowledge, Theory of 29-21155

An outline of a theory of knowledge by an associate professor of philosophy at Harvard university.

Boston Transcript p7 N 13 '29 420w

Cleveland Open Shelf p5 Ja '30

"The argument is one of the most stimulating considerations of the problem with which I am acquainted. I agree with many of its details, which I have found quite enlightening and helpful toward the clarification of my own ideas. I am also in full sympathy with the author's general aim; the synthesis which he so vigorously seeks to establish has long seemed to me the chief philosophical desideratum." G. W. Cunningham

+ Int J Ethics 40:550 Jl '30 2900w

"The book is long, but every sentence is pertinent and thought-provoking. One is inclined to ask for more rather than less. . . Positively the worst part of the book is the Index. One remembers some especially illuminating passage, but to find it is often a matter of some minutes, if not hours. These criticisms are obviously minor, and necessarily so, for it would be difficult to gain-say the extraordinary merit and importance of Mind and the World-Order. It is a real contribution to epistemology which no student of the subject can afford to neglect." C. A. Baylis

+ — J Philos 27:320 Je 5 '30 3250w

"The Pragmatists, in their different ways, have always claimed too much. By clipping its wings, Professor C. I. Lewis has placed Pragmatism in its proper perspective. Not only does his book avoid the follies of Schiller's, but it does not even, like Dewey's, lean precariously on the results of such special sciences as psychology and biology." Paul Weiss

+ New Repub 62:162 Mr 26 '30 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p38 Ja 16 '30 1700w

LEWIS, DOMINIC BEVAN WYNDHAM. King Spider; some aspects of Louis XI of France and his companions. 501p il $5 Coward-McCann [21s Heinemann]

B or 92 Louis XI, king of France 29-29534

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:233 Mr '30

"The stripping away of those theatrical properties with which the monarch has been burdened reveals a personality of no extraordinary viciousness and more than ordinary virtue. It is meritoriously done. The pages are rich with a departed glamour and color." Leo Kennedy

+ Bookm 70:676 F '30 500w

"King Spider, with its lights and shadows of fifteenth century life, is a work of unfailing interest, one of the ripest fruits of recent Catholic scholarship." K. B.

+ Cath World 130:753 Mr '30 700w

Reviewed by Alfred Kreymborg

Chicago Daily Tribune p10 F 8 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p59 Ap '30

"If the most valuable service that can be rendered by a modern biographer is to restore a proper balance to the judgment of a great historical figure who has been grievously misjudged by past generations, then we owe a debt of gratitude to that brilliant English littérateur, D. B. Wyndham Lewis, for his fascinating study of King Louis XI of France." Francis Snow

+ Current Hist 31:836 F '30 220w

"The chronicle of 'King Spider' is a true book and worthy of all belief. One wishes that the facts had been woven into a shining tapestry complete and unified, instead of being a broken prism reflecting a prismatic radiance from a thousand separate facets. Mr. Lewis . . . doesn't blend the tortuous and complicated material into a coherent brilliance." Donald Douglas

+ — New Repub 62:305 Ap 30 '30 470w

New Statesman 36:342 D 20 '30 350w

N Y World p11m Ja 12 '30 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:10 F '30

St Louis 28:112 Ap '30

"A work of art it certainly is: lively, exciting, and curiously pictorial; packed with character studies that are genuine portraits, with scenes of contemporary life that are vivid genre pictures. If only he could have omitted those acrimonious asides how much better the book would have been. Or would it? On second thoughts, probably not; for it is its temper that gives the book its character, and, after all, it is character in a book, as in a man, that counts."

+ — Sat R 150:454 O 11 '30 600w

Spec 145:sup691 N 8 '30 700w

"Altogether a good study of the lighter sort, and a pleasing one for all who are not disturbed by Mr. Lewis's fondness for throwing mud or a half-brick at Protestants—all quite unnecessarily, since he is writing of an age before the Reformation."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p864 O 23 '30 650w

LEWIS, DOMINIC BEVAN WYNDHAM, and LEE, CHARLES, eds. Stuffed owl; an anthology of bad verse. 236p il $2.50 Coward-McCann [6s Dent]

821.08 English poetry—Collections. Bathos. Poetry, Bathetic 30-17454

The compilers of this anthology have gleaned from the classics of English verse, and from the choice works of authors unknown, these gems of bathos, solemnity, sentimentality and other attributes of bad verse that are comic and humorous in effect. The opening section of the anthology, called Hors-d'oeuvre, consists of some individual howlers culled from various sources. Among the worthy poets represented in the body of the book are John Dryden, Lord Byron, William Wordsworth, Eliza Cook, Martin Farquhar Tupper, Julia Moore (the Sweet Singer of Michigan) and Lord Tennyson.

Booklist 27:21 S '30

Reviewed by B. R. Redman

Books p12 Ap 27 '30 100w

"The book is much more than merely diverting: it is such a touchstone as Matthew Arnold, in his philosophy, never dreamed of. No poet should be without it." Conrad Aiken

+ New Repub 62:333 My 7 '30 120w

New Statesman 34:708 Mr 8 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 29 '30 320w

"Not the least amusing parts of the volume are the brief remarks with which the compilers introduce many of their selections."

+ N Y Times p14 Jl 13 '30 250w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:548 Ap 2 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:73 O '30

Poetry 37:170 D '30 180w

St Louis 28:215 S '30

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 6 '30 1250w

"The book is an excellent entertainment and delightfully decorated with Mr. Max Beerbohm's eight cartoons."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p292 Ap 3 '30 1750w

Times [London] Lit Sup p984 N 20 '30 120w

LEWIS, OSCAR. Hearn and his biographers; the record of a literary controversy. ltd ed 111p $15 Westgate press, 110 Sutter st., San Francisco

B or 92 Hearn, Lafcadio

"This beautifully printed little volume preserves six letters from Lafcadio Hearn to his friend of Cincinnati days, Joseph Tunison. One of these letters appeared in Elizabeth Bisland's 'Life and Letters of Lafcadio Hearn,' the other five are here published for the first time. In addition to some excellent notes on these letters Mr. Lewis has contributed what he calls 'The Record of a Literary Controversy,' a summary of the disputes which developed over Hearn's character and literary reputation after his death. This essay occupies the greater part of the slender volume, and constitutes its claim to attention."—John Erskine in Books

"This account of the bitter literary controversy which grew out of two violently contrasting Hearn biographies is printed in a style most inappropriate to the time and subject of the book, and one which manages to make several of the inserted facsimiles seem strangely incongruous. . . The volume should be of immense value to students and collectors of Hearniana. It is therefore all the more to be regretted that it has not been appropriately printed." R. S. Josephy

+ — Bookm 72:xx O '30 150w

Reviewed by John Erskine

Books p6 Jl 27 '30 1250w

"Mr. Oscar Lewis does throw new light (not new to students of Hearn but rather for the general public) on certain aspects of Hearn's life that have been misrepresented or suppressed by his two biographers. This new light is due to a series of letters and the combing of old newspapers. The principal episodes in Hearn's life which concern Mr. Lewis are Hearn's obscure marriage with a Cincinnati Negress and the loss of his treasured library." Herbert Gorman

N Y Times p2 Ag 17 '30 2150w

Sat R of Lit 6:1214 Jl 19 '30 420w

Sat R of Lit 7:168 S 27 '30 220w

LEWISOHN, LUDWIG. Adam; a dramatic history. 99p $2 Harper
812 29-30694

Adam, Mr Lewisohn's first drama, is made up technically of a prologue, seven scenes, and an epilogue. His theme portrays the tragedy of the Jew who tries to become a gentile. Adam Elhar, who symbolizes the Wandering Jew, is a man of wealth who has turned against his race and become an Englishman. But he cannot defeat conscience, and finally takes his own life by leaping from an airplane.

Booklist 26:349 Je '30

"Each scene gives us an angle on Adam's fate without introducing him. It is quite possible that for the reader a mysterious and tragic figure is thus created even more effectively than if he were introduced. But the natural curiosity of a theater audience would almost surely cause an itch to see him, and, balked of that satisfaction, the audience would be unconsciously resentful. The scenes of the play, nonetheless, are written with compact expressiveness and fine feeling." W. P. Eaton
+ — Books p13 Mr 9 '30 200w
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 1 '30 280w
Cleveland Open Shelf p72 My '30

"Mr. Lewisohn's expository and narrative prose is at times overwrought, but usually it is a competent and sometimes a beautiful instrument. His management of the dramatic technique in 'Adam' is, however, never anything but awkward and without conviction. It falls very frequently into the dullest stereotypes of a sort which it is impossible to imagine Mr. Lewisohn allowing in narrative or exposition." Lionel Trilling
— New Repub 62:226 Ap 9 '30 250w

"I doubt that the reader will receive 'as powerful and lasting an impression' from this drama as he would from reading 'The Island Within.' Lewisohn has proved that in the novel he can write both forceful and beautiful prose. This is wholly lost in the drama." Harry Hansen
— + N Y World p11 D 23 '29 650w
St Louis 28:108 Ap '30

LEWISOHN, LUDWIG. Stephen Escott (Eng title: Memoirs of Stephen Escott). 315p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Butterworth, T.]
30-7110

Taking the problem of sex and marriage as his theme, Mr Lewisohn discusses, in this sociological novel, three different manifestations of the reproductive instinct. In the first part of his story we follow Stephen Escott and his experience in married life with Dorothy, a conventional young woman who has a frigid attitude toward the physical aspects of love. Following her death, Stephen experiences in Beatrice the reversal of Dorothy's defect—and finds it just as much of a disappointment. In contrast to Stephen and his relations with these two women runs the perfectly balanced love life of his friends David and Ruth Sampson. In the last part of the novel, in which David, a lawyer, defends Paul Glover, a young poet who has murdered his wife's lover, the author's views upon the whole problem are summarized.

Booklist 26:313 My '30

Reviewed by H. H. Clark
Bookm 71:209 Ap '30 850w

"During the first part of the book he has created people as well as ideas and has permitted himself the luxury of exquisite prose. The second half of the book shows a change, both for better and for worse. . . He gives himself over to the thesis and abandons fiction. The loss is obvious. Since the characters become mere mouthpieces, our imaginations are no longer stimulated to enter sympathetically into their feelings, and we at once accept their dicta as a challenge to debate." M. C. Dawson
+ — Books p5 Mr 9 '30 850w

"This is no book for the hands of children, but it might well be in those of every young person of an age to contemplate marriage as well as of those who find dissatisfaction in wedded life. The clarity and forcefulness of Mr. Lewisohn's style brooks no misunderstanding; he is fearless in denouncing sham and the shackling conventionalities which hinder man's necessary expression, without discarding so many of the customs necessary for the protection of the home and the race." A. M. B.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 15 '30 350w

"The obvious fault of 'Stephen Escott' is that it is so determinedly a pièce-à-thèse. The characters are puppets whose actions spring not from themselves but from the author's obsession with certain ideas. In themselves these ideas are interesting, but Mr. Lewisohn's morbid sensitiveness is such that the conclusions he reaches are as prejudiced as his most biased characters. To prove his points he converts his stage into a laboratory and his men and women into carefully segregated guinea-pigs." G. T. Hellman
— + New Repub 62:278 Ap 23 '30 700w
New Statesman 35:151 My 10 '30 380w

"As an essay on sex, 'Stephen Escott' may have value. As a novel, however, 'Stephen Escott' is a failure comparable to the failure of 'Roman Summer.' One can put it to one side, and hope for another 'The Island Within.' "
— + N Y Times p8 Mr 9 '30 650w

"The confidence with which Mr Lewisohn sets out in this book to settle the subtler problems of the sex relationship is not justified by the completed work. The book is decidedly a work of exposition; the pretense of narration is only intermittently assumed for a few pages; and an expository work on this subject should get to some decision, if only the obvious decision that there is no decision." P. D. Stong
— N Y World p11m Mr 23 '30 550w

"Lewisohn's book has an older wisdom, a greater depth, a larger humanity which lifts it far above even such good books as Russell's Marriage and Morals. For the things with which it deals are things which lie in the secret places of men's hearts. And there the artist is a better guide than the scientist." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 154:465 Mr 19 '30 1100w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:40 My '30

"Mr. Lewisohn's preoccupation with his theme has some ill effects upon the book as story. His characters are too definitely framed to show every side of the problem which he is discussing. At times they seem not like living men and women but rather like puppets put into a dialogue by a philosopher to voice the variant ideas about a problem. . . And yet, packed as it is with discussion and philosophy, shaped as it is in a rather artificial plan of presentation, Paul Glover's story of his life and tragedy and the final red moment of murder is magnificent drama. That scene in which Glover kills his wife's obscene lover is, in the midst of a book shaped for idea rather than action, at once moving and exciting and full of artistic truth." Jonathan Daniels
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:821 Mr 15 '30 1100w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 20 '30 350w
Times [London] Lit Sup p494 Je 12 '30 450w

LIANG CHI-CHAO. History of Chinese political thought, during the early Tsin period [tr. by L. T. Chen]. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 210p $3.75 Harcourt [10s 6d Routledge]
320.951 China—Politics and government. Political science—History. Philosophy, Chinese
30-17281

The early Tsin period is studied in the light of its political thought by one of the forerunners of the Chinese revolution. The volume is based on lectures by the author delivered at two colleges in China during 1922, the texts of which appear in a series of appendices to the historical portion of the volume.

"The translating has been well done. It was a happy thought of Mr. Chen to add a glossary of Chinese characters. Until transliteration has become standardized, the glossary will always remain a necessary aid. . . In this day of China's strife and turmoil it is refreshing to get back to the great fundamentals!" E. D. Thomas

LIANG CHI-CHAO—Continued
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:1043 N '30 750w

"While his search for the original sources of information suggests the scientific historian, the use of his material is much more like that of a novelist. But his art is that of a public speaker rather than that of a literary man. His command of language is wonderful, and original phrases, vigorous antitheses and rich illustrations make his meaning clear and keep the attention of his reader. This book is based on his notes of lectures delivered first at different colleges; it previously appeared in fragmentary form in periodicals." Younghill Kang
+ Books p10 N 2 '30 750w

Reviewed by Isidor Schneider
Nation 132:21 Ja 7 '31 230w
St Louis 28:289 D '30

"This is one of those very rare books of which it can truthfully be said that the learned world has hitherto been waiting for them. In short, this is a book whose contents must first be mastered before any man can boast himself an authority on the Far East."
+ Sat R 150:566 N 1 '30 600w

"Amidst the drums and trumpets of the professional politicians, this great scholar's exposition of the political foundations of the oldest civilization in the world comes like the deep note of some ancient temple bell."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p523 Je 26 '30 1050w

LIBBY, WALTER. Introduction to contemporary civilization; an orientation course for college students. 291p $2.75 Crofts (corr pub)
901 Civilization—History 29-5895

"In a series of thirty brief chapters of pertinent information, Dr. Libby exposes the freshman to a wide panorama of epitomized knowledge. He does very successfully what he sets out to do, namely, to enable students upon entering college 'to transcend the limitations of their special studies and to reach a point of vantage from which to survey not merely one phase of contemporary life, but a wide range of its interrelated phases.' The first twelve chapters of the book deal with the development of various occupations, characteristic of modern civilization; the last eighteen deal with 'the imponderable elements of contemporary civilization.' "—Ann Am Acad

"The volume shows no evidence of interest in a sociological approach to an understanding of modern civilization. Large emphasis is placed upon the influence of the physical and natural sciences, and in the treatment of this phase of the subject much factual material of real interest has been assembled."
Am J Soc 35:517 N '29 150w

Reviewed by R. P. Holben
Ann Am Acad 148:305 Mr '30 150w

LICHTERVELDE, LOUIS DE, comte. Léopold [2] First, the founder of modern Belgium; tr. by Thomas H. Reed and H. Russell Reed. 336p il $4 Century
B or 92 Léopold I, king of the Belgians. Belgium—History 30-30114

A personality of unusual charm coupled with an extraordinary instinct for statesmanship render Léopold First an interesting subject for modern biography. Count de Lichtervelde's study of the singular career of this German prince who became a rich man and a king traces also the steps whereby Belgium became a strong constitutional monarchy.

"Every reader of Strachey's Queen Victoria will remember the delightful letters the young sovereign received from her uncle, the King of the Belgians. Comte de Lichtervelde has given us a no less interesting biography of the charming and gifted young man who practically created the Belgium we now know. His analysis of modern constitutional monarchy and the political changes in Europe that brought it about make this a really important book."
+ Bookm 72:v D '30 80w

"Count Louis de Lichtervelde is especially qualified both by his gifts as a historian and by his peculiar knowledge of the period, to undertake such a biography. It is now a little more than a year since his masterly study of Leopold II appeared in English translation. Having written the life of the second king, the life of the first was a natural conclusion, and it is to be hoped that the same scholarly historian will in time write the life of the present king, third of a splendid line." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '30 120w

LIDDELL HART, BASIL HENRY. Decisive wars of history; a study in strategy. 242p $4 Little [12s 6d Bell, G.]
355.4 Military history. Strategy A30-206

" 'The Decisive Wars of History' is not merely a compendium of military and historical information. It is far more. It is a keenly incisive, closely reasoned, thoroughly documented presentation of a rather startling, if not strictly novel, theory of the much-discussed question of military strategy. Capt. Liddell Hart contends, and buttresses his contention with a mass of facts, that decisive results in warfare have been obtained only when the strategic approach to the foe has been indirect. That is, when, to quote Stonewall Jackson, the enemy has been 'mystified, misled and surprised.' "—Christian Science Monitor

Booklist 26:300 My '30
Reviewed by William MacDonald
Books p19 Mr 23 '30 500w
Boston Transcript p3 Ja 15 '30 800w

"Capt. Liddell Hart has outdone himself, adding immeasurably to his stature as a student of military history and a brilliant critic of military affairs. Even the layman, rebuffed at first glance by the stark utilitarianism of the style adopted in the presentation, is forced to bend in admiration before the tremendous mass of erudition displayed so casually by the author. . . In spite of the occasional abruptness, the style is clarity itself. The short staccato sentences fairly crackle."
+ Christian Science Monitor p7 F 1 '30 500w

"Like everything that he writes, his book is, in a high degree, stimulating, provocative, and suggestive." C. E. Fayle
+ Nation and Ath 46:258 N 16 '29 250w
New Statesman 34:196 N 16 '29 230w

"There is no denying that the book is brilliant, fair-minded, of great merit and simply and engagingly written." T. J. C. Martyn
+ N Y Times p18 Mr 9 '30 1350w
Pratt p32 summer '30
St Louis 28:261 N '30
Sat R 149:116 Ja 25 '30 200w

"It is a stimulating exercise to follow Captain Liddell Hart in his rapid survey of famous campaigns from Marathon and Salamis, down to Port Arthur and Mukden. Specialists in the various periods of history will find that he is as familiar with Cromwell's Civil War as with Caesar's, with Edward IV.'s daring strategy as with Turenne's and Marlborough's and Sherman's. Moreover, he is unconventional in his judgments. . . Captain Liddell Hart's brilliant book, by exposing the grievous and expensive blunders that trusted generals have made, helps to show that war is a wasteful and uncertain method of settling differences between nations."
+ Spec 143:340 S 14 '29 650w

"Captain Liddell Hart's preliminary historical synopsis of earlier wars may be thought dull, but what follows, his deductions and his summary of the plans and campaigns of the European War, 1914-1918, will be found of high interest, even if one does not agree with him."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p710 S 19 '29 1050w

LIDDELL HART, BASIL HENRY. Real war, 1914-1918. 508p $4 Little [12s 6d Faber]

940.4 European war, 1914-1918. European war, 1914-1918—Campaigns 30-24091

A record of the four-year struggle on the western and eastern fronts which opens with a chapter on the origins of the war and one on the opposing forces and plans in 1914. The successive years of the war are treated under the following headings: 1914—The clinch; 1915—The deadlock; 1916—The "dog fall"; 1917—The strain; 1918—The break. In certain scenes twenty-six in all, the author also describes the crucial battles and manoeuvers of the War.

Booklist 27:99 N '30

"A narrative that will not soon be surpassed for clearness and balance." William MacDonald
+ Books p23 O 26 '30 850w

Boston Transcript p3 O 11 '30 1050w

"He has brought to bear upon his task a vast amount of reading and research among the innumerable memoirs and personal narratives produced by the war, and official histories and original documents have by no means been neglected. But most important of all, he has contributed his own critical attitude of mind. . . There is certainly no attempt on the part of the author to flatter his American public by any overpraise of the achievements of the American Expeditionary Forces. The history of our participation in the war occupies a relatively small part of the book, and the reader who takes a broad view of the matter must admit, in all fairness, that the author is probably not far wrong in his emphasis." W. E. Stevens
+ Current Hist 33:xii D '30 750w

"Captain Liddell Hart has synthesized the immensity of the war into a single volume, presenting it tactically, critically, historically—a valuable work. One is impressed by the writer's style, perception, critical faculty, and liberal sense of fairness. Yet the volume as a whole is not easy reading. It is far too exhaustive a study to be that." J. B. Wharton
+ Nation 131:474 O 29 '30 200w

"With all its imperfections, of which the author is himself conscious—this is incomparably the best short history of the war which has yet been written. The almost overwhelming mass of material with which a student of the war has to deal is admirably marshalled. The author is often, and inevitably, highly controversial; but he asks nobody to accept his judgments without question. He states lucidly the facts, so far as they are known (his claim that 'most of the possible documentary evidence has now been published or is available' is surely more than a little exaggerated), on which his judgments are based; and if the reader does not choose to agree he is offered fairly the material for coming to a different conclusion. Maps of the Western and Eastern fronts and a number of clear sketch maps help to make the course of the war intelligible to the lay reader."
+ New Statesman 35:312 Je 14 '30 850w

"It presents in fairly compact and unusually readable form the result of a long, searching and sifting of such actual records as the diaries of general staff officers and the post-mortem reflections of the conquering and defeated commanders alike. Even the casual reader, however, is privileged to quarrel with the title. Its chief concern is with tactics and strategy, or, rather, the absence of them. As such its appeal is naturally to the militarily minded." Eugene Lohrke
+ — N Y Evening Post p5d O 11 '30 850w

Reviewed by L. V. Updegraff
N Y Times p1 S 14 '30 1250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:89 D '30

"It is the best outline, short yet complete, seen to date by this reviewer." W. B. Shaw
+ R of Rs 82:14 N '30 350w

St Louis 28:274 N '30

"It is as critic rather than recorder that Captain Hart excites admiration, and in the first capacity he is almost as fair as he is vigorous. In his judgments on armies and leaders there is no trace of national bias." D. Willoughby
+ Sat R 150:495 O 18 '30 550w

"To have compressed this almost overwhelming mass of material into 180,000 very readable words might be in itself journalism of a high order; but this book is much more than that: it is the review of great events by a finely tempered mind, the considered judgment of one who combines academic distinction with a limpid style, and depth with brilliance—in short, an Aldous Huxley amongst modern strategists. . . What he has done, with a skill and courage deserving the highest praise, is to collate and clarify a vast bulk of histories and memoirs, making from them a book which may be read in a day or two, and is yet a monument not soon to be forgotten."
+ Spec 144:944 Je 7 '30 900w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 7 '30 320w

"His book is a masterpiece of compression, bristling with challenging ideas. He respects neither established beliefs nor great reputations. None of the outstanding leaders emerges uncriticized, and in certain cases his strictures are bitter indeed. He discusses most of the war's problems incidentally, and he has always trenchant things to say." H. K.
+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 28 '30 1700w

"This seems to me one of the indispensable war books, informed, dispassionate, clear, and incessantly interesting." Leon Whipple
+ Survey 65:283 D 1 '30 380w

"Among his sources Captain Liddell Hart includes 'Unpublished Documents' and 'Personal Evidence,' of which he says 'it is not yet possible to give fuller identification.' He does not mark or distinguish in any way the information thus derived. Perhaps it is the basis for the ridicule, if not censure, he casts on certain officers by name. Well authenticated or not, a short popular book seems hardly the place for such controversial matters; and they disfigure what is otherwise a lively survey of the War in striking, and sometimes transatlantic, language."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p472 Je 5 '30 1050w

"A distinguished work and, in view of its proximity to the events it describes, surprisingly mature in the historical sense. . . Taken purely as a military history it is the most valuable one-volume work that has thus far appeared. It is comprehensive, clear, and well balanced." Charles Seymour
+ Yale R n s 20:389 winter '31 750w

LIDDELL HART, BASIL HENRY. Sherman, soldier, realist, American. 456p $5 Dodd [21s Benn]

B or 92 Sherman, William Tecumseh. United States—History—Civil war—Campaigns and battles 29-27667

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by M. A. DeWolfe Howe
Am Hist R 35:640 Ap '30 750w

Booklist 26:201 F '30

"The research work upon which this biography is based was of an unusually careful and thorough sort. It is not only done from the sources, which are of course bewilderingly copious and even more bewilderingly unequal in their reliability, but it is done with a critical evaluation of the sources. It is a sound and scholarly piece of historical writing and a moving picture of the personality and services of a great American." W. E. Garrison
+ Christian Century 47:242 F 12 '30 600w

"It has remained for a distinguished English military writer to give us the most satisfactory account yet published of General Sherman and his career. The flow of the narrative is smooth and easy to read; there is no sensational treatment, but a reasoned and generally fair consideration of this distinguished soldier and man." T. R. Hay

LIDDELL HART, B. H.—Continued
+ Current Hist 32:195 Ap '30 1700w

"He argues his case most ably, even if he overstates it. Best of all, he brings Sherman to life. . . This is a book to be read—quarrelled with at times, perhaps, but read with profit and enjoyment—by students not merely of military history, but of American history, and of human nature." C. E. Fayle
+ Nation and Ath 46:897 Mr 29 '30 800w

"Captain Hart's style is occasionally graphic, but it is more often mannered, and his book is over-written because he prefers using fifteen words to expressing his thought more clearly in ten. Sherman is buried under the style of Captain Hart, and the apology for the monster of two Southern generations loses in psychological reality. The character of Sherman is not made quite coherent." Allen Tate
New Repub 62:277 Ap 23 '30 470w

"As a record of actual facts, and as a picture of an actual character, Captain Hart's book will be difficult to surpass."
+ New Statesman 34:746 Mr 15 '30 850w

Reviewed by C. W. Thompson
N Y Times p4 Ja 12 '30 1900w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:22 Mr '30

Pratt p38 spring '30

St Louis 28:112 Ap '30

Reviewed by John Buchan
Spec 144:436 Mr 15 '30 1000w

"Captain Liddell Hart has written a remarkable book and has undoubtedly enhanced his hero's reputation as a strategist."
Times [London] Lit Sup p179 Mr 6 '30 2000w

"Captain Hart has made clear the philosophical foundations of Sherman's thought." R. H. Gabriel
+ Yale R n s 19:592 spring '30 850w

LIEFERANT, HENRY, and LIEFERANT, MRS SYLVIA (SALTZBERG). Doctors' wives. 322p $2.50 Little 30-12741

Nina Wyndram, married to a young doctor, believed that he was more devoted to his profession than to her, because, with him, his patients came first. She left him and took a nurse's training course. It was on her first case, when she assisted as nurse in a delicate and successful operation performed by her husband, that Nina finally became a comrade and ally, in place of an embittered and alien wife.

"Unless the authors of 'Doctors' Wives' intended to write the case-history of one abnormal situation, this story does not stand the test of reality. And from the tone of the whole book, you are led to believe that they wish to generalize about medicos and their wives." V. P. Ross
— Books p16 My 11 '30 500w

"Mr. and Mrs. Lieferant portray with sympathy and understanding the resentment of doctors' wives for their husbands' professional interests, which they cannot share. The suggestion is implicit that if the doctor had only male patients the resentment would not be nearly as strong." Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p11m My 17 '30 150w

"The book [is impressed] upon the reader as something by authors who have had immeasurable opportunity, and somehow only managed to grasp it in flashes."
+ — N Y Times p9 My 11 '30 500w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 My 3 '30 550w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 330w

LIGGETT, WALTER W. Pioneers of justice. 249p $2 Macaulay
351.74 Royal Canadian mounted police
30-19258

A series of narratives that illustrate and celebrate the exploits of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Most of the tales are based on the daily reports of the "Mounties," or have been gathered thru personal interview by the author of the book.

"Mr. Liggett provides a baker's dozen of pieces, rich in anecdote, celebrating the prowess of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the seven provinces, the two territories and the islands of the Arctic archipelago. He believes that the actual accomplishments of the Mounties 'far exceed what the popular adventure novels have depicted,' and even outdo the movies. Indeed, what serious cinema director would dare to show Inspector Allen snatching a stolen horse from under old Sitting Bull himself and making off under the astonished glances of a mob of hostile Injuns?"
Books p16 S 21 '30 150w

Reviewed by G. W. Harris
N Y Times p22 S 28 '30 900w

LIGHTY, KENT, and LIGHTY, MRS MARGARET. Shanty-boat. 321p il $3.50 Century
917.7 Mississippi river—Description and travel. House-boats
30-7971

The chronicle of a trip along the Mississippi River from St Paul to New Orleans, which the authors essayed in a thirty-foot houseboat. The trip took four months and brought them many adventures.

Booklist 27:60 O '30

"Altogether it is a fascinating tale. And there are fine and vivid pieces of writing in it." G. L. Eskew
+ Books p25 Ap 13 '30 750w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 26 '30 900w

Cleveland Open Shelf p140 N '30

"The four months' journey was a real adventure, an experience far out of the usual in the life of today, and the authors have told the story of it with freshness and zest and beguilement. Their book should be read by those who take pleasure in outdoor adventurings into the unusual."
+ N Y Times p3 Mr 30 '30 550w

Reviewed by M. W. Childs
N Y World p11m Ap 27 '30 420w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:83 N '30

LINCOLN, ABRAHAM. New letters and papers; comp. by Paul M. Angle. 387p il $5 Houghton
B or 92
30-7970

Mr Angle, who is in charge of the Lincoln memorial association at Springfield, Illinois, has found a surprising amount of new material to supplement previous collections of Lincoln's writings. This material includes legal opinions, family letters, notes, speeches, even verse, mostly belonging to the period between 1850 and 1860. The compiler has been at the utmost pains to furnish, wherever possible, complete information about every letter or paper printed.

"Mr. Angle makes two admirable departures from certain bad habits of some recent American editors. He tells where the reprinted matter is to be found, and in the case of manuscripts, where they are now located. He also includes all matter that has been discovered irrespective whether he sees any value in it or not. Furthermore, he introduces each item with a brief intimation of its biographical and political perspective. Not the least valuable portions of the book are certain newspaper reports of speeches that are now reprinted for the first time." N. W. S.
+ Am Hist R 36:170 O '30 550w

Booklist 26:342 Je '30

"Naturally a book of this sort contains a deal of chaff, being the leavings from sixty-five years of scrapings, but the grain salvaged is good." D. C. Seitz

+ Bookm 71:233 Ap '30 280w

"As a volume to complete the already existing collections of Lincoln's writings this work has value of a kind. As a contribution to the historian or even the serious student of the man Lincoln, it could well have been reduced materially." Avery Craven

+ — Books p5 Je 29 '30 600w

"If Mr. Angle had done no more than collect this mass of material he would have qualified as a Lincoln authority, but he has done much more than this. Practically every letter, practically every speech and practically every other fragment has been embellished with some brief explanation. Mr. Angle after a very heavy amount of research establishes the personality of the party addressed, or the forces which a letter put in motion, or the circumstances under which an address was made." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Ap 5 '30 800w

"This is not a book for light reading, nor indeed for general use. But it is certainly a worthy supplement to the three already published collections of Lincoln documents. And that is Mr. Angle's avowed aim, as expressed in his preface. He is to be congratulated for a thoroughly trustworthy volume to be used by future biographers."

+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Je 14 '30 150w

"The most significant papers are those which enrich our knowledge of Lincoln in his private relationships. To three or four intimate letters which reveal the tenderness or great-heartedness of Lincoln, readers will return again and again with a peculiar pleasure. Two of them are letters to Mary Lincoln. . . There are arid little wastes given to briefs for law cases. There is material that we wish Lincoln had never written. But there is a surprising amount of pure gold—pages of lucid exposition or argument, bursts of humor, human confidences, chance expressions of emotion and evidences of the man's unfailing sagacity. It is an important addition to our store of information upon the most loved and most studied of American leaders." Allan Nevins

+ New Repub 62:305 Ap 30 '30 900w

N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 19 '30 120w

Reviewed by Horace Green

N Y Times p11 N 16 '30 950w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:12 S '30 200w

Springf'd Republican p10 Je 20 '30 150w

Reviewed by J. G. Randall

Yale R n s 19:835 summer '30 320w

LINCOLN, JOSEPH CROSBY. Blowing clear. 333p $2.50 (7s 6d) Appleton

30-23913

John Heath lived at Nauticook on Cape Cod, and mystified the gossiping villagers by keeping his thoughts and his past to himself. One day he appeared with an eleven-year-old boy, whom he introduced as his nephew. Gossip grew more animated. But Heath maintained his silence to the last, with one notable exception.

Booklist 27:160 D '30

"Altogether, a bang-up tale in the usual Lincoln manner."

+ Books p22 S 28 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p2 S 20 '30 300w

New Statesman 36:368 D 27 '30 220w

"'Blowing Clear' might be the first instead of the last of a quarter century of novels so far as its zestful and distinctive delineation of life in a unique and flavorsome locality is concerned. But it is better in technique, for Mr. Lincoln has been gaining steadily in the vigor, ease and skill with which he handles his materials. In many respects this new novel is among the best of all his books."

+ N Y Times p7 O 12 '30 470w

"If you have liked Lincoln's stories in the past, you will enjoy this one. This author may not take his audience up very high, but he never lets them down." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:312 O 22 '30 80w

"The satisfaction one finds in Mr. Lincoln's books, outside of his frequently exhibited ability to draw character, as he has with minor delinquencies, in John Heath, is the pleasure one finds in any competent craftsmanship. The story is well put together. The joiner work scarcely shows. It doesn't really matter that the intellectual content could be reduced to a platitude, or that the moral involved is somewhat shopworn. Mr. Lincoln never leads his reader to expect too much—and he never disappoints him. Competent workmanship and a readable tale are not to be despised."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:224 O 11 '30 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p945 N 13 '30 180w

LINCOLN, NATALIE SUMNER. Marked cancelled. 285p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

30-10079

Albert Reade, an eccentric millionaire, was found murdered in his house in Washington, D.C. In his hand was clutched a wedding certificate, stamped "cancelled." Several people had perfectly good motives for killing Reade, but it took quite a bit of sifting to locate the murderer.

Booklist 26:399 Jl '30

"The movements of the principals in this fictional drama and the methods of Miss Lincoln in unravelling the tangled skein of circumstances show the touch of an adroit hand."

+ Bookm 71:xxi Je '30 70w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p12 Je 8 '30 150w

"Few baffle tales are entirely perfect, and 'Marked Cancelled' is as good as many and better than most."

Boston Transcript p2 Je 4 '30 150w

Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett

N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 26 '30 120w

N Y Times p24 My 18 '30 100w

"'Marked Cancelled' gets off to a promising start, holds the pace steadily for most of the distance, then in the crucial last stages breaks down and peters out." E. C. Beckwith

— + N Y World p11m Ap 27 '30 100w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:709 Ap 30 '30 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p498 Je 12 '30 200w

LINCOLN, VICTORIA ENDICOTT (MRS ISAAC WATKINS). Swan Island murders. 282p $1 Farrar

30-23889

On a lonely island inhabited largely by Portuguese, a group of strangely assorted and neurotically inclined people are gathered for a week-end house party. Among them is a killer who strangles his victims—and who cleverly keeps suspicion from himself until the very end.

"Miss Lincoln has managed a very satisfactory shocker, complete with a cast of authentic humans and an explanation that hasn't been used for seven or eight years. She is a welcome arrival." Will Cuppy

+ Books p24 S 28 '30 100w

"It is indeed a gripping story, with swiftly moving plot and many unusual and colorful elements that command the attention imperiously. Miss Lincoln has written a highly melodramatic, exciting and almost bloodcurdling story."

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 8 '30 150w

LINCOLN, V. E.—Continued

"If you do more than very little detective-story reading you are familiar with the island on which oddly assorted people are assembled before the horrors break loose, but the difference is that here, at least at first, the horrors are authentic. There is no magic about it. It is simply that the author has made her mouthpiece a credible person and thus transferred her shivers to the reader by understanding rather than by adjectives. Too strong an attempt to stick to what is supposed to be the necessary formula is, I think, responsible for the let-down toward the last. This seems to be Miss Lincoln's first book. I advise putting her on your list for later ones." Dashiell Hammett

+ N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 220w

"The story is far fetched but promising for a first novel. Miss Lincoln knows how to create an atmosphere of terror, though she does lay it on a bit thick." Bruce Rae

+ — N Y Times p36 N 16 '30 250w

LINDERMAN, FRANK BIRD. American; the life story of a great Indian, Plenty-coups, chief of the Crows (Eng title: Plenty-coups, chief of the Crows). 313p il $3.50 Day; $1.60 World bk. [10s 6d Faber]

970.2 Plenty-coups, Indian chief. Crow Indians 30-11369

Plenty-coups, the eighty-year-old chief of the Crows, tells his life-story to his white friend Sign-talker, who, as trapper, hunter and cowboy, has studied the Indian and his habits for more than forty years. Plenty-coups tells of his boyhood, how he grew up and became chief, the great wars he took part in, and much concerning the tribal customs of his people, the Crows. In his later years the old chief made several visits to the Indian department at Washington in the interest of his people; and he was chosen as the red man's representative to place a wreath upon the grave of America's Unknown soldier.

Booklist 26:351 Je '30

Bookm 71:vi Jl '30 120w

"Mr. Linderman has done a good job. The old chief talked only of his youth, and chiefly of one matter—the warpath, with (inseparable from it) the supernatural experiences by which he obtained his power. The anecdotes are set down as told, with explanatory comment and bits of incidental description. At times these insertions are annoying, a little too much of Mr. Linderman, but for the most part they increase the value and interest of the book. 'American' is a corking book for boys; it will interest ethnologists and historians and any reader who cares to meet a real Indian." Oliver La Farge

+ — Books p7 Ap 13 '30 900w

"This autobiography is told as an Indian would tell it: simply, objectively, tersely, yet with the color and the dramatic sense that are parts of his racial inheritance." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Ap 26 '30 1250w

"No other record of this sort has ever been made, for no other chief of such rich memories, such ripe age, has ever confided his story to a white man or has set it down himself. The autobiographical red men have all been educated in the white man's language. Plenty Coups does not to this day speak English. He talks Crow and a special sign language. 'American' is a vivid and vital record set down by a recorder who is a 'creative listener' in the sense that he understands deeply, but not a creative one in the sense that he embroiders the narrative with his own interpretations. It is a clear, unadorned, moving history of a time and a people both gone." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p8 My 10 '30 480w

Reviewed by Joe Gould

New Repub 64:26 Ag 20 '30 500w

"Nothing altogether comparable to Mr. Linderman's book has heretofore been added to our literature concerning the American Indian. The portrait of this Crow chief which emerges from his book is one of a noble figure, presented without a touch of false sentiment. And it is a welcome thing, in these days of highly tinctured 'personal records,' to come upon one of such transparent honesty."

+ N Y Times p1 Ap 27 '30 1500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:71 O '30

Pratt p33 autumn '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:17 My '30 180w

"Nothing on the Crow Indians comparable to it has ever appeared. So far as one who has made the Plains Indians his hobby for thirty years can judge, this book is authentic. The writer is sympathetic without being sentimental in his record of the high spots of the early life of the old chief, Plenty Coups, and presents a colorful and convincing picture of the ways of warriors in the buffalo days." Stanly Vestal

+ Sat R of Lit 6:917 Ap 12 '30 1100w

LINDERMAN, FRANK BIRD. Morning light (Lige Mounts: free trapper). 330p $2 Day 30-26946

This story of frontier life was first published eight years ago under the title of Lige Mounts: Free Trapper. The fur trade on the upper Missouri a hundred years ago furnishes the background to the tale, which is written in the first person method of fictionized autobiography.

Boston Transcript p2 O 1 '30 280w

"Some authors would eschew the revival of a book almost in the dust; but this plain narrative of the primeval West lives anew, as fresh as the new-born colt." Don Glassman

+ N Y World p5m Ag 24 '30 450w

"The story throughout keeps very close to the norm of what every sincere student of the old West knows that life must have been. It is throughout sincere and convincing in its picture of the interaction between human life and the land in which it is lived. We do not know that any other, better way of life or any better way of relating it, could be wished for, than one which makes this interpenetration of the man and his natural environment seem both soul satisfying and secure. The book is especially recommended to those readers whose own teeth may have been set on edge a little by the sour grapes of oversophistication."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:168 S 27 '30 300w

LINDSAY, ALEXANDER DUNLOP. Essentials of democracy. (William J. Cooper foundation lectures) 82p $1 Press of the Univ. of Pa. [3s 6d Oxford]

321.8 Democracy 30-15395

A series of lectures delivered by Dr Lindsay, master of Balliol college, Oxford, at Swarthmore college under the auspices of the William J. Cooper foundation. Dr Lindsay's thesis is that we must arrive at a new concept of democracy—a definition that will include both its practical and theoretical implications—to fit the modern democratic state.

"The American reader will find a more serviceable analysis of the problem of democracy in America in Professor Edward M. Sait's Pomona lectures, recently published under the title Democracy. Dr. Lindsay has nevertheless rendered American scholarship a solid service by his discriminating treatment of the essentials of democracy. The importance of appropriate procedure for government by discussion, and of active participation by all citizens in the process of discussion, is duly emphasized in pages marked by exceptional lucidity of thought and elegance of diction." A. N. H.

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:525 My '30 250w

Current Hist 31:1066 Mr '30 300w

"A brilliant presentation of the problem and its solution. For a short analysis of a contemporary political problem, the student could not do better than read this excellent treatise by the Master of Balliol." C. D. B.

+ Int J Ethics 40:455 Ap '30 200w
New Statesman 34:368 D 21 '29 620w
Reviewed by E. P. Herring
N Y Times p18 My 25 '30 580w
St Louis 28:130 My '30
Reviewed by Alfred Zimmern
Spec 143:sup859 D 7 '29 650w
Times [London] Lit Sup p937 N 21 '29 550w

LINDSAY, NORMAN. Every mother's son. 352p $2 Cosmopolitan bk.
30-23199

Young Robert Piper is, like many another normal mother's son, pretty much of a trial to his highly respectable, middle-class family. He reads Don Juan and Tom Paine in church; he loafs with disreputable characters over too much beer at the corner pub; and he seduces Ethel, the parson's daughter. But his tutor and friend, Mr Bandparts, has, fortunately, a large understanding of misanthropic youth, and steers Robert safely thru a troublesome period.

Reviewed by Anthony Clark
Bookm 72:177 O '30 350w

"No one who has ever looked at Mr. Lindsay's drawings will be surprised at the quality and tone of this novel. In his drawings one perceives an earthiness coupled with an 1890-ish decorativeness, a pagan sensuality combined with a weakness for 'prettiness.' Of course, there is never the slightest doubt as to which is the fundamental urge behind his work: he is fundamentally a Rabelaisian sort of fellow. 'Every Mother's Son' is a full-blown paean to the senses, to beer drinking, wenching and animal spirits—a prose poem in praise of having a hell of a good time." C. H. Grattan
Books p4 S 14 '30 550w
Boston Transcript p4 N 1 '30 250w

"Norman Lindsay, the Australian artist, has written a first novel of adolescence which is so human, so engaging, so brilliant that it challenges comparison with Tarkington. . . The book is a delight to one who knows whereof Mr. Lindsay speaks. To others it cannot help offering entertainment."
+ Nation 131:421 O 15 '30 230w
New Repub 65:117 D 10 '30 80w

"To this commentator it seems a lapse on the part of Mr. Lindsay that he should not have been at more pains to make his characters more distinctly the product of their native culture. But for the occasional mention of such cities as Sidney and Melbourne one would be without a clue to the story's habitation. In consequence, the piece as a whole blurs to an unnecessary degree."
— N Y Times p7 S 28 '30 620w

"The story is a tedious one of adolescents obsessed by sex curiosity and finding the means to gratify it. The children make a revolting and seldom amusing spectacle of themselves. The adults in the story do no less. Parents and mentors are as grotesque and exaggerated as are the children and all the characters take on the quality of caricature. . . The writing is spontaneous, hot, intense; but the book is top-heavy and often teeters dangerously on the line which separates art from pornography." F. L. Robbins
— Outlook 156:187 O 1 '30 220w

"A fault that one discovers, not without irritation, is that though Mr. Lindsay is an Australian and though the scene of his book is laid in Australia, as one gathers from casual references, there is nothing essentially Australian about it and it might just as well be laid in Podunk, U.S.A., or Little Upton, England, or Beauvais-sur-Eure, France. . . There is nothing new or original, still less anything distinctively Australian, in Mr. Lindsay's novel. He treads, with fair success, a well-worn path down Main Street."
— Sat R of Lit 7:398 N 29 '30 250w

LINFIELD, HARRY SELBEE. Jews in the United States, 1927: a study of their number and distribution. 107p il gratis American Jewish com., 171 Madison av., N.Y.
325.73 Jews in the United States 29-9119

" 'In the course of the present study for the first time data were collected with a view to ascertaining the distribution of the Jews in the United States' among divisions, states, cities, towns, villages, and unincorporated rural areas. Tables, graphs, and descriptions of the methods employed in making estimates are included."—Am Econ R

Reviewed by J. J. Spengler
Am Econ R 20:152 Mr '30 70w

"The present study is by far the most extensive and—allowing for the errors inherent in the material itself—the most reliable statistical account of the Jewish population in the United States. It is regrettable that the investigation was not extended to include occupational and other social phases of Jewish life, and that intermarriages were excluded."
+ — Am J Soc 36:168 Jl '30 200w

LINKLATER, ERIC. Poet's Pub. 373p $2.50 (7s 6d) Cape
30-3073

Saturday Keith, Oxford Rowing blue and would-be poet whose effusions are massacred by the critics, takes over the management of an English country inn, which he calls Poet's Pub. The host assembles a strange collection of guests, including a writer, an artist, an American crook, an inventor, and two pretty girls. Keith, with his cook's collaboration, plans and serves an Elizabethan dinner for them; and Holly, master of the bar, invents a beautiful blue cocktail. The novel develops into a farcical spy plot, an automobile chase, and a happy, tho somewhat unusual, finale.

"This delightfully original novel will be a refuge to those who, regarding most current fiction as well-meaning but dull, hesitate to take up the slap-stick fiction Mr. Wodehouse's imitators have flooded us with. He has a debonair love for English literature and humor that is Elizabethan in all senses of the word. When the book is ended, the reader discovers that he has had a hilarious time among people who might be real."
+ Bookm 71:xxv Mr '30 100w

" 'Poet's Pub' is as irrepressible as the tail of a kite, but it is witty and civilized and free from ethical gases. And it is written in sparkling prose."
+ Books p14 Mr 9 '30 180w
Boston Transcript p8 My 3 '30 100w
Cleveland Open Shelf p47 Mr '30

"Poet's Pub is Mr. Linklater's second novel, and he has not written a novel yet. This author is a poet and, from the technical point of view, it is generally easier to be a poet than to be a novelist. The poet occupies himself only with the high lights, the novelist has to see that the connecting passages are no less convincing. Mr. Linklater's high lights are admirable, but his story creaks more than a little in its joints." E. S.
+ — New Statesman 34:268 N 30 '29 130w

"All lovers of purely English nonsense should take 'Poet's Pub' to their hearts, or at least to those organs which participate in the activity known as laughter. One is reminded at times of A. A. Milne, again of Chesterton and at one point even of Laurence Sterne. If the book has any weakness it is in the very beginning and the very end. The first few pages seem a bit strained. One experiences a brief fear that that odd bulge is not the author's tongue in the author's cheek, but a toothache." A. M. Stein
+ — N Y Evening Post p10 F 1 '30 380w
N Y Times p8 Ja 26 '30 470w

"Light fiction from England, bright, mildly amusing, easily written, true to type." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 154:149 Ja 22 '30 80w

LINKLATER, ERIC—Continued

"Mr. Linklater cleverly keeps the tone of his book at a level of seriousness difficult to define, but somewhere between comedy and farce. There is no controlling idea, and the plot is negligible, though it quickens into a moment of cinema excitement—a motor-car chase across the face of England, landing several of the hotel guests, including the manager himself, at the house of his parents. This little piece of action is described well enough to make one wish that Mr. Linklater had found a subject worthier of his pen. 'Poet's Pub' is really just a pretext for some amusing dialogue, which exhibits in a very agreeable form the extent of the author's reading, one or two diverting incidents, and some character-parts that are too exaggerated to be more than mildly funny." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 148:649 N 30 '29 230w

"This is one of the gayest, youngest, and happiest tales which has come out of England in many a year. . . Mr. Linklater has something to say—which is rather more than a Message—and knows how to make it implicit in the action of his spirited extravaganza." John Carter

+ Sat R of Lit 7:106 S 6 '30 420w

"The whole moves with splendid animal spirits and enormous good humour. The talk is brilliant without being forced, and in some passages Mr. Linklater can spurt into descriptions of flowing beauty." V. S. Pritchett

+ Spec 143:784 N 23 '29 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1098 D 26 '29 300w

LINSINGEN, FREDERICK WILLIAM BERRY VON. Pressure gauge murder. 214p $2 Dutton [3s 6d Methuen]

30-7786

A man whom detectives suppose to be Robert Mitchell, South African diamond buyer, is found dead in his automobile on a lonely road. The plot hinges upon the arrest of innocent parties, due to an awkward error of mistaken identity on the part of police officials at the very start of the story. A fake tire-pressure gauge is Inspector Vaughn's most important clue in the solving of the mystery.

Bookm 70:xxvi Ja '30 50w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p20 D 15 '29 120w

"Tact, a new background, a humble detective, and an obvious scoundrel, who is fair game from the time we first sight him; these make a distinctive detective story."

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 1 '30 280w

"For a murder story this is singularly unexciting. The gruesome picture on the jacket is much more likely to produce those delightful spinal shivers than is anything between the covers of the book. It is not that there is any misrepresentation in this picture; the crime depicted there occurs twice in the story, but the author's manner of telling it is not calculated to accelerate the heartbeat in the slightest degree."

N Y Times p24 Ja 26 '30 100w

LIPPY, JOHN D., Jr. Chemical magic, with in-
2 trod. by Howard Thurston. 107p il $2 Sully

791.1 Conjuring 30-14353

A book for amateur or parlor magicians explaining how to perform simple tricks by chemical means. Contents: History of magic; Chemical fire mysteries; Chemical inks and paints; Miscellaneous chemical tricks; Chemical spiritualistic effects; Liquid chemical effects; Magical monologues.

Booklist 27:147 D '30

"As the results are certain and little skill is needed the tricks can be done by any one who is not so absent-minded as to mix the wrong two chemicals. The book is well written and easily followed and is practically a complete record of tricks dependent upon chemistry. And in case you want to make maps of buried treasure there are notes on a variety of invisible inks."

+ Books p10 N 23 '30 150w

St Louis 28:267 N '30

LITTLE, CLARENCE COOK. Awakening college. 282p $3 Norton

378:73 Colleges and universities—United States. Students 30-12473

The author, formerly president of the University of Michigan, discusses the changes going on in the colleges and the signs of awakening to the fact that modern youth demands and should be upheld in its desire for independence. Contents: Admission to college; The curriculum; The dean's office; Fraternities; Automobiles and liquor; Co-education; Military training; The professional scholar; Training teachers; Psuedo-professional schools; Politics: the state and the university; Athletics; Alumni; Religion in college; The awakening college.

Booklist 26:381 Jl '30

"Whatever criticisms and reservations may be made by the forward-looking parent and educator, as they read this book, all will be grateful to this scientist that he ventured out of his laboratory long enough to gain the experiences and make the observations which are here recorded. Much more needs to be said as well as done before our colleges are sufficiently awake. But what is here said in the way of criticism and suggestion may well mark this book of Dr. Little's as one of the most effective calls to the 'easy' academic sleeper to awaken." J. E. Kirkpatrick

+ Books p3 My 11 '30 1230w

" 'The Awakening College' is a significant and stimulating book which progressive thinkers will appreciate as a truthful picture of the college situation and a key to the needs of our independent and keen thinking future citizens. Dr. Little is to be thanked for his courage." G. G. Baker

+ Christian Century 47:966 Ag 6 '30 550w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p11m My 17 '30 150w

"Dr. Little, having retired from the presidency of the University of Michigan to the relative quiet of a laboratory, is able to speak freely. His present book is the 'Now It Can Be Told' of an ex-university president. It cannot be said that Dr. Little has completely escaped bias. His is no Olympian aloofness. He is still smarting under the abrasions of campus warfare. But his book is not the work of a man with a grouch. He is not trying to 'expose' the University of Michigan or any other one institution. He takes an optimistic view of the changes now going on in the colleges and universities." R. L. Duffus

N Y Times p1 My 4 '30 850w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p15m Ap 22 '30 900w

Reviewed by E. T. Devine

Outlook 155:227 Je 11 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:69 O '30

Pratt p12 autumn '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:14 O '30 220w

St Louis 28:208 S '30

"It would be easy to dismiss 'The Awakening College' on the ground of hasty preparation, inaccuracies, and unfairness; for it is a singularly vulnerable book. This, however, would not be a wise course, for the book will have to be reckoned with in spite of its faults. The author has a very real interest in education and in young people, his courage is not watered down with discretion, and he has a pungent way of putting things which makes them remembered. In too many cases, however, he quite obviously didn't wait to recover his temper before writing about experiences which had made him angry. The original indignation may have been wholly righteous, but the result is that we have sometimes merely a petulant, sometimes an unjust, treatment of a matter upon which he really has something worth-while to say." F. P. Keppel

— + Sat R of Lit 6:1104 Je 7 '30 1150w

Springf'd Republican p10 Je 6 '30 920w

"The book is full of wholesome and constructive criticism of things academic, but so scathing is the author in his attack and so bitter in some of his indictments that he detracts somewhat from his effectiveness by his manner of statement." F. H. Bird

+ — Survey 64:519 S 15 '30 350w

LITTLEHALES, LILLIAN. Pablo Casals. 217p il $3.50 Norton [10s 6d Dent]

B or 92 Casals, Pablo 29-29563

A biography of the great Spanish cellist. The author, who is herself a cellist, describes the youth of Pablo Casals near Barcelona, in which city he now conducts his own great orchestra. His career as an established musician, his triumphs in Europe, his American tours, his technique, his personality, and his humanitarian philosophy are the aspects of his life stressed by Miss Littlehales.

"Here is a book by a cellist about a cellist. Miss Littlehales concisely recounts his life. This is done with the simple fervor of a worshiper and as though the subject were a petite fleur of sanctity. Dr. Freud and all his works are as remote from the picture as Beelzebub himself." Peter Bowdoin

Books p4 Ja 19 '30 1000w

Cleveland Open Shelf p51 Ap '30

"The book, written in an intimate and slightly extravagant style by another 'cellist, gives a clear picture of the man, and has an excellent last chapter on Casals' notions as to intelligent fingering and 'expressive intonation.'" Jeffrey Mark

+ New Repub 62:278 Ap 23 '30 400w

"The results of this simple and rather incomplete book are surprising. Miss Littlehales's approach to her subject is slightly Victorian. There is something rhapsodical in her paean of praise; some of the fervor of the zealot at a favorite shrine; a generous amount of what this brusque age terms inspirational stuff. But the author has never lost sight of some fundamental truths concerning artists, their country and their age. Her biographical material is meager. But from her pages Casals the artist, once but a formal concert hall legend to Americans, emerges." Hollister Noble

+ — N Y Times p5 D 22 '29 1400w

"Through the opening chapters of the book the author seems to write with a certain restraint. It is as if she were hampered by too great a sense of personal delicacy in dealing with intimate details of her subject's life, and this part of the narrative lacks something in vividness on this account. However, when she enters upon her own interpretation of Casals, the man, his character and his national background, she achieves not only very good writing but an insight which carries conviction." Grace Overmyer

+ — N Y World p1m Ja 26 '30 850w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:29 Ap '30

St Louis 28:112 Ap '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p157 F 27 '30 450w

LIUDPRANDUS, bp. of CREMONA. Works of Liudprand of Cremona; tr. for the first time into English with an introd. by F. A. Wright. (Broadway medieval lib.) 287p $4 Dutton [12s 6d Routledge]

940.1 Europe—History—476-1492 [30-14105]

Liudprand, bishop of Cremona in the tenth century, left three works: Antapodosis (Tit-for-tat), a gusty diatribe against his enemies; Liber de rebus gestis Ottonis (A chronicle of Otto's reign), which deals with the deposition of Pope John XII; and the Relatio de legatione constantinopolitana (The embassy to Constantinople). The works, translated for the first time into English, reflect a forceful and witty personality and an astute observer of the political and religious intrigues of the time.

Bookm 72:xii D '30 150w

New Statesman 34:510 Ja 25 '30 700w

"No brief review can do justice to the extraordinary richness of this material. It will take the average reader into territory that would otherwise be forever unexplored and throw light on what is superficially and erringly known as the Dark Ages." H. L. Matthews

+ N Y Times p4 O 26 '30 500w

"This is in many ways one of the most interesting issues of the Broadway Medieval Library. Bishop Liudprand is one of our few authorities for the dark period of the tenth century. . . He knew Greek very well indeed, and enjoyed quoting scraps of it; he could write quite creditable verse of a sort, and altogether is an entertaining author for his period. . . As a source book for Italian, German, Byzantine, and even Russian history, Liudprand will always have a place in the historian's library."

+ Sat R 149:335 Mr 15 '30 160w

"It is to be hoped that this translation will introduce Liudprand of Cremona to a wider public. Traveller, diplomat, historian and poet, he brings the world in which he lived closer to us than many another writer of the Middle Ages; and, in spite of his sarcastic and malicious outbursts, which are at times quite scurrilous, it is impossible to dislike him. . . The lack of historical notes of any kind makes it difficult to sort out the various historical personages, for the canvas is always crowded, and an index of places would have been useful; but the book is valuable and deserves a warm welcome."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p117 F 13 '30 850w

LIVINGSTON, ARMSTRONG. Trackless death. 328p $2 Bobbs [7s 6d Skeffington]

30-10978

"Two 'deaths from the clouds,' one in the Basses-Alps, the other in the less romantic state of Connecticut, keep the reader of 'Trackless Death' guessing through many exciting chapters. Two crushed and mangled bodies plump down in front of the reader, with no indication of how the victims came to fall to their death. The first fall is from a high mountain peak into the garden of a nervous hotel keeper, whose business is promptly ruined thereby. The next fatal drop occurs in a small town in Connecticut, and this time it is evidently from an airplane."—Springf'd Republican

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 My 11 '30 150w

"An exceptionally good story with its plot carried through logically—within mystery limitations, of course—and its dénouement is one that will tax the capacity of most of the solution-finders."

+ N Y Times p11 Jl 13 '30 250w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 250w

LIVINGSTON, WALTER. Mystery of Burnleigh
2 manor. 286p 50c Mystery league, inc, 11 W. 42d st, N.Y.

30-28178

"In a deserted castle on a North Sea cliff, Lord Edward Burnleigh committed suicide one eventful Christmas Eve. An American architect, the caretaker's daughter, the last of the Burnleighs (Lord Cecil) and Glome, the valet, are worth watching as the hideous incidents rise to a climax."—Books

"With a few simple twists, this truly horrific thriller could be an elegant burlesque of the 'Castle of Otranto' school of thought." Will Cuppy

Books p20 N 23 '30 100w

LIVINGSTON, WALTER—Continued

"The story is first-rate, with suspense sustained to the end and a narrative that moves smoothly along. It strikes us as the best of the league's books to date." Bruce Rae

+ N Y Times p16 D 28 '30 200w

LLEWELLYN, KARL NICKERSON. Cases and materials on the law of sales. (Nat. casebook ser.) 1081p $9 Callaghan

347:3 Sales—Cases. Forms (law) 30-6038

"In editing his casebook Professor Llewellyn has not confined himself to the usual compilation of materials professing upon the surface to be a mere cold presentation of judicially crystallized principles. Rather has he boldly exposed his own interpretation of the decisions, of their classification and of their trends. In discussion after discussion 'principle' is examined in the light of factual situation, marketing technique, social economy and current economic organization. . . The editor's attitude toward his subject is in its every phase, markedly unconventional—so unconventional in fact that, from the standpoint of published pedagogical materials, the collection is unique in form, content, emphasis and approach. The usual casebook runs about 250 cases; the present one contains 801 numbered cases in addition to the mass of comment, extract, annotation and citation—all within a compass of less than a thousand pages."—Yale Law J

"Only rarely does a casebook challenge attention as does this first edition of Llewellyn on Sales. It is not just another casebook according to the traditional pattern. There are many innovations in make-up and arrangement. Much more material has been included than is usual. Technically a new emphasis is put on Sales law, the 'contract' aspect being stressed as opposed to the 'property' aspect. Of wider interest, the work is one of the first to give recognition to the many ideas concerning teaching methods and ends which have been occupying law schools recently—a belated and as yet only occasional awareness on their part of the many developments in education over the past several years in other fields." R. B. Turner

+ — Columbia Law R 30:904 Je '30 2000w

"A prodigious amount of labor has gone into the collection of these cases; keen discrimination has been exercised in their selection and classification; their value as a teaching tool has been established by actually teaching from them for several years. Whether or not one may agree with Mr. Llwellyn's basic philosophy, it must be admitted that here is a tool which is modern, freshening, stimulating to a degree unattainable by orthodox methods. Its greatest merit lies in the fact that it is realistic, appreciative of the actualities, and without respect for attempts to compress analysis within the limits of outmoded categories." W. L. Townsend

+ Yale Law J 39:1080 My '30 1600w

LO, REN YEN. China's revolution from the inside. 307p $2 Abingdon press

951 China—History—Republic, 1912-. China—Social conditions 30-3784

"This book has been written by a man who occupies the unusual position of standing completely inside the nationalist government and the Christian movement in China, and has conceived the idea of telling westerners, with whom he is well acquainted by reason of his education in this country, what the whole revolution looks like from the inside looking out. Dr. Lo edits a church weekly in Shanghai. He is also vice-chairman of the National Christian council. On the other hand, he is the head of the government organization for the suppression of the opium traffic, and his contacts with the government touch it in almost every department of its activities."—Christian Century

Reviewed by K. S. Latourette

Ann Am Acad 152:401 N '30 180w

"The value of Dr. Lo's book rests on three points. It gives, first of all, a Chinese picture of the revolution. Here, it can be said with confidence, is the way in which thoughtful Chinese themselves look at what they are doing. In the second place, it emphasizes the social implications of that revolution. The third, and most valuable, feature of the book is its wealth of Chinese documentary material. It is this more than anything else which gives the book the right to call itself 'China's Revolution from the Inside.' So far as I know, no other book available, whether in Chinese or English, gathers together so much of the documentary material which has marked the progress of the Chinese upheaval." Paul Hutchinson

+ Christian Century 47:307 Mr 5 '30 780w

"Excellent as the book is, it is marred in spots by petty inaccuracies. Perhaps it is permissible for a native to take liberties with the Romanization of Chinese names, but for the Western reader some approach to uniformity is desirable if not absolutely necessary. These are minor faults, however, and will hardly diminish the interest of the general reader who desires some knowledge of the currents which move below the political surface of contemporary China." R. T. Pollard

+ — Current Hist 32:429 Je '30 1000w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 83:12 Ja '31 50w

St Louis 28:149 My '30

LOBAGOLA, BATA KINDAI AMGOZA IBN. Folk tales of a savage. 200p il $2 (5s) Knopf

398.2 Folklore—Africa 30-21411

Stories, mostly about animals, supposedly originating in the Ondo Bush in West Africa, retold for children.

"To many readers these folk tales of West Africa, as told by a native West African, will be at the same time a pleasure and a disappointment. A pleasure because of the enjoyment in the tales themselves, a disappointment because they somehow seem to lack that particular quality which we have come to associate with such native folk tales as have hitherto come our way. The fault may lie in our own conception of the African folk tale. The Lobagola tales might have been told round a Boy Scout campfire just as easily as in the African jungle. Their talking animals have little to differentiate them from the talking animals of other countries. They amuse but never startle us." M. W. Bianco

— + Books p7 Ag 24 '30 550w

"The stories are simply, naturally and yet dramatically told. They are full of action, and so keep the interest of those who listen. Above all, each has an application to savage life both pertinent and apparent. In fact the folk wisdom and simple philosophy of savage life are embodied in this folk lore."

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 5 '30 170w

"Upon many things found in the book the average reader cannot pass judgment. This must be left to those who are conversant with savage life. But all of us know what we enjoy. And I for one scarcely stirred from my chair during one evening, so eager was I to follow the story to the end." J. D. Martin

Christian Century 47:1494 D 3 '30 480w

New Statesman 36:sup xvi D 6 '30 50w

"The tales, to be sure, have a pleasant simplicity, directness and a mild humor, but for stories coming so directly from the country of their origin they seem to lack the distinctive flavor which other collections, such as 'Little Black Stories for Little White Children' by Blaise Cendrars, and 'Black Folk Tales' by Erick Berry, lead us to believe is to be found in African folklore. 'Folk Tales of a Savage' will be a useful addition to the children's book shelves, but one would like to have read these tales in the form in which the author first wrote them down. Erick Berry's illustrations are excellent and appropriate." A. T. Eaton

— + N Y Times p20 S 14 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:30 S 3 '30 80w

St Louis 28:304 D '30

"One of the most entertaining series of folk tales that has been written about Africa. Here we have a true black Æsop and his fables are instructive to both children and grown-ups alike." J. W. Feiss
Sat R of Lit 7:341 N 15 '30 100w

Reviewed by Beulah Amidon
Survey 65:341 D 15 '30 60w

"These are simple tales without any difficult words or names but ingenious and entertaining and provided with impeccable moral tail-pieces."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p979 N 20 '30 150w

LOBAGOLA, BATA KINDAI AMGOZA IBN. LoBagola; an African savage's own story. 402p $3 (10s 6d) Knopf

B or 92 Ethnology—Nigeria 30-12774

"Lobagola was born a member of the mysterious tribe of 'Black Jews,' who have been lost for centuries in the heart of Africa. When he was seven, he was accidentally carried off to Scotland, where he lived for some years, before he returned to Africa. A misfit in both Europe and his native land he now tells of his adventures."—Publishers' Weekly

Booklist 26:393 Jl '30

"Whether this book belongs in the category of Trader Horn and The Cradle of the Deep, or whether it is the veritable story of an African savage gone civilized, it is certainly hugely entertaining. It is written exceedingly well, but those who have ever heard Lobagola speak realize that he is a master of the spoken tongue and therefore it is altogether probable that he at least wrote the book himself. It is the things which happen in the book which raise at least a moderate doubt as to position of the writer's sense of fact and fancy. There are also some rather tall tales of life in the African jungle, especially in regard to animals, yet the story of his childhood is on the whole extremely poignant and fascinating." Grenville Vernon
Bookm 71:226 Ap '30 450w

"This book is not a sociological essay; it is an adventure story, and a corking good one. The proof lies in the naïve, direct style; in the puzzling omissions, in the subjective material, the writer's attitude. For the rest, it all corresponds well enough to the known picture of the Nigeria bend, and analysis of the phrases he quotes show his dialect to be what he claims." Oliver La Farge
+ Books p2 Mr 30 '30 800w

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 29 '30 950w

"The internal evidence indicates that this self-termed 'savage' not only did not lead the early life he says he did, but that he never went very far into the interior of West Africa, and could have visited the coastal region only casually." M. J. Herkovits
— Nation 131:102 Jl 23 '30 1150w

Reviewed by M. P. Levy
New Repub 63:132 Je 18 '30 350w

"A rather barren autobiography of a bizarre life. Even as an ethnological treatise the material presented is too insignificant and unimportant. . . LaBagola does not carry conviction to his reader. He has the opportunity to present a picture of our civilization from a totally new angle. Instead he offers us a few trite observations." H. L. Shapiro
— N Y Evening Post p0m Mr 22 '30 850w

"He has drawn one of the most tragic and compelling figures imaginable—a man who has come out of savagery without really coming into civilization and who, in consequence, in his own words, 'belongs nowhere.' The argument for LoBagola's veracity is that it is easier to imagine a man living the life he describes than inventing it. He is either a true historian or a creative artist of no mean order—or both." R. L. Duffus
+ N Y Times p4 Mr 16 '30 1300w

Reviewed by Eileen Hewitt
Sat R 150:235 Ag 23 '30 320w

"I approached this story in the hope of finding a psychological study of the mentality resulting from an attempt to graft European civilization on a man of native African culture. There was also the anticipation of reading a well-presented account of some native tribe of Dahomey or French Niger Territory. In both expectations I was disappointed." W. D. Hambly
— Sat R of Lit 6:1155 Je 28 '30 1050w

Spec 145:472 O 4 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p669 Ag 21 '30 380w

LOBAN, ETHEL H. Signed in yellow. 308p $2 [2] Doubleday, Doran

30-10253

Three murders follow each other at a Michigan summer resort on Lake Erie—and in each case the body of the victim reveals a yellow chalk mark, the sign used by the killer. The family and social life of a typical middle-class summer resort provides this mystery with a natural and realistic background.

"Well written, with an ingenious and absorbing plot."
+ Bookm 72:xxiv N '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p17 Ap 27 '39 100w

LOCKE, WILLIAM JOHN. Shorn lamb. 321p $2.50 Dodd

30-27068

Brotherton Drake, second son of a baronet, after drifting about for some years in the United States and squandering his inheritance, returns to London to ask help of his wealthy twin brother. During a stormy interview Sir Atherton Drake drops dead from a heart attack and Brotherton, on a quick impluse, decides to impersonate him. For some time he plays successfully the complicated rôle of impostor, but unforeseen difficulties arise, and at the end Brotherton gives himself up to justice, upheld by the love and faith of Diana.

Booklist 27:161 D '30

Bookm 72:xii O '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p23 N 16 '30 120w

"Though the tale may be somewhat lacking in probability, it is entertaining and interesting, plenty of amusing twists and unexpected pitfalls lying in wait for the often perplexed but usually quick-witted Buddy. Diana is a charming heroine, and the devoted Tonio supplies that element of quaintness readers expect to find in all novels by W. J. Locke."
+ N Y Times p7 O 12 '30 500w

"In this posthumously published romance, the late W. J. Locke seems to have unsuccessfully sought to revive the mood of his best light fiction—Septimus, The Beloved Vagabond, etc.—which long antedated the war, and the result, it must be owned, is rather weak. . . There is love interest aplenty in the tale and no dearth of diverting incident." E. C. Beckwith
— + N Y World p3f S 28 '30 250w

Sat R of Lit 7:313 N 8 '30 420w

LOCKE, WILLIAM JOHN. Town of Tombarel. 297p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

30-8603

In a series of episodes told to the English painter Fontenay the author sets forth the story of the town of Creille, that tiny town perched on a hilltop not far from Nice. The narrator is Monsieur Alcide Tombarel, a man of culture, wine-grower, mayor and grand seigneur of Creille. Thru the stories we get a picture of life in the fine old Provençal town, and especially of the life and philosophy of Tombarel.

Booklist 26:357 Je '30

Bookm 71:xi Je '30 70w

LOCKE, W. J.—Continued

"These stories have something of that same charm and fragility; they will be cherished by all those who recall with affection the Locke of 'Septimus'."
+ Books p10 Ag 31 '30 150w
Cleveland Open Shelf p150 D '30

"The book is entertaining, with many delightful touches of humor and pathos. It is the best thing Mr. Locke has done of late, and the portrait of Tombarel is worthy a place beside those of Septimus and the Beloved Vagabond."
+ N Y Times p18 Ap 20 '30 500w
N Y World p5m Jl 6 '30 200w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:50 Je '30
Pratt p38 autumn '30

"Mr. Locke is an acknowledged master in the art of story-telling, and though his stories are not particularly thrilling, he brings out the character of Tombarel very well, and enrols us among his admirers to the point of condoning the two or three murders to which he confesses."
+ — Sat R 149:598 My 10 '30 90w

"These stories, indeed, are interesting quite apart from their plots as reflecting the hard-headed practicality of the French outlook on life. They have a buoyancy that carries them along, freshness of incident, and sprightly dialogue that is well salted with a sly humor. And they have a tautness of sentiment which has been too often lacking of late from Mr. Locke's work. We find 'The Town of Tombarel' the most interesting book that he has produced in some years." Amy Loveman
+ Sat R of Lit 6:840 Mr 22 '30 500w

"M. Tombarel tells his stories with a sentimentality that does its best to disguise itself as humorous toleration and with more than a touch of Mr. Locke's slip-shod English—but the stories themselves have point and neatness and, in at least three out of the nine, there is some clever, as distinct from facile, character-drawing."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p321 Ap 10 '30 250w

LOCKHART, JOHN GILBERT. Blenden Hall; the true story of a shipwreck, a casting away, and life on a desert island. 232p il $3.50 Appleton [10s 6d Allan, P.]

910.4 Shipwrecks. Blenden Hall (ship)

"The Blenden Hall sailed from Gravesend on May 6, 1821, on a passage to India, but was wrecked on the desolate Island Inaccessible, twenty miles or so south-west of Tristan da Cunha. Passengers and crew were stranded on the island for three months and eighteen days before rescue arrived from Tristan, by which time they were facing starvation. Mr. Lockhart bases his account of the shipwreck and the trials on the rocky island chiefly on a journal kept by Alexander Greig, son of the captain, who wrote the story with penquin blood. The journal was published in New York in 1847, and Mr. Lockhart has been fortunate in securing a copy."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"This is a welcome and worthy addition to the shelf-full of sea-stories which Mr. Lockhart has already given us."
+ New Statesman 36:sup xii N 8 '30 280w
Times [London] Lit Sup p762 S 25 '30 280w

LOCKHART, JOHN GILBERT. Strange tales of the seven seas. 210p il $3 Appleton [8s 6d Allan, P.]

910.4 Sea stories [30-20993]

A collection of true stories concerning mysteries, mutinies, murders and strange disappearances of ships at sea. There are some grim tales of modern piracy and some of heroism and loyalty.

"Most of them are stories of mutinies in merchant ships. Mutiny is a strange and dramatic form of crime, with all the values heightened by the isolation of the sea; but it must be confessed that in Mr. Lockhart's hands it grows a trifle monotonous, since the facts in one case are much like those of another, and Mr. Lockhart does not get much beyond the bare facts of his dramas."
— Books p10 Jl 6 '30 200w

"It is not a book to read through at a sitting, but, for lovers of maritime history, it is not a book to miss."
Nation and Ath 46:586 Ja 25 '30 130w

"One of the secrets of Mr. Lockhart's success in this kind of writing is his cool, impersonal air, as though he were merely recording facts. In reality, of course, he is doing much more than that. While carefully avoiding 'stunts,' he is selecting and presenting his material with a skill which is as admirable as his honesty."
+ New Statesman 34:166 N 9 '29 200w

Reviewed by H. W. Baldwin
N Y Times p4 Jl 6 '30 250w

"Mr. Lockhart's wide knowledge of seas and sailors has enabled him to put flesh on the dry bones, and his stories will be entirely new to the modern reader. The stories are all very readable, and throw light on the odd things that sometimes happen on sailing ships in out-of-the-way corners of the ocean."
+ Sat R 148:649 N 30 '29 130w

LOCKRIDGE, ROSS FRANKLIN. A. Lincoln. 320p il $1.40 World bk.

B or 92 Lincoln, Abraham 30-11880

A short portrayal of the life of Abraham Lincoln for the young student, or for "adult readers who do not wish to labor thru critical biographies."

"In the matters of style, arrangement, size, and general attractiveness this book, together with its predecessor George Rogers Clark, is highly satisfactory for the purpose for which it is intended." R. M. Tryon
+ El School J 31:317 D '30 380w

"His confident ease of narration and his abundant selection of matters of interest give Mr. Lockridge's book for young people a touch of distinction. It would attract and instruct adults unfamiliar with the historical circumstances out of which Lincoln emerged. His competent knowledge of the most authoritative literature of his subject has made it possible for him, within little more than three hundred pages, to include many varied passages from Lincoln's autobiography and from his more formal and miscellaneous writings by way of adding pith and personality to his story." L. E. Robinson
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1119 Je 7 '30 450w

LOCKTON, WILLIAM. Divers orders of ministers; an inquiry into the origins and early history of the ministry of the Christian church. 254p $3.50 (10s 6d) Longmans

262.1 Clergy. Apostolic succession. Church history—Primitive and early church 30-22342

"Mr. Lockton makes a valuable effort in Divers Orders of Ministers to reexamine the whole question of the Christian ministry, especially in the light of the sacerdotal heritage it received from the Old Testament. The most interesting part of the book is that wherein he deals with the vexed subject of what is termed the Apostolic Succession. . . It lies outside the purpose of this volume to discuss whether [the] three orders of ministry are necessary to the life of Christ's church, or whether that great institution might not possibly have continued without the aid of bishops, priests and deacons." —Churchman

"The book merely undertakes to prove that the exclusive ministry is a historical fact. And this it does satisfactorily provided one is willing to allow a very large amount of latitude in the interpretation of certain terms. . . Mr. Lockton proves to his own satisfaction that, beneath the use of these many conflicting terms, there was a unity of system which from the beginning has had validity. This may be true if such a word as 'elder' can be variously used to mean practically any office in the church. But the result is not quite convincing." H. A. Prichard

Churchman p15 N 22 '30 280w

"Mr. Lockton has ventured on the task in a temper which seems to be entirely uncontroversial. He apparently relies on translations of the rabbinical books, but these are so well authenticated that he is on fairly safe ground. The ground, however, is much broken, and at times he stumbles on obstacles already passed. In other words, his material is either inadequately sorted out or imperfectly digested. It is a defect, but not one to rob his book of value, though it makes hard reading."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1052 D 11 '30 1200w

LODER, VERNON, pseud. See Vahey, J. G. H.

LODGE, SIR OLIVER JOSEPH. Phantom walls. 255p $2.50 Putnam [5s Hodder]

134 Immortality. Psychical research. Science —Philosophy 30-8611

Sir Oliver Lodge, noted scientist and scholar of psychic phenomena, bases his discussion of the possibility of soul-survival upon the most recent laws and discoveries in physics and chemistry. He also devotes a chapter to manifestations of spiritualistic phenomena: premonition, trance lucidity, etc.; and in his last chapter suggests the influence of demonstrated survival on science, philosophy and religion.

Booklist 27:138 D '30
Books p22 Ap 20 '30 230w
Reviewed by S. G. Cole
Crozer Q 7:257 Ap '30 750w

"As a handbook of spiritualism for the bereaved person or for the perplexed cleric the book is admirable; as an exposition of the same theme for the emotional and critical man of science, it is not altogether convincing."
+ — Nature 124:941 D 21 '29 850w
N Y Times p25 Mr 30 '30 420w

"No one is better known for his whole-hearted espousal of the belief in human survival of bodily death than Sir Oliver Lodge. Phantom Walls is a clear and appealing statement of his convictions upon this subject. . . It will take a high place in the literature of this subject." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 154:592 Ap 9 '30 180w

"He has succeeded in elucidating the latest scientific views of the world to readers who may have no special knowledge of any particular branch. In his present book he adumbrates reasons which lead him to believe that the survival of conscious individuality after death has been definitely proved by communications from the dead. But all but the tiniest fraction of us have to take our knowledge of electrons and space-time purely on authority, and all who choose may take it on Sir Oliver Lodge's very high authority that 'the accessible portion of the universe is turning out larger than we knew,' and that the phantom walls are possibly opening their gates upon 'a region of supramundane activity and intelligence.' "
+ Spec 144:27 Ja 4 '30 250w
Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 3 '30 350w
Times [London] Lit Sup p600 Jl 24 '30 500w

LOEBEL, JOSEF. From marriage to love. 177p ² $3 Washburn

173.1 Marriage 30-15639

"Dr. Loebel's book is said to have had a considerable popular success in Germany, where he is a well known physician. His purpose has been to present in a popular style . . . a discussion of the sexual elements in conjugal happiness and to offer out of his medical experience suggestions as to how they might be cultivated and improved. He sets forth at some length an outline of a method of turning the present form of marriage into a freer and more easily dissolved union. 'Nothing,' he says, 'will aid marital union more than the ease with which it can be dissolved by divorce.' "—N Y Times

"Loebel is a German physician who has been termed the witty sage of Franzenbad. He covers considerable ground in the less than 200 small pages of 'From Marriage to Love.' Dr. Loebel treats serious topics with a refreshing levity. Epigrams follow upon epigrams, and we begin to feel as if a brisk and elderly uncle had come into our dark house, thrown open all the windows, roundly admonished us for being fools on so many points and ordered us to come out into the sunlight to look at ourselves cheerfully and frankly." Lorine Pruette
+ Books p6 Jl 6 '30 550w
N Y Times p10 O 5 '30 100w
Reviewed by F. G. Seabury
Outlook 155:149 My 28 '30 50w

LOFTING, HUGH. Twilight of magic. 303p il $2.50 Stokes

30-29904

A tale of the middle ages, of kings and knights, and witches and magic, in which two children, Anne and Giles, take important parts, thanks to Agnes the applewoman and the magic whispering shell.

"Though it lacks the delicious nonsense of the stories of Doctor Dolittle, of his adventures in the Moon, of his Caravan and his Zoo and all the charming absurdities associated with that amazing personality, this tale of the twilight of magic, of king and castle, knights and beauteous damsels, has a humorous charm of its own. It is a delightful story, so cleverly written that it envelops us in the atmosphere of mediæval times and we quite forget that this is the twentieth century." Gertrude Bayley
+ Boston Transcript p4 N 12 '30 1500w

" 'The Twilight of Magic' seeks to capture within the pages of a young folks' story the moment in history when men first began to suspect that laws rather than magic governed happenings which they could not understand. That is a difficult subject for any kind of story, let alone a story for junior readers. If any one now writing could handle it, Hugh Lofting might be reasonably adequate, but even he has fallen somewhere between fact and fancy."
Christian Science Monitor p13 N 22 '30 450w
Reviewed by Nancy Evans
N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 40w

"Nothing about this story is as convincing as Dr. Dolittle and his animal friends, nor do the two children, Agnes the Applewoman and the other characters in this new volume ever come very much alive. One misses, too, the kindly fun and humor of the Dr. Dolittle books." A. T. Eaton
— N Y Times p45 D 7 '30 80w

"In the first half of the book Mr. Lofting is gorgeously himself. Even grown-ups will read these breath-taking scenes, which have the flavor of the Middle Ages, yet oddly enough could be part and parcel of modern life and Giles and Anne two of the little people of today. Why does Giles have to grow up at the King's Court and eventually fall in love with that beauteous Countess Barbara betrothed to the King? That is indeed a conventional termination to a wonderful wild goose chase of a fantasy, and, while it completes the narrative, we rebel against it." Laura Benét
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:344 N 15 '30 750w

LOGAN, GUY B. H. Rope, knife and chair; studies of English, French and American crimes. 280p il $3.50 Duffield [18s Paul, S.]

343 Murder [30-30053]

Descriptions of the circumstances surrounding famous crimes in England, France and Amer-

LOGAN, G. B. H.—Continued
ica, with a study of the personalities of the criminals. The author discusses, among others, some of the "mass murders" in America, and devotes a chapter to Belle Gunness, the female Bluebeard who attracted men by means of matrimonial advertisements, and decoyed them to her "murder farm" at La Porte, Indiana.

Books p13 Ag 3 '30 130w

"Reading these chapters is almost as much fun as being present at a real execution, a pleasure which our ancestors were freely permitted to enjoy, but which is now restricted to a favored few. . . Those who are fascinated by crime in its darkest aspects will probably enjoy the book and ask for more. Those who prefer pleasanter topics should look elsewhere."
N Y Times p31 S 28 '30 300w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 Jl 7 '30 450w

"Those who like reading about murder, whether from a sheer morbid love of grisly detail or, as most of us will more readily avow, from an interest in the mind of the murderer, will find plenty to interest them in this latest horrid collection of killings."
Sat R 149:331 Mr 15 '30 400w

"Mr. Logan has found an alluring title for his new collection of murder histories. Unfortunately for this reader his accounts are too brief to work up a full and satisfying thrill. . . The author rather damages his tales by giving vent to moral strictures upon murder and murderers. All murder fans, I think, will agree that this is beside the mark. It is really not necessary. . . The authors we love best are those who attend strictly to their tales, and let the moral implications take care of themselves."
— Sat R of Lit 7:130 S 13 '30 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p242 Mr 20 '30 100w

LOHRKE, EUGENE WILLIAM, ed. Armageddon; the World war in literature. 820p $5 Cape
940.49 European war—Literature and the war 30-14902

These selections chosen from the literature of all the nations involved in the war are so arranged as to unfold the story of the war from its beginning. English and German writers predominate and the larger part of the material is fiction.

Booklist 27:21 S '30

"'Armageddon' possesses a surprising unity and integrity for an anthology. This is partly due to the fact that war literature, being naturally episodic, lends itself easily to the anthologist, but it is chiefly the result of Mr. Lohrke's dramatic way of presenting his material. More than any other single book that has yet been published, it conveys a sense of the kaleidoscopic immensity of the war and the inevitable logic of its movement." Lambert Davis
+ Books p4 Je 1 '30 900w

"There is an extended and scholarly introduction on the literature of the war, and a full bibliography. No other book gives such a comprehensive picture of both the outer and the inner aspects of the war."
+ Christian Century 47:871 Jl 9 '30 280w

Reviewed by J. B. Wharton
Nation 131:530 N 12 '30 150w

"The success of Mr. Lohrke's book rests upon the fact that every selection is an effective piece of writing." Horace Gregory
+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 17 '30 820w

"In spite of the fact that success in the compilation of an anthology must always be partly a matter to be determined by the taste of the individual reader, it is hard to see how Mr. Lohrke could have performed his gigantic task better. 'Armageddon' gathers into compact and useful form much material that is fine and impressive and valuable. It is naturally, however, not free from the faults common to all prose anthologies; and many readers, like the present reviewer, will regret the emasculation of sincere and beautiful books for the sake of presenting piecemeal their more spectacular chapters." Margaret Wallace
+ — N Y Times p8 Jl 13 '30 850w

"The most brilliantly diversified and comprehensive anthology of its kind which has hitherto been published in a single volume." E. C. Beckwith
+ N Y World p5m Je 29 '30 320w

"We believe it will give you a far more coherent and balanced picture than desultory reading among the libraries of books that have already been written about the War." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 155:228 Je 11 '30 120w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:8 Jl '30 100w

St Louis 28:246 O '30

"Mr. Lohrke has done as good a job of anthology making as is possible at this time. The arrangement is orderly and intelligent, and while each reader will doubtless have his own idea as to what selections he himself would have chosen or rejected or substituted, the editor has at any rate managed to combine a fairly high standard of literature with consistency as to his scheme of arrangement."
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:71 Ag 23 '30 180w

Reviewed by Harold King
Springf'd Republican p7e S 21 '30 1050w

LONDON. City literary institute. See Tradition and experiment in present-day literature.

LONGER day; by the author of Miss Tiverton goes out. 381p $2.50 Bobbs [7s 6d Jarrolds] 30-31028

"'The Longer Day' is the story of a woman, Brenda, who had a feeling that life should be lived as if no one had ever lived it before. . . Brenda had woven dreams around a rising young critic, whose name was Eustace Holt. Brenda in time marries Holt, who turns out to be altogether commonplace. They have children, who grow up as they please—Brenda's gaze is upon far horizons and the children do not touch her life, while Eustace is far too busy as the editor of a literary weekly to be very conscious of his offspring. . . A climax in the life of Brenda is reached when she goes away to a strange place in Devon called Holeshole and gives birth to an idiot whom she calls Brownie. Brenda and Brownie take the centre of the stage; there is a curious understanding between the two, Brenda worn out with people who live by their minds and Brownie without any mind."—Sat R of Lit

"Slow, involved, wrapping veil and veil of evidence about the wordless Brenda, this curious book builds up a sense of a personality that one feels, rather than sees, an impression of peace and coolness and durability of contentment in mere being, without deed or thought. Yet Brenda as a person remains as remote from the readers as she was from her own circle and from all but one of her children. By contrast the practical or 'intellectual' people about her, though they are sharply satirized, seem actual, while she remains as elusive as a kindly ghost. Yet in that very elusiveness lies the charm of the book."
+ Books p7 N 23 '30 650w

Boston Transcript p3 D 27 '30 230w

Christian Science Monitor p4 D 6 '30 350w

"The author displays subtlety and charm in the telling of her story, but revels too freely in a very idiosyncratic style. These asides, these parentheses, these dashes, these second thoughts, after-thoughts and forethoughts create an atmosphere, to be sure, but they also create boredom. We like Brenda immensely, but we should like her even more if the author would kindly move aside for one second, please." Edwin Seaver
+ — N Y Evening Post p4d N 22 '30 80w

"She writes admirably; she is witty and sometimes brilliant, and she saves herself from being brittle. She saves herself because she has charm and can evoke the color of a vanished age along with the mustiness. 'The Longer Day' is one of those books which, without being important, without having much chance of survival, do not come along very often."
+ N Y Times p8 D 14 '30 800w

"The novel is rewarding as well as delightful reading. But its reading demands a little perseverance. The first fifty pages are extremely confusing. This is no doubt part of the author's plan for creating an atmosphere of unordinariness about her chief character; but it is a fault, and is apt to deter readers who, if they did not have to work so hard would be enchanted with the novel."
+ — Outlook 156:507 N 26 '30 300w

"The handling of the presence of the idiot child is done with beautiful skill; whatever there is of the disagreeable about it is softened, and even when physical detail is necessary, one is not shocked or disgusted with it. The story itself matters less than the manner of its telling, less than the brilliance of characterization, less than the strange beauty that permeates the prose. One would hunt for a novel that will remain in the memory longer than this." Herschel Brickell
+ Sat R of Lit 7:362 N 22 '30 800w

"Brenda is a sensitive and lifelike study; the pity is that too often the author prefers the claims of a mannered and prolix style to those of her material."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1100 D 25 '30 400w

LONGSTRETH, THOMAS MORRIS. Sky through branches. 81p $2 Century
811 30-9607

Lyrics of the outdoors, and a few narratives in blank verse.

Booklist 27:58 O '30

"Mr. Longstreth is completely human and natural and capable of voicing the usual human feelings and reactions; he is seldom the artist in poetry. Now and then we find a poem with what might be said to have an art-form as for example, 'Deserted Clearing'. But for the most part Mr. Longstreth has written just good, old-fashioned, pleasant country rhymes."
+ — Books p13 Ag 17 '30 280w
N Y Times p18 Ap 27 '30 250w

"'The Sky Through Branches' is perhaps no better than the work of any one of a dozen other nature lovers, but Mr. Longstreth's sincerity and the gentleness of his touch make his poems uncommonly pleasant to read. He writes calmly and unpretentiously, but he does not fail to suggest a quiet, thoughtful and appreciative intimacy with natural beauty. The two or three character sketches in blank verse are intelligently conceived and skilfully written." Granville Hicks
+ N Y World p7m Je 1 '30 70w

Reviewed by L. T. Nicholl
Outlook 155:147 My 28 '30 60w

Reviewed by W. R. Benét
Sat R of Lit 7:9 Jl 26 '30 30w

LORD, PHILLIPS HAYNES (SETH PARKER, pseud.). Seth Parker's album. 142p $1.50 Century
817 30-23821

A volume of homely humor, anecdote and witticisms by the Yankee philosopher of radio fame.

Boston Transcript p3 D 27 '30 180w
Cleveland Open Shelf p139 N '30
N Y Times p26 S 14 '30 200w

"The volume is, in its mild way, uplifting, with a strong bias toward the old-fashioned religion." Harry Salpeter
N Y World p11 S 3 '30 20w
St Louis 28:287 D '30

LORD, PHILLIPS HAYNES (SETH PARKER, pseud.). Uncle Hosie, the Yankee salesman. 164p $1 Simon & Schuster
817 30-28846

Humorous sketches of Uncle Hosie, a typically shrewd and tight-fisted old Yankee, based upon the author's recollections of his own grandfather, Hosea Phillips.

Books p27 N 23 '30 100w
N Y Times p20 O 26 '30 180w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter
N Y World p11 S 3 '30 500w

LORD of life; a fresh approach to the incarnation, by H. T. Andrews, and others. 343p $2.50 Macmillan [10s Student]
232 Jesus Christ. Incarnation 29-22696

A symposium of eleven papers contributed by a group of English professors and ministers on the meaning of Christ: Christ in theology; Christ in the New Testament; and the Christ of present experience.

Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '29 300w

"The authors have gone in the right direction, but not far enough. They have stayed within the confines of the dogma instead of finding behind the doctrine a human need which moderns must interpret in deeper terms than doctrinal rationalization. Consequently the book is no 'fresher' an approach to the incarnation than a hundred others on both sides of the Atlantic." E. E. Aubrey
— Christian Century 47:301 Mr 5 '30 850w

"This book deals with those intricate problems of Christology which have always fascinated the scholars of the church; but to these the book brings such extraordinary lucidity, both of thought and of expression, and such a glowing religious purpose, that its pages are an inspiration for the heart as well as for the mind. Nine authors have collaborated in The Lord of Life, but the result is completely free from that unrelated scrappiness which sometimes is the mark of compilations. . . Fresh in thought and vital in feeling, this book does make more straight and plain the way to an understanding of the meaning of God in Christ." W. R. Bowie
+ Churchman p16 F 1 '30 280w
J Religion 10:460 Jl '30 150w
Times [London] Lit Sup p884 N 7 '29 1050w

LORENZ, HELMUT. Sunken fleet; tr. from the German by Samuel H. Cross. 342p $2.50 Little [7s 6d Cassell]
30-6432

In fictionized form, Commander Lorenz of the German navy writes of his experiences with the fleet during the war. He was assigned in 1914 to the flagship of the German high seas fleet, and after the battle of Jutland he was with the submarine service. When ordered to turn over his submarine to the French, he preferred to sink it just outside the three-mile limit of El Ferrol, a harbor in Spain.

Bookm 71:xxv Ap '30 200w
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 12 '30 600w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p8s F 22 '30 80w

Reviewed by John Carter
N Y Times p6 Ap 6 '30 750w

"A fine picture of the Jutland victory is afforded, and the submarine base at Zeebrugge is of interest. As long as Herr Lorenz sticks to the technical and naval side of his story, all goes well. But when he attempts human and emotional appeal, the characters are rather stilted and their talk is inane." W. B. Shaw

LORENZ, HELMUT—Continued
+ — R of Rs 81:16 Ap '30 270w
Sat R of Lit 6:1195 Jl 12 '30 330w

LOTH, DAVID GOLDSMITH. Lorenzo the Magnificent. 329p pl $5 Brentano's
B or 92 Medici, Lorenzo de', called Il Magnifico 29-19630

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Bookm 70:vi F '30 40w
Boston Transcript p2 N 16 '29 370w
Cleveland Open Shelf p77 My '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:82 D '29

"Mr. David Loth's book is a picturesque, not over-dignified, not over-serious affair."
Sat R 149:298 Mr 8 '30 460w

"Lorenzo the Magnificent cannot fail to interest and amuse, for Mr. Loth has a sense of style and his subject precludes dullness."
+ Spec 144:681 Ap 19 '30 170w
Times [London] Lit Sup p194 Mr 6 '30 80w

LOTH, DAVID GOLDSMITH. Royal Charles, ruler and rake. 343p il $4 Brentano's
B or 92 Charles II, king of Great Britain 30-25713

"A biography which steers a middle course between the 'novelized' biographies of recent years and the old-fashioned variety. 'Royal Charles' tells the story of the life of Charles II [of England] without obvious departure from the historical sources."—N Y World

"Mr. Loth is, with the exception of Charles's relations with Montrose, eminently fair to the ablest of the Stuarts. . . There is no index and a capricious bibliography. There are few actual misstatements of facts in the book." F. S. Ronalds
+ — Books p45 D 7 '30 500w

"The book is an intelligent piece of Sunday-magazine feature writing, beautifully illustrated and bound."
+ New Repub 65:227 Ja 7 '31 80w

" 'Royal Charles' is an extremely lively biography. Indeed, with such various and colorful material ready to his hand, it would have been difficult for Mr. Loth to be dull. But, better still, it is a reliable biography within the limitations its author has set for himself." Margaret Wallace
+ N Y Times p28 D 14 '30 1100w

"Charles's temperament—that of a worldly, tolerant, generally easy-going cynic—makes him an attractive hero for a biography such as this one, which has some of the attractive characteristics of fiction. Plenty of opportunity is given by the form to display Charles's affability, his generosity, his easy manners, his robust sense of humor, etc. The court after the Restoration was the 'gayest in Europe' and abounded in picturesque figures. These, including Charles's mistresses—so many it is difficult to keep them all in mind—along with the manners and wit of the age, are sufficient to give the biography a great deal of color." Clinton Simpson
+ N Y World p3e N 23 '30 280w

LOVE, PHILIP H. Andrew W. Mellon; the man and his work. 319p il $3.50 Heath Coggins & co.
B or 92 Mellon, Andrew William 29-23367

An appraisal of the Secretary of the treasury by a sincere admirer. The biographer follows Mellon's career from boyhood to bank presidency, thence to his duties in the Treasury department from 1921 on. The Mellon plan is discussed, and certain speeches and letters of the Secretary are quoted.

Booklist 26:355 Je '30
Boston Transcript p5 N 27 '29 670w

"The biography cannot be pronounced either a scholarly work or one of great insight. A student, who in some future year, searches for the economic and financial background in which Mr. Mellon played such a conspicuous part will find little to enlighten him in this volume. The biography bristles with fulsome praise of Mr. Mellon, his deeds, his speeches, his economic philosophy, his politics and even his private life. One may be an admirer of the Secretary of the Treasury and still feel offended at this unblushing application of flattery." B. O.
— Current Hist 32:611 Je '30 600w
St Louis 28:112 Ap '30

"Mr Love cites a number of impressions of Mellon and quotes a number of his addresses, but as a study either of Mr Mellon or of his work the volume is unacceptable. This is more to be regretted because the author's observations are intelligent."
— Springf'd Republican p10 F 7 '30 150w

LOVEJOY, ARTHUR ONCKEN. Revolt against dualism; an inquiry concerning the existence of ideas. (Paul Carus foundation lectures) 325p $4 Norton; Open ct. [15s Allen, G.]
111 Dualism. Philosophy, Modern 30-14297

Dr Lovejoy, professor of philosophy at Johns Hopkins university, traces in this volume the main currents of revolt in modern thought against the dualism of Descartes and other philosophers of the seventeenth century. His analysis of the first phase of the revolt and its outcome is followed by an account of the second phase, objective realism, and its outcome in the philosophies of Whitehead and Bertrand Russell. The latter part of the book contains discussions of dualism and the physical world, and the nature of knowing as a natural event.

Boston Transcript p4 My 24 '30 400w
Reviewed by A. E. Murphy
Int J Ethics 41:265 Ja '31 750w

"This is an important book for the professional philosopher; and one which cannot fail to be instructive even to the layman, provided he is willing to sweat and scramble through its barbed-wire entanglement of philosophic jargon. When he has finished it, however, not only will he wonder at the meticulous ingenuity of Professor Lovejoy's analysis of the question of the possibility of knowledge, but he will wonder at the futility of all discussion which does not ask 'what does it mean to know' before 'how is it possible to know.' Had Professor Lovejoy attempted to answer the first question before the second, he would probably have written a different book—perhaps the eagerly expected one on the metaphysics of temporalism." Sidney Hook
+ — New Repub 63:129 Je 18 '30 1350w

"The book remarkably combines transparent articulateness with subtle argumentation. 'The Revolt Against Dualism' is a consummately able exposition and criticism of the implication concerning the status of mind and ideas to be drawn from the most important recent philosophical and physical doctrines." Axton Clark
+ N Y Times p20 Je 1 '30 1850w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:81 N '30
St Louis 28:201 S '30
Reviewed by Leon Whipple
Survey 64:404 Ag 1 '30 150w

"Apart from the witty and trenchant nature of its polemic, the book is of great value as a historical review of the epistemology of the last generation and as a critique of its development."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p770 O 2 '30 1350w

LOVELACE, MAUD (HART) (MRS DELOS W. LOVELACE). Petticoat court. 318p $2 Day
30-26901

Chloé Peyroux, a young bride from New Orleans, was sent to France to escape the privations and dangers of the American Civil war. There at the court of the beautiful Empress Eugenie, Chloé met and loved a young protegé of the Empress, but remained loyal to her country and her family until the obstacles to her happiness were removed.

For biographical sketch of the author see Wilson bulletin 5:170 N '30

Booklist 27:104 N '30

"A decidedly gay and readable adventure."
+ Books p32 S 28 '30 200w

Boston Transcript p1 N 8 '30 480w

Cleveland Open Shelf p126 S '30

"A graceful little romance, with a lifelike, very engaging picture of court life in the extravagant, crinolined days of the Second Empire, an alluring heroine, and a delightful old aristocrat in the person of Mme. de Chaligny, make 'Petticoat Court' unusually pleasant reading."
+ N Y Times p6 S 14 '30 280w

N Y World p4m Ag 31 '30 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

"A graceful bit of romantic comedy. It is also a careful study of the period, based not only on the usual authorities, but on painstaking research among the newspapers and magazines of the time, where, says the author, 'she found the life of the Second Empire most clearly pictured.' The style is light, easy, and pointed." H. W. Boynton
+ Sat R of Lit 7:199 O 11 '30 550w

"There are no dull moments in this narrative of intrigue, war and love, with its wide interests involving both the United States and France."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 14 '30 220w

LOVITT, WILLIAM VERNON, and HOLTZCLAW, HENRY FULLER. Statistics. 304p il $5 Prentice-Hall [15s Pitman]
311 Statistics 29-18046

"This book presents in an interesting way the general principles of statistics and is amply illustrated with materials showing the application and value of the methods advocated. The mathematics are kept simple without impairing the content. The volume deals with primary and secondary data, sampling, tabulation, graphic representation, bar charts and maps, line graphs, averages, dispersion and skewness, correlation, index numbers, seasonal and cyclical fluctuations, binomial distribution, some characteristic curves, curve-fitting, the normal probability curve, and the probable error."—Am J Soc

"The essential contribution of the book lies in the fact that it brings to the beginning student a somewhat fuller presentation of the mathematical theory of the subject than is ordinarily given." G. R. Davies
+ Am Econ R 20:358 Je '30 350w

Am J Soc 35:684 Ja '30 100w

St Louis 28:4 Ja '30

Special Libraries 21:266 S '30 100w

LOWELL, AMY. Poetry and poets; essays. 232p $2.25 Houghton
808.1 Poetry. American poetry 30-12607

A series of critical essays on poetry, on elder poets (Walt Whitman and Emily Dickinson) and on contemporaries. The latter group includes a discussion of the life and work of the following poets: John Gould Fletcher, Carl Sandburg, D. H. Lawrence, John Masefield and E. A. Robinson.

Booklist 26:388 Jl '30

"The opinions have a good deal of vigor and gusto and the book swings along at a lively pace in its rather snobbishly democratic way. The author was not afraid to cavil and she was quite undisturbed by 'the hobgoblin of small minds'." J. B. Allin
+ Bookm 71:462 Jl '30 230w

"The reader, at first interested, is at the outset disturbed by a faint air of mustiness pervading the pages, then irritated by the discovery that he is being offered observations gone a little stale with the years as though they were lost treasure recovered, and finally, doubtful whether Miss Lowell would have been pleased at the rashness of the anonymous editor in dignifying these casual remarks by placing them between boards. . . It would seem that Miss Lowell had to feel a deep sympathy with a poet in order to be able to do him justice, and since her sympathy not seldom failed, she can scarcely lay claim to the title of critic. These papers exhibit the arrogance, the peculiarly personal bias that one was accustomed to associate with her prose, and, all too little, the vitality, the chameleon responsiveness one recognized in her verse." Babette Deutsch
— Books p7 My 11 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 4 '30 360w

Christian Science Monitor p13 My 24 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p154 D '30

"This book of posthumous essays is very interesting. It is a clear indication that Miss Lowell's mind was alert to some of the new developments in poetry just when the tide was sweeping away from her own generation's values and on toward new values. Amy Lowell was of her generation completely, and yet anyone reading these essays cannot but believe that had she lived she would have begun analyzing and fighting for new causes, would have kept step with the times fairly well, and would have attempted to understand the younger poets and their very different ideals." E. L. Walton
+ Nation 130:656 Je 4 '30 430w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p10m My 10 '30 320w

"Perhaps Miss Lowell's intention was that the reviews should some time be worked up into better proportioned pieces, but as they stand, so slight and ephemeral do they seem, one is not likely to feel that they add much to the author's reputation. Nevertheless, there are many pungently expressed truths scattered through these critical fragments, as there also is pungently expressed truth scattered through the longer pieces."
— + N Y Times p6 My 11 '30 700w

"These stimulating essays are rich in sensitivity and poetic feeling. They are also, and perhaps more conspicuously, marked by intelligence and common sense. These qualities, and the forceful, clear style in which the essays are written make them especially adapted to interest the general reader who is apt to shy off from poetry criticism." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 155:22 My 7 '30 250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:73 O '30

St Louis 28:215 S '30

LOWIE, ROBERT HARRY. Are we civilized? human culture in perspective. 306p il $3 Harcourt
901 Civilization. Anthropology 29-17850

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"Dr. Lowie's book is at once the production of mature scholarship coupled with wide reading and keen thinking, and more than that—it is the book of a man of culture and a philosopher who has seen and observed much of life and who has his own ideas about men, things, and events. Besides, he is an eminent teacher, and he is amply endowed with that faculty which makes the real scholar, but which is growing rarer and rarer among modern scholars—the faculty of thinking objectively, without bias, without newspaper and mob psychology." Berthold Laufer
+ Am Anthropol 32:161 Ja '30 1700w

LOWIE, R. H.—Continued
Reviewed by Robert Redfield
Am J Soc 35:677 Ja '30 220w

"It is a book upon which anthropologists will rely to educate their students, to enlighten their skeptical friends, and to intimidate their dialectical opponents who make exorbitant claims for any one people's cultured genius. The book will the more readily commend itself to the lay reader because Professor Lowie has taken the trouble to unearth a mass of amusing data about the lamentable state of manners and morals in medieval Europe." Margaret Mead
+ Ann Am Acad 148:301 Mr '30 500w

"In this unusually instructive and entertaining book the author, an accomplished anthropologist, shows the bias of his specialty no doubt, but he reminds us that all we do and know are not of recent discovery. This book is a wholesome antidote to the egoistic pride of modern civilization."
+ Christian Century 47:597 My 7 '30 180w
Cleveland Open Shelf p57 Ap '30
Pratt p34 spring '30
St Louis 28:53 F '30

"Here and there we may not precisely agree with all that Professor Lowie has to say—but we must congratulate him on achieving his aim, which was to write a popular, yet accurate, account of human civilization. He writes with transatlantic vigour and a certain dry humour." J. H. Driberg
+ Spec 143:921 D 14 '29 750w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 19 '30 750w
Wis Lib Bul 26:40 Ja '30
Reviewed by Paul Jones
World Tomorrow 13:138 Mr '30 360w

LOWRIE, DONALD A. Masaryk: nation builder; the man who changed the map of Europe; with a pref. by John H. Finley (Eng title: Masaryk of Czechoslovakia; with an introd. by Basil Mathews). 232p il $2.25 Assn. press [3s 6d Oxford]

B or 92 Masaryk, Tomáš Garrigue 30-7072

Mr Lowrie writes in unbounded admiration of the president of Czechoslovakia—his early years, his life as scholar and teacher, his fight against the Hapsburgs and his work for the establishment of the Czechoslovak Republic.

Booklist 27:25 S '30
Books p10 Ap 27 '30 100w
Reviewed by Ernest Barker
Nation and Ath 47:144 My 3 '30 320w

"The volume is written in a lively, anecdotal strain, with much of its material drawn, one infers, from Masaryk himself." Uffington Valentine
+ N Y World p11m My 4 '30 400w
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:24 Mr '30 100w
St Louis 28:245 O '30
Reviewed by Harold Stannard
Sat R 149:592 My 10 '30 400w

"Somewhat puerile though well-meaning. Mr. Lowrie seems to fall between two stools. He is too dull and long-winded to be popular, or to be read seriously."
— + Spec 144:838 My 17 '30 60w

"To Mr. Lowrie, Masaryk is 'probably the greatest personality alive on our globe today,' and his book is a piece of wholly honourable hero-worship, written for the admiration and encouragement of aspiring youth."
Times [London] Lit Sup p232 Mr 20 '30 800w

LUCAS, EDWARD VERRALL. Down the sky: an entertainment. 296p $2 Lippincott [7s 6d Methuen]

30-31185

The book is aptly described by its author as an entertainment. The slight story, scarcely substantial enough to be called a novel, is carried on the thread of sparkling conversations between the utterly charming widow, Jenny Candover, and her friend Richard. Between the two the conversational ball is nimbly and playfully tossed.

"One should probably be a gentle, spineless, well provided for, garrulous elderly Londoner to appreciate this sort of writing. It is too sweet and too good to be true."
Books p45 D 7 '30 200w

"This is one of the neatest stories Mr. Lucas has ever done, and it is sewn into the pattern of the continuous talk with much cunning. The liveliness of his charm is due to his art of asking aloud the kind of questions we all ask ourselves in secret, and unlike Pilate, staying for an answer." V. S. P.
+ Christian Science Monitor p7 Ag 30 '30 550w

"'Down the Sky' is an 'entertainment' in silver point. There is a charming conventional unconventionality in the relations between the wilful and fascinating Mrs. Candover and her Richard; their life together, including the voyage to Ceylon, makes delicious reading, though Richard appears unlike his gallant self when he refuses to take advantage of Mrs. Candover's widowhood. . . The book is stamped with the skill and distinction of the author." K. C. Tomlinson
+ Nation and Ath 47:740 S 13 '30 120w

"In Mr. Lucas's writing there is only one indispensable fact—that very intelligent and witty writer himself. His new book is called an entertainment; a thread of narrative is allowed as long as it not only does not hinder, but actually helps, discursiveness; and any reader would perish the plot that nailed Mr. Lucas down. He is the best digressor in the world."
+ New Statesman 35:542 Ag 2 '30 150w

"Appreciation of 'Down the Sky' depends on an interest in cricket or in south of England inns; in the customs of the Cingalese, in Buddhist mythology, or in laborsome cultivation of tea. . . Any one who cares for literary rambling or who has found that Mr. Lucas has pleased him before can be certain that for him 'Down the Sky' will prove an 'entertainment.'" Mary Goldwater
N Y Evening Post p4d D 20 '30 380w

"'Down the Sky' is a more interesting experiment than 'Windfall's Eve,' if a book that is so similar to its predecessors can be called an experiment. . . It can be read leisurely or at a sitting with many a quiet chuckle, and many a wish that the wealth of incident were stored away in one's own notebook."
+ N Y Times p9 N 16 '30 320w

"Mr. Lucas's 'entertainment,' as it is rightly described, is a book to be read rather than reviewed. It contains a delicate thread of story, round which the most delightful digressions crystallize. In the course of a few pages Mr. Lucas squanders enough ideas to keep a less inventive author busy for weeks, expanding them into essays or short stories."
+ Sat R 150:114 Jl 26 '30 150w

"Down the Sky is even more disappointing than most sequels. The characterization that was well sustained in Windfall's Eve evaporates in its successor. Richard in particular, with the voyage to Ceylon, suffers a sea change: he ceases to be Richard and becomes undisguised Mr Lucas! Even as an essayist Mr. Lucas is not here at his best. There are, of course, lively and charming interludes. But the entertainment, as a whole, is spread too thinly. Mr. Lucas is overwriting himself."
— Spec 145:605 O 25 '30 180w

"There is a perfectly lulling absence of happenings, and the conversation is good, whether we find ourselves in England or in Ceylon. There are cricket memories, glimpses of music-hall nights, a hundred and one pleasant digressions; and being invited to this entertainment, we may be as happy as children when the cake is passed round."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p625 Jl 31 '30 320w

LUCAS, EDWARD VERRALL. Windfall's eve. 301p $2.50 Lippincott [7s 6d Methuen]
30-26563

An elderly official of the British Museum unexpectedly wins the Calcutta sweepstakes. The letters of advice he receives as to how to dispose of this windfall, the counsel of relatives and friends, and how he really does spend it, make up the substance of the novel.

Booklist 26:357 Je '30

"There is a great deal in the book that is dragged in for no other reason than that the author had a good anecdote to relate and, although the whole is like a diary in which every incident of an uneventful day is faithfully recorded, there is a gentle benignity about the characters and the action which makes it pleasant reading."

— + Bookm 71:xv Je '30 150w

"Actually, nothing happens in 'Windfall's Eve.' The characters are mildly alive and the events mildly interesting. Yet it is very obvious that Mr. Lucas intends that they be nothing else. His book is meant for the armchair, the open fire, the winter evening. It is an entertainment, and well worth the trouble."

+ Books p10 Ap 20 '30 260w

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 26 '30 650w

Cleveland Open Shelf p78 My '30

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine

Nation and Ath 45:568 Jl 27 '29 100w

N Y Times p9 Mr 30 '30 600w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:467 Mr 19 '30 50w

"In 'Windfall's Eve' Mr. Lucas's wisdom and delightful sense of humour fall on rather stony ground. . . It has charming passages, of course, and that irresponsibility which is Mr. Lucas's secret; but the charm is too thinly spread to be a substitute for sustained interest." L. P. Hartley

— Sat R 148:196 Ag 17 '29 70w

"Mr. Lucas has produced a light and readable novel of no complexity or profundity. It has much of the charm and quality of his essays. This manner of writing at the one time is both the virtue and vice of his book. It is well suited and in harmony with the rambling of the tale but a little lacking in strength for the length of the novel."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:929 Ap 12 '30 320w

"From slight material the author has woven as pleasant and companionable a diversion as any he has given us. Mr. Lucas's peculiar strength as an essayist lies not only in his insatiable curiosity and vitality, but in the possession of two rarely blended qualities. With his wide experience and mature wisdom he retains the spirit of youth. He is sophistication itself: and yet he can still see the world through the fresh eyes of childhood. These two strands are admirably exemplified in his latest book." Gilbert Thomas

+ Spec 143:134 Jl 27 '29 480w

Times [London] Lit Sup p590 Jl 25 '29 650w

LUCAS, MRS ELIZABETH. French cookery book: with some additional hints from English and American kitchens. 231p $2 Houghton

641.5 Cookery, French 29-24060

"An interesting and worth while book dealing largely with methods of preparation and cookery in France, though the author has also borrowed from England and America. It is strictly a discussion of technique, of methods and terms, and pre-supposes a knowledge of correct food combinations and knowledge of correct assembling of food in bills of fare. The amounts are given in English units of measure, and French terminology is used as little as possible."—Wis Lib Bul

Booklist 26:191 F '30

Reviewed by Lettie Gay

Books p10 Mr 16 '30 100w

J Home Econ 22:129 F '30 80w

St Louis 28:11 Mr '30

Wis Lib Bul 25:408 D '29

LUCAS, FRANK LAURENCE. Cécile. 349p $2.50 Holt [8s 6d Chatto]
30-27767

The story of two sisters, Cécile and Andrée, who lived in France on the eve of the French revolution. For Andrée life is a series of disillusionments, altho in the end she finds a certain measure of peace; for Cécile, after her few months of happiness in Paris, there is a tragic death.

"In addition to a profound knowledge of the history and literature of the period, Mr. Lucas's extraordinary gift for delightful persiflage contributes not a little towards making this novel almost as Parisian and as 'dix-huitième' in spirit as Manon Lescaut is in fact." Justin O'Brien

+ Bookm 72:173 O '30 250w

"Of its kind it is a highly accomplished piece of work." Gerald Sykes

+ Books p17 O 19 '30 600w

"The story is charmingly and sensitively written, with an unusual faculty for illuminating the unexpected facets of character or scene. It goes far deeper into what was really the eighteenth century than most period novels have done."

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 29 '30 250w

"This is an historical novel, and reads as if it were written in the period by a contemporary writer, and of very few books can this be said. There is the true Gallic touch in this scholarly and poetic book; the rhythm of beauty is complete." K. C. Tomlinson

+ Nation and Ath 47:325 Je 7 '30 220w

"Mr. Lucas with the wit of a scholar shows the world moving from 'the spirit of Candide to La Nouvelle Héloise.'"

+ New Statesman 35:218 My 24 '30 200w

"It is a swift-moving story, advancing over its some three and a half hundred pages athletically, nimbly and always dodging dullness Descriptions are given in abundance, but they call for no halt or respite. They are rendered with charm and restraint, faithful to the times and the country in which the characters have their being. Clearly in Mr. Lucas one recognizes a rare combination: a deft novelist, a critic and scholar of high order all in one, an artist."

+ N Y Times p7 O 26 '30 280w

"It must be confessed that, though all this talk is extraordinarily good, some readers will feel that there is too much of it; they may even abandon the book before, in the second half, the plot gets well under way. This would be a pity, for the plot is excellent, as delicate and as modern as the rest of the book, and the climax is highly dramatic." Basil Davenport

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:200 O 11 '30 600w

"Mr. Lucas so arranges his tale as to give us a thoroughly convincing picture of pre-Revolutionary conditions in Picardy and Paris, and the salon scenes would of themselves be enough to stamp his book with distinction. For the rest, he keeps to the immediate story of his two contrasted pairs of men and women, whose characters are drawn with remarkable strength and delicacy." Gilbert Thomas

+ Spec 144:837 My 17 '30 380w

Reviewed by V. Sackville-West

Spec 144:1056 Je 28 '30 100w

"One reads [this book] less with intense emotion than with acute intellectual pleasure, noting the quiet excellence of its style, the lucidity of its exposition, the gracefulness of its female and the strength of its male characters, the effectiveness of certain individual scenes and the intimate realization of sorrow in the mind of its central character."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p390 My 8 '30 800w

LUCE, ROBERT. Legislative principles; the history and theory of law-making by representative government. (Science of legislation) 666p $6 Houghton

328 Representation and representative government. Legislation. Law—United States. United States—Politics and government 30-6987

The author, United States congressman, follows his two earlier volumes, Legislative Assemblies and Legislative Procedure, with a third volume devoted to the history and theory of lawmaking by representative government. The book covers the nature, origin, and development of law and of the representative institutions, organic law as embodied in the American constitution, and methods of enacting into statute law the will of the people.

"Students of history and law will covet this learned, comprehensive and readable book, the third in a series by the distinguished representative in Congress from Massachusetts, who is a leading authority on American parliamentary law. It is well arranged, compact, readable, direct and clear in style and the material is handled in such a way that it does not weary the reader or make the task of studying the material harder than necessary for him." R. K. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 3 '30 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:52 Je '30

St Louis 28:204 S '30

"Mr. Luce is at his best when he is giving the results of his own experience based on what he has helped to do and what he has seen done in the legislative assemblies of which he has been a member. Critical estimates of the legislative process and of suggestions for its reform are peculiarly valuable coming from an experienced and thoughtful legislator who knows not only what is contained in the Congessional Record and committee reports, but also what went on off the record. For this reason he is a competent judge not only of the surface indications, but also of the deeper currents which influence the law making process." J. P. Chamberlain

+ Yale Law J 40:153 N '30 1050w

LUCKIESH, MATTHEW. Artificial sunlight; 2 combining radiation for health with light for vision. 254p il $3.75 Van Nostrand

628.9 Lighting. Radiation. Radiotherapy 30-25054

"This book deals with the production and use of artificial sunlight in its larger sense. It considers the ultra-violet and infra-red components of sunshine as well as the visible light, from the standpoint of health as well as vision. The author shows that production of artificial sunlight is far ahead of its utilization. He gives detailed physico-chemical data of interest to the physiologists and others dealing with the utilization of sunlight."—Ind & Eng Chem

"In this book, the author, who is recognized as an authority upon the subject of light, has brought together in readable fashion a great variety of data concerning the effects of radiant energy and the physics of the subject. A perusal of this work should temper irresponsible and enthusiastic imagination, which too often has been the basis of claims made for the benefits of light in the ultra-violet region. . . With so complete and so readable a source book as is furnished by Dr. Luckiesh there now seems no longer any excuse for exuberant and unjustified expectations regarding the value of light." J. W. M. Bunker

+ Am J Pub Health 20:1373 D '30 250w

Booklist 27:192 Ja '31

"Much new original work is reported and is combined with the pertinent data of others to make it the most complete and modern compilation of physical data on the subject at the present time. The chapters on Solar Radiation, Transmitting Media, Reflection of Ultra-Violet Radiation, and Permanence of Materials will interest many who use or design photochemical equipment, and the volume might well become a handbook of reference because of the completeness of the present available evidence on these subjects." M. J. Dorcas

+ Ind & Eng Chem 23:117 Ja '31 550w

LUDECKE, WINFRIED. Secrets of espionage; tales of the secret service (Eng title: Behind the scenes of espionage). 250p $2.50 Lippincott [7s 6d Harrap]

355.34 Secret service. Spies 30-7732

The history of military espionage in France, Great Britain, Spain, Russia, Poland, Japan and Germany from the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries to the performances of spies in the World war. The individual careers of master-spies such as Charles Schulmeister and Trebitsch-Lincoln, are reviewed; and the final chapter is devoted to the part played by women spies in wartime: the Red Tiger, Marguerite Francillard, Mata Hari, and others.

Bookm 70:xii F '30 80w

Books p12 My 18 '30 80w

"The whole account is readable, pleasantly written, and entertaining. If there is one unfulfilled wish that a reader feels as he turns the pages, it is that the stories might have been fitted with plots. As it is, it is all so casual, all so much a part of the ordinary day's work for the writer that, for the reader, what should be matter of suspense becomes matter of course."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 N 2 '29 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p7 Ja '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 80:16 N '29 30w

Sat R 147:808 Je 15 '29 230w

"Mr. Lüdecke has written a description, although not in much detail, of the espionage system in various countries, and has illustrated his accounts by examples of notorious spying cases. The Great War should have given him ample material, but he has not taken disproportionate advantage of it. Many instances are given of the working of the secret intelligence services in England, France and Russia during the past hundred years and more. There is a notable omission; little is said of German espionage, and the few examples given are legitimate war spying and diplomatic movements."

Times [London] Lit Sup p478 Je 13 '29 100w

LUDWIG, EMIL. Lincoln; tr. from the German by Eden and Cedar Paul. 505p il $5 Little [21s Putnam]

B or 92 Lincoln, Abraham 30-5062

In a simple, homely narrative style Emil Ludwig develops his portrait study of Lincoln according to the psychographical method of biography writing. It is his purpose, also, to present the American pioneer background in such a way that the modern European mind may understand it, and therefore see more clearly the influence of Lincoln's early environment upon his character.

Reviewed by A. B. Miller

Ann Am Acad 149:208 My '30 320w

Reviewed by Charles Johnston

Atlantic Bookshelf p28 My '30 40w

Booklist 26:277 Ap '30

"Here Ludwig ceases to be the intelligent guide. Instead, he appears as the showman. Realizing that he has a sure-fire sentimental subject, he is at pains to put his exhibit forward in nothing but a favorable light. The result is at times ludicrous. The book becomes a series of quotations from Lincoln's speeches, letters and comments to his friends, interspersed with some extraordinarily insensitive 'interpretation' by Mr. Ludwig. And yet with all his unnecessary comment Mr. Ludwig has not been able to spoil his story. His Lincoln is still recognizable."

— + Bookm 71:111 Mr '30 380w

"Mr. Emil Ludwig has succeeded in making a most interesting book. It is true to the spirit of the subject; it portrays Lincoln in his own words; it is not untrue to the essentials of the great American Civil War. . . The book appears in German and English at the same time, the English edition being excellently done by Eden and Cedar Paul." W. E. Dodd

+ Books p1 F 9 '30 1350w

"This is a book which the historically minded will peruse with curiosity and interest. It is a story which those who want again to read of Lincoln in an epic will cherish with delight. And as Lincoln has captivated Ludwig, he has responded with a book of which Americans can well be proud." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 8 '30 2700w

"When a writer of Ludwig's technical ability sets out to write in the present tense he is sure to achieve vividness, and his 'Lincoln' is a story of large and easy charm—big, glib, engaging, unmemorable. It is 'clever' in the old American sense of the term, affable, pleasant, smooth, entertaining, rather than instructive, interesting instead of informing or absorbing. Superficial though it may be, it holds surprisingly few errors considering that it comes from a man unacquainted with the American scene. . . On the whole, Ludwig's pictures of Lincoln will, no doubt, fascinate European readers who are now receiving it in many translations, and it is sure to entertain those Americans who want their Lincoln served in the form of light summer reading." Lloyd Lewis

+ — Chicago Daily Tribune p11 F 8 '30 1100w

"I expected the book to be readable. It is that and more. To be sure, it adds nothing new to our knowledge of Lincoln, and it lacks the authentic quality of the Lincoln portrait as done by Barton, Beveridge, Tarbell and Herndon. All the same, it is a striking portrait that Ludwig has drawn. His Lincoln moves across the pages an heroic figure, great in his simplicity, strong in the things that matter most. Ludwig's Lincoln is a flawless character. An impeccable Lincoln is not the Lincoln of those who knew the man intimately, or who wrote out of immense research and first-hand information. But that's the kind of a Lincoln hero-worshipers love most." E. D. Jones

+ — Christian Century 47:431 Ap 2 '30 320w

"Facts seem not to bother Herr Ludwig. His book is marred by many mistakes, and by the incorporation of long-exploded myths, the retelling of which must surprise many readers. Even Ludwig's sense of biographical proportion seems warped. It is admittedly one of the marvels of the President's life that he grew so rapidly in the less than five years of his Presidency, attaining to heights which seemed beyond him while he was but a provincial politician. Not more than a third of this new life is devoted to the period between 1860 and 1865. It is as though one were to write a life of Savonarola, and spend only a third of it in describing the Reformer's career after the fall of Piero de Medici." F. H. A.

— Christian Science Monitor p11 F 21 '30 900w

Cleveland Open Shelf p100 Jl '30

"Herr Ludwig is not only a master of invention and of fate; he is a master of narration. You may find a score of inaccuracies in as many pages, but they do not keep you from reading on to the end. Borne on the tide of narrative there is a character called Lincoln, enough like the Lincoln we have come to know to make him recognizable; the tide sweeps over a social and political background that is vaguely familiar. We are willing to pass over the slight but cumulative distortion of background and character in order to hear the perfectly self-confident story-teller to the end." Allen Tate

Nation 130:185 F 12 '30 1300w

"He has written the book in duplicate. It is not enough for him to place before us a significant passage from one of Lincoln's letters. He feels that perhaps we shall miss the characteristic trait, or the wit, or the tolerance, or the diplomatic skill, or the style that he wishes us to notice. His procedure is to pull the letter to pieces, to analyse each portion of it and force us to see what we can see already for ourselves. It is rather like explaining the point of an obvious joke. By making assurance doubly sure, Herr Ludwig alienates the reader and induces a tediousness which only the most fanatical of Lincolnites will be able to overcome. Nothing would have been lost and much gained in relevancy and interest if the book had been shorn of half its length."

— New Statesman 35:53 Ap 19 '30 800w

"Mr. Ludwig, beneath his appearance of the probing investigator, presents to us the conventional, commonplace, standardized Lincoln. . . Ludwig treats him as the school-book historians did thirty years ago, only under a mask of pretentious and unreal psychography. Analyzed, the psychography speedily turns into shreds and tatters." C. W. Thompson

— N Y Times p4 F 9 '30 1500w

"It is unfortunate that this book will appeal most to those who have the least knowledge of original Lincoln biographies and documents, and hence are not aware of the liberties the author has taken in interpreting the text. Others better informed are likely to judge it as containing too many episodes for a portrait study, and too few for a documented history. . . Whatever merits Ludwig may have as a biographer of German authors he has still to master American history and to apprehend American character." Harry Hansen

— N Y World p13 F 11 '30 950w

"The errors range from little to big. . . There is an air of certitude, sureness, and even self-complacency about the book that is amazing." A. W. Porterfield

— Outlook 154:308 F 19 '30 1450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:29 Ap '30

Pratt p37 summer '30

St Louis 28:112 Ap '30

"It is a popular Life of Lincoln, presenting a quite uncritical and rather confused picture, with the warring issues indistinctly revealed, yet with some glimpses of a greater style. Such a book could not fail to be interesting, and it is sometimes vivid; but the drama it seeks to present needs a clearer vision, and more dignity of proportion." A. P. Nicholson

+ — Sat R 149:390 Mr 29 '30 1150w

"Mr. Ludwig has given us a simple, traditional, easily-understood Lincoln, and has made him human by the play of quotation and anecdote. The biography, as a result, will be entertaining and valuable to those who are just beginning their study of Lincoln, and absolutely useless to all others. . . On its rather low plane, Mr. Ludwig's has distinctive merits. It possesses interest from start to finish. . . The use of the quotations from Lincoln is always good and often highly effective. Its greatest usefulness will perhaps be in Europe. While in England Lincoln has of recent years become well known, on the Continent he has been little regarded. Mr. Ludwig has the attention of a cosmopolitan audience, and in Germany particularly his 'Lincoln' should be welcomed and studied. If he can awaken large numbers of European students to the dramatic interest and the grandeur of Lincoln's career, his facile pen will have performed one of its best services." Allan Nevins

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:731 F 15 '30 900w

"We do not for a moment doubt Herr Ludwig's sincerity when he writes that he entertains for his subject 'a personal sympathy I have never felt for any other great man in history.' But we doubt whether such an attitude of veneration is suitable to a biographer of Herr Ludwig's peculiar talent. He excels in swift dramatic narrative: Lincoln's actions were slow and undemonstrative. A certain dullness, therefore, and a lack of clearness as to dates and motives pervades the earlier part of the book. Perhaps, also, Herr Ludwig is not at home in a prairie town of pioneer America: a more urbane setting would have better suited his descriptive powers."

LUDWIG, EMIL—Continued
Spec 144:536 Mr 29 '30 700w
Springf'd Republican p7e F 16 '30 1350w
Times [London] Lit Sup p260 Mr 27 '30 1050w
Reviewed by J. G. Randall
Yale R n s 19:832 summer '30 650w

LUDWIG, EMIL. Three Titans. 363p il $3.50 Putnam

B or 92 Michelangelo Buonarroti. Rembrandt Hermanszoon van Rijn. Beethoven, Ludwig van 30-25437

Cognizant of a kinship in the character and works of these three Titans among the arts, Emil Ludwig emphasizes their resemblances in his biographical studies of Michangelo, Rembrandt and Beethoven. The art of all three has technical as well as emotional similarity: each in his later years all but repudiated the method he had formerly employed. Mr Ludwig further points out their demoniac affinity in personality and destiny.

Booklist 27:157 D '30

"Herr Ludwig is not one of your niggling historians who look before they leap, but, clasping his chosen theory to his breast, he soars into the empyrean and sweeps away any facts which might hinder his flight. Nothing is so bourgeois as a fact. . . The book is addressed to the general reader, who knows that Michael Angelo is not the ice-man, who has heard the adjective rembrandtesque and who recognizes the name Beethoven from concert advertisements. It has the holding power of expert fiction." Olga Katzin
Bookm 72:441 D '30 450w

"Ludwig has contributed nothing to history and little to the appreciation of art, but he has done several things with unquestionable ability. In the first place, he has not pulled his characters down to the level of the clod-hopper, or tried to humanize them by dragging in indecencies and overemphasizing weaknesses. He has glorified greatness without fear and without reserve. He has left the inescapable impression that these three were of colossal stature, among the greatest who ever walked the earth, and that they cannot be praised too lavishly." Thomas Craven
+ — Books p7 S 14 '30 900w

"'Three Titans' is quite a bad book. It isn't amusing. And the materials are shopworn." Eugene Löhrke
— Nation 131:300 S 17 '30 900w

Reviewed by Eugene Lohrke
N Y Evening Post p4d O 4 '30 450w

"The most valuable characteristic of the author's method is the vivifying of his subjects. They are all intensely alive and drawn with such good taste that one feels they really must have been as Herr Ludwig describes them. It is the gift of a dramatist rather than a scholar, as if understanding came through instinct and intuition instead of through careful reconstruction of a vast body of data." H. L. Matthews
+ N Y Times p9 S 14 '30 1250w

"You will learn nothing new from this book, what you already know may be confused, and unless your taste runs to the ostentatious and explosive in literature, your opinion of Ludwig will be lowered." F. L. R.
— Outlook 156:268 O 15 '30 200w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:86 D '30
St Louis 28:272 N '30

Reviewed by Osbert Burdett
Sat R 150:715 N 29 '30 850w

"To his errors of interpretation Mr. Ludwig adds errors of criticism and of pure carelessness. His passing allusions to Renaissance history betray a complete ignorance of modern work in the period. In material relating directly to his hero, he errs less seriously, but even here he misdates documents and events, and appears to mistake the literary exercise of a Portuguese art critic for a serious record of Michelangelo's conversation. Nor is he happier in dealing with artifacts than with literary sources. . . This is not the kind of work one might have hoped for from Mr. Ludwig before he and his publishers set out to cash in on the popular interest in biography while the market held." Garrett Mattingly
— Sat R of Lit 7:486 D 27 '30 1150w

"Mr Ludwig seems rather to practice elimination than compression. The sketches in 'Three Titans' are not miniature masterpieces. Though not lacking in verve and rhetorical fluency, they are merely incomplete. Mr Ludwig's subjects are titans, but he fails to reveal their titanic quality. And the attempt made in the preface to trace a theoretical connection between the three men is futile."
— Springf'd Republican p10 S 5 '30 600w
Times [London] Lit Sup p362 My 1 '30 850w

"These three figures emerge like artists in a novel. The novelist compensates for his inability to prove his characters creative by endowing them with stupendous ideas and astonishing visions. And, indeed, in Herr Ludwig's book the 'Sistine Chapel,' 'The Night Watch,' and the 'Ninth Symphony' become almost as remote and improbable as those immediately successful novels, those pictures hung on the line, in the beauty and even in the success of which the novelist can so seldom make us believe."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p1065 D 11 '30 850w

LUEHR, ELMER. New German republic; the Reich in transition. 442p il $5 Minton

943.085 Germany—History—20th century. Germany—History—Revolution. Germany—Economic conditions. Reconstruction (European war)—Germany 29-22813

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:154 Ja '30

"The author is fortified by an astounding fund of research and essential information; has a masterful grasp of the whole picture, to its last detail, and possesses a wide technical knowledge of economic history and theory." J. T. Hatfield
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p11 F 22 '30 260w
Cleveland Open Shelf p44 Mr '30

"Mr. Luehr's volume is generally excellent. It is clear, very readable and well packed with information and has a sufficient number of exact dates of important events and laws." S. B. Fay
+ Current Hist 31:846 F '30 1100w

Reviewed by C. R. Hall
Hist Outlook 21:130 Mr '30 900w

"This book is one of the best and most readable works covering this period that has thus far appeared in English." K. F. Geiser
+ Nation 130:103 Ja 22 '30 400w

"The calmness with which Mr. Luehr describes the internal history of the revolution deserts him when he writes of Germany's treatment at the hands of the Allies. But it is to be regretted that he drops so near to pamphleteering style. Nevertheless, his is an important and useful study of affairs both foreign and domestic." R. C. Binkley
+ — New Repub 61:256 Ja 22 '30 570w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:51 Je '30
St Louis 28:19 Ja '30
Wis Lib Bul 26:66 F '30

LUKASH, IVAN SOZONTOVICH. Flames of Moscow; tr. from the Russian by Natalie Duddington. 475p $2.50 Macmillan [7s 6d Davies] 30-29337

An account of the burning of Moscow in 1812 and the retreat of the Grand army under Napoleon holds the center of interest in this historical novel. The hero of the story, Pyotr Koshelev, is a young officer of the Imperial Guards who is on his way to visit a younger brother in a hospital in Moscow. The epilogue to the story gives a picture of the Russian soldier in Paris after Napoleon's defeat.

Books p10 D 14 '30 250w

"The Flames of Moscow is neither good nor bad. There seems a fashion, at the moment, for books which describe the retreat of Napoleon's army from Moscow, and Mr. Lukash, challenging comparison with several other writers who have treated the subject, neither stands out nor falls below them. The burning of Moscow, and the horrors of the Grand Army in retreat, are vividly described; but not more vividly than in the work of other writers. The best and freshest part of the book is the picture of the Russian soldiers in Paris after Napoleon's defeat."

+ — New Statesman 35:474 Jl 19 '30 170w

"In so far as the novel brings those first two decades of the last century to life, it has interest. As fiction, however, it is somewhat lacking in those mordant qualities which cause so many Russian stories to hold their readers, whether the latter are familiar with the stuff of the story or not."

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:307 N 8 '30 150w

"Although somewhat inconclusive, the novel is written with imagination and sound historical judgment. It is excellently translated."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p572 Jl 10 '30 500w

LUMMIS, CHARLES FLETCHER. Flowers of our lost romance. 288p il $4 Houghton

917.8 Southwest, Old—History. Frontier and pioneer life 29-24490

"Not only romance but also a source book of frontier and pioneer life in the Southwest and a history of Spanish-American civilization. Chapter headings include: Pioneer Transportation in America. Indelible Spain. Oranges Three Hundred Years Ago, and The last of the Troubadors."—St Louis

Booklist 26:199 F '30

"Charles F. Lummis, in his book, goes along in a chatty kind of way, seasoning his dish with a strong dash of humor. Yet you get the feeling of a delightful companion full of odd knowledge who makes a frank and pleasant business of conversation, sandwiching his stories with comment. . . The book reflects the man, a sane, wholesome companion who has seen much and thought much and knows how to adapt himself, who has reached conclusions without any wish to impose his preferences upon other minds." C. J. Finger

+ Books p15 Ja 19 '30 350w
Boston Transcript p7 N 27 '29 750w
Cleveland Open Shelf p7 Ja '30

"It is an interesting and valuable book even if one cannot always sympathize with the author's viewpoint or accept his statements."

+ N Y Times p34 N 24 '29 380w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:31 Ap '30
St Louis 28:77 Mr '30
Wis Lib Bul 26:40 Ja '30

LUNDBERG, GEORGE ANDREW. Social research; a study in methods of gathering data. (Longmans' social science ser.) 380p $3 Longmans

309.1 Social surveys. Social problems 29-12924

"Concerned primarily with methods of gathering data, and, after an introductory chapter on the prospects of social science, Professor Lundberg confines himself quite strictly to that matter. The difficulties of objective observation of social phenomena are characterized; the mechanics of research, in relation to such matters as terminology and classification, are discussed; the principal accepted methods of social inquiry are catalogued; and rather full consideration, in separate chapters, is given to the sample in social research, the schedule as an instrument of observation, field work, case studies, measurement of attitudes, measurement of social institutions, and the standardization of social statistics."—Am Pol Sci R

"Lundberg does not always write soberly. He frequently criticizes as 'fundamentalists' those who hold a different point of view. He tends to dismiss objections summarily—like a judge just ruling them out of order. Many of his central terms are vague as to meaning, particularly the terms 'subjective' and 'objective,' on which much of the major argument is based. There is no attempt to show what they mean—they are used lazily and with emotional value. Yet the book is not abstruse: its central argument is clean cut. It should be received enthusiastically by those whose philosophy of science takes a statistical bent." Herbert Blumer

+ — Am J Soc 35:1101 My '30 1500w

"Professor Lundberg's analysis of natural-science methodology in its undeniably broad and useful application to social research is as satisfactory as can be found in print. The volume ought to be at the elbow of every less experienced investigator of social problems, and even experts will find some things of interest in it." F. A. Ogg

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:197 F '30 350w

"This is the best book on research for graduate or advanced undergraduate students of sociology that has yet been written. . . Without pretense of originality, he has succeeded within less than a hundred pages in making the best summary statement now available to the general reader of the ideas essential to this position." S. A. Rice

+ Ann Am Acad 145:208 S '29 230w
Booklist 26:103 D '29
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:79 N '29

"After reading this text one feels inclined to congratulate Professor Lundberg's students. In every chapter there is evidence of careful, sympathetic workmanship. The appendix lists painstakingly the best references on given topics, the standard sources of statistical data, and the various measuring scales devised for social phenomena. For that large number of students who begin graduate work with a faint conception of the meaning of research it will serve as manual, text and treatise. For teachers who are seeking a concise summary of the recent literature on social research it will prove itself the most satisfactory book available." W. W. Weaver

+ Pol Sci Q 45:467 S '30 1050w
St Louis 27:329 D '29

"It furnishes an excellent handbook for the research student containing, as it does, definite, clear, concise, practical directions for carrying out specific pieces of research in the field of social science, the most elusive of all the sciences." E. L. Lattimore

+ Survey 63:485 Ja 15 '30 220w
Wis Lib Bul 25:368 N '29

LUNDBERG, GEORGE ANDREW; BAIN, READ; and ANDERSON, NELS. eds. Trends in American sociology. (Harper's social science ser.) 443p $3 Harper

301 Sociology 29-23236

A survey of the field of sociology to which ten authors contribute essays. The opinions represented are those of a group of younger sociologists. The aspects of sociology discussed are sociological theory, social psychology, cultural, rural, urban, educational and applied sociology.

"The individual papers are, on the whole, readable and informative. They are, to be sure, of different grades of excellence. There are occasional evidences of immaturity of standpoint, and certain curious biases of provincial origin

LUNDBERG, G. A., and others, eds.—Continued
sometimes crop out. But these are minor matters; the papers show industry and conviction and are, in general, valuable." E. B. Reuter
+ — Am J Soc 36:142 Jl '30 870w

"This attempt of a group of the younger sociologists to set forth 'the domains and methods of sociology' is worthy of close reading. . . The brevity of the treatments, of course, leaves much to be desired, but from the volume as a whole a pretty adequate conception of what is doing in current sociology in the United States can be obtained. The greatest single weakness is, perhaps, the fact now and then more or less painfully evident that some of the writers have not covered all of the important literature in their fields or have not penetrated to the depths of its import or detected its fundamental defects and weaknesses. But withal, it is unquestionably by far the best thing in sociology in the United States now in print." L. L. Bernard
+ Ann Am Acad 148:303 Mr '30 550w
Booklist 26:300 My '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p37 Mr '30
St Louis 28:65 Mr '30

"A book of this character deserves a hearty welcome for the friendly introduction it gives to a large number of men and women who are working with scholarship and industry to reduce the bewildering array of sociological phenomena to order and system, and displaying no small amount of originality and resourcefulness in their endeavors."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:830 Mr 15 '30 380w

"The book is chiefly valuable to the student who has enough first-hand knowledge of sociological facts and theories to be critical of the viewpoints presented, but it will prove a reasonably comprehensive and dependable summary for social workers and laymen." H. M. Busch
+ — Survey 65:101 O 15 '30 380w

LUNN, HUGH KINGSMILL (HUGH KINGSMILL, pseud.), ed. Anthology of invective and abuse; with critical and hist. comments. 222p $2.50 Dial press [7s 6d Eyre]

820.8 Invective. English literature—Collections [30-16414]

"Contains outbursts of wrath, righteous and otherwise, from the pens of some sixty great men, from Shakespeare to Shaw. None of these selections are from the pen of a woman, since, as far as he has been able to ascertain, says the editor, 'women do not require the outlet of literature for such invective as they may from time to time be moved to deliver.' "—Outlook

---

Booklist 27:149 D '30
Reviewed by B. R. Redman
Books p12 Ap 27 '30 450w

"Mr. Kingsmill has done his work here with great competence. His selections include all the more celebrated English philippics, his notes set forth adequately the circumstances which brought them forth, and he chooses discreetly when it is necessary to isolate the essential from the nonessential." H. L. Mencken
+ Nation 130:549 My 7 '30 450w
New Statesman 34:421 Ja 4 '30 400w

"It is a harmless looking book in ivory and gold, but it contains the very precious life's gall of the great and the near great in English literature, from John Knox to those romantic fly-by-nights, Whistler, Ruskin, Bernard Shaw and other inconsiderable contemporaries." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 15 '30 330w
Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p4d D 27 '30 100w
N Y Times p15 D 28 '30 450w
Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:548 Ap 2 '30 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:72 O '30

"Mr Kingsmill is a bit flippant, but he exhibits the vitality and variety of a class of literature which today is presumably restrained by the more urbane manners of a gentler age."
+ Springf'd Republican p8 Mr 15 '30 1000w

LUNN, HUGH KINGSMILL (HUGH KINGS-
2 MILL, pseud.), ed. More invective; an anthology; with critical comments. 205p $2.50 Dial press [7s 6d Eyre]

820.8 Invective. English literature—Collections

"In a previous volume, 'Invective and Abuse,' Mr. Kingsmill first launched himself on the 'uncharted seas of British Billingsgate.' A single volume was obviously unable to exhaust the quarry, and we now have a most entertaining sequel. His selection embraces such divers sources as Shakespeare and Shaw, Swinburne and Chesterton, Richard Aldington and James the First's 'Counterblaste to Tobacco,' Dryden and Burns, Dr. Johnson and Shelley. The gem of the whole collection is the verbal pogrom executed by Amanda Ros, a forgotten Victorian novelist, against Barry Pain, who apparently did not take her books at her own valuation."—Sat R

Nation and Ath 48:114 O 18 '30 150w
N Y Times p15 D 28 '30 300w
Sat R 150:876 D 27 '30 200w

"In this book (to which long life and prosperity) we have got so very much to titillate or stir even the dullest soul. More Invective has all the bite and flavour of a quince." M. J. C. M.
+ Spec 145:552 O 18 '30 700w

"Some passages in the book may be objected to on the ground that they are either not invective at all or not good invective. Whistler on the Englishman's tub, or Haydon on the failure of his last exhibition, are not strictly invective. On the other hand, invective that is merely stupid, such as Browning's sonnet on FitzGerald, or Byron's abuse of Keats, is not worth collecting. But on the whole we must be grateful to Mr. Kingsmill for his perseverance in an admirable work; he has made several happy additions to this volume, notably that of Miss Amanda Ros; and his own contributions in the preface and notes are witty and instructive."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p984 N 20 '30 280w

LUPTON, LEONARD. River man. 309p $2 Dial
2 press

30-24350

The story of a Hudson River shantyboat and its owner.

"Another over-romantic story of a man afflicted with wanderlust and one of those Dream-Women who are often to be found in fiction." Guy Holt
— Bookm 72:452 D '30 40w

"A yarn displaying such immaturity and awkwardness of matter and manner on every page as to awaken nothing except a kind of sorrowful wonder at the misplaced industry involved."
— Books p20 O 5 '30 150w

"The novel is well written, the author shows keen appreciation of psychological values, and marked ability as a creator of character. The glimpses of life on the river and the road, and the record of the mental processes of the hero from the time he encountered a stray copy of Tully's 'Beggars of Life' and felt the first awakening of an ambition which eventually led to his evolution from a tramp to a newspaper man, make very interesting reading."
+ Boston Transcript p4 N 29 '30 230w

"This is a strange and aimless story about shantyboat life on the Hudson. The end comes in a manner which is not inevitable and natural, as it should be, but rather as a heroic display of the sacrifice of convention to art."
— N Y Times p16 D 28 '30 200w

LUQUET, GEORGES HENRI. Art and religion of fossil man; tr. by J. Townsend Russell, jr.; with a pref. by George Grant MacCurdy. 213p il $5 Yale univ. press [23s Oxford]

571.7 Art, Primitive. Religion, Primitive. Man, Prehistoric 30-13658

The painting, sculpture and engraving of the paleolithic age, studied with regard to the psychology of these prehistoric artists. In part one Dr Luquet discusses decorative art, realism in art and the meanings of figured art. Part two takes up the cult of the dead, and religion and magic.

Christian Century 47:723 Je 4 '30 250w

"Not only is it a valuable description and analysis of the various classes of Palæolithic art, but it is one of the most important contributions to be made by French archæologists to the discussion of the meaning and purpose of that art. The illustrations are excellent; they have been selected with discrimination, but at the same time without undue partiality to the line of argument followed by the author."
+ Nature 126:237 Ag 16 '30 150w
N Y Times p16 Je 29 '30 430w

"Dr. Luquet is a professor of philosophy as well as an archaeologist, and is consequently able to impart the requisite breadth of view to his study of the meaning of Pleistocene cave-art. Not only is he acquainted with the objective evidence in the fullest detail, but he likewise realizes that, as he puts it, 'it is necessary to endow oneself, as far as possible, with a Paleolithic soul.' . . On the whole subject of the evolution of art, alike in its technical and its psychological bearings, M. Luquet writes with excellent knowledge and judgment."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p547 Jl 3 '30 1550w

"The volume should gain a wide audience. Professional archaeologists will respect the author's scientific restraint, his impartiality, and his well-documented conclusions, and they will profit from a survey of their field in broad perspective. The layman will find a clear presentation, abundantly illustrated and free from unnecessary detail, of a triply interesting subject. The work admits of minor criticisms only." G. P. Murdock
+ Yale R n s 20:405 winter '31 600w

LURIE, REUBEN LEVI. Challenge of the ² forum; the story of Ford hall and the open forum movement; a demonstration in adult education; with foreword by George W. Coleman. 218p il $2.50 Badger

374.24 Ford Hall, Boston. Debates and debating. Education of adults 30-32552

"A story of Ford Hall and its activities which has long been needed for a real understanding of the unique foundation which was established by Daniel Sharp Ford by his will in 1898 and has been encouraged, guided, and thoroughly stimulated by Mr. Coleman during the later years. The first part of the book sketches particularly the history of Ford Hall and its work. In the second part there is presented an outline of the open forum movement in general, particularly in its relation to the influence which Ford Hall and its Forum have exerted in many directions."—Crozer Q

Boston Transcript p4 D 13 '30 400w
Reviewed by F. G. Lewis
Crozer Q 8:138 Ja '31 250w

"Here is what many a pastor and church leader has been looking for—concrete suggestions as to forum technique. Of course there is more in the book than advice and counsel; there is the thrilling story of the birth and development of this pioneer enterprise. We hope that this book may be the means of stimulating the organization of many new forums." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 156:709 D 31 '30 150w

LUTHER, MARK LEE, and FORD, MRS LILLIAN COPE (CUMMINGS). Card 13. 317p $2 Bobbs 30-4298

"A murder mystery in Hollywood. Tony Gilmore, famous scenario writer, is shot to death with his own revolver on his own lawn, and suspicion falls on many stars in the movie colony. It takes Arthur Ranleigh, a friend of Gilmore's, to sift out the real motive behind the crime from the case built up by the police."—Bookm

"Remarkably well written story."
+ Bookm 71:xxviii Mr '30 50w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p22 F 9 '30 120w

"'Card 13' has a certain plausibility lacking in many detective stories where murder is more intensive. . . There are no shudders in this tale, but neither does one have to stretch the imagination. It's sound and entertaining." Bruce Rae
+ N Y Times p10 O 5 '30 180w

LUTHER, MARK LEE, and FORD, MRS LILLIAN COPE (CUMMINGS). Saranoff murder. 313p $2 Bobbs 30-23195

"Grim death stalks a Russian moving picture star in her Beverly Hills mansion while the guests are assembled in her private theatre. After her garrotting the suspects are taken up by the Los Angeles police, and Arthur Raneleigh collaborates with them in sifting and sorting the evidence to the inevitable conclusion."—Bookm

Bookm 72:xxiii S '30 60w

"Sound work of the boldly pigmented American school, and if memory serves, a good deal swifter than 'Card 13.'" Will Cuppy
+ Books p14 S 7 '30 160w
Boston Transcript p2 D 17 '30 250w

"Too obvious treatment, a constantly recurring left-handedness in the management of detail keep this from being the better-than-average mystery story it could have been so easily." Dashiell Hammett
— N Y Evening Post p12 S 20 '30 100w

"Very average puzzler. The characters are all made out of well-seasoned pine, on traditional patterns." W. R. Brooks
— Outlook 156:69 S 10 '30 80w

LUTZ, EDWIN GEORGE. Practical landscape painting in oils. 209p il $2 (7s 6d) Scribner

758 Landscape painting 30-11365

"A clear and practical presentation for the beginner, which considers materials and equipment, setting the palette, brush technique and other essentials of landscape painting."—Pratt

Booklist 26:385 Jl '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:73 O '30
Pratt p24 autumn '30
St Louis 28:213 S '30

LUTZ, MRS GRACE (LIVINGSTON) HILL. Ladybird. 294p $2 (7s 6d) Lippincott 30-9486

The story of a young girl who left the only home she had ever known, a cabin in the western wilderness, and came to New York to search out her mother's people. Fate was kind to her. She found friends everywhere and came to her own people at last.

Books p10 Ap 20 '30 180w

LUTZ, G. H.—Continued
"This story is somewhat more elaborate in plot than Mrs. Hill's other thirty-one stories for girls. The situations are improbable, but the story makes interesting reading." F. M.
+ — Boston Transcript p4 Ap 23 '30 700w
Times [London] Lit Sup p498 Je 12 '30 150w

LUZZATTI, LUIGI. God in freedom; studies in the relations between church and state; tr. from the Italian by Alfonso Arbib-Costa, with American supplementary chapters by William H. Taft and others. 794p $5 Macmillan

261.7 Religious liberty. Liberty of conscience. Church and state 30-25515

A discussion of the essential aspects of problems concerning religious liberty, or the separation of church and state, by the former prime minister of Italy. The book contains numerous appendices, and a number of supplementary chapters by William Howard Taft, Irving Lehman, Louis Marshall, Max J. Kohler and Dora Askowith.

Columbia Law R 30:1226 D '30 180w

"This exhaustive treatment of religious freedom should be added to the reference shelves of all religious institutions, and should be of aid in the work of any student of religious movements." J. C. Thirlwall
+ Hist Outlook 21:338 N '30 800w

"With tireless research in many languages, from the first decree on the freedom of conscience uttered by Asoka, the famous Buddhist Emperor of India, who reigned from 264 to 227 B. C. down to the articles of religious freedom to be found in modern constitutions and treaties between nations, Luzzatti pursued his way with superlative historical insight and with a philosophy which lends both romance and conviction to his thesis." Walter Littlefield
+ N Y Times p24 D 7 '30 1750w
Times [London] Lit Sup p145 D 4 '30 250w

LYELL, DENIS D. Hunting & spoor of Central African game. 234p il $10 Lippincott [31s 6d Seeley, S.]

799.2 Hunting—Africa. Zoology—Africa [30-14868]

Mr Lyell has prepared this book for sportsmen in the belief that the tracking, not killing, of game is the most fascinating feature of hunting. He opens with a chapter on fair hunting, or the ethics of sport, and follows with much practical information on various aspects of tracking. The book is illustrated with photographic representations of the spoor of the principal animals.

"This finely produced volume is essentially for novices, although it will interest the experienced hunter. Mr. Lyell deals especially with tracking, which he properly regards as the best sport, for it involves skill, knowledge and hard work."
+ Sat R 149:20 Ja 4 '30 550w

"Mr. Lyell has many wise words to say on hunting ethics, and on the cardinal rules which all sportsmen should obey. The book is modestly written, and professes to be for beginners, but experienced hunters might take many of its maxims to heart. All that a novice need know is here."
+ Spec 144:66 Ja 11 '30 100w

LYMAN, GEORGE DUNLAP. John Marsh, pioneer; the life story of a trail-blazer on six frontiers. 394p il $3.50 (15s) Scribner

B or 92 Marsh, John. Frontier and pioneer life 30-25081

The subject of this biography, one of the most mysterious of California's earliest pioneers, was a Harvard graduate who went to Minnesota, married a Sioux Indian half-breed, and wrote a dictionary of the Sioux language. Thence he moved westward, becoming California's first doctor and in time a wealthy cattle baron and a prominent figure in the early history of the state. In 1865 he was murdered by Mexicans near Martinez.

Reviewed by D. C. Seitz
Bookm 72:318 N '30 280w

"This book stands in refreshing contrast to the glibly novelized biographies which are now the fashion. . . In a direct and unpretentious style Mr. Lyman has reconstructed the life of his hero, proving his every point of numbered references to a copious bibliography. The result is no literary confection but a document, both human and historical, of unusual value. It throws light upon half a dozen phases of American frontier life and it reveals a striking human destiny." Harvey Fergusson
+ Books p15 N 2 '30 750w

"Few novels possess the color and variety, the action and the mystery of John Marsh's story." D. L. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 22 '30 480w
New Statesman 36:126 N 1 '30 200w
N Y Times p22 N 9 '30 700w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y World p3e O 26 '30 220w

"To every phase of Dr. Marsh's variegated and picturesque career the author has given devoted research, and has presented the results in a well-proportioned, well-documented, and very readable volume. It is a striking career that he has unveiled, and a still more striking character—full of faults but full also of strength and energy." Allan Nevins
+ Sat R of Lit 7:210 O 11 '30 500w

Reviewed by Oak Amidon
Survey 65:172 N 1 '30 350w
Times [London] Lit Sup p902 N 6 '30 550w

LYNDE, FRANCIS. Waters of strife. 323p $2 Scribner 30-25159

The difficulties met and overcome both in love and engineering by a young man sent out west to construct an important irrigation project.

Booklist 27:208 Ja '31

"Everyone who has enjoyed reading Mr. Lynde's novels of the West, and who felt a pang of regret on hearing of his death last spring, will be glad to read 'Waters of Strife' which fortunately was finished before he died."
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 15 '30 330w

"Needless to say, the work is not art. It glides too easily over the things of deepest spiritual significance. It presumes upon human ignorance and fails to look deeply into character. But to go the way of art was obviously not the aim of the author."
N Y Times p19 D 21 '30 200w

"It seems that it was left for 'Waters of Strife' to prove to the fiction-reading public how exciting a story written about irrigation difficulties could be."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e O 19 '30 230w

LYON, HASTINGS, and BLOCK, HERMAN. Edward Coke, oracle of the law. 385p il $5 Houghton

B or 92 Coke, Sir Edward 29-27774

A complete life-history that thoroly reflects its Elizabethan background is this study of the famous lawyer and writer of legal treatises, whose name is linked with that of Francis Bacon, Sir Walter Raleigh and others of the time, and whose fame today rests chiefly on his law commentary, Coke upon Littleton. The authors have stressed in particular Coke's lifelong controversy with Bacon, his prosecution of Essex, and his stand against King James to maintain the supremacy of the common law; and have recounted some of the famous trials in which he took part.

Reviewed by R. G. Usher
Am Hist R 35:661 Ap '30 450w

"At all points it is good biography, and a mirror of the times in which its principal personage lived." W. H. M.
+ Boston Transcript p3 D 11 '29 500w

"The authors devote less space to Coke's legal writings than to an account of negotiations for the marriage of his daughter and the accompanying quarrels between himself and his wife. They rarely give any indication of their sources of information and never refer to earlier writings on Coke. They pay much attention to historical backgrounds and to creating atmosphere, but with the best of intentions they do not give us a convincing portrait of a tough old lawyer in all his strength and weakness."
Nation 130:402 Ap 2 '30 150w

Reviewed by T. F. T. Plucknett
New Repub 62:353 Ap 16 '30 700w

"An ample and a serious work, worthy of an important theme. It is a biography that, in the manner of Holbein, displays the subject, not solitary, but with all his environment detailed around him." P. W. Wilson
+ N Y Times p11 Ja 19 '30 950w

"Messrs. Lyon and Block, in their excellent biography, have built up a complete and brilliant human background of Elizabethan and Jacobean England." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 153:546 D 4 '29 550w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:30 F '30 120w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 23 '30 850w

"The authors have been influenced in their literary style by the prevalent fashion in biography. That is, they have sought to make the book interesting and easy reading. At the outset they labor in the process, being lumberingly sprightly. When they reach Coke the lawyer, they strike their true stride and proceed straightforwardly with a wealth of detail in itself so interesting that the call to literature is forgotten." F. C. Hicks
+ — Yale Law J 39:1084 My '30 600w

Reviewed by F. H. Relf
Yale R n s 20:199 autumn '30 600w

LYON, LEVERETT SAMUEL. Hand-to-mouth buying; a study in the organization, planning and stabilization of trade. (Inst. of economics) 487p $4 Brookings [18s Williams & Norgate]
658.7 Buying. United States—Economic conditions. United States—Commerce. Business 29-24748

An extensive examination of trade statistics, bearing particularly on the policy of buying for immediate requirements only.

Reviewed by D. R. Cowan
Am Econ R 20:297 Je '30 750w

"The colloquial title ascribed to this book is by no means an index of the technique of its contents. This is one of the most careful and thorough statistical analyses of a business problem that has ever been made." R. D. McKenzie
+ Am J Soc 36:312 S '30 600w

Reviewed by M. R. Carroll
Ann Am Acad 149:212 My '30 270w

Booklist 26:266 Ap '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p67 My '30

"The wide range of the material and the admirable organization of the data make the study both valuable to business executives and stimulating to empirically minded economic students." Simon Kuznets
+ J Pol Econ 38:621 O '30 750w

"The book is generously illustrated with charts and graphs, and presents as extensive an application of trade statistics to a specific distribution problem as has yet been made." F. A. Fall
+ Outlook 154:389 Mr 5 '30 140w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:38 My '30

St Louis 28:71 Mr '30

"At last an extensive analysis has been made of the problem of hand-to-mouth buying. The problem has brought forth much discussion in trade journals, but these contributions have been either theoretical or limited to the experience of single companies. Leverett S. Lyon's 'Hand-to-Mouth Buying' will be recognized as a scientific study of this subject." W. L. Thorp
+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 23 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Ordway Tead
Survey 64:280 Je 15 '30 180w

M

MAARTENS, MAARTEN, pseud. (JOZUA
2 MARIUS WILLEM VANDER POORTEN-SCHWARTZ). Letters; ed. by his daughter; with an introd. by Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch, and a memoir by Norreys Jephson O'Conor. 370p il $6 Smith, R.R. [22s 6d Constable]
B or 92

A collection of letters by the Dutch writer known as Maarten Maartens which "extend from the beginning of his literary career in the early '90s, when he was a little past 30, almost to the day of his death, a quarter of a century later. Largely they are letters of warm and intimate friendship to Sir Edmund and Lady Gosse, but among them are many to his English publisher and friend, George Bentley, and to other Englishmen and to his wife and daughter, while among them are sandwiched a good many to him from the Gosses, J. M. Barrie, and others." (N Y Times)

Reviewed by G. R. B. Richards
Boston Transcript p4 D 13 '30 1500w

Nation and Ath 48:167 N 1 '30 280w

"Maartens's letters recall very pleasantly a period curiously remote—the days when Robertson Nicoll was a power in the land of letters, when James Barrie was a young author, when Edmund Gosse succeeded in leading to literature people for whom Andrew Lang was too scholarly and Saintsbury too learned, the days when George Moore was still a dashing and dangerous rebel, and when Maartens himself was, with Marion Crawford and W. E. Norris, a novelist who was not afraid of innovation and yet kept to tradition. His letters are unassuming kindly chitchat, with here and there a passage of shrewd criticism or ingenious suggestion. Also there are good letters from James Barrie, from Gosse, and from 'Q,' who furnishes an introduction. All who like the byways of late Victorian and Edwardian letters will find much to amuse them in this collection."
+ New Statesman 35:714 S 13 '30 150w

"One can dip anywhere into these letters by Maarten Maartens, who in private life was Joost M. W. van der Poorten Schwartz, and be conscious of the presence of a vital, sensitive and refined personality. The mood ranges widely, from playful nonsense to acute disturbance over the war. There are many little anecdotes full of the sense of humor, frequently the portrayal of a humorous attitude toward life and people, and a great deal of literary criticism."
+ N Y Times p11 D 14 '30 500w

"His friends held Maarten Maartens in peculiar affection; even on the printed pages here his charm can be felt. To them, and to admirers of his novels, this volume will be a personal gift. To those to whom his name only is familiar, the record will become an invitation to the collected edition of his works that Messrs. Constable published in 1914. Some phrases in the preface by Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch suggest that the Maarten Maartens novels have not maintained their former popularity. If so, this collection of his letters, so sensitive, so witty, so interesting, will hasten a revived judgment concerning his books." Osbert Burdett
+ Sat R 150:288 S 6 '30 1150w

"His comments on his travels, on books and functions and personages, are shrewd and witty often, always naturally and agreeably expressed,

MAARTENS, MAARTEN, pseud.—Continued
and a very good indication of the charming person his friends knew him to be. . . Very delightful letters written to Maarten Maartens by his distinguished literary friends in England and America are not the least interesting part of this book, which is a record of travel, work, ambition and quiet domestic content. They all serve to throw light on the main portrait, that of the cosmopolitan man of letters, the affectionate and charming friend."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p697 S 4 '30 1050w

MABIE, MARY LOUISE. The saints, the devil & the king. 331p $2.50 Bobbs [7s 6d Cape, J.]
Louis XI, king of France—Fiction 30-7679

"'The Saints, the Devil and the King' is a novelization of the life of 'King Spider,' that Louis XI, whose passion for France enlists him among the world's geniuses of patriotism. Miss Mabie's portrait of this sinister figure is a very absorbing legend of evil and enormous ambition played over against the brilliant tapestry of the fifteenth century."—N Y Evening Post

"A good book this, with much really excellent writing in it." Guy Holt
+ Bookm 71:239 Ap '30 140w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas
Books p14 Ap 20 '30 500w
Boston Transcript p2 Ap 30 '30 600w

"This novel is the only novel since H. F. M. Prescott's 'The Unhurrying Chase' which really does get into the Middle Ages without changing at every station for a local, modern wisecrack or sheer Victorian guff. It is enormously exciting, though it can hardly rank with Prescott or Undset. Louis XI is there, and life is there, and that gaudy jade, the overdressed false historical romance, is not there." Donald Douglas
+ New Repub 62:305 Ap 30 '30 120w

"Whatever its worth may be from the historian's point of view for the reader Miss Mabie's book is fascinating entertainment." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 8 '30 130w

"The author has succeeded extraordinarily well in her portrayal of the strange, complex, revolting yet fascinating character of the crafty, malevolent King. Written with understanding, and with that dramatic power which can transmute historical effigies into living men and women, 'The Saints, the Devil and the King' is an intensely interesting and very worth while example of the modern type of historical novel."
+ N Y Times p7 Mr 16 '30 820w

"A highly interesting narrative which may be truer than the history of the records. The style is splendidly chosen for the character." Philip Stong
+ N Y World p10m Ap 27 '30 420w
Outlook 155:26 My 7 '30 20w

"In the main her book not only rings true but also actually follows the documents. In a day when historical romance seems likely to come into favor, she has written a vivid, quickly moving, and readable historical romance." T. C. Chubb
+ Sat R of Lit 6:820 Mr 15 '30 500w
Springf'd Republican p10 Je 18 '30 300w

"It is a lively and at times a moving story. Altogether a very promising book from a hand so young."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p832 O 16 '30 450w

MCALLISTER, ALISTER (LYNN BROCK, ANTHONY WHARTON, pseuds.). Murder on the bridge. 268p $2 Harper
30-18559

This sequel to Murder at the Inn again features Colonel Gore at work on a new and even more baffling case. Dr Melhuish, his good friend, had been murdered on the Westmouth suspension bridge. The chief clues to the situation are the constantly recurring initials, Q. E. D. In spite of his own narrow escape from death, Colonel Gore carries on and solves the mystery.

Booklist 27:165 D '30

"A bully good story; a feasible plot and well told."
+ Bookm 71:xviii Ag '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p10 Jl 13 '30 180w

"If the final explanation contains some slight thinness of motivation and certain coincidences that require a little swallowing, they are not serious enough to spoil the general excellence of the story." Dashiell Hammett
+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 19 '30 220w

"This Colonel Gore case, involving the puzzling fate of a physician, is commended without reservation. It will be a shrewd student of detective yarns who solves the secret of the slaying of Dr. Melhuish and penetrates the shield of angelic innocence which protects the person responsible for the crimes."
+ N Y Times p12 Jl 27 '30 200w

"Affairs start moving early and briskly, but slow down after the first half of the story; then, in the concluding chapters, action hangs fire so long that the denouement is deprived of full effectiveness. As to Gore's performance, he has appeared more advantageously in practically all of his earlier cases." E. C. Beckwith
— + N Y World p7m Jl 20 '30 170w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

MACAULAY, ROSE. Staying with relations. 352p $2.50 Liveright [7s 6d Collins]
30-27116

A young woman novelist, Catherine Grey, goes to visit her aunt and uncle's family at their villa in Guatemala. This motley assortment of relations, living in a rococo dwelling (once a Mayan temple) on the edge of a steaming Central American jungle, prove to the young novelist who is interested in people and their effect upon one another that human beings are quite incalculable, and that most anything may happen with a given group in a given setting. Among the things that do happen in this story are a kidnapping, an unfortunate love tragedy, and the marriage of a well-established spinster to a widower with several children.

Booklist 27:161 D '30

Reviewed by Odell Shepard
Bookm 72:413 D '30 1100w

Reviewed by V. P. Ross
Books p6 N 2 '30 600w

"She is a wit, she will have her laugh or her wry smile, but underneath the jesting lies a profound pessimism. Her characters dismiss restrictions of time and space, family obligations, the demands of friendship, the compulsions of love with a laugh or a shrug of the shoulders. But it is because they believe that these things, like the fearsome jungle, have no permanent influence on the human spirit, which pursues its stupid or idle or vain or unseeing way according to some caprice imposed from within or without. This, they say, is a world which has no meaning, no order, no sense. Let us laugh at it. And Miss Macaulay laughs and her readers laugh, and, if the world is stupid, while the laughter goes on it does not matter in the least." Dorothy Van Doren
+ Nation 131:625 D 3 '30 550w

"Miss Macaulay is one of the easiest novelists to read, but she has chosen to be generous with local colour and excitement but parsimonious with her great resources of wit. The result, a cake which is not exactly stodgy, but disappointingly short of currants." Raymond Mortimer
— + Nation and Ath 47:796 S 27 '30 200w
New Repub 65:147 D 17 '30 180w

"For the work of Miss Macaulay this generation can hardly be too grateful; she is as witty as 'Elizabeth' and as serious as Mr. Galsworthy; her satire is never intolerant, to the extent of a confusion between faults and their possessors; her sense of humour is gay, light as can be, but always has an intellectual basis. . . The architectural setting of the story is baroque on Maya, and something of this fantasy and of the hot unreason of the tropics get into the story. . . Still the colour and design of the book are excellent, and it is pleasant to put down any book to-day with the comment that there is not enough of it."

+ — New Statesman 35:768 S 27 '30 250w

"Miss Macaulay has written before this novels of broader scope and more general application, novels which are, in a way, more important than 'Staying With Relations.' But she has written none which was better or more compactly conceived. It is a tightly constructed novel, built about a single informing idea. The task which Miss Macaulay set herself was not an easy one, for the idea was exceedingly difficult to demonstrate in fictional form, and a novelist of inferior skill and experience might have found it impossible. 'Staying With Relations' is less a criticism of life as it is lived, than of life as it is written about. One might almost say, without exaggeration, that Miss Macaulay has written a novel for novelists."

+ N Y Times p6 N 9 '30 550w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

N Y World p3e N 16 '30 300w

"The book should have been kept as a long short story. Miss Grey and her relatives should never have been allowed to leave Guatemala. In her effort to bring to a decent finish what should have been allowed to trail off into a long gurgle of delight, Rose Macaulay contrives an anti-climax." F. L. Robbins

+ — Outlook 156:387 N 5 '30 380w

"The characters live though the story is slight, but the real attraction, for one reader at least, is the jungle with all its beauties and terrors so vividly described."

+ Sat R 150:375 S 27 '30 150w

Reviewed by Stanley Went

Sat R of Lit 7:305 N 8 '30 600w

"With the exception of Piper, the estate servant, a humorous person delightful enough to meet, none of the characters carries any degree of conviction. They do not develop. They are mere puppets, demonstrating a formula; and, despite Isie's abduction by Indians, and despite a treasure hunt and the pursuit of a very resourceful and elusive villain, the narrative falls flat. There are, needless to say, incidental flashes of genuine wit and wisdom. But there is, throughout, too much sense of effort and strain. The redeeming feature of the story—and it goes far to atone for its faults—is the very fine and impressive description of the tropical forest." Gilbert Thomas

+ — Spec 145:sup470 O 4 '30 480w

Times [London] Lit Sup p754 S 25 '30 550w

MACAULEY, THURSTON. Donn Byrne, bard of Armagh. 216p il $2 Century [7s 6d Low]

B or 92 Byrne, Donn 29-23337

A biography of appreciation written by one of Donn Byrne's friends and admirers. It is descriptive rather than critical, and is a picturesque account of the Irish-American novelist's interesting life.

Booklist 26:201 F '30

"This is essentially a friendly biography done by one of Byrne's earliest admirers. It draws a portrait of the popular Celtic romanticist that resembles some of his own later creations."

Bookm 70:vi F '30 30w

"Thurston Macauley's brief biography justifies itself. Assuredly it is all that such a work could or should be. It is written with love but without tears. It is compact but sufficient. It praises and celebrates but observes proportion. Impeccable in style, it is as colloquial as the reminiscences of a gentleman in a club, and therefore it comes alive and makes its hero real." Shaemas O'Sheel

+ Books p18 D 1 '29 450w

"Will prove of great interest to all lovers of Donn Byrne and should add to the wide circles of his readers. Informal in style, it adequately portrays its subject, contains an admirable selection of excerpts from his writings and properly evaluates his various works." A. B. K.

+ Churchman 140:15 D 14 '29 50w

Cleveland Open Shelf p154 D '29

"We admire Mr. Macauley's admiration of his subject; we deplore the general dullness of his biography." Edwin Seaver

— + N Y Evening Post p9m D 7 '29 50w

"Thurston Macauley does not attempt any critical study of Donn Byrne's work or of his character in this short biography, but he tells quite charmingly, if somewhat naïvely, a few facts of the Irishman's life and work which an admiring public will doubtless be interested to know."

+ N Y Times p19 F 9 '30 330w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:10 F '30

Pratt p36 spring '30

"Mr. Macauley's biography is both trim and compact, written with a consistent tone and in good taste. There are a few of the familiar lapses, a potpourri on the virtues of the late novelist, and some atmospherical lyricisms. However, Donn Byrne's life lends itself to a facile coloration, and Mr. Macauley's restraint has avoided such a pitfall. Yet he makes neither a piercing analysis of an interesting temperament, nor a literary criticism of one whose claims to fame are, at best, dubious." J. T. Farrell

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:717 F 8 '30 600w

Spec 144:437 Mr 15 '30 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p162 F 27 '30 600w

Wis Lib Bul 26:67 F '30

MACBETH, MRS MADGE HAMILTON (LYONS), and CONWAY, A. B., pseud. (MAJOR BURNS). Great fright; Onesiphore our neighbor; sketches by Bourgeois. 326p $2.50 Carrier

30-33263

This caricature featuring the lighter aspects of French Canadian life tells, in several humorous episodes, of the rivalry between Polycarpe Begin and his neighbor, Onesiphore Pouget.

"Perhaps the ridiculous situations are not quite ridiculous enough; perhaps the stories too definitely lack climax, but the fact remains that the reader has ceased to be interested in what is going to happen long before he finds out. . . An opportunity for delineation of character has been lost, for the French Canadian peasant must present more of character than these meager, gossip-loving men and women show."

— N Y Times p22 Ja 12 '30 320w

"By and large this genial and rather courageous presentation of the village rustic, with his gaiety and his petty faults, is well and wittily done. And aside from the obvious exaggeration, it is probably the shrewdest study of the habitant yet written."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:722 F 8 '30 250w

"Somewhere near the Maine border of old Quebec lies the fabled village of Saint-Epistemon de Dudswell, home of as mirthful a group of rustics as has been shown on this side of the international boundary. . . As if the text were not sufficiently funny, there are chapter headings by Bourgeois, foremost of French Canadian caricaturists, which add their bit to the reader's enjoyment."

+ Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 200w

MCBRIDE, MARY MARGARET. Story of 2 Dwight W. Morrow. 183p $1 Farrar

B or 92 Morrow, Dwight Whitney

A campaign biography in which the author outlines the successive steps in Mr Morrow's career and evaluates his public service.

Bookm 72:vi N '30 30w

MCBRIDE, M. M.—Continued

"This biography is one not so much of Morrow, the man, as of Morrow, the candidate, which may account both for its brevity and for the unrelieved perfection of the career it unfolds. But one has a sneaking suspicion that even the whole truth would hardly alter the portrait it presents. Mr. Morrow, apparently, is a genius without crotchets, a little man whose brilliant mind is mated to an affectionate nature and an instinctive tact." W. M. Houghton

+ Books p4 O 5 '30 550w

"It is a well told story of a well filled life—up to date."

+ Christian Century 47:1596 D 24 '30 50w

N Y Times p40 N 30 '30 250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:86 D '30

St Louis 28:301 D '30

MCCABE, LIDA ROSE. Ardent Adrienne; the
2 life of Madame de La Fayette. 326p il $3
Appleton

B or 92 Lafayette, Marie Adrienne Françoise de (Noailles), marquise de 30-29658

The romantic devotion of Madame de La Fayette to her famous husband is the keynote of this biographical portrait. It is the story of a love that never wavered through all the misfortunes which the Revolution brought them.

"Despite a too generous sprinkling of rhapsody, and a note which says that the author 'slept two nights in the tower room in which the General was born', 'Ardent Adrienne' does a thorough job of telling the story of La Fayette's wife."

+ — Bookm 72:vi D '30 80w

"It is a touchingly beautiful life, and could be told movingly. But this biographer's style is eccentric and careless. There is no question about her equipment. She has been collecting material for years, and she has obviously poured her heart into her work. . . There is scarcely a page on which author or proofreader, or both, could not profitably have spent a little more time." R. T. House

— + Books p15 Ja 4 '31 480w

"This 'Life of Madame de La Fayette' is written in an engaging style, and with a thorough appreciation of the romantic background of its heroine's times. It may be regarded as a grateful pendant to Brand Whitlock's altogether delightful biography of the lady's husband." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p4d Ja 3 '31 50w

"Miss McCabe's style is frequently like the title of her book in its efforts to be persuasive and dramatic, and the headings to the chapters are of a like intensity. Yet the book deserves to be read. Much patient labour and research have been expended on the work, the pages are stored with valuable material."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1055 D 11 '30 1000w

MCCANN, REBECCA (MRS HARVEY FERGUSSON). Cheerful cherub; second series. 310p il $2 Covici

817 30-20338

"Brief verses adorned with pictures of cherub and dog in various moods and attitudes. Amusing remarks about life done up in several small packages."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 27:149 D '30

"Evidences of a tongue-in-the-cheek attitude make the ever-present optimism wholly acceptable."

+ Bookm 72:ix S '30 40w

"The simple, cheering and catchy verses in this volume will prove to be a genuine antidote for the blues to many readers. They are not poetry, but many have bright and amusing ideas."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 30 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p139 N '30

Sat R of Lit 7:43 Ag 9 '30 40w

Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 10 '30 100w

MCCANTS, ELLIOTT CRAYTON. Ninety Six. 325p $2 Crowell

30-5694

This romance of South Carolina during the Revolution takes its name from a famous frontier post of those times.

"The tale is excellent; the characters convincing, the background accurate and the style unusually good."

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 10 '30 350w

"Mr. McCants makes capital use of daring situations, and the breathtaking escapes essayed by Captain Maclae with the aid of the astute scout."

+ N Y Times p9 My 18 '30 200w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 1 '30 220w

MCCARDELL, ROY LARCOM. My Aunt Angie. 285p $1 Farrar

30-5932

The lurid adventures of a blond rural Lorelei on her way to fame and fortune.

Books p25 Ap 13 '30 350w

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 23 '30 320w

N Y Times p6 Mr 16 '30 550w

"There is boisterous fun in this book. There is raucous merriment. There are things that are more laughable than refined. But there is plenty of sound wisdom here, too. Plenty of the well-seasoned philosophy that a man picks up in knocking about a none too elegant world." Bellamy Partridge

+ N Y World p11m Mr 16 '30 300w

MACCHIORO, VITTORIO D. From Orpheus to Paul; a history of Orphism. (Studies in religion and culture. Schermerhorn lectures) 262p il $3 Holt

292 Orpheus. Mysteries, Religious. Christianity and other religions. Paul, Saint 30-13999

The Grecian cult of Dionysus, beginning with the teachings of Orpheus in Thrace and embodying in its mystical doctrines many characteristics of Christianity, is the subject of Professor Macchioro's thesis.

Reviewed by L. R. Taylor

Books p29 S 28 '30 800w

"Professor Macchioro has written a new chapter in the story of Greek thought and of the preparation for Christianity in those aspects of it which were embodied in the mystery religions, and has given to Paulinism an orientation in the pre-Christian development of mystical and sacramental religion which had indeed been suggested by previous scholars but which had never been explored with equal thoroughness." W. E. Garrison

+ Christian Century 47:847 Jl 2 '30 1000w

"Let one not look for rigorous proof of this thesis or of any of the subtheses that ornament the pages of this book. Here, in spite of footnotes and other paraphernalia of proof, all is suggestion, analogy, allusion. But of such stuff is made the history of semihistoric times. The book, though popular in form if not also padded in content, will pass for interesting if not for brilliant historic speculation." T. V. S.

Int J Ethics 41:127 O '30 350w

"Taken as a whole, the book should not be read by old men, because its extreme statements will simply make them angry without doing them any good; nor by young men, because it will intoxicate them. But those of middle age, who have plasticity enough to respond a little to foreign influences and sense enough not to lose their heads, will find the book full of brilliant interpretations and stimulating suggestions." Robert Scoon

+ J Philos 28:20 Ja 1 '31 1850w

"The lectures are written in good clear English with an arrangement and argument that is not difficult to follow. . . We will not accuse Macchioro of pan-Orphism; we will rather excuse him if his lifelong interest in Orphic records and his attempt to do the almost impossible task of distinguishing its influence in later history have combined to betray him into applying the Orphic label too freely in both the Greek and the Christian tradition." H. J. Cadbury
+ — J Religion 10:595 O '30 950w

"The book is an extremely able and closely reasoned account of a religion which, originally foreign to Greek beliefs and habits of thought, presently dominated both. . . 'From Orpheus to Paul' is a thoughtful and illuminating contribution to the study of the mythological origins of Christian theology." L. M. Field
+ N Y Times p12 Jl 13 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Evelyn Underhill
Spec 145:502 O 11 '30 450w

"Signor Macchioro's own particular theories are considered by most qualified scholars in this field to be wide of the mark. The evidence is all against such a diffusion and durable influence of Orphic religion as Signor Macchioro supposes. . . It is unhappily the case that Signor Macchioro's own references to ancient authorities in support of his assertions are sometimes so careless that it is unsafe to infer that an ancient author really says something because a precise reference is given in a note."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p792 O 9 '30 1450w

MCCLOUD, DAVID. Wives of men. 318p $2 Longmans
[30-22751]

Gail Orcutt becomes the bride of Ben Stresser in the village of Stony Valley, and immediately falls under the tyrannical domination of her mother-in-law, a Vrooman woman. In spite of misfortune, Gail determines not to yield to the will of the old lady, for the sake of her child; but the battle between the two women goes on for many years before the younger finally triumphs.

"The latter half of the book is disappointing. Emotions subside into querulousness and what has promised to be drama on the grand scale becomes a petty conflict. It is all a matter of that old test of sustained atmosphere." Guy Holt
— + Bookm 72:207 O '30 100w

"David McCloud has written a novel of vigor and promise, close to the soil and close to reality."
+ Books p15 Ag 31 '30 130w

"A first novel of both depth and distinction. In it nature and life are reduced to an elemental simplicity and are interwoven one with the other until the moods of the characters are to be read as surely in the passing seasons as in the events which fill their days."
+ — N Y Times p6 S 7 '30 500w

"The macabre story of the Vroomans piles insult on injury in an unending display. Yet, in spite of the outward tragedy of circumstances and the grim compromises of these lives, you feel that the book is footling. It lacks a just mixture of characters and passions which mingle in the dish of life. It lacks the condiments of reality." V. P. Ross
— Outlook 155:666 Ag 27 '30 380w

"The ruthless, overbearing woman is a type which has been done so much of late that it becomes rather wearisome, but it has not often been done with Mr. McCloud's skill."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:123 S 13 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p812 O 9 '30 220w

MCCLURE, JAMES GORE KING. Supreme
2 book of mankind; the origin and influence of the English Bible. (Bross lectures, 1929) 227p $1.75 Scribner
220.9 Bible. Whole 30-9351

The story of the origin and influence of the English Bible, and its effect upon education and literature.

"This volume illustrates the possibilities of approach to the Bible which are still open for a skilful writer with aptness to discover such possibilities. Dr. McClure has found what is essentially a new door through which to see the meaning of the Bible for life. What he sees of the meaning of the Bible is revealed as he sketches the conversion of the English people through the use of the Bible, the ways in which the Bible has been a means of education, the marvelous influence which the Bible has had upon English literature, the transforming force of the Bible in missionary activities, and the general influence which the Bible has had upon life in its widest aspects." F. G. Lewis
+ J Religion 10:615 O '30 320w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:90 D '30

St Louis 28:230 O '30

MACCLURE, VICTOR. "Crying pig" murder. 302p $2 Morrow [7s 6d Harrap]
30-3951

Sylvia Ferral, entertainer in an unsavory London night-club, was smothered to death in her apartment. The police charged an upright young man, and then a rather questionable broker. The police were totally wrong in both instances, but it took a pre-suicide confession to make the case clear.

Booklist 26:399 Jl '30

"The action is swift and forceful, working up in orderly fashion to a startling climax. Recommended."
+ Bookm 71:xxix Mr '30 60w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p15 F 2 '30 130w

"This is one of these delightful mystery stories, where, after a proper period of suspense on account of the handsome young man, and a time when we suspect the wrong person before the detective does, we arrive at the delightful moment when we know who did it long before any one else. In fact, it is a very proper story, full of London fog and kindred thrills."
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 29 '30 250w

Christian Century 47:273 F 26 '30 20w

"A smoothly written yarn, but otherwise feeble, its shortcomings are amplified by the utter implausibility of the denouement." E. C. Beckwith
— + N Y World p11m F 9 '30 60w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:227 F 5 '30 60w

"The story is a lively and interesting one of its kind, and the battle of wits throughout between a clever lawyer and the Scotland yard sleuths is entertaining."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 230w

Times [London] Lit Sup p901 N 7 '29 250w

Wis Lib Bul 26:106 Mr '30

MCCONNELL, SAMUEL DAVID. Immortability; an old man's conclusions. 178p $1.50 (6s 6d) Macmillan
218 Immortality 30-2327

Dr McConnell, who is now eighty-five years old, discusses in this book his theories concerning the possibility of immortality. What he terms 'immortability' is the theory that life beyond is a biological process; that is, the development, in this life, of certain elements in the individual into an immortal body which would be immune to chemical change after death.

MCCONNELL, S. D.—Continued

"He has thought deeply, and along lines of definite originality. His conclusions are based on wide reading, a consistent theory of personality, and an appealing hypothesis. His essay will stimulate thought and challenge discussion."
+ Books p18 Ap 6 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p7 Mr 15 '30 220w

Reviewed by W. P. Lemon
Christian Century 47:1346 N 5 '30 450w

Reviewed by S. B. Meeser
Crozer Q 7:252 Ap '30 550w

"Those who would like to sit down, with an old gentleman of keen intelligence, varied experience and wide reading, for a prolonged chat on the subject of a future life, will find the perusal of this book a pleasant experience. Those who look for carefully annotated and logically organized analysis of the problem on even a metaphysical plane will be somewhat disappointed." Hornall Hart
+ — J Religion 10:436 Jl '30 200w

"This general idea of conditional immortality is not new, but this is a novel and illuminating presentation of it." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 154:270 F 12 '30 150w
Times [London] Lit Sup p462 My 29 '30 280w

MCCORMICK, WILLIAM PATRICK GLYN. Be of good cheer; with an introd. by the Bishop of London. 100p $1 (2s 6d) Longmans

240 Christian life. Joy and sorrow 30-1119

An essay commissioned by the Bishop of London for Lenten reading. This sermon by the Vicar of St Martin-in-the-Fields is a plea for joy in Christian living.

"Mr. 'Pat' McCormick has written in the form of a book the sort of thing he is accustomed to broadcast, and the Bishop of London has written an introduction. . . Here is a man who can talk theology that grips by its reality and its intelligibility. There really is quite a lot about God in this book, and Mr. McCormick is quite sure that he knows what He is like. But his sureness is not cocksureness."
+ Spec 144:278 F 22 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p134 F 20 '30 750w

MCCRACKEN, HAROLD. God's frozen children. ² 291p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

919.8 Arctic regions. Hunting—Arctic regions. Aleutian islands—Antiquities 31-749

Harold McCracken's story of his scientific expeditions to Alaska and the Yukon—in particular, the discoveries made by the Stoll-McCracken Siberian Arctic expedition of the Museum of Natural History. The latter expedition unearthed, on a desolate island, the mummy of an ancient chieftain, the Tutankhamen of the North, and other curious relics of a long-vanished civilization.

"The book is exciting as well as important, and is illustrated with photographs of the expedition."
+ Bookm 72:viii D '30 80w
Boston Transcript p2 N 29 '30 250w

MCCRACKEN, HAROLD. Iglaome, the lone hunter. 248p il $1.75 Century

30-10612

The story of Iglaome, the only son of an Eskimo chief, who by his feats of daring in hunting the caribou, bear and walrus, saved his tribe from starvation during a particularly hard winter. Will interest older boys.

"The book will interest boys of 12 to 14, but neither the tale itself nor the characters are very convincing."
— + N Y Times p18 My 11 '30 50w

"There is a lot of good local color in this book, but we doubt if the conversation ever saw an igloo, which, with the author's opportunities to present something genuine, is a pity."
— + Sat R of Lit 6:1132 Je 14 '30 150w

MCCULLOCH, ALBERT JOHNSTON. Suffrage and its problems. (Univ. research monographs) 185p $2.50 Warwick & York

324.73 Suffrage—United States 30-822

A monograph on the history of suffrage in the United States, and a discussion of the three main suffrage problems today: the negro vote, the vote of women, and the immigrant vote.

"The defects noted by no means destroy the value of the monograph. The four tables listing suffrage qualifications in each colony and state from 1621 to 1929 evidence a great amount of painstaking and useful work. The accompanying comments summarize the tabulated facts in convenient form. Writers of American government texts should consult Professor McCulloch's book in order to correct or clarify their statements concerning citizenship as a requirement for voting." Howard White
+ — Am Pol Sci R 24:204 F '30 600w

"A very practical, interesting, and concise history of a subject which should be of primary concern to both old and new voters in this country." Gertrude Ely
+ Ann Am Acad 150:304 Jl '30 400w

"Apart from five painstaking tables summarizing suffrage qualifications in our states and colonies from colonial times to date, [the book] is of somewhat limited merit. . . This little volume is pedantic and lacking in penetration." J. McG.
— Hist Outlook 21:92 F '30 220w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:49 Je '30
St Louis 28:94 Ap '30

MACCULLOCH, JOHN ARNOTT. Eddic [mythology]. (Mythology of all races) 400p $10 Marshall Jones

293 Mythology, Norse 30-9990

"Having outlined the pantheon of the Eddic divinities, Dr. MacCulloch goes on to treat of them one at a time, beginning (in the fourth chapter) with Odin or Wodan, whose name we take more or less in vain every week, when we speak lightly of Wednesday—Wodan's day. . . After this particular account of the multifarious gods and goddesses mentioned in the Eddic Poems, Dr. MacCulloch inserts a chapter on 'Nature.' Then follow chapters on 'elves and wights,' guardian spirits, usually in the form of animals, the Norns, controlling men's fates (the chief being Urd, the Spinner), the Valkyries, swan-maidens, night-mares, and were-wolves, and on magic and runes."—Boston Transcript

---

Booklist 27:10 S '30
Boston Transcript p3 My 10 '30 1150w

"For research and study this book is uncommonly illuminating and well equipped with plates and drawings. It is romance of a very pure order."
+ N Y Times p16 Je 29 '30 400w
St Louis 28:204 S '30

MACDONALD, AUSTIN FAULKS. American city government and administration. (Crowell's social science ser.) 762p $3.75 Crowell

352 Municipal government—United States. Cities and towns—United States 29-24610

A textbook covering all aspects of municipal government but placing special emphasis on its legal and administrative phases. Chapters on city-state relations, metropolitan government and welfare activities are included.

"It follows conventional lines, on the theory that 'a textbook is not the place to make radical experiments'—a convenient rationalization for making it safe and saleable. The treatment is singularly lucid. The author displays unusual facility in the power of weaving illustrative material into the text without obscuring the points under discussion. The result is to bring together in measurable compass a great deal of valuable and stimulating information." R. M. Story

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:497 My '30 380w

Reviewed by R. H. Wells

Ann Am Acad 150:305 Jl '30 180w

Booklist 26:264 Ap '30

"The present volume is one of the best that has been written [on the subject]. It is non-technical in language, without being impersonal; it is as concise as seems possible for a comprehensive survey. The author, though only thirty-two years old, has had remarkable experience as teacher and investigator in his chosen field."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 15 '30 300w

Reviewed by W. E. Garrison

Christian Century 47:1488 D 3 '30 180w

"His treatment of metropolitan government, of city-state relation, personnel problems, finances, welfare activities, and city planning is especially well done. The book is a solid contribution to the subject, although its interest, and possibly its general value, would have been increased had there been illustrations in the way of maps, charts, and tables." C. R. W.

+ Living Church 83:14 My 3 '30 120w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:10 Mr '30 200w

St Louis 28:133 My '30

"It is a comprehensive treatise on the American municipality, its history, organization and problems, packed full of information and discussion and written in a notably lucid and readable style. For those directly concerned in the operation of city government it is a handbook of much practical value."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ag 8 '30 550w

Survey 63:727 Mr 15 '30 70w

Wis Lib Bul 26:100 Mr '30

MACDONALD, JAMES RAMSAY. American speeches; foreword by Charles G. Dawes; introd. by Henry L. Stimson. 157p $1.50 Houghton [3s 6d; pa 2s 6d Cape, J.]

341 Peace [30-9415]

A collection of the public addresses made by the British Prime minister on his visit to the United States.

Bookm 72:xxii O '30 50w

Boston Transcript p4 N 15 '30 150w

"The personality of Mr. MacDonald comes through the printed pages as it did not through either the radio or the newspaper column, and holds and persuades the attention and the thought of the reader with a singular effectiveness."

+ N Y Times p17 Ag 24 '30 500w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 Ag 7 '30 1000w

"American Speeches is a worthy record of a very worthy achievement. As speeches, or as literature, they are not brilliant, but they do represent admirably what General Dawes in his Foreword calls the constructive common attitude of public sentiment (in Great Britain and America) upon naval disarmament."

+ Spec 144:586 Ap 5 '30 80w

MACDONALD, PHILIP. The link. 307p $1 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Collins]

30-24248

Colonel Anthony Gethryn, criminologist, was fortunately at hand when Lord Grenville was shot and his body deposited some distance from the scene of actual death. Lady Grenville, a jovial American, an elegant Canadian, and a veterinary surgeon (who tells the story) are very much concerned in the business; but, pursuing his clue of a bit of silver sand, Colonel Gethryn follows unerringly the trail of the murderer.

"The association of Colonel Anthony with a detective story carries the guarantee of a well-knit tale, with careful and interesting deductions and a properly suspended climax."

+ Bookm 71:xix Ag '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p12 Ag 24 '30 80w

Boston Transcript p2 O 8 '30 420w

" 'The Link' has not so neat a plot as had Mr. MacDonald's 'The Noose.' It is not so simple, so logical, or so baffling, and toward the end it drags a little. Nevertheless, its virtues outweigh its defects by a fair margin."

+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 2 '30 150w

Reviewed by Bruce Rae

N Y Times p18 Ag 24 '30 120w

"There are two gentlemen from North America in the story, and a high light of the yarn is the amazing Americanese that Mr. MacDonald puts into the mouths of these characters. The fact that they are leading players in the drama makes their terrific linguistic lapses more regrettable. Outside of the terrible Americans the characterizations are interesting, the deductions of Colonel Gethryn cleverly worked out, and the story moves at top speed —though this reader detests concluding appendices in which the detective sums up and explains." W. C. Weber

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:39 Ag 9 '30 150w

Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 10 '30 250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p642 Ag 7 '30 150w

MACDONALD, PHILIP. The noose. 309p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Collins]

30-8265

Bronson had been sentenced to hang for the murder of Blackatter. But Selma Bronson, his wife, knew that he could not have done such a thing, and her belief convinced Colonel Gethryn of the C. I. D. of Bronson's innocence. In the space of five days before the sentence was to be carried out, Gethryn got to work on the case, discovered a good many oddities and some withheld evidence that the Crown had overlooked, and, in the last hour, forced a confession from the real murderer.

Booklist 26:399 Jl '30

" 'The Noose' isn't very credible, but it's worth the time of the restless fans." Will Cuppy

Books p13 My 18 '30 130w

" 'The Noose' has the neatest plot I have seen in months. It is logical, it is simple and it is baffling." Dashiell Hammett

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 12 '30 400w

N Y Times p25 My 4 '30 130w

"Philip MacDonald again scores notably in 'The Noose,' the third detective novel of his to feature the plausible, efficient Col. Gethryn engaged upon a crime problem of singularly subtle and baffling complexity. This story seems to us one of the best of its kind that has appeared in late months." E. C. Beckwith

+ N Y World p11m Ap 27 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 155:26 My 7 '30 120w

Reviewed by Margaret Cole

Spec 144:1058 Je 28 '30 50w

"The dénouement is entirely unexpected, and yet the story hangs together quite reasonably. If the Crime Club keeps up the standard of this its first choice, we shall indeed be grateful to it."

+ Spec 145:63 Jl 12 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p498 Je 12 '30 150w

MACDONELL, ARCHIBALD GORDON (JOHN CAMERON, pseud.). Seven stabs. 311p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Gollancz]

30-7793

Anglo-Baltanian politics and intrigue in the form of a secret society called the Sons of liberty, must have had something to do with the murder of Harden, Baltanian patriot, according to detectives Fleming of Scotland Yard and Von Hoffman of the Berlin police. Lavender Arlington, a bold and brilliant musical comedy actress, might have told the investigators quite a lot concerning the murder of the man who had been her lover—but she chose not to for reasons of her own. So for a time the Scotch-German sleuth alliance is put off the scent, before the true solution of the murder by seven stabs is reached.

"Mr. Cameron's frivolous manner well suits his lively material. 'The Seven Stabs' is highly entertaining." Will Cuppy

+ Books p14 Mr 30 '30 200w

"This is the right sort of detective story. The book is so crowded with amusement that we do not worry much about small inconsistencies."

+ Spec 144:29 Ja 4 '30 200w

MACDOUGAL, DANIEL TREMBLY. Green ^{2} leaf; the major activities of plants in sunlight. (Appleton new world of science ser.) 142p il $2 (6s) Appleton

581.1 Leaves. Chlorophyl. Photosynthesis. Plants, Effect of light on 30-24763

The vital processes of plants—the physiology of chlorophyl, growth of cells, osmosis and kindred phenomena—described in simple terms for the layman. The author is research associate in the Carnegie Institute of Washington.

Booklist 27:144 D '30

J Home Econ 22:926 N '30 30w

"Dr. MacDougal explains these processes with a simplicity and lucidity that bring the book within the understanding of any intelligent reader."

+ N Y Times p18 D 28 '30 200w

St Louis 28:292 D '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p981 N 20 '30 100w

MACDOUGALL, ALLAN ROSS, ed. Gourmets' almanac. 308p $4 Covici

641 Gastronomy 30-2375

Recipes grouped, in the order of a menu for a feast, under each of the twelve calendar months. The special feast and fast days of each month are recorded, together with old-fashioned songs and proverbs pertaining to them. The book ends with gastronomic selections on dining and wining by famous writers.

"Mr. Macdougall's book is as satisfying as the pot-au-feu he praises so fervently. It would be misleading, however, to praise this merely as a kitchen volume. It is most emphatically a book to read, for Mr. Macdougall writes with gusto and wit. Interspersed in the text and at the end are bits of relevant prose and verse that make the book a miniature anthology on eating and drinking. It can be recommended as a book for enthusiastic reading and cautious experiment."

+ Bookm 71:127 Mr '30 220w

"The author of 'The Gourmets' almanac' doubtless set out to write an almanac about food, and, being obviously fond not only of food but of cooking it, too, ended by writing one of the best cookbooks that has ever been printed." Lettie Gay

+ Books p19 F 16 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p122 S '30

"Mr. Macdougall's combination of glorified recipe book and alleged almanac is a unique book whose whimsical but serious purpose of making a fine art of cooking and eating both amuses and edifies."

+ N Y Times p21 Ja 26 '30 180w

St Louis 28:101 Ap '30

"It is the sort of book that appears all too seldom—rare and succulent recipes culled from far and wide by the possessor of a discriminating palate and charmingly garnished forth with tidbits of song and verse and prose, with spicy proverbs of diverse peoples, with traditions of the feast days, and with quaint and picturesque 'receipts' cherished by other gastronomers in centuries past." Helen Buckler

+ Sat R of Lit 6:674 Ja 25 '30 400w

Springf'd Republican p12 F 19 '30 170w

MCELROY, ROBERT MCNUTT. Levi Parsons Morton; with an introd. by Howard Chandler Robbins. 340p $5 (21s) Putnam

B or 92 Morton, Levi Parsons 30-7968

The biography of Levi P. Morton is chiefly concerned with his public career, which touched three fields of activity,—politics, business and diplomacy. He was minister to France, vice-president during the Harrison administration, and finally, governor of New York. He was also a successful international banker.

"Professor McElroy's biography of Morton is scarcely what we might have expected from the biographer of Grover Cleveland and American professor at Oxford. Mr. McElroy's sympathy with his subject is apparent, and the biography has an 'official' taste. We look in vain for any larger comprehension of the role of Morton in the changing drama of American life." H. S. Commager

— Books p27 Ap 20 '30 650w

"Professor McElroy contrives to show us an interesting political progress in his life of Morton, but its most interesting chapters concern the course of New York politics in the days when Conkling, and later Platt, were the dictators of Republican politics in New York." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 12 '30 2000w

"Dr. McElroy has made a decidedly worthwhile contribution to American biography. His book is the outcome of long and arduous labors in searching out material in many cities and in two continents. It is exceptionally well written and holds the reader's interest; and its documentation is complete, but never obtrusive." G. W. Harris

+ N Y Times p12 Je 8 '30 1050w

Springf'd Republican p9e Ag 17 '30 1050w

MCEVOY, JOSEPH PATRICK. Denny and the dumb cluck. 208p pa $1 Simon & Schuster

30-20080

"In this collection of eight related short sketches the author of 'Show Girl' feeds his grudge against the heart-throb racket, otherwise known as the greeting-card industry. The central figure is Denny Kerrigan, star salesman of the Gleason Greeting Card Company of Minneapolis. The 'dumb cluck' is Doris Miller, a Chicago shop girl, whom Denny picked up at a North Clark Street restaurant and whom, after sufficient vicissitudes and heartbreaks, he marries."—N Y Times

"What goes on behind the scenes before you buy those pretty painted cards to send to shut-ins is as exciting as a melodrama. Mr. McEvoy has stuck close to the known facts of one greeting-card company's history and has made them into an amusing novel of American business."

+ Bookm 71:x Ag '30 70w

"Mr. McEvoy, who knows the greeting card racket from the inside, does not make it very funny. The story is unfolded in the manner of 'Show Girl,' with letters, telegrams, newspaper clippings and other documentary reproduction. It was an amusing method for one or two tries, but it does not wear well."

— Books p13 Ag 31 '30 140w

"It reads as if a good deal of it was dictated but not read. The book is American in the same way that chewing gum, comic supplements and loud speakers are American. It is a violent, noisy book." Edwin Seaver
— N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 9 '30 160w
N Y Times p6 Ag 10 '30 720w

"It is too ugly to be delectable, too grotesque to be tragic, and too longwinded to deserve the laurels of humor." V. P. Ross
— Outlook 155:667 Ag 27 '30 330w

MCFADYEN, FERDINAND. All smoke. 319p $2 Smith, R.R. [7s 6d Constable]

Jane Wood, practical Scottish widow, is not grieved at her husband's death, and immediately sets about to marry Thomas Tewkes, who has money. Billy, Jan's elder son, winks and accepts the plan; George, the younger, leaves in disgust to get himself a job in London. Weak, but honest men and scheming women are the type characters in this grim and sordid tale of working class life in a small Scottish manufacturing town, and in London.

"The author skilfully relates the individual stories of Jane's two sons to the movement of the whole novel; by the very sobriety of its presentation the tragedy attains a dignity beyond the stature of its characters; and as for these characters, you can see all round them, they are real."
+ Bookm 72:xii O '30 100w

"The people are pawns in a game of no gratification to any one. What they did for good or ill was of necessity. A drab story told with no beauty of character or scene, but which, nevertheless, moves steadily on, determinedly forcing upon us a group of people who live and breathe, if only in three dimensional space."
— + Books p12 O 5 '30 250w

"The plot is thin and the protagonists are not strongly enough drawn to make it interesting. The author excels in the description of his settings and the stage directions for his puppets, but his work is relieved only in those places where the effective shadows and carefully selected details lend verisimilitude to an almost depressing tale."
— + N Y Times p7 O 5 '30 300w

"The story both in plan and detail is sordid in the extreme, but it is not without passages of beauty."
— + Spec 144:1020 Je 21 '30 250w

"The book is a distinct achievement, since, fearless alike of words (though he uses them with economy) and of 'situations' which are at once intensified and preserved from offence by a saving reticence, the author has succeeded in depicting the plain, matter-of-fact, roughly varnished life lived by working (but not always hard-working) people in a small, fairly prosperous industrial town in the South Midlands of Scotland. . . Repellent as these people are, they never fail of interest, for they are well and truly laid."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p494 Je 12 '30 600w

MCFARLANE, LESLIE. Streets of shadow. 287p $2 Dutton
30-10255

Michael Brent, in investigating two murders of which his client has been accused, becomes involved in the life of Montreal's underworld, and after several narrow escapes from death solves the complicated mystery and brings the real criminals to justice.

Bookm 71:xxi Je '30 70w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p16 Ap 13 '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 13 '30 400w
N Y Times p20 Ap 6 '30 150w

"With the advantage of a unique locale—the Montreal underworld—and two incomprehensible murders to start the ructions, 'Streets of Shadow' promises far better things than those which materialize." E. C. Beckwith
— N Y World p11m Ap 6 '30 120w
Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:599 Ap 9 '30 80w
Springf'd Republican p7e Je 15 '30 150w

MCFEE, MRS INEZ NELLIE (CANFIELD). Wonderful story of science. 398p il $2.50 Crowell
500 Science 29-21109

A popular outline of seven sciences: astronomy, geology, botany, zoology, anthropology, chemistry and physics. Each chapter, according to the author, is to be viewed as an introduction to the particular science it represents. The text is illustrated from photographs and diagrams.

"A simple, interesting illustrated account of the wonders of science. Boys of all ages, and perhaps girls, will find it engrossing."
+ Bookm 71:xiii Mr '30 150w

"It is not the author's fault if the effort is not wholly successful. The thing simply can't be done. But the book as a whole is both informing and entertaining." W. E. Garrison
+ — Christian Century 46:1610 D 25 '29 100w
Pratt p14 summer '30

"To put into one, not over large, volume the story of seven different sciences in a way that is neither superficial nor just a recital of facts means surmounting tremendous difficulties. Miss McFee, however, has written with such clarity and apparent ease that we feel as though she were actually present talking to a group of young people and answering their questions. The book has many interesting and helpful illustrations and ought to receive a warm welcome not only from young people, for whom it was especially written, but also from those of any age eager to gain knowledge."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:640 Ja 11 '30 150w
Wis Lib Bul 26:108 Mr '30

MCFEE, WILLIAM. North of Suez. 309p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Heinemann]
30-9608

"Lieutenant Stephan Rumford of the British Royal naval reserve is stationed at Port Said as chief Neutral transport officer. In an atmosphere of intrigue, among crafty Orientals and Dagoes, he tries to live as a respectable middle class Englishman. His efforts are frustrated by his wife who refuses to make Port Said her home, and by Anastasia, a beautiful Greek, whom he meets while tracing the source of hashish which was debauching the British forces. Rumford, who is dissatisfied with his home life succumbs to the charms of Anastasia who knows so well the art of love."—Cleveland staff notes

Booklist 26:357 Je '30
Reviewed by R. P. Harriss
Bookm 71:343 Je '30 120w

"The situation is one admirably suited to the peculiar gifts of Mr. McFee. . . In some of the most dramatic parts of the story the flow of events is somewhat dammed by the mental gymnastics of this one or that. But it is a distinguished performance in every way, and should prove one of the most popular of all the author's fourteen books." Bellamy Partridge
+ Books p7 Ap 6 '30 650w
Boston Transcript p1 Ap 26 '30 500w

"The tragedy has not the splendid inevitability that made 'Command' a fine book. The solution, like the usual happy ending, is a mere dodging of the problem. It is not quite fair. But the pages of the novel are illumined by those flashes of insight into the minds and hearts of inarticulate men for which McFee after Conrad, is so notable."
+ — Nation 131:103 Jl 23 '30 200w
Nation and Ath 47:384 Je 21 '30 70w

MCFEE, WILLIAM—Continued

"Stephan Rumford, at odds with his wife, his allies, his government, his subordinates, yet determined to stick to them and do his job, is occasionally a shade too heroic in his deliberate lack of heroism; and the tragic end is not in keeping with the rest of the book. Still North of Suez is a fine tale of one man's troubles in war-time, and is free from the excessive naturalism which spoils too many stories of adventure."

+ — New Statesman 35:217 My 24 '30 170w

"So well has Mr. McFee understood his characters, and so typical are they of irreconcilable attitudes toward life that he has made a story which might have been only a melodramatic triangle into a significant as well as a richly stirring novel." Malcolm Logan

+ N Y Evening Post p8m Je 14 '30 230w

"His novel is both a profound and subtle study in character and an exciting tale of intrigue and adventure."

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 20 '30 400w

"This is capital yarn-spinning, on themes that nobody knows as well as McFee." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 Ap 5 '30 550w

"A competent novel. . . Stephan's intrigue with a native woman is a little too vividly depicted for readers with imagination."

+ — Outlook 154:678 Ap 23 '30 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:51 Je '30

Springf'd Republican p7e My 4 '30 220w

MCFEE, WILLIAM. Sailors of fortune. 415p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Heinemann] 29-28645

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:161 Ja '30

"The book is a gallery of notable portraits, etched in with a brilliant sense of human values. They are unassuming stories, but they leave an impress on the memory."

+ Bookm 70:xxv F '30 60w

Boston Transcript p2 D 14 '29 420w

"One may, perhaps, prefer his longer and more sustained writings; yet such tales as these will transfigure the solitude of any winter evening." M. W.

+ Christian Science Monitor p7 F 8 '30 500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p32 F '30

New Repub 61:178 Ja 1 '30 50w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith

N Y World p11m D 22 '29 330w

Pratt p40 spring '30

"Though Mr McFee at times employs artificial incidents, the narratives are the work of a keen observer capable of painting scenes in vivid hues and analyzing human character and emotions with skill."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 12 '30 500w

"Mr. McFee is now in full possession of his own kingdom, and he shows again, in Sailors of Fortune, that it is a rich one, and that within it there is no one with whom to compare him."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p714 S 11 '30 320w

MCGILL, VIVIAN JERAULD. August Strindberg, the bedeviled viking. 459p il $4 Brentano's [12s 6d Douglas]

B or 92 Strindberg, August 30-11944

"A narrative and philosophical interpretation of the stormy life of the great Swedish dramatist."—Publishers' Weekly

"V. J. McGill's method of writing the biography of this mad genius would hardly be possible of another person, and is dangerous even in Strindberg's case. Mr. McGill goes through the forty-odd volumes of autobiographical fiction and drama, in sequence, and by retelling what happens to the 'heroes' of those works—always Strindberg—recreates the inner as well as the outer life of the man. The result is intense vividness and passion, the sense of sixty years of emotional whirlwind. Reading it, you become dizzy and oppressed." W. P. Eaton

+ — Books p20 Ap 13 '30 1300w

"Dr. McGill has written a biography of the most delicate interpretation, he has co-ordinated his information with such skill that it becomes, quite outside its original purpose, a fascinating book of knowledge. To many people who are weary of the popular, and seldom really penetrating, style of recent biographies, this life of Strindberg will be a welcome challenge to an active mental participation in another's work." P. E. R.

+ Boston Transcript p1 My 17 '30 1330w

Reviewed by Eugene Löhrke

Nation 131:183 Ag 13 '30 850w

Reviewed by E. M. Allen

New Repub 63:213 Jl 9 '30 730w

"I can imagine no more comprehensive, all-sided, thorough account of a man's life, thoughts and work. Dr. McGill has set down everything and in an enviably dispassionate, temperate spirit. He has suppressed, as far as this eye can see, not even the meanest action nor the stupidest extravagance of the great Swede. He has also done full justice to his immense and amazing versatility. He has achieved a life-like, life-size portrait of this powerful, dynamic mind inhabiting the body of a self-tormented genius." Louis Sherwin

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 5 '30 900w

"Dr. McGill's purpose is not only to tell the main facts of Strindberg's life, but also to characterize and interpret his deep 'subterranean' personality. This is laudable. But the blending of exposition with interpretation is always a difficult problem, and it is in the mixture that the weakest point of Dr. McGill's book lies, for, on the whole, the author has failed to integrate these elements into one harmonious narrative. His interpretative passages, which are very long and replete with repetition, cut into the story of Strindberg's life rather clumsily, mutilating it and often killing its interest."

— + N Y Times p15 Je 1 '30 700w

"A striking biography which is not only a narrative of Strindberg's life, written with a fine sweep, but also a brilliant analysis of his work."

+ Outlook 155:24 My 7 '30 100w

MCGOVERN, MARGARET. Lost year; with a foreword by Rollo Walter Brown. 95p $2 Coward-McCann

811 29-21598

The poems in the title section of the book are concerned with one year's experience in a reformatory. The sections following contain lyrics of love, observation and reflection, and of the healing quiet of a convent.

Cleveland Open Shelf p92 Je '30

"These poems by a young woman who, the introduction says, had no schooling beyond the eighth grade, except for her love of reading, show the charm and failings of such a preparation. In these simple verses about life in the Reformatory and on the city streets the reader finds sympathy for suffering and love of beauty. A rather stilted and 'literary' style shows the author's dependence on reading rather than such study of verse as an association with other writers gives. Some of the poems are seriously marred by this quality, but the best ones have a touching simplicity."

— + Poetry 36:169 Je '30 130w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 26 '30 300w

MACGOWAN, KENNETH. Footlights across America, towards a national theater. 398p il $3.75 Harcourt

792 Theater—Little theater movement. Theater—United States 29-28817

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:270 Ap '30

"A book which for the first time gives us something like a unified impression of the amateur stage. Keeping his own bias out of the book as far as possible, he presents facts and figures, drawings and photographs, study courses and examination papers which need no comment to make them impressive." W. P. Eaton

+ Books p19 F 16 '30 700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p153 D '29

"A book that is well balanced, packed with information and charged with hope for those who are concerned about America's cultural future. It should make an excellent handbook for all who are now interested in little theatres—a not inconsiderable number—and it will enlighten general readers as to the importance of a movement which may give us a new dramatic renaissance." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p4 Ja 19 '30 1250w

Reviewed by Bellamy Partridge

N Y World p11m F 23 '30 650w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:15 F '30

Pratt p26 summer '30

St Louis 28:75 Mr '30

"A wise, an invaluable estimate, written with sympathy, and often with enthusiasm and expressing a wonder at the huge activity that is going on along a theatrical 'road' which was deserted by the commercial theatre manager as dead, but which has now awakened under the enthusiasm of the theatre amateur." M. J. Moses

+ Sat R of Lit 6:898 Ap 5 '30 1250w

"It is an arresting and provocative compendium, sane and thorough in its analysis and withal free from personal bias or pedantic opinion. . . The amount of information, as useful as it is interesting, packed in Footlights Across America is staggering. As a 'survey' it naturally carries a heavy load of statistics, but these are presented so that any theater director or producer worthy of the title will find himself analyzing the tables with intense curiosity." Walter Hartwig

+ Survey 64:48 Ap 1 '30 620w

Wis Lib Bul 26:65 F '30

MACGRATH, HAROLD. Blue rajah murder. 304p $1 Doubleday, Doran

30-16609

Disaster and tragedy had followed in the wake of all possessors of the Blue rajah diamond. But John Willard prized it above all his collection, and his beautiful wife, Elsie, feared it for that reason. This is the story of the Blue rajah's last appearance.

"A thoroughly satisfactory story of adventure and romance."

+ Bookm 71:xvi Jl '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p10 Jl 6 '30 130w

"Harold MacGrath in 'The Blue Rajah Murder' proves himself a very superior writer of mystery stories. He holds his readers' interest through his power to create logical situations and equally logical outcomes. This is, for a mystery story, far above the average." E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 9 '30 550w

"The book is first-rate." Bruce Rae

+ N Y Times p20 S 7 '30 120w

"One of his most enjoyable romances."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 21 '30 100w

MACGRATH, HAROLD. Green complex. 277p $2 Doubleday, Doran

30-10078

Just after the war "Handsome" Barclay, from Park Avenue, and "Porky" Mallory, ex-crook, invaded Paris together, A. W. O. L. A string of adventures followed, including stolen emeralds, military police, and a lovely lady, before the friends found themselves on shipboard sailing for home.

Booklist 26:399 Jl '30

"A happy ending and quantities of the sort of jollity that Harold MacGrath's readers dote upon." Will Cuppy

Books p16 Ap 13 '30 100w

"This is a gay and sparkling tale of dering-do and high ideals and pistol shots and general fun, to cheer the most despairing heart."

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 17 '30 310w

Cleveland Open Shelf p112 Jl '30

"Complications are legion, hollow, obviously thin."

— N Y World p11m My 4 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p557 Jl 3 '30 150w

MACHEN, JOHN GRESHAM. Virgin birth of Christ. 415p $5 Harper [15s Marshall, Morgan & Scott]

232.921 Jesus Christ—Birth 30-8276

An investigation of the origin of the belief in the virgin birth of Jesus of Nazareth. The first part of the volume considers the hypothesis that the belief in the virgin birth was founded upon actual fact; the second part considers the theory that the virgin birth was not a fact, but that the church came to accept it as fact thru some sort of error.

Reviewed by W. L. Sullivan

Books p15 Ag 17 '30 480w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 23 '30 380w

"Doctor Machen has produced a volume which will be of value to the historian rather more than to the layman, although undoubtedly many of the latter will eagerly purchase it to replenish their quivers with modern shafts; but the lasting value of the book does not consist in its casuistry and apologetics, but in the amassing of material which may well lead to conclusions precisely the opposite of those maintained by the author." M. S. Enslin

+ — Crozer Q 7:518 O '30 1200w

"The book is well written, with ample footnotes, and should be heartily welcomed by those for whom the virgin birth of Jesus is an essential doctrine, and who want a substantial literary support for their conviction." A. D. Beittel

+ J Religion 10:600 O '30 1050w

"Dr. J. Gresham Machen is the leading Fundamentalist theologian among the Presbyterians. But his Fundamentalism does not, as some might think, disqualify him as a patient and careful scholar. He has given evidence of this from time to time, and notably now in The Virgin Birth of Christ. It is about as complete and thorough an examination of the reasons for, and objections to, belief in the fact of our Lord's virgin birth as is available. Every difficulty is adequately reckoned with, and each argument is allowed to speak for itself. Impulsive polemic is avoided, and the writer's conclusions are given with pertinent evidence, fair argument, and calm temper." F. J. H.

+ Living Church 83:14 My 3 '30 400w

"Dr. Machen's new book is the best statement of the case for fundamentalism we have read. The argument moves steadily from point to point; the language is vigorous but kindly; the style is lucid. Not a few will wish that there were not such a conflict between this whole conception of religion and the scientific temper to which miracles are anathema. When science denies religion Dr. Machen abandons science." E. B. Chaffee

+ — Outlook 155:388 Jl 9 '30 230w

"Professor Machen's work is elaborate, learned, and full. The writer possesses an acute mind and a competent knowledge of modern critical literature. But the writer's presuppositions are not merely conservative, but ultraconservative. By the attempt which he makes to harmonize the two evangelical stories in detail and to accept all that they record as historical he really weakens his case. It is not probable that Dr. Machen's work will make many converts; though it is a book of which account must be taken, and it will undoubtedly serve to strengthen the faith of those who already accept its theological presuppositions."

MACHEN, J. G.—Continued
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p308 Ap 10 '30 550w

MACHRAY, ROBERT. Little entente. 394p pl $4 Smith, R.R. [12s 6d Allen, G.]
940.5 Little entente. Europe—Politics [30-8942]

"Mr. Machray's book is a carefully documented history of the origins and aims of the Little Entente. Based on the belief that the new Europe of the Peace Treaties is politically and ethnically a vast improvement on the pre-war Europe, it endeavours to prove how the Little Entente is working for the 'normalisation' of Central Europe and, therefore, for peace and stability in Europe generally."—New Statesman

Am Pol Sci R 24:1064 N '30 200w

"This is a valuable study of the origins, objects and activities of that political organization in central Europe called the Little Entente. . . In addition to writing a standard history of the Little Entente, Mr. Machray has provided us with an insight into the political conditions of many of the states of central Europe."
+ Books p12 Ap 27 '30 250w

Reviewed by J. T. Gerould
Current Hist 31:830 Ja '30 20w

Reviewed by F. A. Ogg
Current Hist 33:xxii O '30 900w

"Few Englishmen will find fault with Mr. Machray's argument that the new Europe is an improvement on the old. . . The most interesting part of Mr. Machray's book is the chapter on the 'normalisation' of Europe, i.e., the consolidation of the new Europe on the basis of the various Peace Treaties."
+ New Statesman 33:654 S 7 '29 600w

St Louis 28:94 Ap '30

"Mr. Robert Machray has conferred a great boon upon us in bringing together a survey which may well serve in time as the textbook for the rise of the Succession States. . . As a basis for this discussion this book is a good one, and yet it is not perfect. For Mr. Machray takes his subject in the manner of a biographer (old style) and has given us rather an apology for the Little Entente than an impartial discussion of its value. . . Probably, at the moment, a completely impartial survey is too much to hope for. We must leave that to another generation. In the meantime we have here a book which can serve as an introduction for the student, and a work of reference for the more general reader. It is also, and this is even more important, one of the first studies of the new diplomacy in practice."
+ — Spec 143:341 S 14 '29 750w

MCHUGH, VINCENT. Touch me not; four writs of a curt picaresque. 401p $2.50 Cape
30-18314

The picaresque story of Gil Blent's love for golden-haired Patricia, whose scornful heart no man had touched. Gil, with certain friends from college, works in a seaside amusement park from June to September, and spends his unemployed time in pursuit of Patricia. The dramatic love struggle between the two dominates the action of the book.

"Here are sensitivity and a quick imagination at play in another picture of youth engaged in the pleasant occupation of inventing glamorous legends about its amorous impulses. But here is also an unhappy tendency to trifle with the integrity of our native tongue, to effect uninviting liaisons between incompatible verbs and nouns and other parts of speech throughout page after page of mannered stuff." Guy Holt
— + Bookm 72:xviii S '30 220w

"Mr. McHugh has plunged deep into the tensity of these lives which grope on the brink of the world's desolation. Perhaps through this sincerity of purpose, or perhaps through his startling facility with words, he has spun melodrama from what are, after all, common growing pains. Yet he does catch the extravagance of the young and, like a bright-hued, winged thing, he pins it to his pages, where it lies quivering, awaiting your compassion." V. P. Ross
+ — Books p4 Jl 13 '30 600w

"If 'Touch Me Not' falls short of what it might have been, it is because it is special and too intense; because it fails to achieve that indescribable thing, a sense of the universal, and because Mr. McHugh, as the book grows, tends to overstep the bounds of the inner probabilities and surrenders something to unbalanced emotionalism. But at its best one senses in this remarkable novel a hard and tempered mind guiding a strong and poetic creative power."
+ — Nation 131:279 S 10 '30 200w

"It should be said to Mr. McHugh's credit that, in spite of his overloaded, self-conscious, exclamatory style, he eventually manages to bludgeon the reader into conviction. Gradually, and in spite of almost constant offenses against the common sense of literary taste, the figures of these two desperate lovers are isolated from their hurdygurdy background, are almost ennobled. . . Aside from its author's unnecessarily contortionist antics, 'Touch Me Not' is a respectable book." T. S. Matthews
— + New Repub 64:213 O 8 '30 450w

"Mr. HcHugh has already developed in this his first novel a style of great individuality and distinction. Not entirely free of effects too consciously striven for, it nevertheless attains descriptive passages of remarkable power and beauty. It would be presumptuous to impute promise to so competent a literary achievement as 'Touch Me Not.' Mr. McHugh has written a first novel which, though certainly not faultless, is a stimulating and ponderable book, eminently worth the time of any reader."
+ — N Y Times p6 Jl 20 '30 620w

"This story contains enough poignant experience to give it significance, enough formal and stylistic excellence to give it literary value. Written with understanding, if not with mature art, it pictures the pains, the irritations, the countless difficult adjustments, as well as the joys attendant upon young love before its final satisfaction." Clinton Simpson
+ — N Y World p5m Ag 3 '30 680w

"The style is false. It is built upon superficial effect, and is without solid foundation. It is self-conscious and unwieldy. The effort to strike and maintain an attitude is evident on every page of the book, and again and again scenes full of the possibility of life are killed by words. One thing the book does, and does well. It paints a magnificent and by no means flattering portrait of a certain type of youth, common in the younger fringes of artistic society. Touch Me Not has unmistakable signs of being the work of a fertile and poetic imagination. Its author should try to stand on his own feet. They might turn out strong enough to carry his ambition a good bit farther than it can travel on crutches cut from other men's wood." F. L. Robbins
— + Outlook 155:466 Jl 23 '30 400w

"The girl is a negligible creature and might easily have been no more than a little pushover; but Mr. McHugh's intensity of realization makes her human and sympathetic, gives her even a touch of dignity. It is a very sentimental story, with the somewhat curious sentimentality of a generation that has tried to be hard-boiled; but it could have been moving and effective in the hands of a man who was more intent on what he had to say, and less on the way he was saying it."
— Sat R of Lit 7:92 Ag 30 '30 450w

MACKAIL, DENIS GEORGE. Young Livingstones. 304p $2 Houghton [7s 6d Hodder]
30-18563

"The Young Livingstones recounts twelve episodes or spasms in the lives of Barbara and

Rex of that name at the period when vitality is most effervescent. They are brother and sister, and belong to the class which in due course takes little houses in 'Greenery-street.' Rex has just begun to go to one of those offices in the City of which the staffs are recruited from among Mr. Mackail's young friends; Barbara is extremely active 'just doing nothing at all on not enough money and then going out and dancing every night.' Mr Mackail proceeds to show that 'nothing' can be done in a number of entertaining ways, especially when there is not enough money to do it on."—Times [London] Lit. Sup

---

Booklist 27:208 Ja '31

Books p16 O 5 '30 100w

"A very light but quite entertaining bit of fiction. Mr. Mackail writes well, and he has a knack for describing people both vividly and briefly, while his handling of commonplace episodes makes 'The Young Livingstones' pleasant company."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 3 '30 480w

"The innocent gay doings of these young Londoners and their various ways of tapping the paternal check-book provide amusement, but amusement so fragile that it frequently broke in our hands. Mr. Mackail is plainly fond of and diverted by his young people, and he knows their speech, ways and ideas." F. L. Robbins

+ — Outlook 155:506 Jl 30 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

Springf'd Republican p7e S 28 '30 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p652 Ag 14 '30 480w

MACKAY, MRS HELEN GANSEVOORT (EDWARDS). While gondolas pass (Eng title: Gondolas pass). 214p $2 Appleton [6s Heinemann]

30-18198

A simple, moving story of an earnest young Italian girl left at the death of her mother to struggle for her own existence and for that of her younger brothers and sisters. As long as life lasted she was faithful to her trust, even to the relinquishing of the great love of her life.

Booklist 27:105 N '30

"The story is strictly sentimental—but if one can not be sentimental about a beautiful young girl's sad life in Venice, when can one be? Told always from the slant of an older woman visiting now and then in Venice, the sentimentality seems an integral—perhaps charming—part of the story." Esther Forbes

Bookm 71:546 Ag '30 200w

"Chief among the merits of 'While Gondolas Pass' are its frequently distinguished prose and its very real though poetically wrought background—Venice before and after the great war."

+ Books p17 O 5 '30 200w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 13 '30 220w

"Mrs. Mackay has something of Miss Pauline Smith's simplicity and poignancy. She is occasionally just a trifle precious, especially in the titles she chooses for her chapters, but her gestures are for the most part beautifully right. She leads us with unobtrusive fixity of purpose to the precise spot from which one can best catch the scent and colour, the light and shade, the barely perceptible tremor of her flower in the wind."

+ New Statesman 35:337 Je 21 '30 330w

"An exquisite but not a precious story. We feel that this story of a child of eight mothering her flock of little brothers and sisters is real. Venice, too, presented through the eyes of its poor, is something altogether different from the Venice of gondolas, fetes, serenades and ladies trailing jeweled fingers in oily water. It is this different Venice which affords one of the chief pleasures of Miss Mackay's novel." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 26 '30 150w

"Miss Mackay has told her little Venetian tale with good literary judgment and restraint. She has the 'feel' of Venice and of Italy in her lean prose, without either the mawkishness of the touring Anglo-Saxon female enthusiast nor yet the hairiness of the self-consciously masculine Anglo-Saxon sophisticate. Her descriptions are sensitive, accurate and easy."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 3 '30 650w

"Mrs. Mackay writes with grace, delicacy, and economy, and her book is implicitly a devastating critique of Mussolini's population program."

Sat R of Lit 7:23 Ag 2 '30 200w

"Miss Mackay's preciosity and her bright, but tenuous, impressionism come very near to eliminating one's sense of the artistic existence of the pathetic Venetian slum child whose struggles she describes. . . Imagined, she might have been a heroic figure; observed and described, she has merely a pathetic courage. Yet, though the story's visual brightness and objectivity are deceptive, it has a pleasant tenderness and charm." V. S. Pritchett

+ — Spec 144:1067 Je 28 '30 100w

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p593 Jl 17 '30 220w

MACKAY, WILLIAM MACKINTOSH. Goodly fellowship of the prophets. 268p $2 Smith, R.R. [6s Hodder]

224 Bible. Old Testament—Prophets. Prophets [30-21083]

"A homiletic study of the prophetic literature of the Old Testament."—Subtitle

---

"Dr. Mackay's essays are homiletical rather than scholarly in character, and are intended primarily for general consumption. For work of this type the author has adequate and sound knowledge at his command and a genuine gift of sympathetic exposition. His prophets are not figures on a frieze, nor holy men in Scriptures, but living men battling for righteousness and truth in their troubled age. Dr. Mackay's book, within its limits, is a first-class piece of popularization." J. H. Holmes

+ Books p11 Ag 3 '30 120w

"The sleepers in Dr. Mackay's pews are few —they must be. But the keenness of his insight is greater than the cutting of his sarcasm. His value above all is inspirational. He challenges to higher life and loftier ideals." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Jl 19 '30 500w

"An admirable plan is here carried out with considerable success. The author has attempted to give a plain account of the ideals of the Old Testament prophets in the light of to-day's practical needs. . . What is provided in this book is well designed to achieve its purpose in creating an intelligent interest in a literature which is rarely understood."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p107 F 6 '30 180w

MACKAYE, KEITH. Honey Holler; a play in three acts; with an introd. by Oliver M. Sayler. 201p il $2 Brentano's

812 30-10500

"Keith MacKaye, grandson of Steele MacKaye and son of Percy MacKaye, was born into the tradition of the theater and of the poet; he has combined these two traditions in his poetic play 'Honey Holler,' set in the hilly border regions of southern Connecticut."—Nation

---

"The play is over-spun—a Mackaye fault. Its meanings are somewhat vague. But without question it has originality, it has beauty and humor, quaintly mingled, and it shows promise of real theatrical talent."

+ — Books p17 Je 29 '30 180w

"Reminiscent of Hauptmann, Maeterlinck and Morley in bits of fantasy, it is able to stand on its own unique qualities as a play that a far older, more advanced dramatist than young Keith MacKaye might have written."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 2 '30 320w

MACKAYE, KEITH—Continued

"It is rich in poetry—in the poetry of speech and of an idealistic interpretation of life."
+ Nation 131:159 Ag 6 '30 180w

"The play is an effective piece of work, but not a powerful piece of work. Nevertheless this much 'Honey Holler' makes clear—if Keith MacKaye continues as he has begun, he is likely to be a future force in American letters, either as a dramatist or as a novelist, perhaps as both." Percy Hutchison
+ — N Y Times p10 Ag 10 '30 600w

MCKENNA, EDWARD L. The bruiser. 329p $2.50 McBride
29-23714

"Clancy is the product of a Baltimore orphan asylum, graduated to stable boy, and from there shoved into the ring. He was only 15 when he fought his first glove fight in the seclusion of a neighboring stable under the eye of his boss and idol, John Durnwald. Durnwald gave Clancy his first chance and colored the boy's entire life. Ignorant, superstitious, sure of himself and with matchless courage, Clancy fought to the end with only his good right arm and his sense of fair play to aid him."—N Y Times

"Mr. McKenna's tale of a prize-fighter in the New York of the Gay 'Nineties is exciting and too well written to be merely sensational."
+ Bookm 70:xxiii F '30 50w

"Edward McKenna knows his ringside folk and his sporting folk in general. He knows those who make the racetrack and the prize-ring go round, and those who are spectators of the games. They are rich and full-flavored, and we like them. That, it seems to us, is an enviable trait in a writer—his ability to make you like people who by every rule of so-called decency are not all they should be."
+ Books p14 N 24 '29 400w
Boston Transcript p2 F 5 '30 320w

"The background of this story of sportsmen and sporting life breathes reality, race track as well as ring side, political protection, the underworld. a true picture of 'the gayer places' of Baltimore, of New York, New Orleans—all the places where 'the homeless ones' gather and lose or win their all on the throw of the dice, the speed of a horse, or the force behind a blow."
+ N Y Times p18 Ja 19 '30 160w

"His story is told with the punch that comes from using plain words and short sentences and making no bones about things—in fact, it recalls the Jim Tully school of writing. If McKenna were less wedded to plot he would, I think, have given us a more convincing character. Clancy seems too well-rounded." Harry Hansen
+ — N Y World p17 O 22 '29 350w

MCKENNA, STEPHEN. Datchley inheritance. 296p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d; 3s 6d Ward, Lock]
29-11442

Old John Datchley provided that his money, four million pounds, should go to that grandson who should be first to marry. Successive episodes of the story narate the efforts of each grandson to secure himself a wife, and the last part of the book is concerned with what happened to the victor.

Booklist 27:31 S '30

"The idea is not so bad for a farce, a musical comedy or a piece of 'summer fiction,' but Mr. McKenna seems to waver between pointing a moral and merely adorning a tale."
— Books p21 S 14 '30 200w

"The story is much too long. Had there been three grandsons instead of nine, our pleasure in reading would have been greater."
— Boston Transcript p2 Jl 16 '30 400w

"The novel is quite readable, but its morality is painfully strained."
+ — New Statesman 32:642 F 23 '29 150w
N Y Times p7 Je 29 '30 200w

"It is a pot-boiler not because it is a badly written book—McKenna could not write badly if he tried—but because it is a good writer's quick work. . . The book divides into short stories, several of which are clever. But the frame which holds the separate stories together is shaky and the book ends in a riot of nonsense which is dull even as hot weather fiction. Stephen McKenna writes so skillfully as to cause regret for his need of pot-boiling." F. L. Robbins
— + Outlook 155:307 Je 25 '30 150w

"It is not Mr. McKenna's fault that a reviewer with a long memory recalls how much better Gouverneur Morris handled a very similar theme some twenty years ago; but surely a veteran and prolific novelist might be expected to give us something more plausible than this."
— Sat R of Lit 7:11 Jl 26 '30 200w

"There are some mildly diverting situations. But this kind of fiction needs a more consistently light touch than Mr. McKenna here commands."
— + Spec 142:210 F 9 '29 100w
Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 3 '30 80w
Times [London] Lit Sup p116 F 14 '29 350w

MCKENNA, STEPHEN. Redemption of Morley Darville. 287p $2.50 Dodd
30-4850

Morley Darville, a young intellectual, scorns the idle rich, and hates authors who write books primarily to make money. Morley himself has written, but his books have been too good to become popular financial successes. He is discouraged and bitter about it. Then he meets a best-seller author, Allerdyce, who invites him to his country place for a week-end. And here Morley meets and falls in love with pretty Penelope, a conventional, upper class girl, who none the less envies in Morley the things her life has failed to give her. But as time goes on, and young Darville gets the chance himself to mingle with the best people and become a best-seller, he makes the most of his opportunity.

Booklist 26:313 My '30

"The novel as a whole does not compare in interest with most of McKenna's writings, perhaps because his chief figure is such a precious fraud, but it makes acceptable reading on account of its background and incidentals."
— + Books p29 O 26 '30 220w
Boston Transcript p8 Mr 22 '30 530w
New Statesman 35:16 Ap 12 '30 50w
N Y Times p22 Mr 9 '30 500w
Pratt p40 summer '30

"Darville remains a slight figure, and the book is nearer to the farce of 'An Affair of Honor' than to Mr. McKenna's more serious work; but for what it is, it is very good. It is rewritten with great cleverness, and with a subtle irony not often found in light comedy."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:880 Mr 29 '30 330w
Times [London] Lit Sup p316 Ap 10 '30 500w

MACKENZIE, AGNES MURE. Keith of Kinnellan. 448p $2 Smith, R.R. [7s 6d Constable]

"The scene of Keith of Kinnellan is the wild Aberdeenshire coast. Gilbert Keith lives on his ancestral farm with his good-natured but mediocre wife, Bertha. When his sensitive and piquant Franco-Scottish cousin, Anne Ogilvie, orphaned and trained in a French convent, comes to live at Kinnellan, it is obvious that Bertha has a rival. There follows, from the mere point of view of 'plot,' an ordinary enough tale of passion, jealousy, and disaster, softened at the last by time, 'the falling wind.' "—Spec

Books p16 O 5 '30 250w

"Miss Mackenzie writes unusually well and she tells a story of passion and repentance, of tangled motives and of retribution that is unusually forceful. Moreover, she puts into it all that fierce love of home and an especial landscape which are so much of what we know of the Scottish character." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 1 '30 280w

"There is some altogether admirable work in 'Keith of Kinnellan,' and its sequel 'The Falling Wind,' but we feel that Miss Mackenzie has not been quite true to her own vision." K. C. Tomlinson

+ — Nation and Ath 47:681 Ag 30 '30 250w

"Here is a great novel in the old manner. Miss Mackenzie writes with power; her people are moved by real passion, and her interest in them is the intense interest of a creator. Readers who are not alarmed at such old-fashioned words and facts as sin, repentance, remorse, reconciliation and conversion should lose no time in reading a novel which is based courageously on a courageous philosophy of life. Keith of Kinnellan makes most modern fiction seem extraordinarily thin."

+ New Statesman 35:768 S 27 '30 180w

N Y Times p8 D 21 '30 450w

"The style is uneven and the tempo sometimes too deliberate. But, at her best, Miss Mackenzie is an artist of distinction, with a grave dignity and beauty and an almost classical sense of tragedy, heightened by a feeling for Nature that makes her admirable pictures of land and sea an integral part of the story itself." Gilbert Thomas

+ — Spec 145:229 Ag 16 '30 180w

"On the whole there is more of the ordinary novel in 'The Falling Wind' than in 'Lost Kinnellan,' and in both there are passages where greater brevity would be a gain. But these are defects of accomplishment rather than of capacity, and do not detract from the fine effect of the book as a whole."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p590 Jl 17 '30 550w

MACKENZIE, COMPTON. April fools; a comedy of bad manners. 350p $1 Doubleday, Doran
30-19715

John Touchwood, successful dramatist, conceived the happy idea of running off to America with his new bride, and leaving his country place in Hampshire to his dear relations. The five sets of relations move in, bag and baggage, and become the chief actors in this comedy of April fools.

Booklist 27:105 N '30

Bookm 72:xiii O '30 80w

"Mr. Mackenzie has grappled with the tone of farce and managed to maintain it. He does inject a biting contrast among his characters. He undoubtedly wins you over to the children, Viola and Bertram, whose escapades are the hinges on which he hangs his tale. If, therefore, you are hiding behind your intellectual brow a secret passion for the ridiculous, and if you do not easily tire of horseplay, you will be able to appease your appetite with 'April Fools.'" V. P. Ross

Books p10 Jl 27 '30 450w

"Mr. Mackenzie has not done his best work in this story, for if he had really balanced his material carefully he might easily have eliminated about one hundred and fifty pages. It is well worth reading for all those who enjoy a light and pleasing style and who have that fortunate possession, plenty of uninterrupted leisure."

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ag 13 '30 800w

Cleveland Open Shelf p127 S '30

"Mr. Compton Mackenzie has the requisite experience to distil farce—good, robust, mid-Victorian farce—from life. Laughter is cajoled against the will, for the story is preposterous, and the majority of the characters improbable, though Bertram and Viola Touchwood are triumphant studies of healthy exuberant childhood, and it is to their attitude to life that much of the humour is due. Those who once read 'Handy Andy' with unstifled laughter should not grudge the present generation this rollicking book." K. C. Tomlinson

+ Nation and Ath 47:416 Je 28 '30 100w

Reviewed by G. T. Hellman

New Repub 64:81 S 3 '30 60w

"Mr. Mackenzie's book is the best example of farcical comedy which we have met since, years ago, Mrs. Henry de la Pasture delighted an ungrateful world with The Unlucky Family. Mr. Mackenzie shares one rare and enviable talent with Mrs. de la Pasture; he can write naturally and with fun about children."

+ New Statesman 35:284 Je 7 '30 300w

"For those not overfastidious, there is an abundant dollar's worth of amusement in Mr. Mackenzie's latest. For those who tire quickly of an interminable banquet of a single dish, the present novel is apt to seem a bag of well-worn tricks played out before the story is half over. The Touchwood menagerie is absurd without ever becoming convincing. The humor never rises above the level of a third-rate comic strip. Personally I felt the need of some laughing gas or perhaps of a professional tickler to help me appreciate some of Mr. Mackenzie's comic genius." Edwin Seaver

— + N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 26 '30 170w

N Y Times p7 Ag 17 '30 400w

Sat R of Lit 7:222 O 11 '30 230w

"April Fools is quite good, imitation Wodehouse. It is the complete 'scream.' Mr. Mackenzie seems to change his mind two or three times about the course of the farcical plot, but it makes a very funny and very witty book. Perhaps too funny: it is tiring to be laughing at the top of one's voice the whole time." V. S. Pritchett

+ — Spec 144:948 Je 7 '30 100w

"A delightfully gay book, pithy with humor and clever characterizations."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 21 '30 300w

"A laughter-giving piece of foolishness."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p476 Je 5 '30 550w

MACKENZIE, COMPTON. Gallipoli memories. 387p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Cassell]
940.4259 European war, 1914-1918—Campaigns—Turkey and the Near East
30-10486

Compton Mackenzie, the English novelist, went to Gallipoli at the beginning of the Dardanelles campaign, as an attaché of the Intelligence staff at Sir Ian Hamilton's headquarters. This book is a narrative record of the many amusing experiences and adventures he had in connection with his service.

Booklist 26:389 Jl '30

Reviewed by R. P. Harriss

Bookm 71:343 Je '30 450w

Reviewed by Eugene Lohrke

Books p10 Je 15 '30 750w

Boston Transcript p1 My 3 '30 480w

Cleveland Open Shelf p102 Jl '30

Foreign Affairs 8:672 Jl '30 20w

"To convey in a note the charm, the extraordinary fascination, of this volume of memories is impossible. And those reviewers who have failed to see the underlying seriousness hidden beneath its so typically British humor have missed something."

+ Nation 131:24 Jl 2 '30 170w

Reviewed by Bonamy Dobrée

Nation and Ath 46:462 D 28 '29 260w

Reviewed by G. T. Hellman

New Repub 62:358 My 14 '30 80w

"Mr. Mackenzie's sincerity is patent and altogether above suspicion. He might be quoting from his own day-to-day diary, if he had kept such a thing. It is not a particularly sensational book, but it is an extremely readable book and, what is more, thoroughly deserves a high place among those authentic documents of the war upon which the historian of the future will found his judgment."

MACKENZIE, COMPTON—Continued
+ New Statesman 34:268 N 30 '29 1300w

Reviewed by L. C. Woodman
N Y Times p22 My 18 '30 30w
N Y World p5m Jl 6 '30 150w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30

"The author of Sinister Street tells of both funny and terrible things; his narrative power is immense; he leaves us with many brilliant caricatures and some unforgettable pictures of the War as seen from Sir Ian Hamilton's headquarters, and eager for the further volumes which he promises us. . . There are many good War-books, but this is one of the best."
+ Spec 143:776 N 23 '29 850w

"What makes Mr. Mackenzie's book novel among reminiscences of the War is that, while most of them are tragic with comic incidents in the background, his is comic with tragedy always looming behind."
Times [London] Lit Sup p1022 D 5 '29 850w

MACKENZIE, COMPTON. Told. 175p il $2 ² Appleton [6s Blackwell]

Some modern fairy tales, with a sprinkling of poems, for children. Four color-plates by A. H. Watson and pictures in black and white by several artists.

"The spontaneity, the little touch of whimsicality with which these stories are written makes one feel that they were the product of the tongue before they were the fruit of the pen. . . . Mr. Mackenzie has given us a delightful book and he has had most expert aid from A. H. Watson, who has caught exactly the writer's spirit in the color plates, and by half a dozen other artists who have given some really lovely black and white drawings." S. L. C.
+ Boston Transcript p1 N 12 '30 950w

"Few modern fairytales quite 'come off.' Compton Mackenzie's collection, for example, for all its lovely pictures and fine press work, is as lifeless as the Greek stories of today." Beulah Amidon
— Survey 65:341 D 15 '30 30w

"Here are some delightful stories, mixed with a few rhymes to divide them up (but he shall not be Told to write any more rhymes because they are rather ordinary and his stories are all Extra, so that he had better keep the time for them!) Each of these is entirely engaging."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p982 N 20 '30 100w

MACKENZIE, JEAN KENYON. Trader's wife. 158p il $2 Coward-McCann
30-7297

An exquisitely told story, stark in its simplicity, of a tender New England girl of abolition days who married an ex-slave trader and who was driven by her sense of duty, tho he urged her to remain behind, to accompany her husband to his trading station on the west coast of Africa. Lucy endured uncomplainingly and with amazing fortitude, the heat and discomfort and strangeness of the place till a shipment of starving slaves, owned by a Portuguese trader, was brought to the corral on the edge of her husband's clearing. With the sound of their wailing in her ears, her outraged spirit broke its bounds and led her to an act of passionate protest.

Booklist 26:313 My '30

"This is pictorial art of a high order, made in a dramatic pattern but—and I think intentionally—ignoring all dramatic effect. Here are words woven into a design of unostentatious but rare beauty." Guy Holt
+ Bookm 71:350 Je '30 230w

"It instantly captivates your attention with its clever proportions, nice feel, gorgeous drawings, its unmistakable air of being an elegantly turned out book. A glance at one or two pages and it draws you in, enchants you with its subtly contrived beauty. Finally it lingers with you as an exquisite memory." Rebecca Hourwich
+ Books p2 Mr 30 '30 400w
Boston Transcript p1 Mr 29 '30 500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p95 Je '30

"In form it is a little masterpiece, concise, exact, tempered, elegant. The same style with as dramatic a mise en scène in a novel that was considerably longer and that dealt more completely with its characters would make Miss Mackenzie one of the more important writers of her time."
+ Nation 130:605 My 21 '30 180w

"Miss Mackenzie seems to be a disciple of Mr. Thornton Wilder's. Her work is even more fragile and lucid than his, but not less shapely. With considerable skill, she plays the different elements of fiction off against one another. The psychological progress of the heroine Lucy, for instance, is almost entirely expressed in action, for Miss Mackenzie realizes all the advantage action has over analysis in the portrayal of character. Mr. André Durenceau's decorative little pictures go well with work so neat and delicate."
+ Nation and Ath 48:sup352 D 6 '30 150w

"This book has the perfection of a small, flawless, curiously carved gem. It is compact and exquisitely finished—a bibelot. It plucks the strings of emotion too gently to achieve poignancy, but in its quiet way it is a charming and distinguished piece of work." E. H. W.
+ New Repub 63:108 Je 11 '30 120w

"The story lives in the clear loveliness of its telling, reminiscent in its vigour of colour and form, its vividness of phrase and picture, of the work of Stella Benson, though without the latter's occasional astringency."
+ New Statesman 36:282 D 6 '30 180w

"In point of sheer, somber beauty of telling, in its exquisite proportion, its deep pathos, this short, tragic novel of alien souls in the African forest near the Gaboon coast rises far above the author's descriptions of African life and manners based on her missionary experience in the Cameroons." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 22 '30 150w

"Jean Kenyon Mackenzie accomplishes a modest task with amazing grace and certainty. The author has limited herself in the choice of a plot to a single episode, an episode, nevertheless, which comprises in itself a miniature panorama of the human spirit. And, without any ungainly and obvious striving for effect, she has drained this episode of its last ounce of psychological implication."
+ N Y Times p8 Mr 30 '30 650w
N Y World p5m Jl 6 '30 250w

"A touching, beautifully and simply written little story." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:427 Mr 12 '30 80w
Pratt p40 summer '30

"The book has great beauty. It is far less the story of a man and a woman than it is the heart beat of the jungle. It casts its spell like the heavy fragrance of the frangipani blossoms, or the unceasing rhythm of the tom-toms echoing through the forest. One puts it down lingeringly, and only with a wrench, returns to the world he has left." B. K. Scherman
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1065 My 24 '30 570w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1068 D 11 '30 250w

MACKENZIE, JOHN GRANT. Souls in the making; an introd. to pastoral psychology. 259p $2.25 Macmillan [7s 6d Allen, G.]

250 Theology, Practical. Psychology 29-7308

This book on the psychology of character and personality is written primarily for ministers, to help them to understand the cases of moral and spiritual conflict with which they have to deal. The last two chapters discuss with wisdom and practical frankness such questions as adolescence and sex and explain the therapeutic power of religion.

"The book is short and is written throughout with a straightforward clarity. No prospective reader need be alienated because he has associated with this subject abstruseness and difficulty. The principal value of Souls in the Making is the liaison it effects between the work of psychologists and pastors." R. C. Falconer

+ Christian Century 46:684 My 22 '29 780w

"The author presents the results of his careful study of the psychological approaches to the problems of wrong-doing and moral disintegration with which the modern parishioners confront the minister. . . In the most interesting chapter of the book the author deals with pastoral method, the actual dealing with the various kinds of conflict which prove so baffling to the average pastor. His suggestion will prove of practical value especially to the younger clergy." T. S. Cline

+ Churchman 140:29 Jl 6 '29 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p20 F '30

"It constitutes an interpretation and synthesis of the new psychology with a view to its practical values for the minister as shepherd of souls. Incidentally the volume performs a real service to the busy minister by bringing into small compass a significant digest of current thought in the field of psychology." W. R. McNutt

+ Crozer Q 6:374 Jl '29 680w

"The present book will be found a readable and useful volume of [its] kind. It has been written to help, and doubtless will help ministers to understand many pastoral problems. An evangelical gospel is presupposed and the psychology is tacked on to that. Hence some will find it rather facile in parts, while others will note how easily traditional dogmas of sin are set aside under the impact of Freud." E. F. Mettrick

+ — Int J Ethics 39:513 Jl '29 70w

"What gives this book an almost unique value is the combination in it of practical wisdom, religious faith, and psychological knowledge. The author is professor of sociology and psychology at Paton College, Nottingham. Incidentally the book is an introduction to the large body of recent psychological literature."

+ J Religion 10:163 Ja '30 130w

St Louis 27:260 S '29

"The author comes at once to close grips with his subject, and deals with it on scientific lines, but always in view of the practical demands of pastoral work. . . Mr. Mackenzie always shows a vigorous common sense and never becomes the victim of his theories."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p83 Ja 31 '29 280w

MACKENZIE, WILLIAM DOUGLAS. Man's consciousness of immortality. 87p $1 Harvard univ. press [4s 6d Oxford]

218 Immortality 29-20312

"The president of the Hartford seminary foundation states five theses in support of personal survival after death, and claims that humanity has made its history in and through the consciousness of immortality."—Publisher's note

"The author says, 'In the present discussion I propose not to attempt any of the direct proofs of immortality.' All I can say is that before he gets through he has so buttressed a probability with unanswerable arguments that it has almost the solidity of a fact." S. S. Marquis

+ Churchman p16 F 1 '30 130w

Cleveland Open Shelf p18 F '30

"The argument presents one thinker's reasoned synthesis of scientific findings, and as such is provocative; but its metaphysical arguments leap too far beyond the data, and bend their supports too much in wished-for directions, to prove convincing to skeptics." Hornell Hart

+ — J Religion 10:437 Jl '30 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:35 Ap '30

St Louis 28:92 Ap '30

MACKESON, MRS PEYTON. Pass, stranger, and other poems. 91p $1.50 Smith, R.R. [5s Constable]

821

Lyrics in free verse and in occasional traditional rhyme patterns. The author, an English poet, is concerned with the ebb and flow of human affairs, and the transcendent element of mysticism that changes the most familiar aspects of life.

"In spite of occasional felicities and manifest sincerity, these sixty poems invite the inevitable judgment that their origins are in prose and not in poetry. Mrs. Mackeson's lyric, when it is permitted the refuge of traditional form, if it does not grace at least does not abuse its security; but in the unkindly spaces of free verse it is a lost and mechanical and somewhat aggressive stranger. Mrs. Mackeson, however, has courage and originality, and if these were severely applied to the cultivation of accepted poetical forms, she might yet achieve something not unrelated to poetry."

— + Bookm 72:viii O '30 100w

"In the best of her poems we feel the breath of real inspiration significantly embodied. The tendency to a false violence is her chief defect. She too often forgets that mystery is obscured by rhetoric, that it waits upon the still, small voice."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p614 Jl 24 '30 280w

MACKINNON, JAMES. Luther and the reformation. 4v v 3, Progress of the movement (1521-29); v 4, Vindication of the movement (1530-46). 338;390p ea $6.40 [16s) Longmans

B or 92 Luther, Martin. Reformation (25-20520)

Volume one of this substantial history of Luther and the reformation dealt with his early life and religious development, and volume two covered the crucial years of the breach with Rome, 1517-1521. The third volume continues the narrative to 1529, and the fourth and concluding volume covers the stormy period of the reformer's life, from 1530 to his death in 1546, the period during which Luther and Lutheranism were being put to the test.

Reviewed by E. W. Nelson

Am Hist R 36:115 O '30 800w (Review of v 4)

"With the publication of each successive instalment, the comprehensiveness, the dignity and the worth of the whole work become more manifest. Less complete than Preserved Smith's 'Age of the Reformation'—the best single volume on the reformation—as a picture of all aspects of the period, it is more detailed as a history of the religious movement and the character and services of its most prominent actor, and it has, for the serious student, the further advantage of thorough documentation and the citation of specific passages in original sources as authority for most of the statements made. . . The whole will undoubtedly constitute a worthy monument of historical scholarship and an indispensable tool for the student of this period." W. E. Garrison

+ Christian Century 46:521 Ap 17 '29 600w (Review of v 2 and 3)

Nation and Ath 45:80 Ap 20 '29 600w (Review of v 3)

New Statesman 33:50 Ap 20 '29 1050w (Review of v 3)

"Dr. Mackinnon's book will be useful to those who desire a history of its protagonist to put alongside Grisar's monumental work, a duller but less partial life."

+ — New Statesman 34:646 F 22 '30 220w (Review of v 4)

Sat R 147:290 Mr 2 '29 500w (Review of v 3)

"His view of Luther as a man, as a theologian and as a statesman is more kindly than that of most British historians, because Professor

MACKINNON, JAMES—Continued
Mackinnon makes fuller allowance for his difficulties."
Spec 144:446 Mr 13 '30 200w (Review of v 4)

"Professor Mackinnon's third volume maintains the high level of his earlier volumes and brings nearer to completion what will be the most authoritative account of Luther and Lutheranism in English as well as one of the most important contributions of the century to the study of the Reformation."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p150 F 28 '29 680w (Review of v 3)

"In this volume Professor Mackinnon completes his masterly study of Luther and the Reformation. The four volumes now available provide one of the most readable and scholarly studies of religious history in the English language. They are the characteristic productions of one who has always approached history as a humane and liberal subject, having great and fascinating borderlands stretching into the realms of religion, law and economics. . . Throughout the book there is a complete candour and impartiality—a very rare quality in biographies of sixteenth-century reformers."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p361 My 1 '30 750w (Review of v 4)

2 MACKINTOSH, HUGH ROSS. Christian apprehension of God. (James Sprunt lectures, 1928) 231p $2.50 Harper [6s Student]
231 God [30-8497]

This volume is composed of the eight lectures delivered on the James Sprunt Foundation in the Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va. The reader does not go far before he discovers that Professor Mackintosh (New College, Edinburgh) is a straightforward thinker whose aim is that of the finest type of conservator. He believes that the Christian religion is in possession of certain great realities, for instance, Revelation, God, and Divine Purpose, realities which man's maturer thought will conserve."—Crozer Q

Reviewed by W. R. McNutt
Crozer Q 7:408 Jl '30 450w

"Dr. Mackintosh presents his theme clearly, wisely, broadly, without ostentation or dogmatism; and yet the reader feels instinctively that he is breathing the atmosphere of the nineteenth, rather than of the twentieth, century. The problems which have grown poignant of late years hardly rise above the horizon. . . The book is constructive and will prove helpful to minds that have been disturbed, but not too greatly shaken, by contemporary skepticism. While it has a value of its own, it cannot be said to rank either with the author's Doctrine of the Person of Christ or his The Christian Experience of Forgiveness." J. W. Buckham
+ — J Religion 10:616 O '30 380w

"Contains, in lecture form for a general audience, a splendidly mature statement of the doctrine of the nature of God. The first three chapters, on the nature of religions, religious knowledge, and revelation, where the veteran theologian's all-round grasp of the material and sureness of summarizing it stand out on every page, seem to this reviewer most decidedly worth while." M. B. S.
+ Living Church 84:13 N 1 '30 300w

"The lofty influences everywhere apparent in Dr. Mackintosh's thought, his eloquent championship of the spirit of Hebrew monotheism at its highest moments, and his warm appreciation of a theologian so unjustly attacked in many quarters to-day as Ritchl are factors that, taken in conjunction with the impressive sincerity of his utterance, combine to form his present series of lectures into one of the most distinguished of recent essays in doctrinal apologetics."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p778 O 10 '29 400w

MACLAREN, HAMISH. Sailor with banjo; inland lyrics. new ed 80p $1.50 Macmillan [6s Gollancz]
821 Sea poetry 30-17552

Gay lyrics and ballads of the sea. The author has seen active service with the British fleet, in the Baltic and on the Black sea. He is at present a London journalist.

Booklist 27:221 Ja '31

"It is an extremely delightful book; it is more than that: Mr. MacLaren can write excellently; he has a word sense which, in some of the more intellectual lyrics, gives the reader a feeling nearing perfection. The book is chiefly nautical, and much of it is written in the rollicking old-fashioned ballad metre. There are a few lyrics that for nostalgia and evening-feeling are among the best the reviewer has ever read."
+ Bookm 71:viii Je '30 100w

"A fresh and engaging talent colors these rollicking salt-water ballads by a young Englishman. . . While a number of these poems of the sea naturally recall the lyric vigor and color of Masefield, there is an authentic originality, a captivating humor and spontaneity, about them that is new and well worth having." Ruth Lechlitner
+ Books p22 Mr 16 '30 550w

Reviewed by Raymond Kresensky
Christian Century 48:30 Ja 7 '31 100w

"Some of them have the true quality of old songs such as 'Salisbury,' and the original shanties. This quality is not too easy to capture, except through the use of obvious devices; but for an occasional 'toorelaye bullario,' however, Mr. MacLaren reproduces the genuine spirit rather than its ornamentations." V. Sackville-West
+ Nation and Ath 46:178 N 2 '29 100w
St Louis 28:142 My '30

Reviewed by T. E. Welby
Sat R 148:352 S 28 '29 150w

"For sheer verve and jollity his Sailor With Banjo is surely unsurpassed in modern poetry. . . A first reading of these poems is pure, unconsidered enjoyment. A second reading is needed to discover the wealth of thought and emotion and the fine craftsmanship which Mr. Maclaren hides beneath his easy and, apparently, effortless manner. His book is unique and wholly delightful."
+ Spec 143:416 S 28 '29 350w

"In all of Mr. Maclaren's verses there is a vital zest and a compelling vocal lilt."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p799 O 10 '29 200w

MCLAUGHLIN, HENRY WOODS, ed. Country church and public affairs. 260p $2 Macmillan
261 Country church. Sociology, Rural 30-11743

A symposium on the subject of the country church in relation to national affairs, contributed to by various authorities in church organization. Among the topics discussed are the functions of the country church, the rural church and the country newspaper, training of the rural minister, medical care for country people, recreational life of country young people, and the future of the country church.

"This is not a book of opinions and general discussions. It is a book which brings together actual facts, researches and definitely helpful information based on reliable source material. It handles a serious problem intelligently and practically. Here is a volume which provides perplexed pastors and social workers with some real working tools."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 9 '30 250w

"This volume is issued under the auspices of the Institute of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia, and offers nineteen papers, presented by as many authors at the Round Table as a basis for discussions of the rural church, its mission, problems, and opportunities. It is therefore a sort of brief encyclopedia of current thought and opinion relative to this important institution. Most of those who here speak do so with authority, hence the volume can scarcely be neglected by the alert rural or village minister, neither by one who seeks to understand the rural church and its present-day challenge." W. R. McNutt

+ Crozer Q 7:409 Jl '30 100w

"To offset and remedy the weaknesses [of the country church] McLaughlin (who is the director of Presbyterian country church work) and his collaborators direct their interest and thoughtful attention with a large degree of success. The Rev. F. D. Goodman, rector of St. John's Church, Warsaw, Va., now Bishop Coadjutor of Virginia, contributes a highly suggestive paper on the training of the rural minister." C. R. Woodruff
+ Living Church 84:51 N 8 '30 750w

"This is not a popular book but it will be of deep interest to the careful student of agricultural life in the United States. We would particularly commend the article by Warren H. Wilson who has been a most competent investigator in this field for twenty or more years." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 156:190 O 1 '30 220w
Pratt p6 autumn '30
St Louis 28:203 S '30

"The various contributors attempt no dogmatic determinations. They state freely individual opinions formulated on the basis of individual study and observation. The reader can measure the value of the arguments presented and develop his own attitudes." G. O. Mudge
+ Survey 65:171 N 1 '30 350w

MACLAURIN, CHARLES. Post mortems of mere mortals; essays, historical and medical; with an introd. by Dr. Joseph Collins (Eng title: De Mortius). 291p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [new ed 7s 6d Cape, J.]
920 Biography 30-14903

This book of studies in medical biography, by an Australian surgeon, brings together two previously published volumes, Post Mortem (Book Review Digest, 1923) and Mere Mortals (Book Review Digest, 1925).

"Dr. MacLaurin writes interestingly, but I should say his clinical judgment is not always sound. . . This does not prevent Dr. MacLaurin's pages from being lively and provocative." Logan Clendening
+ — Books p10 Ag 3 '30 670w

"'Post Mortems of Mere Mortals' is surely one of the most extraordinary collections of historical and scientific data to appear under a single title. Its immediate usefulness may be open to question, but it should attain in time a considerable commercial value as one of the principal literary curiosities of the early twentieth century." Margaret Wallace
N Y Evening Post p11m My 10 '30 300w

"What are the results of Dr. MacLaurin's medical examination of history? First of all—hours of very pleasurable reading for one who chances to pick up his book. For the doctor is a gifted writer. His essays are well constructed and balanced stories told in a calm, simple and often graceful and humorous style. . . Some of our author's diagnoses are too audacious. What of it? Even when they are, he presents them so aptly that to wade through them is, in most cases, a joy." Alexander Nazaroff
+ N Y Times p11 Je 15 '30 1050w

"Here and there the reader will find himself by no means in agreement with the balancing of conclusions, but the volume as a whole throws a great deal of very welcome light upon an aspect of historical research that has been too much neglected. It is to be hoped that Dr. MacLaurin will continue his studies in this field."
+ Sat R 150:877 D 27 '30 180w

"If a little common in their jokes sometimes—Dr. MacLaurin was in the army, surgeon in the world war—these essays seem generally competent historically and in a literary way. They never insult the intelligence for long nor forget the risibilities for longer than a truly beautiful passage here and there. A generous, whimsical, rather intensely humanizing book."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1147 Je 21 '30 180w

MACLEAN, JOHN KENNEDY, and FRASER, CHELSEA CURTIS. Heroes of the farthest North and farthest South. rev ed 472p il $2 Crowell
919.8 Arctic regions. Antarctic regions. Aeronautics—Flights 30-12373

A new edition which brings the story of polar exploration up to date. The final chapter is concerned with Byrd's expedition to the South pole. The first edition was listed in the Book Review Digest, 1914.

Booklist 26:402 Jl '30

"As a piece of literature 'Heroes of the Farthest North and Farthest South,' makes no pretensions. It is truly a chronicle, digressing from the chronological plan only so far as to separate the Arctic and Antarctic explorations. Though not juvenile in treatment, it is calculated to interest young readers who might not be expected to read the weightier and more obscure annals from which the materials for the present book are drawn, but it is interesting and informative for readers of all ages." R. S.
Boston Transcript p2 Jl 30 '30 570w

"Valuable addition to any school library." M. S. Ernst
+ Churchman p28 Ag 2 '30 80w

"Here we have that sad spectacle of a 'historian' with a good many facts on hand,—though not quite enough,—and with apparently no critical judgment whatever. . . I see no value whatever in perpetuating misinformation or cheap standards of achievement. The records of Nansen and Stefansson, Wilkins and Byrd deserve more than that." Earl Hanson
— Sat R of Lit 6:1141 Je 21 '30 550w

"The liberal use of photographs of most of the explorers mentioned and of their equipment, together with charts of the regions surveyed, gives the reader a key by which to estimate for himself the difficulties and relative importance of each trip. The charts, especially, prove of great aid in estimating and following the development of man's growing knowledge of the great white regions nearest the poles."
+ Springf'd Republican p12 S 10 '30 450w

MACLEISH, ARCHIBALD. New found land; fourteen poems. ltd ed [54]p $5 Houghton
811

Fourteen poems in elegiac moods, including the frequently quoted "You, Andrew Marvel," by an American poet whose work is distinguished by subtle craftsmanship and exquisite melancholy.

"Mr. MacLeish gets his effect with a minimum of fireworks. Indeed, his strength lies largely in the simplicity of his language. He uses common words, many monosyllables, many homely concrete images. His sense of cadence is not so perfect as Pound's, for example, or H. D.'s, and yet there is that in his clipped elliptic style which recalls these poets at their best. Like them, he has an extraordinary gift for conveying abstractions by a precise handling of the concrete." Babette Deutsch
+ Books p4 Jl 6 '30 670w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 20 '30 320w

"Archibald MacLeish is a master of verse form, and his new book reinforces his position as one of the first of the classical school of contemporary American poets. . . There are only fourteen poems in 'New Found Land,' but very seldom is there a book of verse written in which not only every poem but every line is perfect." E. L. Walton
+ Nation 131:21 Jl 2 '30 900w

MACLEISH, ARCHIBALD—Continued

"Very nearly every line of the fourteen poems in this collection is distinguished for its sharp perception of a clear, well-designed image. This has been the result of a slow maturity. . . The present volume is proof of his slow and consistent development as an accomplished artist. . . Any one interested in the more recent developments of contemporary poetry cannot afford to ignore Archibald MacLeish. He has passed through a period of fruitful experimentation into the full expression of his unusual talent." Horace Gregory

+ N.Y Evening Post p8m Je 21 '30 850w

"Of MacLeish Louis Untermeyer has written, 'No man in America is making such daring experiments toward a new poetic language.' But MacLeish is doing more, far more, than making experiments; and language is but a minor and an accessory concern. Since Coleridge no one else has come so near the pure poetry of 'Kubla Khan' as has Archibald MacLeish in the initial poem of the present small sheaf, 'You, Andrew Marvel.' "

+ N Y Times p17 Je 22 '30 270w

N Y World p5m Ag 10 '30 350w

"The collection is distinguished by a style which, for all its slack and discursive rhetoric, carries a definitive accent, unmistakably Mr. MacLeish's own. Even where certain external effects carry one back from these lines to the Swinburnian distension in the meters of The Happy Marriage or the Pot of Earth, there is no confusing the early uncertainty with the later stylistic sobriety and deliberation. . . From the first there has appeared in his work a strain of genuine nobility; to lose that quality, particularly in that full stature which Mr. MacLeish once promised to give us, would be to lose one of the finest personalities in recent American verse. Not with complete confidence yet with a considerable reliance on his creative responsibility, we await the larger projects upon which Mr. MacLeish has been engaged for some months past." M. D. Z.

+ Poetry 36:270 Ag '30 1680w

"MacLeish's new book contains several things of special importance. The initial poem, 'You, Andrew Marvel,' is one of the best of our time. 'Not Marble not the Gilded Monuments' is one of the best of modern love poems. . . 'You, Andrew Marvel' is the best expression we have ever read of the mortal world under the flight of time, the 'winged chariot hurrying near.' It haunts greatly. 'Immortal Autumn,' the next poem in his brief book, has also undeniable beauty, and nostalgia for the past inspires gravely moving utterance in 'Geography of This Time' from 'Land's End.' " W. R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1208 Jl 19 '30 500w

MCMAHON, AMOS PHILIP. Meaning of art. 306p $3 Norton

701 Art—Philosophy 30-29444

A discussion of the philosophy of art which the author deals with in a series of chapters answering these ten questions: Can art have meaning? Is goodness or badness the meaning of art? Is pleasure the meaning of art? Is imitation the meaning of art? Is illusion the meaning of art? Is technique the meaning of art? Does art mean that beauty is objective? Is art the product of genius? Is empathy the meaning of art, or is expression? Is art true communication?

"A stimulating and provocative book for students of esthetics."

+ New Repub 65:116 D 10 '30 80w

Outlook 156:389 N 5 '30 30w

"If for no other reason than its novelty as an art book without illustrations The Meaning of Art will command attention this season; but a glance between its covers is enough to show that this work makes searching and enlightening comment on some of the fundamental art problems." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 82:14 D '30 120w

"The Meaning of Art will be a useful book—if the right people read the same! For here is a very clear, modern, and reasonable epitome of what men have thought art to be. The pages do not glitter with novelty, but the nubs of the ancient questions are here." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 65:396 Ja 1 '31 230w

MCMAHON, JO. Deenie men. 185p il $2 Dutton

Fairy tales 30-6830

Stories for little children about all sorts of queer people and animals: deenie men and leprachauns, and dragons and whatnots.

"The stories have no real imaginative quality, the attempts at humor are labored and the following is a fair sample of the style: 'If you haven't seen a fairy that shouldn't prove that there are no such folks.' The pictures, while not always pleasing, have a certain humorous quality and are far better than the stories." A. T. Eaton

— N Y Times p19 Mr 30 '30 170w

Reviewed by A. H. Vance

Sat R of Lit 6:1078 My 24 '30 220w

Springf'd Republican p5e Je 22 '30 50w

MCMAHON, JOHN ROBERT. Wright brothers, fathers of flight. 308p il $2.50 Little

B or 92 Wright, Wilbur. Wright, Orville. Aeronautics—History 30-7766

A study of the lives of Orville and Wilbur Wright and their sister Katherine, based on letters and family data. The book is also a record of aviation history.

Booklist 26:355 Je '30

"Unfortunately the author has wrapped both the personality and the facts in a mass of 'human interest' material, imaginary conversations, soliloquy and journalistic liveliness from which it is sometimes difficult to disentangle them. But it is worth the effort to have the whole record between two covers."

+ — Books p18 Ap 6 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p94 Je '30

"Mr. McMahon's book is not marred by technicalities or a too extended dwelling upon the controversies which followed the amazed acceptance of human flight as a reality. It is a very human document."

+ N Y Times p10 Ap 27 '30 340w

Pratt p38 summer '30

"The great charm of the story is its naturalness. Something of the downright sincerity and simplicity of those two brothers has got into this biography." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 81:8 My '30 150w

St Louis 28:146 My '30

MACMILLAN, DONALD BAXTER. Kah-da; life of a north Greenland Eskimo boy. (Junior bks.) 237p il $2 Doubleday, Doran

30-11179

A story of Northern Greenland of which Kah-da, a young Eskimo lad, is the hero. The tale takes him from birth to the day he becomes a real hunter. The author spent six years with Kah-da's tribe, the Smith Sound Eskimos.

Booklist 26:361 Je '30

" 'Kah-da' is not to be read for story interest; in fact, it is really not a story at all. Nor is it to be read for its literary style, which is clumsy in places and never approaches creative writing. But its absolute authenticity and its meticulous attention to the smallest details of Eskimo life make it valuable reading for any one at all interested in the subject. It never drags and holds the reader's attention from the first page to the last. The photographs from life add to the interest of the book." H. H. O.

+ Books p8 Je 22 '30 250w

"One of the finest Eskimo stories I have read in a long time: an adventure story par excellence." A. L. Shea

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 My 31 '30 160w

Cleveland Open Shelf p127 S '30

"Besides a knowledge of their way of living, the author has a sympathetic understanding of the Eskimos and a real liking for them. A few of the folk tales which Eskimos tell their children are included. Simple in style, the book can be read by 10 and 11 year olds, but it will also interest older boys and girls."
+ N Y Times p20 Ap 27 '30 180w
St Louis 28:220 S '30

Reviewed by Earl Hanson
Sat R of Lit 7:336 N 15 '30 240w

MCMILLAN, FRANKLIN R. Basic principles of concrete making; with an introd. by F. E. Schmitt. 99p il $2 McGraw 691.3 Concrete 29-25908

"Articles which appeared originally in the Engineering News-Record have been revised and combined to present the fundamental principles of concrete making, embodying the results of experience and laboratory research in recent years."—Booklist

Booklist 26:267 Ap '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:4 Ja '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:26 Mr '30
Pratt p22 spring '30
St Louis 28:43 F '30

MACMILLAN, NORMAN. Air-tourist's guide to Europe. 276p il $3 Washburn [10s Duckworth]
629.13 Europe—Description and travel. Airways—Europe 30-26653

"Captain Norman Macmillan not only gives all the information necessary to those who are already air-minded, but he also describes some of the most interesting flights, by regular air lines, for instance, from Venice to Vienna, or (by night) from Berlin to Königsberg, which should incite the more conservative traveller to try the air. There are maps, on rather too small a scale, of all European air routes, and addresses and telephone numbers of all aerodromes connected."—Spec

Booklist 26:383 Jl '30

Reviewed by A. M. Maurice
Bookm 70:xxi Mr '30 270w
Cleveland Open Shelf p104 Jl '30
N Y Times p23 My 4 '30 130w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p9 Ag 22 '30 320w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:668 Ap 23 '30 20w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:11 Jl '30 100w
St Louis 28:211 S '30

"Captain Macmillan is obviously not blasé about flying himself and he has therefore succeeded in imparting some of the spirit of adventure which still exists—and is likely to continue to exist—in this modern means of transport."
+ Spec 144:129 Ja 25 '30 150w

"Readers interested in aviation will find here much statistical information which is not available in so convenient a form elsewhere, and those planning an air journey, say to Central Europe or Constantinople or Spain, will welcome the tables of fares from each important European air port to most of the others. We have checked a good deal of the information, and everything checked was found to be accurate."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1083 D 19 '29 120w

MCMURRY, DONALD LE CRONE. Coxey's army; a study of the industrial army movement of 1894. 331p il $4 Little 331.137 Coxey, Jacob Sechler. Unemployment 29-23512

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by J. D. Hicks
Am Hist R 35:641 Ap '30 1050w

"It is a very complete bit of historical research, containing all the information that can be desired upon the subject of which it treats." L. P. Edwards
+ Am J Soc 35:857 Mr '30 220w

"The story was well worth telling because of its picturesqueness and inherent interest, and Mr. McMurry has told it well." L. L. Lorwin
+ Ann Am Acad 149:215 My '30 500w
Booklist 26:189 F '30

Reviewed by Francis Snow
Current Hist 32:4 Ap '30 130w

Reviewed by M. P. Levy
N Y Evening Post p13m N 23 '29 520w

Reviewed by C. McD. Puckette
N Y Times p22 F 16 '30 1200w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:23 Mr '30

"Mr. McMurry may be accused of underestimating the economic depression of the period and its effect upon the workers. It may not be his fault, for much of his material comes from the newspaper reports of the period and they always ridiculed and scoffed at the armies of unemployed. But the study is a vivid picture nevertheless of what an American economic revolution may look like." Theresa Wolfson
+ — Survey 63:596 F 15 '30 550w
Wis Lib Bul 26:64 F '30

MCMURTRIE, DOUGLAS CRAWFORD. Modern typography & layout; introd. by Edmund G. Gress. 190p il $7.50 Eyncourt press, 440 S. Dearborn st., Chicago
655.2 Printing, Practical. Type and type-founding. Printing—Specimens 29-29684

"In Europe, and especially in Germany, a very distinct change in the manner of printing has occurred, even if a distinct modern style has not been developed. This has been accomplished primarily by the revival of sans-serif types, and their straightforward use in accordance with their patterns. . . There have been done a good many pieces of printing, both in books and in advertising, where the unconventional or even bizarre arrangement of type and decoration must be called successful. Mr. McMurtrie's book has an introduction by Edmund G. Gress, and chapters on various aspects of the cult of modernism in typography, all going to make a pretty complete treatise on the subject. It is, of course, too early in the game to expect a complete synopsis of what modernism is, but the text furnishes many suggestions."—Sat R of Lit

Reviewed by Paul Johnston
Bookm 71:125 Mr '30 150w
Books p19 My 11 '30 700w
Pratt p21 spring '30

"The real value of the book is in its illustrations of 'modernistic' printing from Europe. An examination of the plates will serve to show what has been attempted, and to give suggestions for further efforts."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:685 Ja 25 '30 520w

MCNEILE, HERMAN CYRIL (SAPPER, pseud.). Tiny Carteret. 327p $1 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder]
30-15622

Relates the adventures of Ronald Standish and his friend, Tiny Carteret, in tracing a villainous murderer. London, Paris and the tiny kingdom of Bessonia are the various scenes of their adventures.

"A tiptop mystery chock-full of hair-raising excitement."
+ Bookm 72:xxv O '30 50w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 O 12 '30 130w
Boston Transcript p3 D 27 '30 300w

"Those who like their Oppenheim will find plenty to interest them in this mystery story, which moves at high speed. The Crime Club

MCNEILE, H. C.—Continued
made no mistake in selecting 'Tiny Carteret'—it is worth anybody's attention." Bruce Rae
+ N Y Times p10 O 5 '30 170w

"There is no attempt at anything subtle or mystifying in the plot, the author limiting himself solely to the production of red-blooded melodrama, and as such the tale is unquestionably a rouser." E. C. Beckwitn
+ N Y World p3e O 19 '30 100w

"'Tiny Carteret' is billed as 'a greater adventurer than Bulldog Drummond.' Maybe so, but the story by and large is far below the Drummond standard." W. C. Weber
— Sat R of Lit 7:232 O 11 '30 80w

MACON, CLIFTON. Religion, whence and whither. 101p $1.25 Assn. press
230 Religion 29-30581

"The titles [of the five addresses] are: The Bible—what it is; The Bible—how to read it; The Church—how it came to be; The Creeds—how they developed; and The Next Reformation. The author is an Episcopalian who believes the findings of critical scholarship as to the Bible; who declares himself willing to make wide concessions for the cause of Church unity; who thanks his God that the Athanasian Creed is not included in the American Prayer Book; and who expects to live to see great progress in a new reformation."—Survey

Boston Transcript p5 Ja 25 '30 280w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:82 N '30

"Five addresses, all of them alive with scholarship and insight, and all of them readable and provocative. The book is intended for study groups, and for lay reading; but preachers will hunt awhile before they discover more meat packed into less space than this." C. S. Brown
+ Survey 63:598 F 15 '30 200w

MCPHARLIN, PAUL L., comp. and tr. Repertory of marionette plays; chosen and tr. with notes, bibliography and lists of marionette play producers in England and America. 372p il $6 Viking press
791.5 Puppet-plays 29-25328

The main portion of this interesting book contains the text of fourteen selected plays for marionettes, such as The Coq Brothers, Cataclysterium's Medicine, The Death of Tintagiles, Doctor Faust, and Casper Among the Savages, translated from the original by Mr McPharlin. The compiler, who is director of the Marionette fellowship of Evanston, Illinois, also writes an introductory chapter on the history of puppet and marionette shows. The index contains a list of marionette play producers in England and in America, and selective book lists on the subject.

Booklist 26:193 F '30

"A useful and interesting book." W. P. Eaton
+ Books p10 Ja 19 '30 100w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:43 My '30
St Louis 28:75 Mr '30

"It should be immensely useful to those who are interested in marionette production." Anne Stoddard
+ Sat R of Lit 6:874 Mr 29 '30 700w
Wis Lib Bul 26:65 F '30

MCSPADDEN, JOSEPH WALKER (JOSEPH
2 WALKER, pseud.). How they carried the mail. 305p il $3 Sears
383 Postal service 30-30674

"A combination of historical facts and entertaining fiction which traces the development of mail service from earliest times until the present day. It opens with the story of King Sargon and his fleet runner and closes with an appendix on 'The Air Mail Service of the United States'."—Bookm

Bookm 72:xxvil D '30 50w

"It is absorbing narrative at all times and rich in informative material picturesquely presented."
+ Nation 131:558 N 19 '30 180w

"It is a book from which youthful readers will pick up a great deal of history as well as entertainment. The schedules of the present-day air mail, printed as an appendix to the volume and following hard upon an account of the feats of Maughan and Lindbergh with transcontinental mailplanes, will interest all boys. Mr. Dobias's illustrations match the spirited style of the author, and like the whole book, show care in details." Allan Nevins
+ Sat R of Lit 7:325 N 15 '30 330w

MCWILLIAMS, CAREY. Ambrose Bierce; a biography. 358p $3.50 Boni
B or 92 Bierce, Ambrose 29-29136

"Bierce's infinitely complex character, his brilliance of mind, his attainments as satirical journalist, his exact status as man of letters, the extraordinary force of his individuality as an intellectual influence upon his age—these have been more persistently misrepresented and disputed than those of any writer since Poe. The confusion of estimates is likely to continue for indefinite years, and it is as a sound corrective to the spread of these erroneous views that such a work of extensive research as this and the other recent study, 'Bitter Bierce,' by C. Hartley Grattan, are of primary importance. . . The phenomenon of Bierce still fascinates, but after reading the present admirable interpretation of its every phase but little remains to mystify beyond the dark enigma of what became of that fatalistic old man who disappeared into Mexico sixteen years ago."—N Y World

Booklist 26:277 Ap '30

"Mr. McWilliams has written an excellent biography of Ambrose Bierce. That is no mean accomplishment, for not only should the mere act of writing about Bierce be listed among the hazardous occupations, but the enormous labor that went into this book will get small material reward. The last word about Bierce's life has not yet been uttered. But, so far as biography goes, Mr. McWilliams says at least the next to last word." C. H. Grattan
+ Books p5 D 22 '29 1000w

"Mr. McWilliams, in a sound and scholarly book, sheds bright light on Bierce's eccentric personality and on his hectic literary career, tracing the record down to Bierce's still unexplained disappearance somewhere in war-torn Mexico. He shows sound critical judgment in depicting Bierce as primarily a super-journalist, not a literary creator in any sense." Francis Snow
+ Current Hist 31:836 F '30 180w

"Mr. McWilliams's work is conspicuously and satisfyingly unlike the slap-dash biographies that clutter up the bookstands. Though his style is uneven and his pages are not wholly free from solecisms, the diligence of his research and the sanity of his critical judgments make the book an admirable performance." Granville Hicks
+ Nation 130:223 F 19 '30 500w

Reviewed by Louis Sherwin
N Y Evening Post p12m D 14 '29 900w

"A well-documented and sanely critical life of a man who is as much a legend today as he was a virile figure in his time. . . A man walks out of this book by Mr. McWilliams and the good biographer can accomplish no more." Herbert Gorman
+ N Y Times p5 D 29 '29 1350w

"The value of this newest addition to Bierce biographical literature rests largely on the thoroughness and authority with which it assails and discredits the preponderance of myths which in the Titan's lifetime and after obscured his dynamic personality and his enduring work."
+ N Y World p11m Ja 12 '30 320w

"Disposes of some myths without reducing his satire at all." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:30 Ja 1 '30 30w

St Louis 28:81 Mr '30

"Casts much additional light on the life of the author about whom a great deal has been written during the past 10 years, but none on the time, place or manner of his death. All of the many versions of the passing of the eccentric western genius from this life are given in detail and the reader is left to make his own choice among them."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 31 '30 550w

MACY, DORA. Night nurse. 282p $2 Brentano's

30-14512

"When Lora Hart, registered professional nurse, accepted the position of night nurse to the two wealthy Richey children, victims of anemia and malnutrition, little did she realize what an important part she was to play in the lives of half a dozen people. Regardless of the ethics of her profession, she now reveals the actual happenings in the penthouse apartment of the Richeys that have left her today barred from her hospital, about to face the ordeal of a trial, and discredited in the eyes of her profession."—Boston Transcript

Bookm 71:xi Jl '30 80w

"This is a rowdy piece, but there is not a dull moment in it. It is told in the first person, and the style—roughly speaking—is that of 'Ex-Mistress,' adorned with profanity and plain speaking. The plot is something to elevate the incredulous eyebrow, but the incidents are hammered out with a vivid pen."

+ — Books p13 Jl 13 '30 120w

"It is a rambling story which deviates from the course many times, and once in particular into the bypaths of hospital life; but it is a story which cannot fail to hold the reader's interest. 'Night Nurse' is an intensely human and sincere document." E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 28 '30 500w

"This is a sordidly realistic book and its only raison d'être seems to be that after perusing its unsavory pages (67 to 102) the casual reader learns straight from the shoulder what the life of the best trained nurse is in toto and what she is up against. As for the plot of the story, it is such cheap and unpleasant stuff that it should never have been put forth at all."

— + N Y Times p18 Jl 6 '30 120w

"The style of writing is the 'smart,' wisecracking school that is having a transient popularity."

Springf'd Republican p5e Je 22 '30 280w

MACY, JOHN ALBERT. About women. 314p $2.50 Morrow

396 Woman 30-11867

The author of The Story of the World's Great Literature discusses a subject on which many men would hesitate to commit themselves—women. He sketches the social and political position of women thru the ages, and evaluates their place in art and letters, both as subjects and creators. Morals and religion as influenced by women are studied, and the natural function of woman as mother and teacher. Cleopatra, Catherine the Great, and other famous women of all periods are cited. Fearing the results of the present day feminization of society, the author desires a counter movement by men to retain their power.

Booklist 27:140 D '30

Bookm 71:344 Je '30 350w

Reviewed by Floyd Dell

Books p5 Ap 27 '30 950w

"His book is advertised as daring, frank and controversial. It is all of that and never dull."

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 17 '30 250w

Reviewed by Isabel Proudfit

— N Y Times p19 Je 1 '30 730w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 Ap 9 '30 900w

"What Macy has to say is not startlingly original, but it is sensible and straightforward. . . Our only quarrel with the book is that it is sometimes flippant in the wrong place, a common fault in American books on serious subjects."

+ — Outlook 154:627 Ap 16 '30 200w

"The book contains one original chapter at least, which is a good deal to say in these days of much hashed-over material. It is the chapter entitled 'Why Women Should Talk' and is the most interesting portion of the book." Katharine Anthony

— + Sat R of Lit 6:1175 Jl 5 '30 650w

MACY, WILLIAM FRANCIS, ed. Nantucket scrap basket. 2d ed rev and enl 163p $1.50 Houghton

917.449 Nantucket, Massachusetts—Social life and customs. English language—Provincialisms 30-17083

"Being a collection of characteristic stories and sayings of the people of the town and Island of Nantucket, Massachusetts."—Subtitle

N Y Times p12 Jl 6 '30 250w

Pratt p31 autumn '30

"There is lively interest and entertainment in this miscellany—the more because no effect has ever been made to make all the stories as pointed as a sophisticated critic could demand. The material is well classified."

Springf'd Republican p10 Je 25 '30 500w

MADARIAGA, SALVADOR DE. Sir Bob; il. by
2 Lynd Ward. 202p $2.50 Harcourt [6s Routledge]

30-24336

"The story centers around Sir Bob—short for Sir Robert de la P. Avoirdupois Le Gallant de Poigne—and his left-handed little daughter whose habit was to write from right to left. This peculiarity naturally changed her name from Mary to Yram. Sir Bob tells stories and recites rhymes and he and Yram seem to have a pleasant time together. At least the author seems to have had a pleasant time taking a holiday from his serious writing."— Sat R of Lit

"It is the fashion nowadays to liken every clever book of fanciful adventure to 'Alice in Wonderland.' As a rule the comparison comes too trippingly to the fore, and 'Alice' is left standing head and shoulders above her rivals. But in 'Sir Bob' one cannot help recognizing a kinship of wit and spirit. . . It should appeal to children who have an unforced liking for whimsical and imaginative literature. They will read it again and again, and probably take it through the years with them, as we have done 'Alice.'" Mary Frank

+ Books p14 N 16 '30 550w

"Sir Bob is variously described; first as a tall story for children from nine to ninety; secondly as a cross between Alice in Wonderland and The Napoleon of Notting Hill; and then as an extravaganza which will 'prove a joy to connoisseurs of the ironical.' First we may say that, as a story, it is very tall indeed. . . In the second place, though the book is at times paradoxical and fantastic enough to recall things Chestertonian, the allusion to Alice is impertinent. . . Finally, it seems to us imprudent, to say the least, to claim for a work that it shall not only amuse children but shall 'prove a joy to connoisseurs of the ironical.'"

— New Statesman 36:117 N 1 '30 320w

"An epidemic seems to have run through the ranks of the serious writers this year, the symptom of the disease being that the victim must suddenly abandon his normal medium of expression and write a book for children. The result in such cases is usually a hybrid, which the perplexed publisher finally decides to label 'a book for children of all ages, from seven to seventy,' or words to that effect. There is considerable doubt whether real children enjoy such books." Ruth Seinfel

N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 200w

MADARIAGA, SALVADOR DE—Continued

"This is a story for children written, we suspect, with an eye to the entertainment of their parents, and, consequently, not apt to endear itself to the young. 'Sir Bob' bristles with whimsy, with occasional satiric jibes, and some of the conceits are amusing. But it seems a rather studied kind of nonsense, and we believe that most children would resent it. Lynd Ward's black and white illustrations are sophisticated and quite charming."

— Sat R of Lit 7:353 N 15 '30 200w

Spec 145:508 O 11 '30 200w

"Sir Bob, by Salvador de Madariaga, gets so entangled in its own whimsy that children are apt to trip their toes on every page." Beulah Amidon

— Survey 65:341 D 15 '30 20w

"'Sir Bob' is full of nonsense and complicated jokes; and if some of it is too tall for young heads they can miss out those bits and go on to something simpler."

Times [London] Lit Sup p982 N 20 '30 160w

MADARIAGA, SALVADOR DE. Spain. (Modern world) 507p $5 Scribner [21s Benn]

946 Spain 30-26959

A general study of modern Spain as influenced by the nature of the people, the topography, and the rulers. The book is divided into four parts: Land, people and history; "School and larder;" The elements of the reign of Alfonso XIII; and The reign of Alfonso XIII. The author is a Spanish scholar who has spent fifteen years collecting his material.

Booklist 27:100 N '30

"We doubt if any contemporary writer other than Senor de Madariaga could have given within so brief a compass such a vivid, readable, and, in the broadest sense, informative account of Spain and of the forces which direct its national life."

+ Bookm 72:91 S '30 400w

Reviewed by Jenny Ballou

Books p1 Jl 27 '30 1320w

"Mr. de Madariaga has preserved an admirable temper and has produced a book which is invaluable to students of a country which is at once European and extra-European—which cannot be separated from the Continent and yet stands outside the main stream of continental life." Sisley Huddleston

+ Christian Science Monitor p9 Je 7 '30 900w

"This latest volume in the 'Modern World Series' is bound to overshadow most other recent books on Spain in English, and to attract much attention, not only because of the recent developments in the Spanish question, but because of the reputation of the author. Madariaga is a writer who represents a rare type of political publicism. Without losing himself in details he attempts to get at the root of matters and to stress the psychological elements in history and international relations. . . There is much in this brilliant volume to interest the student of international relations. The chapters on the Moroccan question and on the vexed Catalan problem can be especially recommended."

+ Foreign Affairs 9:168 O '30 250w

"It is written from the standpoint of a man of talent, intellectual freedom and wit; it bites and illuminates at the same moment, and its whole sum is balanced and wholly convincing."

+ New Repub 65:227 Ja 7 '31 150w

"This notable contribution to the 'Modern World' series has all the qualities and a few of the defects which we might properly expect in the book of a highly intelligent patriot on his own country. Nobody can doubt the knowledge of Professor Salvador de Madariaga, and his critical faculties are unusually acute. Yet it is inevitable that he should have about Spain opinions as clear-cut as they are controversial. No richer and more suggestive account of the country has appeared in English, but occasionally statements are made which seem to go beyond the scope of volumes in this invaluable series."

+ — New Statesman 35:218 My 24 '30 1200w

"The volume is a fine, solid piece of historical writing, often brilliant; one does not have to agree with all his conclusions to admire the mind that is responsible for it. It is a book for people who are seriously interested in Spain to read and ponder, and it will interest any one who has ever done any thinking about the general problems of a satisfactory system of government for the human race." Herschel Brickell

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 26 '30 900w

Reviewed by F. L. Kluckhohn

N Y Times p1 Je 29 '30 1550w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 155:631 Ag 20 '30 100w

St Louis 28:246 O '30

"He is much less successful in his dealing with the past than with the present. Errors of fact are to be found on almost every page. But the lasting merits of the book are to be found in those portions of it which deal with the conditions of the present day. It certainly contains many opinions from which other authorities—both Spanish and foreign—would emphatically dissent; but the situation in the peninsula is at this moment so complicated that it would be quite impossible to paint a picture satisfactory to all. And we hasten to add that no one is better qualified to have opinions—and to express them—than Señor de Madariaga." R. B. Merriman

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:67 Ag 23 '30 1050w

"In everything that he writes the author of Englishmen: Frenchmen: Spaniards has a message of peculiar importance for our judgment of the world to-day. His study of Spain, besides being first-class craftsmanship within the bounds of the Modern World series, is immensely suggestive."

+ Spec 144:985 Je 14 '30 800w

"His new book will be widely read. It is admirably written, alive and sensitive throughout its five hundred pages. It is full of concise, luminous sentences which, although they may not immediately carry conviction, will be most convincing to those who know Spain best, and are often fraught with far-reaching implications."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p543 Jl 3 '30 2200w

MADDEN, JOHN THOMAS, and NADLER, ² MARCUS. Foreign securities; public and mortgage bank bonds—an analysis of the financial, legal and political factors. 452p $6 Ronald

332.6 Loans. Debts, Public. Mortgage banks. Banks and banking. Securities 29-20223

"Messrs. Madden and Nadler treat their main thesis—investment in foreign securities—under three heads. First they set forth the theory of international finance, then they analyze the technique of trading and finally they discuss the political and legal factors."—Am Econ R

"The authors, known for their professional work at New York University, are excellently qualified for the task which they assumed, and have acquitted themselves well. Until Foreign Securities was published, neither the investment nor the scholastic world had between two covers such a complete and thorough-going study of the subject." H. E. Fisk

+ Am Econ R 20:298 Je '30 1000w

Reviewed by Robert Weidenhammer

J Pol Econ 38:720 D '30 1000w

Special Libraries 21:345 N '30

MADELIN, LOUIS. Figures of the revolution; tr. from the French by Richard Curtis (Eng title: Revolutionaries, 1787-1799). 342p il $3 Macaulay [18s Arrowsmith]

944.04 France—History—Revolution. France —Biography 29-30571

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by Albert Guerard
Books p10 Ja 12 '30 800w
Cleveland Open Shelf p28 F '30

"The author excels in dramatic description, in irony, in contrasts and comparisons, in all the devices of style necessary to make figures live which are treated in isolation, apart from the history of their age. Nor is scholarship wanting. . . Unfortunately, all these good elements are overweighed in the present volume by two chief defects—one inherent, the other extrinsic. In the first place, all the author's capabilities seem directed towards popularization. . . The second great flaw from which the work suffers is its English dress. Never does one forget that it is a transliteration." J. M. Barzun
— + Hist Outlook 21:238 My '30 700w
New Statesman 34:614 F 15 '30 200w

Reviewed by C. W. Thompson
N Y Times p9 Mr 23 '30 800w
St Louis 28:79 Mr '30

"Anything that M. Madelin writes on the French Revolution is worth reading with care. His narrative history of that astonishing cataclysm is unequalled, and his character studies of the revolutionary leaders which now appear in a translation are most fascinating, even though the English might read more smoothly."
+ Spec 144:284 F 22 '30 820w

"These brilliant studies of several notable figures in the French Revolution were given as lectures to the Société des Conférences. No mention is made of the fact by the publishers of this workmanlike translation; and slight injustice is done to the author, who, no doubt properly assumed some historical knowledge of the French Revolution as a whole in his auditors, and therefore did not attempt closely to relate his subjects to clear historical backgrounds presented in sequence."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p135 F 20 '30 950w

"With an acute clearness of style and a great power of synthesis he describes these men in a few pages. The picture he makes of them is unforgettable. . . Yet the author uses no extraordinary tricks, he does not resort to great theories or to mysterious documents. Nearly all the facts he uses are well known. He speaks of them with accuracy, and with very little detail. It requires a really great mind and a fine artist to achieve what he has done." Bernard Fay
Yale R n s 19:629 spring '30 550w

MADIGAN, THOMAS F. Word shadows of the great; the lure of autograph collecting. 300p il $5 Stokes

091.5 Autographs—Collectors and collecting 30-11740

A book on autographs and autograph collecting by an expert on the hobby. Contains chapters on some notable collectors, advice on what to collect, how to know the genuine from the false, the most famous American autographs, specimens of the letters and autographs of presidents, generals, authors, and lesser lights, etc. The illustrations include facsimiles of some valuable manuscripts and signatures.

Booklist 27:8 S '30

"The book is not only the most authoritative on the subject but, also, seemingly incidentally, a mine of anecdotes and personalities."
+ Bookm 71:xxiii Ag '30 100w

"Mr. Madigan writes interestingly of the remarkable material of the great that he has handled. Dip into the pages of his book where you like and you are certain to strike some arresting or significant fragment of history. Most dealers in writing of their trade, especially dealers in books, autographs, furniture and pictures, balk at giving values or making predictions concerning the market. Mr. Madigan is very frank in this respect and the opinion of a dealer of his rank is worth having in these matters. His book will be indispensable to every collector." E. V. Mitchell
+ Books p6 My 4 '30 1000w
Christian Century 47:627 My 14 '30 110w

"The author has been a collector for more than twenty years and there seems to be no signature or document of any worth that has not passed through his hands some time or other. Mr. Madigan's book is crowded with much valuable and curious information, and the illustrations include facsimiles of valuable letters and manuscripts." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 3 '30 250w

"Even if we are not always in accord with Mr. Madigan's ideas, we have no right to carp, and we surely do not wish to appear ungrateful. The book is important, it deals in facts, plenty of them; it is authentic, it is free from extravagant statements and no collector of books or autographs can afford to ignore it. Its index makes it an excellent reference guide, and the numerous facsimiles, which are beautifully made, are of immense help to the amateur." Philip Brooks
+ N Y Times p2 Jl 20 '30 1800w
St Louis 28:201 S '30

"Mr. Madigan is renowned throughout two continents as a dealer in autographs, and he has drawn upon his experience of over twenty years to give us his ripe knowledge and matured opinion on almost every aspect of this engrossing hobby. He carries his learning lightly in an agreeable style, and his work will be enjoyed, not alone by collectors, but by many who are simply interested in the romance of famous names and in the memorials of the great." Richard Curle
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1214 Jl 19 '30 550w

MADOL, HANS ROGER, pseud. See Salomon, G.

MAERZ, ALOYS JOHN, and PAUL, MORRIS REA. Dictionary of color. 207p pl $12 McGraw

535.6 Color. Colors 30-16563

"Contains 56 colored plates, each divided into many small sections showing various gradations of colors and accompanied by an uncolored chart on which are printed the names given to the colors shown in the corresponding sections of the colored plate. Included are a brief description of color standardization and notes on the color names mentioned on the charts. The colors and names are said to represent the largest collection ever assembled. No attempt is made to advocate any special theory of color."—J Home Econ

Booklist 27:144 D '30

Reviewed by Richard Koch
Chem & Met Eng 37:697 N '30 550w

"The 'Dictionary of Color' of Maerz and Paul is exhaustive in scope and depth of treatment. The 7000 colors reproduced for use as reference standards cover the whole gamut of color sensation in just perceptible steps. They are easy of reference and in non-fading inks. The multitude (over 3000) of color names in use and proposed is very thoroughly and critically discussed, and when a name is rejected the reason is carefully stated. The index lists both active and obsolete names with date of origin and principal sponsors. Authorities are everywhere quoted. It is easy to believe that four laborious years were spent in the preparation of this work." P. G. Nutting
+ Ind & Eng Chem 22:918 Ag '30 320w

"A valuable reference book for anyone who wishes to relate colors with the names by which they are commonly identified."
+ J Home Econ 22:768 S '30 100w

MAERZ, A. J., and PAUL, M. R.—Continued

"A Dictionary of color appears to be a significant contribution in the field of color study. It is thorough and reveals definite nomenclature. It provides a great deal of source material through its bibliography. The plates are rendered in a most subtle manner and reflect the more subtle attitude toward color study today." Mildred Harrington

+ Library Q 1:108 Ja '31 380w

St Louis 28:213 S '30

MAETERLINCK, MAURICE. Life of the ant;
2 tr. by Bernard Miall. 282p $2.50 Day [6s Cassell]

595.796 Ants 30-26089

Maurice Maeterlinck attributes social instinct, intelligence and happiness—measured in terms of like human attributes—to the ant. He considers the ant's chief source of pleasure to lie in her ability to disgorge, and thus share with others, the food she has eaten. This, Maeterlinck maintains, is the "essential and fundamental act whence the social life, the virtues, the morality and the politics of the formicary are derived." The Life of the Ant completes Maeterlinck's trilogy on The social insects, the others being The Life of the Bee and The Life of the White Ant.

"Maeterlinck draws many lessons from the lives of the ants. Always a mystic, whether he is writing of human souls or of ants and creeping things, he is also always original. And nobody could write more beautiful or more musical and rhythmic prose." J. W. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 10 '30 1100w

"Three-quarters of M. Maeterlinck's book is expository, and for this we may be thankful. He writes with an admirable simplicity and terseness which professional entomologists would do well to copy. The standard books on ants are mostly quite unreadable. Amateurs of the subject will find that Maeterlinck's Life of the Ant and Forel's two-volume Social World of the Ants, read together, give the most information and enjoyment. Forel philosophises charmingly at times, but he leaves the ant's soul to look after itself. Maeterlinck's book, in spite of its rather over-solemn groping after truths, is a remarkably vivid and condensed piece of writing."

+ New Statesman 36:242 N 29 '30 800w

"Maeterlinck has literally followed the counsel of Solomon and has for years watched the ways of the ant. But the main body of his book is made up of descriptions taken from the highly specialized work of other men, from Huber the pioneer down to the patriarch Auguste Forel and our own William Morton Wheeler. Following in the wake of so many industrious observers, Maeterlinck has added a personal note, but no new substantive facts. He has condensed to about one-sixth the two big volumes of Forel, making a very readable book and adding philosophical reflections of real value." Charles Johnston

+ N Y Times p4 D 21 '30 1000w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 156:469 N 19 '30 130w

"They are not really ants about which M. Maeterlinck writes, but immortal nurslings of his own imagining. But he writes delightfully, and Mr. Miall is an excellent translator."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1031 D 4 '30 800w

MAETERLINCK, MAURICE. Magic of the stars; tr. by Alfred Sutro. 147p $2.50 Dodd [6s Allen, G.]

523 Astronomy. Stars. Cosmology. Earth 30-8878

An interpretation of the wonders of astronomy combined with the author's speculations upon the influences of the stars on the earth and the human race. He has taken into account the latest conclusions of such eminent scientists as Einstein, Jeans, Eddington, Millikan and others.

Booklist 26:383 Jl '30

"'The Magic of the Stars' is more than a clear, simplified summary of the factual findings of science in these infinities; it is a daring speculation, based upon these facts as to the future of man." Robert Raynolds

+ Books p31 Ap 13 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p5 My 24 '30 450w

Christian Century 47:659 My 21 '30 180w

"It is a survey, excellently told, and yet with a thesis of its own. The spiritual comfort that it gives may be cold comfort, but then it requires courage to be a mystic." James Thornton

+ Nation and Ath 47:88 Ap 19 '30 300w

"A book by a writer with the reputation of M. Maeterlinck must be approached with respect, but to be quite frank we must say that we have left this little volume with our respect greatly diminished. Our objections to it are two: namely, that the exposition contains far more inaccurate than accurate statements, and secondly, that the science and mysticism—between which no connexion is shown—are so intermingled that the unenlightened reader cannot tell what is a generally accepted conclusion of science and what a fancy of the author's." H. D.

— Nature 126:sup528 O 4 '30 350w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:15 Ap '30

"M. Maeterlinck presents and discusses these things with a simplicity, power, rhythm and beauty of statement and a poetic quality of style that make his book, in some respects, one of the most appealing and interesting of all that he has written in this category of themes."

+ N Y Times p23 Ap 6 '30 380w

"M. Maeterlinck is unexcelled as a guide through the twilight of the gods. He discusses all the new researches into the properties of electricity, gravitation, and the orbits of the stars with a student's care and a poet's insight. He dramatizes for us the fourth dimension. . . To anyone with imagination, and joy in using it, M. Maeterlinck is indeed a delightful mentor."

+ Spec 144:391 Mr 8 '30 150w

"The main value of M. Maeterlinck's book is that the non-philosophic reader is led by gradual and masterly exposition to become aware, dimly and picturesquely, of a spatial-temporal dimension. Speculations upon human destiny follow that trend of evolutionary theory which is no longer a fashion. Those who seek a literary pleasure in this book will be disappointed, for imagination cannot but be ineffectual in voids beyond the decimal and the zero."

Times [London] Lit Sup p390 My 8 '30 480w

MAGILL, MARCUS, pseud. See Hill, B.

MAGNUS, LAURIE. Jews in the Christian era; from the first to the eighteenth century, and their contribution to its civilization. 432p $5 Dutton [15s Benn]

296 Jews—History. Jews—Civilization 30-12403

Tracing the successive movements of thought over eighteen centuries of Jewish history, and their influence upon Christianity, Mr Magnus stresses the importance of the medieval Jewish philosophers, and brilliantly handles a critical comparison of Christian and Jewish poetry. He closes with a discussion of the Zionist movement.

"Mr. Magnus does not pretend to exhaust his subject. But he gives us a comprehensive survey of Jewish history and of its part in the spiritual progress of the world, written with warmth and grace and enriched by frequent references to the general history and literatures of Europe. Intelligent readers are sure to enjoy both its wealth of information and charm of style and to rise from its pages with a desire for more." H. G. Enelow

+ Books p24 Ap 20 '30 550w

"That there will be many to agree with him in his belief that Hebraism and Hellenism must remain in permanent alliance for the sake of civilization is certain. That many others will regret his denial of Zionism is equally certain. And that he has interpreted a vital problem with honesty, intelligence, and literary art is most certain of all." Leo Gershoy
+ Current Hist 32:203 Ap '30 750w

"Dr. Magnus's work, indeed, ranks very high both as historical thinking and as historical writing. . . His book, however, through its essay form and its presupposition of a detailed acquaintance with the events and personalities of Jewish history, is taken out of the range of the general reader. . . Within its limits, however, the book is excellent, and it is distinguished by an admirable style." Isidor Schneider
+ Nation 131:228 Ag 27 '30 250w

"His book is clear, vigorous, and remarkably impartial. He sees both sides, and makes every allowance for the persecutors. Though his style is perhaps a little flamboyant, he is always calm and quiet when some indignation, and a few dithyrambs, might well have been excused."
+ New Statesman 34:580 F 8 '30 450w

"One of the most scholarly yet readable books in this field which has yet appeared. . . We do not recommend this to the average reader but for the earnest student of the forces which have made this modern era it will repay some hours of study." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 156:191 O 1 '30 80w

"Mr. Magnus has written a very able and impressive book."
+ Spec 144:94 Ja 18 '30 130w

"The judgment of the present author is well balanced and his facts are accurate. His style is attractive, containing just enough wit and epigram to please and not enough to cloy. His book will give pleasure and profit to many."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1039 D 5 '29 250w

World Tomorrow 13:281 Je '30 40w

MAGOFFIN, RALPH VAN DEMAN, and DAVIS, EMILY CLEVELAND. Magic spades; the romance of archaeology (Eng title: Romance of archaeology). 348p il $5 Holt [18s Bell, G.]

913 Archeology 29-30700

Presenting, in a style with a human-interest appeal, the romantic adventure of the archeologist, the authors of this volume outline the more important archeological achievements in Europe, the Orient, and America, with illustrations of rare discoveries made in recent investigations.

Booklist 26:199 F '30

"The pleasure of reading Magic Spades is enhanced by the excellently reproduced and carefully placed illustrations. The value of the volume is increased by the inclusion of a list giving the name and nature of recent archaeological findings and the museums, throughout the world, in which they may be seen."
+ Bookm 70:xii F '30 170w

"The authors have both set themselves the goal of making painless reading of archeology, but they have attained their ends somewhat differently. Miss Davis's sections are competent, varying from the rather thin account of the Mound Builders in a field where adequate scientific summaries are lacking, to the very good popular account of the Southwest, where Kidder's survey could be relied upon. . . Professor Magoffin has attained his object by a more anecdotal method. He incorporates a great deal of factual material, all of which, in the interests of easy reading, he presents in unsystematic fashion."
+ Books p10 Mr 2 '30 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p148 D '29

N Y Times p2 Ap 13 '30 480w

"A popular account of recent great archaeological finds in Egypt, Greece, Mesopotamia, Asia Minor and elsewhere, well presented (if we discount a slight tendency on the authors' part to pun and wisecrack)." W. R. Brooks
+ — Outlook 153:548 D 4 '29 60w

Pratt p29 summer '30

"The book is thoroughly popular in style; in fact, it appears to suffer at times from an attempt to make it lively, but it is vivid and carries the reader along swiftly and sometimes breathlessly. . . The most vulnerable point in this part of the book lies in the puns and captions." M. H. Swindler
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:560 D 14 '29 1050w

Wis Lib Bul 26:103 Mr '30

MAHABHARATA. Bhagavadgītā. The Bhagavad-gita; [tr. from the Sanskrit by Arthur W. Ryder]. 139p $2 Univ. of Chicago press [9s Cambridge univ. press]

891.2 29-24224

"As the utterances of Jesus are to Christians so is the 'Song of the Blessèd One' to Hindus. Although of special importance to the sectaries of the god Vishnu, its verses are on the lips of others, so truly does it voice common Hindu ideas. The theme of the Bhagavad-Gita is man's relation to God; the teacher is God himself incarnate as Krishna. . . The translation, being in verse, is of necessity free, yet does not depart objectionably from exactness."—Books

"Mr. Ryder has a gift for translation that comes from a genuine feeling for literary values and a command of English. Through his books he is, on the one hand, interpreting India to the West, and, on the other, introducing some excellent literature to a new circle of readers."
+ Books p15 D 29 '29 300w

Reviewed by Charles Johnston
N Y Times p18 F 23 '30 1100w

"Though it is the third new version to appear within a year, Mr. Ryder's verse translation is welcome as the first really popular poetic rendering to be based on accurate scholarship, and the insight which is born of sympathy." Kenneth Saunders
+ Sat R of Lit 6:651 Ja 18 '30 1300w

World Tomorrow 13:186 Ap '30 50w

MAHAN, J. ALEXANDER. Vienna, yesterday and today. 387p il $2.50 Brentano's

914.36 Vienna—Description 29-26889

"An informing little volume by a young American doctor studying in Vienna. The chapters on Vienna's history, art, architecture, present day social and financial conditions, individuality, hospitals, clinics and specialists are written with gayety and an attractive personal touch but the print is dim and the illustrations are not well reproduced."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Booklist 26:65 N '29

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 25 '29 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p151 D '29

MAHON, TERENCE, ed. Cold feet. 249p $2.50 Coward-McCann [7s 6d Chapman]

Autobiographical novel of a captain in the British army written just before his execution for cowardice under fire, and consigned to his army chaplain. The story carries him back to his boyhood days in a dame school where unwholesome punishments had broken his nerve and spirit and planted the seeds of his cowardice. An addendum by his padre describes the event which, during the moment he was awaiting execution by the firing squad, transformed the condemned man into a hero.

Reviewed by Lawrence Lee
Books p20 Ap 13 '30 400w

"All the causes for the cowardice are shown—social, religious, political and sexual. There is no mass of excuses offered, no plea for mercy; it is the simple presentation of a coward telling why he is what he is."
+ Boston Transcript p3 My 24 '30 220w

MAHON, TERENCE, ed.—Continued
Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p11m F 15 '30 150w

"Whether the story is authentic or not is of no importance whatever. The author's intention was to make what he called an auto-psychoanalysis of the basis for his cowardice. In doing that he reviews his life. He makes out a very thorough case for himself as a coward. But his observations are too close to the usual generalizations about cowardice to make a strong impression."
N Y Times p9 Je 8 '30 500w

"The first third of the book is taken up with a description of a truly loathsome dame-school. At this time of day, when dame-schools are hardly the rage, the exposure will not help the cause of education, as it is impossible to identify the school. The war experiences of the officer seem to be based more on imagination, but are equally unpleasant. The story has very little literary merit but we can sympathize with the earnest desire of the author to rub into teachers and parents the importance of child-psychology."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p261 Mr 28 '29 120w

MAINE WRITERS RESEARCH CLUB. Maine, past & present. 321p il $2 Heath
917.41 Maine—Description and travel. Maine—History 29-10234

"Each of the articles is written by a resident of the particular place described, or by a near-neighbor; each is illustrated by small but clear half tones. The essays on the 97 towns and 16 counties are preceded by a short account of the State's history, and one on Maine To-day, which is mainly economic. There are also a number of poems on the State, a catechism (with answers) and a good index."—Portland Evening News

Booklist 26:353 Je '30

"It should serve not only the school children for whom it is largely intended but visitors to the State who wish to know outstanding facts about the villages they travel through." E. N. Snow
Portland Evening News p5 Ja 22 '30 170w
Pratt p31 autumn '30

MALAM, CHARLES. Upper pasture. 84p $2 Farrar
811 30-7433

Lyrics that repeat the background of New England countryside established by Mr Malam in his previous book of poetry, Spring Plowing. The present volume contains also a number of narrative poems in the section entitled Neighbors.

"He has his roots in the soil, directness and dignity of expression, a somewhat more mature and impersonal outlook than most younger poets. At present he lacks intensity, and he has not developed either a strikingly original imagery or language. His natural tendency will be to deepen emotionally and to grow in intellectual power."
+ Books p12 Je 8 '30 400w

"They seldom climb to the level of proper poetry; but the local suggestiveness of these tales in verse is often right and considerable. No one heretofore has made such adept use of the colloquial speech of New England, unless it is Jonathan Leonard." Vincent McHugh
+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Je 7 '30 100w

"There is much of the true poet lurking deep down in Malam, but it comes to the surface only now and then, and a bit shyly. We suspect that he is fairly young (there being an age limit for Rhodes scholars) and that when he steadies down after the confusion of new scenes, the stimulus he has derived from wider contacts will work in his naturally serious mind to the production of really very fine things."
— + N Y Times p16 Mr 30 '30 300w

"Charles Malam has made but little progress since his 'Spring Plowing' appeared two years ago. That volume gave ground for hope, and so does this; but one would like to see Mr. Malam more unmistakably outgrowing his faults. 'Upper Pasture' shows the same slightly juvenile concern with cosmic problems, the same obviousness in pointing morals, the same lack of genuine poetic substance." Granville Hicks
— + N Y World p10m Mr 30 '30 200w

"Most of these poems have touches of mild philosophy; all of them show the author's love of man and of beauty; few convince the reader of originality or real creative powers in the author."
+ — Poetry 36:169 Je '30 100w

MALCOLM, SIR IAN ZACHARY. Lord Balfour; a memory. 124p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Macmillan
B or 92 Balfour, Arthur James Balfour, 1st earl of 30-25255

A memoir of Lord Balfour which the author describes as "a personal impression of Lord Balfour's character, studied and admired by a friend, a parliamentary follower, and a private secretary whose first meeting with his future Chief dates back to 1890."

Reviewed by Gilbert Thomas
Nation and Ath 48:112 O 18 '30 120w

"This tribute contains many repetitions, since no one can praise a friend through sixteen chapters, even though they are very short, without saying some things over and over. Sir Ian Malcolm is, as we should expect, much less successful when dealing with the parliamentary leader than with the war-time Foreign Secretary, the head of special missions to America, and the centre of admiring circles in Paris and Geneva. The illustrations in this pleasant little volume are good."
+ — New Statesman 35:482 Jl 19 '30 200w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson
+ — N Y Times p3 D 7 '30 600w

"This study, written by one who was intimate with Lord Balfour for many years, contains little that is new, but it may well serve to direct attention to the more remarkable phases of the statesman's later career. But in common justice to Sir Ian Malcolm it must be admitted that he is not writing a full biography, and within rather narrow limits has done his work well." Charles Petrie
+ — Sat R 149:823 Je 28 '30 750w

"Sir Ian Malcolm has compiled a slight but very welcome memoir of his beloved master and elder friend. . . We can thank him for a book that has nothing heavy in it; and, still better, although it is very 'personal,' there is no trace of the modern publicity-hunting in matters where 'personal' should mean 'private.' He is a hero-worshipper, but we profit thereby, for this adds zest to the book, and eliminates the temptation to egotism to which every Boswell is naturally prone."
+ Spec 144:1056 Je 28 '30 850w
Times [London] Lit Sup p543 Jl 3 '30 1100w

MALIN, JAMES CLAUDE. United States after the World war. 584p $3.40 Ginn
973.91 United States—History—1913-. United States—Foreign relations. United States—Economic conditions. League of nations 30-20107

A text book on the first decade following the World war. In part one the author takes up the United States in relation to the League of nations; in part two, domestic policies after the war; part three, the foreign policies of the United States after the war; part four, politics and political theories.

"As a chronological compilation it is excellent, but what an opportunity was missed for a vital appraisal of our post-war history!" John Carter

— + Outlook 156:110 S 17 '30 380w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:12 O '30 50w

MALISOFF, WILLIAM MARIAS. Calendar of doubts and faiths. 359p $2.50 Watt, G. Howard

121 Philosophy, Modern. Science—Philosophy 30-11833

From the point of view that "doubt is a constructive element in the evolution of faith," Mr Malisoff speculates, in discursive and informal fashion, about art, society, religion, science and other philosophical matters.

"Here is a most agreeable bedside book for gentle souls who will ever be turning the problems of science and philosophy this way and that, a gay, polite and wise volume to whet one's logic and refresh one's spirit."

+ Books p10 Je 15 '30 150w

N Y Evening Post p9m My 31 '30 50w

St Louis 28:201 S '30

MALKUS, MRS ALIDA SIMS. Dark star of Itza; the story of a pagan princess. 217p il $2.50 Harcourt

Mayas—Fiction 30-25187

Pictures life in ancient Yucatan when the Mayan cities were in their prime. The young heroine, Nicté, is the daughter and pupil of the chief priest, and altho her city falls into the hands of the Toltecs, Nicté's own love story ends happily.

Booklist 27:213 Ja '31

Bookm 72:xxvii N '30 80w

"The story itself, with its tale of the beautiful brave princess, her loyalty and courage, is a treasure house of romantic fact and folklore. The author knows the land she writes about. She has gone to infinite pains to get for her book a true historic background, and has worked it all into colorful life and action."

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 3 '30 150w

Reviewed by Lindsay Skinner

N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 80w

" 'The Dark Star of Itza' is that rare thing, a historical story for young people, written with imagination and a thoroughly sustained atmosphere. The author has studied what the archaeologists have to say about the Mayan civilization and has visited the Mayan ruins in Yucatan with one of the Carnegie expeditions. . . The fine illustrations by Lowell Houser, for three years the official artist of the Carnegie staff in Yucatan, are adapted from actual designs and decorations of ancient Mayan art; together with the excellent printing and arrangement, they make the book one that is outstanding in appearance as well as in content." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p12 O 12 '30 230w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Coatsworth

Sat R of Lit 7:438 D 6 '30 280w

"The author has given us the glory of a vanished race, their strange customs and beliefs, with a human touch that should make this book for the young reader what it was for the reviewer, a real literary treat." A. D. Marvin

+ Survey 65:342 D 15 '30 100w

MALKUS, MRS ALIDA SIMS. Pirates' port; a tale of old New York. 251p il $2 Harper 29-23878

Anneken Jans was fourteen when she discovered evidences of smuggling on her father's manor. The discovery involved her in a mysterious and exciting adventure, from which she returned none the worse for wear. The scene of the story is mainly New Amsterdam in the year 1700.

"An interesting story which tells of life along the Hudson in the days when smuggling was a common practice."

+ Cleveland Open Shelf p48 Mr '30

"This is a lively, well-written tale of New York at the beginning of the eighteenth century. Without too obvious an attempt to supply historic background, the author is successful in giving a vivid picture of life in New Amsterdam and in the Dutch manors on the Hudson. She occasionally sacrifices clarity to swiftness of action, the scene changes rapidly and the story is told largely by conversation. This will give the book a charm for some young readers, others may have difficulty in following the plot." A. T. Eaton

+ — N Y Times p10 Jl 20 '30 200w

Sat R of Lit 6:460 N 23 '29 80w

Wis Lib Bul 26:45 Ja '30

MALKUS, MRS ALIDA SIMS. Timber line. 247p il $2.50 Harcourt

29-22149

A story for girls in which Dawn O'Neil, the daughter of a Rocky Mountain forest ranger, helps her father in the face of many difficulties to preserve her beloved forests from encroaching civilization.

"Excellently done." O. M. Fuller

+ N Y World p11m D 8 '29 20w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker

Outlook 153:590 D 11 '29 40w

St Louis 28:304 D '30

Sat R of Lit 6:460 N 23 '29 90w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 15 '29 20w

MALLAM, PHOSPHOR. Approach to poetry. 168p $1.50 Crowell

808.1 Poetry 30-9225

A treatise on the appreciation of the spirit and mechanics of verse, written for teachers and students of poetry. Contents: Words as sound: I: Alliteration, assonance, and rhyme; II: Metre and rhythm; Words as meaning; Feeling; Thought; Imagination; Beauty.

"The occasional lapses into sentimentality will be forgiven the author for the sake of his freedom from pedantry, his well-assimilated knowledge, and his genuine feeling for great poetry."

+ — Bookm 71:xxii Je '30 150w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 7 '30 320w

MALLET, SIR CHARLES EDWARD. Mr. Lloyd George; a study. 313p $3.50 Dutton [9s Benn]

B or 92 Lloyd George, David. European war, 1914-1918—Great Britain [30-14618]

This study of the political record of Great Britain's wartime prime minister is written for the most part in disparagement of its subject. Sir Charles Mallet acknowledges that insofar as, during the war, "Mr Lloyd George kept alive and represented the unconquerable spirit of the nation, he has a place in history which no one will dispute." As statesman, as peace maker and as the leader of the Liberal party, this critic finds Lloyd George lacking in stability and sincerity.

Bookm 72:vi D '30 100w

Nation and Ath 46:868 Mr 22 '30 550w

"Books of this kind are inevitably wearisome. Powerful invective can be interesting, and at times most readable, but a 'study' which affects to be a judicial estimate, yet is in fact a long-drawn-out and rancorously partisan attack, can only bore the ordinary reader. Mild and half-concealed detraction cannot be anything but dull. To portray Mr. Lloyd George as a consistently self-seeking villain is quite as far from the truth as it would be to portray his as a consistently selfless saint. Attacks of this sort are merely tiresome irrelevancies—and very expensive at nine shillings! Incidentally, Sir Charles is frequently inaccurate."

MALLET, C. E.—Continued
— New Statesman 34:508 Ja 25 '30 500w
St Louis 28:218 S '30
Sat R 149:174 F 8 '30 180w

"Sir Charles Mallet writes as one who believes 'that the best hope for the character and independence of Liberalism in future is to dissociate itself from the political fortunes of Mr. Lloyd George.' And no one who reads this book can impute undue prejudice to the author. He gives credit to his subject for the many supreme qualities which he possesses, and his criticism of Mr. Lloyd George's political record is candid but not unfair."
+ Spec 144:169 F 1 '30 1150w
Times [London] Lit Sup p86 F 6 '30 450w

MAN, HENRI DE. Joy in work; tr. from the German by Eden and Cedar Paul. 224p $2 Holt [18s 6d Allen, G.]
331.015 Work. Psychology, Applied 29-29586
For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:146 Ja '30
Bookm 71:xiii Mr '30 80w

"In the opinion of the reviewer the book is quite decidedly tinged with the class ideology of the European mind. Karl Marx is still a bogey which must be banished into limbo before one can confine his attention to the study of the industrial situations. The author seems to be too anxious to show that his data in no way substantiate his worst fear, namely, that the cause for the worker's distaste in his work may be rooted in capitalism." F. J. Roethlisberger
Harvard Business R 9:125 O '30 700w

"An interesting thesis is somewhat marred by extravagant phrasing." P. L. M.
+ — Nature 125:667 My 3 '30 200w

"Herr de Man writes forcefully and interestingly and with vital concern in his theme. Most of the time, too, he keeps his feet on the ground and his theories well bridled by facts. His book ought to interest American students of labor problems, partly because of the insight it gives into the vast difference between American and German conditions of labor, but more for its author's large-visioned and illuminating treatment of his theme."
+ N Y Times p26 Ja 12 '30 500w
Pratt p10 summer '30
Wis Lib Bul 25:407 D '29

MANEKJI NASARVANJI DHALA. Our perfecting world; Zarathushtra's way of life. 366p $5 (21s) Oxford
901 Civilization—History. Religions. Sociology—History. Zoroastrianism 30-15124

"A series of sociological and evolutionary studies collated with the principles of Zoroastrianism by the High Priest of the Parsees at Karachi. The keynote of Zoroastrianism is the conflict of good and evil. 'The existence of "evil,"' Dr. Dhalla writes, 'is the pivotal problem of the philosophy of life.' Is evil real or illusory, a mere negation or a positive entity, a diminution of good or an actual opposition to it? Zoroastrianism teaches its actual reality. The opposing forces of good and evil, personified as Ormazd and Ahriman, are at war in the world and in the nature of man, and our duty lies in aiding and serving the former. On these lines [the author] reviews the course of human history and discusses the evolution of religion, mind, society, economic and physical life."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"The book is an exposition of Dr. Dhalla's philosophy of life, interesting not so much for offering the solution of life's problems as for exemplifying the attitude of a devout, highly educated, widely read Zoroastrian toward the troubles of this confusing vale of tears in which we live. In some ways it is comparable to the more sober variety of inspirational books proceeding from the pens of ardent Christian divines who must justify their faith; in neither case do we have a philosophy free of religious prepossessions."
+ Books p16 O 12 '30 300w
Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '30 850w

"Dr. Dhalla writes classical English of great purity. He is to be complimented on a literary achievement of value."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p738 S 18 '30 200w

MANHATTAN COMPANY, NEW YORK. "Manna-hatin"; the story of New York. 269p il gratis Bank of Manhattan co, 31 Union sq, N.Y.
974.71 New York (city)—History 30-1915

A history of the city of New York from the time of Hudson and other early explorers to the present. The book is issued by the Bank of Manhattan company to celebrate the opening of its skyscraper in Wall Street.

"It is cleverly designed and well illustrated and is a short, concise and interesting story of the settlement and development of the city of New York from its beginning to the present day."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 1 '30 230w
Pratt p35 summer '30

"This is a brightly written retelling of the history of New York, meant to be suggestive and colorful rather than exhaustive or productive of new material. For so brief and general a narrative the various aspects of the city's development are well brought together."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 F 7 '30 100w

MANLY, GARDENER BURNELL. Aviation from the ground up. 373p il $3.50 Drake, F.J.
629.13 Aeronautics. Airplanes 29-15256

"A practical instruction and reference work on aviation and allied subjects, including theory of flight, details of airplane construction, airplane engines, rigging, instruments, weather forecasting, aerial navigation, stunts, how to learn flying, parachutes, air commerce regulations and a dictionary of aviation words and terms, written in plain understandable English."—Subtitle

Booklist 26:191 F '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p138 N '30
N Y New Tech Bks 14:51 O '29

MANLY, WILLIAM LEWIS. Death Valley in '49; an important chapter of California pioneer history; the autobiography of a pioneer, detailing his life from a humble home in the Green Mountains to the gold mines of California and particularly reciting the sufferings of the band of men, women and children who gave Death Valley its name; with foreword by John Steven McGroarty. 523p $3.50 Hebberd
917.94 California—Gold discoveries. Death Valley, California. Overland journeys to the Pacific 30-4543

The autobiography of a man who, in his youth, was a member of the pioneer band that crossed Death Valley to California in 1849. Manly describes the hardships of the journey across the continent from the Middle West, and tells of his and Rogers's experiences when they were selected to attempt a first crossing of the Valley. After reaching California Manly became a successful prospector and rancher. The first edition of the book was published in 1894.

Booklist 26:407 Jl '30
Reviewed by Avery Craven
Books p12 Jl 27 '30 230w

"The chapters picturing San Francisco and the mining camps of California in the first years of the gold rush are among the most graphic in the book and are a valuable contribution to the history of the times. Voluminous the autobiography is, but it is thoroughly readable throughout." Uffington Valentine

+ N Y Times p7 F 9 '30 1450w

MANN, HEINRICH. Royal woman; tr. from the German by Arthur J. Ashton. 320p $2 Macaulay

30-14093

"'The Royal Woman' is a skilfully executed social comedy played in an atmosphere of impending doom. The time is shortly after the Franco-Prussian war. Consul West and his lovely French wife are each in conflict with powers of darkness. The consul is entangled in questionable speculation. His girl wife, victim of her instability and romanticism, finds herself through her flirtations, fears and fancies enmeshed in intrigue. A play based on the fortunes of Napoleon III and the Empress Eugénie, which is in rehearsal throughout the novel and which is being presented when the climax occurs, is like a grotesque shadow cast by the actual, living drama in which the amateur players are involved."—Nation

"The older brother of the Nobel Prize winner is a very good novelist when he chooses to be and a very bad one at other times. The brothers share a wholesome respect for the bourgeois background, both are representative of an older and more humane tradition in German letters than the present. But beyond this comparison is odious. Heinrich Mann is usually in a hurry and Thomas Mann is not."

— Books p14 S 21 '30 250w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p143 N '30

"Perhaps in its original language the beauty of the style serves to bring about a full emotional response to the symbolism. In its English version, however, the overtones of the novel have a hollow ring."

— Nation 130:686 Je 11 '30 220w

New Repub 63:298 Jl 23 '30 100w

Outlook 155:67 My 14 '30 350w

"The narrative contains many interesting and subtle passages though as a whole it lacks the tragic effectiveness of Thomas Mann's often more lurid style. It will appeal to a quieter and no doubt smaller public, yet its translation is distinctly a service and Mr. Ashton has performed it exceedingly well."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:23 Ag 2 '30 500w

MANN, KLAUS. Alexander; a novel of Utopia; [tr. from the German by Marion Saunders]. 322p $2 Brewer

Alexander the Great—Fiction 30-32137

A semi-historical presentation of the life of Alexander the Great. The book describes the influence of his much-feared father, Philip, and that of his strange mother, Olympias, upon the boy Alexander. The main contention of the book is that the need for conquest arose from Alexander's thwarted boyhood friendship with a disdainful young Greek, Clitus.

Bookm 72:x D '30 30w

"The son of Thomas Mann has woven a gorgeous veil compounded of delicate and glowing colors and echoing with the brazen trumpets and the tender lyres of the ancient world. Klaus Mann accepts Alexander as a genius to be pictured and not as a soldier to be scolded. He writes a many colored history that flows in a rich stream from the licentious court of Macedonia, the cynical frivolity of Athens, all the way to the perfumed splendor of Babylonia and across the barren desert of Bactria to the incredible opulence of India." Donald Douglas

+ Books p6 N 30 '30 350w

"It would seem that Klaus Mann has made the mistake of interpreting the virile Greek type of homosexual according to the effeminate modern man-woman. Aside from the matter of interpretation, however, it is extremely doubtful if Klaus Mann, though he is still very young, will ever succeed to his father's throne. His work reflects an unfortunate mixture of timidity and resentment."

— Nation 131:712 D 24 '30 220w

"'Alexander' is a historical narrative of considerable charm and vigor, original in conception and genuinely imaginative." Edwin Seaver

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d N 29 '30 120w

"It is all highly stylized, remote, unreal. Sometimes it is rather awkward, but it is difficult to say how much of the apparent stumbling after effect is due to the translator and how much to the author. Possibly the original has subtleties which defy translation. The atmosphere of the book is decadent, full of that 'sweetly stale odor' described as penetrating all the nooks and alleys of the Babylon which Alexander conquered."

— N Y Times p9 N 30 '30 420w

"The young author's ability to write quick, picturesque narrative will not be lost as the years go by, but the painful juvenility of his conception may be expected to vanish. The story of Alexander, based, of course, on Plutarch's Life, is told from a particular angle of abnormality which is recognized in the first few pages of the book."

— Outlook 156:506 N 26 '30 280w

MANN, MARGARET. Introduction to cataloging and the classification of books. (Lib. curriculum studies) 424p $3 A.L.A.

025.3 Cataloging. Classification—Books

30-26370

A creative cataloger of broad experience and vision, has lifted these two vital subjects out of the region of dull and lifeless discussion to which they are accustomed and given them new meaning. Miss Mann's book covers both principles and methods. It discusses the Cutter, Decimal, and Library of Congress systems of classification, dictionary and classified catalogs, the various kinds of entry, L. C. cards and their use, arrangement of cards, and the routine equipment, administration and organization of the catalog department. Thought questions and references to suggested reading accompany each chapter.

Booklist 26:297 My '30

"A sustained effort is made to present the cataloging and classification of books as instruments for bridging the gap between the library collection and the library patron. Miss Mann has succeeded generally in avoiding the inevitable pitfalls confronting an author of a book on these subjects, those of over-emphasis of detail at the expense of an even development of the whole subject and dogmatic outlining of methods." T. L. Edwards

+ Library J 55:464 My 15 '30 150w

"Miss Mann is to be congratulated on the creditable completion of what must have been a task of exceptional difficulty. Aside from early textbooks in library science, usually restricted to cataloging, the present is the first really exhaustive study dealing exclusively with this topic." J. C. M. Hanson

+ Library J 55:464 My 15 '30 200w

"The book introduces as vital, interesting, human, and yet dignified, the often misunderstood subjects of cataloging and classification." J. C. Pressey

+ Library J 55:464 My 15 '30 180w

"The textbook as a whole is an exceptionally fine piece of work. . . Chapters thirteen to eighteen furnish information to be found nowhere in cataloging literature except scattered through numerous books and periodicals. These chapters are a veritable mine of information and suggestions. To those just organizing or reorganizing the work of catalog departments where the latest and best methods may be introduced all at one time, these suggestions will be invaluable." Ruth Wallace

+ Library J 55:464 My 15 '30 150w

MANN, MARGARET—Continued

"The physical makeup of the book is excellent. The style is lucid and to the point, clearness being gained by the use of a wealth of illustrative material. The book is fundamental and suggestive and will clear the way for the interested student to seek wider and more advanced fields of cataloguing endeavor." Grace Kelley

+ Library Q 1:94 Ja '31 150w

MANN, THOMAS. Early sorrow; tr. from the German by Herman George Scheffauer. 68p $1.50 Knopf [5s Secker]

30-15223

"In subject Early Sorrow is the most intangible, evanescent thing in the world—the first utterly innocent uncomprehended intimations of sexual love in the heart of a child. Thomas Mann has touched his theme of gossamer with the light hand of genius. Likewise the subtle spiritual and emotional relation between the little girl and her father is shown with a clairvoyance which at the same time proves the exceedingly fine timbre of the writer's own mind."—Outlook

Reviewed by B. R. Redman
Books p10 Mr 9 '30 100w

"The story moves slowly, but it is never dull. It meanders along leisurely, pleasantly stopping every now and then to explain or to illustrate a trait of character. These digressions do not at first seem to be germane to the story, but they serve to give a single vivid, forceful impression to the reader."

Boston Transcript p2 Je 18 '30 550w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine
Nation and Ath 46:320 N 30 '29 170w

"An exquisite skill has gone into the development of this simple episode. The story itself will bear comparison with Mann's longest and best-sustained efforts. It combines the qualities of gravity and humanity which are the characteristics of true narrative art." Peter Quennell

+ New Statesman 34:535 F 1 '30 470w

"I find it hard to be moderate in praise of this story, which seems to me the finest that has come out of Europe and America since the war. Irony is the keynote of all Mann's work and nowhere does his mastery of the form stand out with more cunning simplicity. I have read and re-read the story and always I am astonished at the seeming carelessness of its approach, the almost facetious handling of the material, the growing awareness on the part of the reader that the story lies not in what is said, but in what is not said, the denouement suddenly coming head-on upon us at top speed, like a locomotive turning a curve and finding us dawdling on the tracks. The final impact is terrific." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p11m F 15 '30 280w

"It is with the greatest admiration that we follow the unfolding of this outwardly simple, inwardly complex story. Mann is here that most subtle of artists, the man who endows with tremendous import words, actions, gestures that pass at first almost unnoticed and that seem, until examined, quite trivial." Clinton Simpson

+ N Y World p10m Mr 9 '30 350w

"Early Sorrow has been previously published in a collection of stories called Children and Fools and although a complete and artistically perfect tale it loses something of its significance, like a motif in a large design, when separated from the group in which it was an integral part of the author's pattern. The reader must necessarily make certain mental adjustments when such a slight and delicate story has to bear the weight of a whole volume. We must regretfully ask whether this ethereal story should have to face the world on its own!"

+ — Outlook 154:348 F 26 '30 280w

Pratt p40 summer '30

"'Early Sorrow' is a slight but enchanting sketch, a small but worthy contribution to its author's distinguished achievement." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 148:587 N 16 '29 300w

"The book is a masterpiece of distillation—a kind of Benedictine made out of the bizarre essences of age, youth and childhood." V. S. Pritchett

+ Spec 143:784 N 23 '29 80w

"A story which is slightly more mystifying than is the author's habit. Taken in conjunction with the general sketch of 'these desolate, distracted times,' in which the price of eggs is reckoned in millions of marks, it serves to account for the curiously emotional emphasis on an otherwise slight incident."

Times [London] Lit Sup p1096 D 26 '29 580w

MANN, THOMAS. Three essays; tr. from the German by H. T. Lowe-Porter. 261p $3 Knopf

834 Goethe, Johann Wolfgang. Tolstoi, Leo Nikolaievich, count. Frederick II, the Great, king of Prussia. Occult sciences 29-25965

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:230 Mr '30

Reviewed by G. T. Hellman
Books p4 Ja 12 '30 850w

"In the essay on Goethe and Tolstoi we have real criticism, real interpretation, derived from the application of the most difficult of all critical approaches—comparison. Two geniuses of different nations, two different worlds—yet what profound moral, mental and artistic affinities this erudite and penetrating German critic, himself a genius, reveals in the course of his illuminating comparisons." Francis Snow

+ Current Hist 31:838 F '30 230w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:12 F '30

St Louis 28:77 Mr '30

Reviewed by Hermann Weigand
Yale R n s 19:619 spring '30 700w

MANNIN, ETHEL EDITH (MRS J. A. PORTEOUS). Children of the earth. 329p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Jarrolds]

30-12992

A story about the lives of fisher folk in the Channel Islands which tells of the love and marriage of Jean le Camillon and his wife Marie, a pair of passionate lovers, and the fate of their five children.

Booklist 27:161 D '30

"Miss Mannin has allowed words to get in her way. What effect the book achieves, and it is certainly not without force, it achieves because she knows her people and feels with them, and because she has been able to transmit that knowledge and feeling almost in spite of herself. In the hands of a Reymont, a Hamsun, a Rölvaag, the life of Jean Le Chamillon would be a masterpiece. Children of the Earth is a very good book."

+ — Bookm 72:x S '30 200w

Books p10 Je 15 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p125 S '30

"One feels in Miss Mannin's book a disposition to paint in more purple than really belongs in the picture. Along with this goes a puzzling unevenness in the diction of her characters. Sometimes they speak like poets; sometimes like peasants. One is willing to grant them poetry, but would it not be expressed in the language of their daily life?"

Christian Science Monitor p13 S 27 '30 500w

"'Children of the Earth' is a chronicle of deep and simple emotions, in which the figure of Jean le Camillon stands out, intensely real and appealing. Ethel Mannin has written more spectacular and intricate novels, but it seems safe to say that she has never drawn a more sincere portrait than this one of an island fisherman." Margaret Wallace

+ N Y Times p9 My 11 '30 500w

"The whole is imbued with the cyclic processes of the earth; the tide ebbs, and returns; the fields are reaped, and put forth again. It seems no less natural that of those that go away, one should come home again. This is a strong, warm, fertile book."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1179 Jl 5 '30 450w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
Spec 144:99 Ja 18 '30 130w

"Miss Mannin has taken her theme seriously, and has put sincere and good work into this book, in spite of a tendency to over-write, and to let her personages in the drama over-love."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p42 Ja 16 '30 470w

MANNING, CLARENCE AUGUSTUS; CAPEK, ANNA VOSTROVSKY; and KOUKOL, ALOIS BOHUSLAV, eds. Anthology of Czechoslovak poetry. (Publications of the Inst. of Czechoslovak studies) 72p $2 Columbia univ. press
891.86 Bohemian poetry—Translations into English. Slovak poetry—Translations into English 29-20242

This little book does not claim to be a general anthology of Czechoslovak poetry or a collection of the masterpieces of that country's verse. It is a collection of Czechoslovak poetry that has been translated into English in this country. Brief biographical notes on the poets are included.

Booklist 26:230 Mr '30

"It is a pity that the author did not supplement with a more general account of the literature of which the poems contained in this volume are mere haphazard samples."
+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ja 29 '30 230w

"There recurs a remarkable sameness of strain throughout, which scarcely indicates genius or poetic force, but rather a pastoral calmness, a quiet meditation upon human affairs. Sweet, pleasing, graceful, sentimental one might call these verses which so lack the great urgent sweep of the best modern American poetry. Yet it is perfectly evident that this poetry arises from a fount of true poetic feeling in the race it represents; for its lyric impulse is sure and certain, a justified means of expression."
Christian Science Monitor p7 Ja 25 '30 120w

Cleveland Open Shelf p23 F '30

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
N Y World p11m F 2 '30 70w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:34 Ap '30

St Louis 28:49 F '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p667 Ag 21 '30 800w

MANNING-SANDERS, GEORGE. Drum and monkey. 335p $2.50 Liveright [7s 6d Faber] 30-3869

"Charles Honey, a rag-and-bone merchant, married to a slattern of a wife, suddenly decides to devote his life to the well-being of his infant son. He takes the baby out in his donkey cart. An accident follows, he is accused of negligence, and is induced to allow a country woman to bring up the child. He is determined the boy shall rise in the world and the story of his schemings for this purpose makes up the plot of the book."—Spec

Booklist 27:29 S '30

"Some books spread themselves before the eye in pictures. The setting belongs on the wall rather than in your mind. 'Drum and Monkey' is one of these."
Books p17 F 2 '30 300w

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 1 '30 1000w

"'Drum and Monkey' has been something of a literary sensation in England, and it is to be hoped that America will recognize the originality and penetration of this first-rate novel." E. H.
+ New Repub 62:200 Ap 2 '30 170w

"Mr. Manning-Sanders, delving into a slum less sinister than Limehouse only because it is not of London but of a small port town, discovers a one-eyed dealer in rags, bones and metal and considers him worthy of a full-length portrayal! Many thoughtful readers will agree with the author's estimate, in particular those who prefer subtle analyses of motives, the play of an untutored, imaginative and thoroughly unconventional mind, to stories in which emphasis is placed on action."
+ N Y Times p14 Ja 26 '30 450w

"You know there isn't a word of truth in 'Drum and Monkey' before you have read an entire chapter. And yet, with such a singular charm has George Manning Sanders imbued his tale, and with such a golden haze of sentiment has he gilded his characters, you keep reading on until the end."
N Y World p11m F 16 '30 240w

"The novel will interest readers who are looking for the unusual instead of the satisfying. And Mr. Manning-Sanders is not to be sniffed at; we sense latent power and a certain knobby independence. It is not unlikely that he will become a good novelist, notwithstanding the fact that he is now too much in love with his own notions."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:970 Ap 19 '30 400w

"Drum and Monkey is a rather remarkable piece of work. The story, which is brilliantly constructed, is full of drama, quite possible and legitimate drama. But while we accept the hero's philosophy with gratitude, we find it impossible to believe in the man."
+ — Spec 143:986 D 28 '29 160w

"Here is an outstanding novel, original, sincere and transmitting a gleam of real significance."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 2 '30 180w

"Honey is drawn too fantastically to be easily intelligible; but when he is intelligible—in his disappointments and his paternal ambitions and fears—it will be an insensitive reader who does not share his unobtruded emotions."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p764 O 3 '29 550w

MANNING-SANDERS, GEORGE. Third day (Eng title: Burnt man). 346p $2.50 Liveright [7s 6d Faber] 30-13878

Humphrey Daine, goaded beyond endurance by a faithless and extravagant wife, burned his home and left a skeleton to prove to his townsmen that he was dead. Then after making good his escape he wandered about England, a nameless vagabond, until he reached St Raime. Slowly and painfully he wove together the threads of a much damaged life, and in time made a new start.

"A good solid book for many hours' reading. . . There is much effective description of town and countryside, and the writing is competent."
+ Bookm 72:xi S '30 120w

Books p10 O 5 '30 280w

"Mr. Manning-Sanders has given us in Humphrey a superb characterization. He has skilfully avoided a maudlin sentimentality, and, as a result, his portrait of a tortured mind emerges as an almost terrifying human creation. . . As the novels of Hardy have withstood the test of years, so will 'The Third Day' remain as a memorial to the creative genius of an author who has dared to depart from the beaten path and revert to a type of novel which has proved, time and time again, its superiority over its fellows and its right to recognition." E. H.
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 1 '30 1000w

New Statesman 34:741 Mr 15 '30 180w

"The resolution of the novel's action is satisfactory to the reader and accords both with the characters the author has created and with life itself. The whole book is saturated with a shrewd rural wisdom and breathes the odor of the soil, which is never far from the nostrils of the more distinguished English writers."
+ N Y Times p6 S 14 '30 500w

MANNING-SANDERS, G.—Continued

"If the opening chapters are somewhat far-fetched, the characterization as a whole is careful and sound, and the farm scenes are drawn with an intimate and authoritative touch that will charm all lovers of English rural life." Gilbert Thomas

+ — Spec 144:503 Mr 22 '30 150w

"Mr. Manning-Sanders is an objective recorder; he exhibits no prejudices or prepossessions, and he is the less persuasive that he is chary of explanations and careless about the minor plausibilities."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p334 Ap 17 '30 580w

MANNING-SANDERS, JOAN. Drawings and paintings; with introd. by R. H. Wilenski. 46p;32pl $9 Rudge [21s Faber]

759.2 Paintings. Drawings 30-8770

"At the age of sixteen, Joan Manning-Sanders has had a second picture hung in exhibition at the Royal Academy. In book form is shown the progress of a child who, with no more formal education than a discerning governess could give, has already reached an amazingly mature craftsmanship. R. H. Wilenski supplies a guide to the reproductions, starting with the first pastel done at the age of eight, through the six water colors commissioned for St. Hilary's Church in Cornwall when Joan was twelve, and ending with the five-figure oil painting completed before her sixteenth birthday and exhibited at the Royal Academy this past year." —Bookm

Bookm 70:x Ja '30 100w

"The book is well made; the reproductions unusually clean; and the introduction by a critic who knows his business." Thomas Craven

+ Books p7 Ja 19 '30 280w

"Mr. Wilenski writes an entertaining introduction to the thirty-two plates contained in this book. A study, moreover, of these plates shows that Joan Manning-Sanders is an artist of unusual promise and ability. Yet we cannot help feeling that it would have been wiser to wait ten years or so before publishing a book of this kind."

New Statesman 34:sup xii O 12 '29 650w

Reviewed by E. A. Jewell

N Y Times p16 Ja 19 '30 180w

"Here is the record in excellent plates, accompanied by Mr. Wilenski's hopes and fears in the introduction. . . It is clear that Joan's trouble is that she never has found anything difficult inside or outside herself. She is, so far, a case in precocity simply. With the right difficulties, and one must devoutly wish them for her, she might be a great artist." F. J. Mather

Sat R of Lit 6:471 N 30 '29 250w

"Mr. Wilenski is aware that Miss Manning-Sanders does little else but describe, and he does not seem to be quite happy about her development. But his criticism does not seem to be always to the point, and he admires works which are only a little less obviously descriptive than, for example, the 'Concertina Players,' exhibited in this year's academy."

Times [London] Lit Sup p685 S 5 '29 280w

MANNY, THEODORE BERGEN. Rural municipalities; a sociological study of local government in the United States. (Century rural life bks.) 343p il $2 Century

352.073 Local government—United States 30-9941

A sociological study of local government in the United States by the senior agricultural economist of the United States Department of agriculture. The author maintains that the existing forms of government in rural communities is unsatisfactory from a sociological and economic standpoint, and proposes a new unit of government, the rural municipality.

Booklist 26:381 Jl '30

"While Mr. Manny thinks that many of the features of rural local government in the United States are inefficient, obsolete and need to be scrapped, his book is constructive in spirit and matter and he offers a fully fledged scheme to take the place of the organization and methods he would like to see discarded. His plan has the merit of being the outcome of years of labor that has included study, personal observation, collection of opinion from rural and small town regions, discussion with other specialists in rural life, and it has all been vivified by the keenest interest in the subject."

+ N Y Times p27 My 25 '30 200w

St Louis 28:207 S '30

MANSFIELD, KATHERINE, pseud. (KATHLEEN [BEAUCHAMP] MURRY) (MRS JOHN MIDDLETON MURRY). The Aloe; introd. by J. Middleton Murry. ltd ed 135p $5 Knopf [15s Constable]

30-21720

"In The Aloe Mr. Middleton Murry gives us as nearly as possible the material, composed in 1916, which the late Katherine Mansfield afterwards employed in writing Prelude, published in Bliss and Other Stories in 1920. There are many passages in The Aloe which do not appear in Prelude, and a few in Prelude which do not come in The Aloe. We perceive that in this place an adjective has been dropped, in that a comma substituted for a full stop; and throughout we notice that a great many words originally in italics are not so in the later version. But the bulk of the matter is the same in both stories, the characters identical, and the construction modified rather than organically changed."—Spec

"Whether viewed as finished writing (and I, for one, consider them not at all inferior to Prelude or At the Bay) or as tentative material, these four sketches of the Burnell family are moving and delightful. We cannot be too grateful for the fresh encounter with Katherine Mansfield's prose, as inescapably feminine as Colette's, but how much softer, more tender, hovering—a butterfly style which hardly brushes with its wings the flowers of sentimentality, a style whose breathiness, whose rhythms of light excitement seem to catch something of the quality of schoolgirl conversation." C. P. Fadiman

+ Nation 131:249 S 3 '30 850w

" 'The Aloe' is now published as a literary curiosity, which duty it fulfils by not being nearly as good as 'Prelude.' " L. L. Irvine

— Nation and Ath 46:707 F 22 '30 30w

New Statesman 34:680 Mr 1 '30 80w

Reviewed by Rose Lee

N Y Times p2 S 7 '30 700w

"Despite Mr. Murry's plausible Preface this story does not really help us to any fuller knowledge of Katherine Mansfield's methods. In the end we are little nearer to understanding the mental processes by which she worked. And for a very simple reason. The Aloe is, in its way, as finished an article as Prelude. . . This is not to say though, that The Aloe is anything but a delight, or that we should not be grateful to Mr. Murry for so pleasant an excuse to reread one of the best stories Katherine Mansfield achieved."

Spec 144:400 Mr 8 '30 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p920 N 6 '30 150w

MANSFIELD, KATHERINE, pseud. (KATHLEEN [BEAUCHAMP] MURRY) (MRS JOHN MIDDLETON MURRY). Novels and novelists; ed. with an introd. note by J. Middleton Murry. 321p $3.50 Knopf [7s 6d Constable]

823 English fiction—History and criticism. Fiction—History and criticism. Books—Reviews 30-30203

" 'Novels and Novelists' is a collection of reviews of timely books by Katherine Mansfield for the Athenaeum. They were written in 1919 and 1920. Among other books Miss Mansfield reviewed Joseph Hergesheimer's 'Linda Condon,' Dorothy Richardson's 'The Tunnel' and 'Interim,' Mrs. Humphry Ward's 'Harvest,' Knut Hamsun's 'Growth of the Soil,' Clemence Dane's 'Legend,' F. Brett Young's 'The Young Physician,' Hugh Walpole's 'Jeremy,' Frank Swinnerton's 'September,' and numerous other well known volumes of that time."—N Y World

Booklist 27:197 Ja '31

Books p6 N 2 '30

"The value of the collection is threefold. First it is an example high, for all reviewers of current fiction. Integrity, consistency, a sense of humour, a sense of proportion, these evidently are the essential qualities. Secondly, Miss Mansfield's reviews deserved resurrecting as criticism. Of course, the majority of novels she reviewed are now not even names. But among the minnows there are, if not Tritons, at any rate respectable fish. . . Then, thirdly, some straws of knowledge as to Miss Mansfield herself are gleaned as we pass." George Rylands

+ Nation and Ath 47:708 S 6 '30 500w

New Repub 65:227 Ja 7 '31 150w

"How good it is to find that humble task, the reviewing of fiction, undertaken in a spirit neither of contempt nor of difficult wit, but with seriousness, with humour and with a determination not to lower the standards. There was nothing highbrow in Katherine Mansfield's criticisms. . . All through the book there is the certainty, expressed passionately, lightly, or with tender beauty that nothing is wrong with the novel so long as the novelist has people to present, and a story that he must tell us." R. E. Roberts

+ New Statesman 35:597 Ag 16 '30 380w

"To our surprise, Katherine Mansfield was a highly skillful reviewer. Had she made a brilliantly good or brilliantly bad one, we should not have been surprised at all. But that she should have had so much professional competence, that she should show so much patience and poise and facility is not what one would have quite expected from the intense, burning person of the journals and letters. Actually there are manifested here very few great enthusiasms or violent dislikes; most of the writing is controlled and contained." Louis Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p6 D 7 '30 500w

"Young writers, students of writing, can gain much from Katherine Mansfield. Many of the books she reviewed were negligible; her comment was always clear and sound." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 O 27 '30 1000w

"No one in America reviewing books every week in a literary journal can show a record for intelligence, courage, grace and skill that is in any way comparable with that established by Katherine Mansfield in the weekly reviews of fiction which she contributed to the Athenaeum during the last few years of her life. In her work high standards, knowledge of the subject based on a lifetime of wide but selective reading and a sharp, delicate critical sense are united to catholicity of taste. She had judgment, she had integrity and she knew what she was talking about. And how exquisitely she wrote!" F. L. R.

+ Outlook 156:347 O 29 '30 170w

"She approaches the art of fiction from a height. Her criticism is that of a disinterested artist, never to be satisfied with less than the sincere; quick at defining the type and class to which any novel under her hand belonged; always referring the characters to life, instead of to some other novelist; never afraid to praise; deadly in criticism without a trace of malice; and, before merely commercial writing, content to describe the story, so that the wretched thing should quietly expose itself. One fancies that her opinion must have been precious to authors worthy of it, and that some still living may wince now that her quiet voice is speaking once again." Osbert Burdett

+ Sat R 150:86 Jl 19 '30 1500w

"Her book disposes once more of the gibe that critics are artists who have failed. In criticism, indeed, she was an artist, never dully making a balance sheet of a book's virtues and defects or a Baedeker to its story; but, with much cunning, creating an appropriate atmosphere and letting the story rise or fall in it like a toy balloon." V. S. Pritchett

+ Spec 145:315 S 6 '30 750w

"This collection of novel reviews by the late Katherine Mansfield shows that she was unfailingly sustained even in a starveling period, proving herself an unusually good reviewer of novels by the liveliness of her response, the freshness of her comment, and a patience rare in so shrewd a wit."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p589 Jl 17 '30 900w

MANTELL, CHARLES LETNAM. Tin; its mining, production, technology, and applications. (Am. chemical soc. Monograph ser.) 366p il $7 Chemical catalog co.

669.6 Tin 29-22211

"A comprehensive work dealing with the subject largely from the chemical side. The applications cover: plating, alloys, hot-dipped coatings, foil and collapsible tubes. There are chapters on corrosion (notably of food containers), secondly tin, detinning of tin plate scrap, and analytical methods. Dr. Mantell is associated with Pratt Institute."—N Y New Tech Bks

"A valuable contribution not only to this excellent series of monographs but also to the literature of tin. While there are other books on tin which treat a single aspect of the subject in greater detail, no other book on tin approaches this one in general comprehensiveness." Duncan MacRae

+ Chem & Met Eng 37:108 F '30 280w

"This is the story of a much-used metal, but one whose comprehensive treatment in the literature is almost as rare as its occurrence in nature. Doctor Mantell's comprehensive work should be invaluable to anyone concerned with tin, and particularly so to the chemist and metallurgist. His compilation of its chemical and physical data will save much searching over a broad field of published information. The descriptive portion covers in pleasing style the detailed history, occurrence and production of the metal, together with its commercial possibilities." J. C. Whetzel

+ Ind & Eng Chem 21:1303 D '29 300w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:10 Ja '30

Pratt p18 spring '30

St Louis 28:10 Ja '30

MANTLE, BURNS, ed. Best plays of 1928-29; and, The year book of the drama in America. 537p il $3 Dodd

808.2 Drama—Collections. Theater—Yearbooks (20-21432)

As in former years the book gives chapters on the seasons in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Southern California. The ten plays excerpted are: Street scene; Journey's end; Wings over Europe; Holiday; The front page; Let us be gay; Machinal; Little accident; Gypsy; and The kingdom of God. The plays produced in New York, June 15, 1928-June 15, 1929 are listed with casts of characters and short synopses for each. There is a statistical summary, a list of birth places and birth dates of prominent actors and a necrology.

Booklist 26:150 Ja '30

"It is no doubt gratifying to find so high a percentage of our most worthy plays made in America, but alas! the ten, all together, are not a very impressive lot. 'Journey's End' and 'Street Scene' are impressive. 'Wings Over Europe' strives hard to be. The rest are pretty small caliber to represent the best our theater could do in an entire season." W. P. Eaton

— + Books p14 F 2 '30 160w

MANTLE, BURNS, ed.—Continued
Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 D 7 '29 230w
St Louis 28:49 F '30
Wis Lib Bul 26:66 F '30

MANTLE, BURNS, ed. Best plays of 1929-30, 2 and, The year book of the drama in America. 584p il $3 Dodd

808.2 Drama—Collections. Theater—Yearbooks

Contents: The green pastures, by Marc Connelly; The criminal code, by Martin Flavin; Berkeley square, by John Balderston; Strictly dishonorable, by Preston Sturges; The last mile, by John Wexley; The first Mrs Fraser, by St John Ervine; June moon, by Ring Lardner and G. S. Kaufman; Michael and Mary, by A. A. Milne; Death takes a holiday, by Walter Ferris; Rebound, by D. O. Stewart.

Booklist 27:196 Ja '31
Christian Century 47:1454 N 26 '30 130w
Cleveland Open Shelf p151 D '30

"This book does for the season just ending what Mr. Mantle's previous volumes have done for other seasons. It is an invaluable record of the theatrical news. Opinions may differ as to the exact rating of the year's ten best plays, but those chosen in this book follow in the main what would be the popular opinion."
+ New Repub 65:145 D 17 '30 200w

"As a reference book, it furnishes an excellent and unique critical file. As reading matter, it is a negligible, if not ridiculous, volume. Obviously, no play which is worth printing or producing can stand the sort of editing to which Mr. Mantle (however carefully) subjects his ten best plays. The best plays, just because they are best plays, mean nothing as Mr. Mantle presents them. . . One might protest against such omissions as those of 'Children of Darkness' and 'The Commodore Marries' and 'Karl and Anna', did it not seem that in such an indiscriminate volume omissions and inclusions alike must be unimportant."
— + Sat R of Lit 7:492 D 27 '30 380w

MARBLE, ANNIE (RUSSELL) (MRS CHARLES FRANCIS MARBLE). From Boston to Boston; il. by Frank T. Merrill. 278p $2 Lothrop

Massachusetts—History—Colonial period—Fiction 30-11714

A story of Old Boston in England and the new Boston in America, which takes place from 1630 to 1632. It is based on an entry in Winthrop's Journal, and is written for boys and girls.

"An infinite amount of research is represented by the story Mrs. Marble has written to fill the needs of youngsters who want to know something about Boston. . . It is, if anything, almost too instructive. But anyone who has tried to find something which will give exactly this information, without too many disagreeable details, will welcome this volume." I. W. L.
+ — Boston Transcript p1 My 17 '30 450w

"The author has used authentic material and with a praiseworthy regard for accuracy presents a detailed picture of life in the Colonies. Somehow, however, the result is a little lifeless—we do not feel that the characters are alive and the writer is more interested in creating a historic background than in telling a story." A. T. Eaton
+ — N Y Times p10 Jl 20 '30 230w
Outlook 155:347 Jl 2 '30 20w

"While historical dates are frequently juggled, the book is an authentic interpretation of those early days as well as a fast-moving story filled with interesting events."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 170w

MARBLE, ANNIE (RUSSELL) (MRS CHARLES FRANCIS MARBLE). Pen names and personalities. 256p $2.50 (10s 6d) Appleton

014 Anonyms and pseudonyms. Authors 30-18269

The pseudonyms of authors, how they came to adopt them, and the personalities of the writers behind them, are treated in a discursive and informative fashion by the author.

Booklist 27:47 O '30

"Interesting to those who like the oddities of literary folk and a reference book which every library should have on its shelves."
+ Bookm 72:xxvi S '30 80w
Books p12 Ag 3 '30 250w
Boston Transcript p2 N 29 '30 550w
Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '30

"The chapters on Dickens, Thackeray, George Eliot, George Sand and the Brontës are pleasantly written, though they contain nothing fresh. The real names of many living novelists are given in a later chapter, and there is a long list of pseudonyms at the end of the book. Mrs. Marble has made nothing of the more interesting aspects of pseudonimity ('Junius' is not even mentioned), and the book is not in the least complete."
— + New Statesman 35:716 S 13 '30 120w

"Mrs. Marble has again demonstrated in this volume her notable patience and industry and her high ideals of accuracy and dependability in the investigation of literary matters. Its wide scope, its extensive information and discussion of the personalities behind the names, its attention to the pseudonyms of authors who are now writing, render it an invaluable desk book and a worthy companion of her recent work, 'A Study of the Modern Novel.'"
+ N Y Times p35 S 28 '30 450w

"Contains a lot of interesting gossip about past and present day authors who have hidden their identities behind fictitious names. A tremendous amount of research has gone into the book, which lists some 500 authors." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 155:550 Ag 6 '30 50w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:72 O '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p894 O 30 '30 230w

MARCELLYS, —. French cooking for everywoman; tr. from "Les recettes de grandmère." 240p $2.75 Scribner [pa 3s 6d; 5s Country life]

641.5 Cookery, French

"Excellent suggestions and recipes for everything from hors d'oeuvres to sweets, with afternoon tea cakes and biscuits in addition. French cooks have always paid much more attention to vegetables, eggs and fish than most cooks in this country, and the dishes described by Marcellys will be found useful and pleasing by non-meat-eaters, who are often so hard put to it to find new ideas for meals."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

"Much of the fine flavor of the dishes has been lost in translation. The book has been translated with correctness perhaps, but without feeling. The recipes have not been interpreted for American kitchens. They are not easy to 'follow,' and I doubt that the book will stimulate many cooks to try out a new dish just for the fun of it." Lettie Gay
— Books p10 D 28 '30 80w
Boston Transcript p5 D 3 '30 250w

"Housekeepers will find their culinary ambitions piqued by its well-classified collection of recipes, which, though they do not list quantities of ingredients as meticulously as 'many expert and even scientific cookery books already published,' do tell the total time required for preparation and the number of persons served, and which include many dishes typical of the good bourgeois cookery of France."
+ J Home Econ 22:1016 D '30 80w

"This is a book eminently worth keeping on the kitchen shelf, as useful in suggestions as in method, but the reader would be wise to use her own discretion about time and to neglect the author's estimates."
Times [London] Lit Sup p516 Je 19 '30 220w

MARCHANT, SIR JAMES, ed. Reunion of Christendom; a survey of the present position. 329p $3 Holt [7s 6d Cassell]
280 Christian union 29-23327

A symposium by the following writers on the possibility of the reunited church: Cardinal Bourne; Archbishop Germanos; Otto Dibelius; Archbishop Söderblom; F. T. Woods; Alfred E. Garvie; J. Scott Lidgett; Alexander Martin; William T. Manning; William Adams Brown; T. Albert Moore; Vedenayakan Azariah; W. E. Orchard.

Booklist 26:340 Je '30
Reviewed by E. C. Chorley
Churchman 141:16 Ja 25 '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p21 F '30

"A frank interchange of opinion by well selected representatives of the principal branches of the Christian church, on the problem of reunion as viewed severally by the communions they represent. The book is illuminating, and will help to clarify the reunion situation."
+ J Religion 10:159 Ja '30 40w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:14 F '30
St Louis 28:129 My '30

"It was a happy thought to combine in one volume statements of the positions adopted by the various great sections of Christendom from the pens of representative writers. The authors have been well selected, and every chapter gives important, accurate, and relevant information."
+ Spec 144:64 Ja 11 '30 500w

MARFIELD, DWIGHT. Mystery of the East Wind. 359p $2 Dutton
30-7964

Steve Bryson, a millionaire, is found murdered in Anne Coleman's apartment—and Anne has disappeared. So has her famous jewel, the Maharanee diamond. Suspicion falls upon a swarthy Greek, Paskalos, and upon another of Anne's admirers, Breckinridge Ellerton. The joint efforts of Attorney Brent and Gail McGurk, a lovely sleuth from Chicago, with the aid of a timely confession, solve the East Wind apartment house mystery.

Bookm 71:xxiv Ap '30 80w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p13 Mr 23 '30 120w
N Y Times p25 My 4 '30 100w

"A good mystery story that could have been better than it is. The author has learned how to make his setting real, and his characters are of the type which makes front page stories. He has, however, lowered his standard of verisimilitude by uncalled for hinting at mysterious figures and descriptions of the dark influence of Blackwells Island on its new neighbors."
+ — Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 120w

MARGALITH, AARON M. International mandates. (Johns Hopkins univ. studies in hist. and political science. Extra volumes. New ser.) 242p $2.50 Johns Hopkins [11s 6d Oxford]
321.027 League of nations. European war, 1914-1918—Territorial questions. Mandates system 30-14974

A thesis-study of the League of Nations mandates system. The question of international mandates has been treated from three points of view—historical, descriptive, and analytical—to each of which three chapters are devoted.

"The work is a correlation of commonly known though widely scattered bits of information rather than the traditional contribution to knowledge. Had the writer carried out his original intention, beginning where he left off, he would in all probability have produced a really scholarly volume; for his ability is obvious. Presumably, lack of time prevented this. The bibliography is uncritical and neither it nor the footnotes conform to conventional canons." L. J. Ragatz
— Ann Am Acad 151:304 S '30 180w

"This is another rather conventional study of the League mandate system, which emphasizes the question of sovereignty. The author examines the system primarily from the standpoint of Geneva, with the result that his treatment often becomes academic. Many disagreeable cases of misspelt names will be found in this book."
— Books p12 Ag 3 '30 100w
St Louis 28:206 S '30

"As a descriptive collection of important facts in connexion with the genesis and working of the Mandates system this book is not without a certain commercial value, but the discussion of the relation of the legal concepts of trust, guardianship and mandate to the mandatory system is so vague as to be valueless. The book itself 'leads nowhere,' except that there is an uncritical and rather academic enthusiasm for the mandatory system and a plea for increased powers for the Mandates Commission."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p719 S 11 '30 80w

MARIE, grand duchess of Russia. Education of
2 a princess; a memoir; tr. from the French and Russian under the editorial supervision of Russell Lord. 388p il $3.50 Viking press
B or 92 Russia—Court and courtiers. Russia—History—Revolution, 1917- 31-2427

One of the last of the imperial family of Russia, granddaughter of Alexander II and cousin of Nicholas II, tells her own story and thru it the story of Russia's stormiest years. Brought up by her aunt, sister of the empress, Alexandra, within the walls of various palaces, Marie never knew a natural home life and experienced one tragedy after another—the banishment of her father, the assassination of her uncle, the failure of her marriage with Prince William of Sweden, the war and the Russian revolution with the dissolution of the Romanoff family. Here in America where, after her resources gave out, she went to work, her education continues.

"This book is not only an autobiography interesting for the new details which it adds to a moving human tragedy; it is also the work of an authentic writer. One is delighted and surprised to find in it those definitely Russian qualities which are the distinction of Tolstoi, of Turgeniev and of Chekov—I mean the bare simplicity of the story, the fresh sincerity of feeling, the invincible taste for spiritual values. . . But the primary value of the book lies in its extraordinary objectivity, and in its choice of detail. The impression of truth is always given by little facts, by odors, by tastes, by a surprised glance, a passing animal, a sound which, in memory, is associated with an emotion. The Grand Duchess Marie has a remarkable capacity for noting such sensations." Andre Maurois
+ Books p1 Ja 4 '31 2200w

"It is a compelling human document which she has written, rich in unusual experience, and permeated by a candor and sincerity which is altogether charming. The successive steps from a palace in Europe to a fashion shop on Fifth Avenue are set down by the Grand Duchess in her book with graphic and telling strokes." T. R. Ybarra
+ N Y Times p1 Ja 4 '31 1800w

MARIEJOL, JEAN HIPPOLYTE. Daughter of the Medicis; the romantic story of Margaret of Valois; tr. from the French by John Peile. 261p il $4 (16s) Harper

B or 92 Marguerite de Valois, queen consort of Henry IV, king of France 29-29532

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929

"Her story is admirably told by M. Mariéjol. Not a novelist but a professional historian, he has taken no liberties with his material but the liberty of narrating the well established facts with skill, sympathy and an occasional touch of playfulness." R. T. House
+ Books p7 Ja 19 '30 900w
Cleveland Open Shelf p94 Je '30

"The book, for all its subject, is a scholarly chronicle, a monument of the most careful research into the fascinating period known as the French Renaissance." Francis Snow
+ Current Hist 31:840 F '30 230w
New Statesman 34:482 Ja 18 '30 200w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins
Outlook 153:547 D 4 '29 520w
St Louis 28:112 Ap '30
Spec 144:168 F 1 '30 1350w

"When fortune places in one's hands a monograph on a subject so fascinating as La Reine Margot, written by a scholar who is a recognized authority on the period of the French Wars of Religion, one can settle down to enjoy it without question, confident at once of good entertainment and of good direction. One is assured of a sane analysis of facts and motives, and of sources read and well digested."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p181 Mr 6 '30 950w

MARIENHOFF, ANATOL. Cynics; tr. from the Russian by Valdemar D. Bell and Louis Coleman. 238p $2.50 Boni
30-25817

Written in the form of brief episodes, or memoirs, this novel follows the fortunes of two characters from Russia's pre-revolutionary Bohemia: Olga, cheap, sensuous, and vain; and Vladimir, her husband, who views with cynical indifference the mercenary unfaithfulness of his wife. The novel traces their tragic roles thru six years of war, famine and reconstruction.

"It is an easy book to read; the chapters are brief, sometimes witty, and interspersed in them are authentic bulletins and newspaper clippings that tell much that the author failed to write about."
+ Bookm 72:xii O '30 100w

"There are many reasons for disliking 'Cynics.' Its sordid, often vulgar, phraseology, its unrelieved bleakness, its ominous undertones; but there is so much in it that demands praise that even its most unsympathetic reader must accord to its author an admiration for a fearless and truthful effort to depict the sorrows of a beaten country." E. H.
+ — Boston Transcript p2 O 1 '30 600w

Reviewed by James Rorty
New Repub 64:187 O 1 '30 150w

"The highly artificial form of the novel tends at first to obscure its purpose. Written in brief sections, which vary in length from a single sentence to three or four pages, it conveys an impression of diffuseness and indirection. But the ultimate force and clarity of the work strike upon the mind of the reader with redoubled effect. So far from being confused and aimless, the book has been written with a diamond-like brilliance and hardness. Not a word is wasted, not a scene or impression fails to contribute to the unity of the design." Margaret Wallace
+ N Y Evening Post p5d O 25 '30 800w

"Marienhoff writes in short, laconic scenes and excerpts which often are witty, sharp and expressive, and—equally often—strewn with filthy details and pretentious mannerisms." Alexander Nazaroff
+ — N Y Times p8 S 14 '30 600w

MARITAIN, JACQUES. Art and scholasticism, with other essays; tr. by J. F. Scanlan. 232p $2.50 Scribner [7s 6d Sheed]

701 Art—Philosophy 30-25722

Essays on the philosophy of art by the leader of French neo-Thomism. In the title-essay M. Maritain discusses the academic attitude toward art. Among the other significant essays in the volume are The frontiers of poetry, which is concerned with the possibility of a Christian revival for aesthetics as compared with the degenerate era under which contemporary art now suffers; Art and beauty; and Art and morality.

Reviewed by Irwin Edman
Books p7 Jl 6 '30 970w

"Whether one agrees with all of M. Maritain's theses or not is, perhaps, less important than that one should learn clear and vigorous analytical thought under his guidance. And if his readers pass from his writings to those of St. Thomas Aquinas to seek conclusions for themselves, M. Maritain will doubtless feel the greater satisfaction." G. D. M.
+ Cath World 132:249 N '30 250w

"He has thrown off humility, and in donning the raiment of pride he has led the world towards falsehood and the abyss. Yet when the modern artist, or even the Oriental artist, happens to accomplish a good piece of work, M. Maritain claims him as one of his elect. He builds up his theory of distinction, but refuses to say where it begins or ends. He is at once exclusive, and, when it serves his purpose, all embracing. He weakens his argument by attempting to be on both sides at the same time. But he has written a most exhilarating book. It is to be regretted, however, that the essay on Rouault, a modern artist of whom M. Maritain heartily approves, was not included in the English version."
+ — New Statesman 35:85 Ap 26 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Axton Clark
N Y Times p2 Ag 10 '30 1500w
St Louis 28:213 S '30

"M. Maritain forces you to think. He makes you listen. Contact with his fine intelligence is an experience that tells." Osbert Burdett
+ Sat R 149:423 Ap 5 '30 1450w

"The mingled lucidity and fervour of his expositions of Thomist realism are seen at their best in this short book, which forms an excellent introduction to the work of a thinker who occupies a unique position among European philosophers."
+ Spec 144:586 Ap 5 '30 130w

"M. Maritain writes with a detachment which is as flawless as his sincerity; he never confuses theory and practice, or preaches when he has undertaken to explain. His perfect manners, his penetrative and subtly ramifying exposition, exercise a Circean charm on the emancipated reader."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p314 Ap 10 '30 1400w

"His book can only convince those who already regard Roman Catholicism as the only true religion, and St. Thomas as the highest interpreter of divine wisdom. But it deserves to be read by all who are interested in the present state, and the future, of art; the style is beautifully lucid and pure, often elegant in spite of the stern dogmaticism of the new schoolman, and the translator has been very diligent and successful in his task." Henri Peyre
+ Yale R n s 20:183 autumn '30 850w

MARITAIN, JACQUES. Introduction to philosophy; tr. by E. I. Watkin. 272p $3 Longmans [8s 6d Sheed]

102 Philosophy [30-24066]

Written by a distinguished French philosopher this book is an outline intended for beginners. Part one is an exposition of the nature of philosophy. Part two deals with the classification of philosophy—its main divisions and problems.

Boston Transcript p3 D 27 '30 420w

"One cannot imagine a clearer and more helpful guide for the beginner wishing to obtain his bearings in the subject and to work towards a complete and proportioned view of the whole system. The section on pure metaphysics—ontology—is a triumph of lucid exposition and a stimulating lesson in clear thinking. The translator has done his work extremely well: only the clearness and conciseness of the style remind us that we are reading a product of a French thinker." G. D. M.

+ Cath World 132:500 Ja '31 320w

"For the technical side of his encouraging programme he is fully equipped. Existence and essence, substance and accident, act and potency, he can discriminate with scholastic precision, and if the object of philosophy were to prepare digestible food for seminarists, his mastery of the business would be beyond dispute. But when we ask for evidence that this elaborate system is 'demonstrably true'; when we look for a just historical appreciation of his own protagonists, or for a reasoned criticism of the less reputable figures, from Plato to Bergson, who are allowed to drift across the stage, we ask and look in vain."

— New Statesman 35:sup xvi My 10 '30 750w

"It is a work typical, of the best French scholarship—that is, it is accurate, logical, clear and charmingly written. Severe orthodoxy has not had such a defender for some years, formidable at once in his vigor and his ability to win a sympathetic comprehension for his point of view. Those who cannot agree with M. Maritain—and they will be many, including me—will at least be grateful to him for an admirable statement of the chief problems of all thought, and a clear indication where those who do not like his solutions can go to get others." John Bakeless

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 30 '30 600w

St Louis 28:257 N '30

Reviewed by Evelyn Underhill

Spec 145:227 Ag 16 '30 700w

"It is both written and translated with lucidity and ease, and not the least of its charm is to be found in the gentle, if firm, manner in which M. Maritain rebukes and puts right the philosophers, ancient and modern, who have strayed from the narrow but orthodox way."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p424 My 22 '30 700w

MARJORIBANKS, EDWARD. For the defence; the life of Sir Edward Marshall Hall; with an introd. by the Earl of Birkenhead. reissue 471p il $2 Macmillan [5s Gollancz]

B or 92 Marshall-Hall, Sir Edward. Trials
29-25463

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"Mr. Marjoribank's skillful and vivid recital recreates for the American reader the contemporaneous excitement of the cause célèbres—the Crippen case, the Camden Town murder, the Marie Herman case, the Brides of the Bath case—in which, as leading actor, Marshall Hall for a generation furnished daily food to British newspaper readers." Felix Frankfurter

+ Atlantic Bookshelf p30 Ap '30 750w

"The life of the lawyer is but a thread on which to hang his exploits in the courtroom. The courtroom is the setting in which final acts are played. Here Sir Edward has the lead, but Mr. Marjoribanks prepares us for his entrance by dextrous elaboration of the preliminaries which brought the defendant to the dock. . . Mr. Marjoribanks is as good with his bag of tricks as Sir Edward was with his. He tells his facts as vividly as Sir Edward acted his fictions." T. R. Powell

+ Books p19 Ja 26 '30 1000w

Churchman p17 Ja 25 '30 120w

Cleveland Open Shelf p157 D '30

"This biographer, though treating a subject brimming with human interest, shows a lack of sense of literary values. The writer is evidently conscientious, but lacks ability to show the tremendous driving force and dynamic personality behind all Hall's noted cases." Francis Snow

— Current Hist 31:1048 Mr '30 80w

"One wonders whether so charming a talent for biography as Mr. Marjoribanks' might not well have been exercised to perpetuate the memory of some one who had made a notable contribution to the development of the law and its administration. . . Although by his abilities and personality Sir Edward Marshall Hall attained great distinction in his day, the memory of his achievements, despite Mr. Marjoribanks' delightful biography, will doubtless be but ephemeral." S. L. Whipple

+ — Harvard Law R 43:1323 Je '30 1200w

"For the layman the book has all the fascination of a series of interesting detective stories told around a central figure of great charm and magnetism. For the lawyer it is, in addition, an interesting exposition of how law is practiced and how criminal trials are conducted in England, in striking contrast with our own system of criminal procedure." Newman Levy

+ Nation 131:47 Jl 9 '30 900w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:30 F '30 130w

St Louis 28:147 My '30

"Mr. Marjoribanks never descends to mere journalistic 'writing-up.' We get, on the whole, a very clear picture of the great advocate as he appeared in court."

+ Sat R 149:18 Ja 4 '30 900w

MARKHAM, FREDERICK. Archibald. 319p $2 Brewer [7s 6d Benn]

30-24627

How Archibald Piper, son of a Salvation army captain (female), rises by the bootstraps of ballyhoo advertising and becomes a person of considerable importance—Lord Archibald Piper of Pocklingthorpe.

Bookm 72:viii S '30 100w

Books p12 O 5 '30 200w

"Mr. Markham is never bitter. He is satirical at moments. He does not mind telling the truth as he has seen it. That alone ought to commend this exceptional novel to all who love honesty combined with rare character drawing and the healthy bite of irony." D. F. G.

Boston Transcript p3 O 18 '30 700w

"Mr. Markham's novel has freshness, strength, wit, irony. It is remorseless in its depiction of the latter-day vulgarian to whom belongs the earth and the fullness thereof." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p12 S 20 '30 100w

"Many things happen to the many characters, but when page 319 is reached and the shouting dies, it appears that most of the events were unnecessary. The jacket blurb proclaims loudly the humor and power in Archibald, but the humor almost never materializes, and the power is second rate. The plot is modestly interesting. Frank Swinnerton, among other well-known people, has expressed approval of the book, and quite honestly so; it has certain characterizations of Mr. Swinnerton's own work. Unfortunately, it lacks his ability and experience. Frederick Markham might have turned out a finer, more powerful book had he been blessed with a keener sense of selection."

— N Y Times p7 S 21 '30 380w

"Archibald, as an individual, provides an interesting study—caustic, biting, perhaps a trifle overdone. As a type, he is common to all fields of human endeavor. The book can be read with enjoyment, for it is not without humor, incident, and the suspense of a first rate, workmanlike novel." C. H. Denhard

+ Sat R of Lit 7:156 S 27 '30 420w

MARKHAM, FREDERICK—Continued

"If realism in literature must be blatantly real, perhaps it would be best not to stick a pin through such unappetizing creatures, as Archibald, and hold them up for the world to inspect. However, the narrative is expertly put together, and what it lacks in amenity, it makes up for in force."

— + Springf'd Republican p7e O 19 '30 250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p320 Ap 10 '30 380w

MARKHAM, VIRGIL. Black door. 299p $2.50 Knopf

30-10243

"The scene is a castle built on an almost inaccessible island off the coast of Wales. There the various members of the Veryan family have taken refuge, hoping that they may escape the fate that has befallen several of their number. But their hope is vain, for the enemy strikes again and again. Tom Stapleton, a distant American relative of the Veryans, comes to the island and attempts to solve the mystery, as does also a detective from Scotland Yard. At first both are completely baffled, but eventually the assassin is discovered, and then all is well with the surviving Veryans."—N Y Times

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p20 Ap 20 '30 180w

Boston Transcript p1 Jl 12 '30 550w

Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett

N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 12 '30 200w

"What might have been a really first-class mystery yarn is marred by the difficulty which the reader encounters in keeping track of the various characters and in finding his way about the scenes of the story. The map, floor plan and genealogical table, which the author provides, help a little, but not nearly enough."

+ — N Y Times p24 Ap 20 '30 180w

"Virgil Markham has done a remarkable stunt in The Black Door. Although American born and bred, he has succeeded in making his American hero speak as an English writer would have made him speak. Tom Stapleton uses all the right slang and uses it all wrong. Otherwise, and except for the woodenness of the characters, it is a good mystery yarn." W. R. Brooks

— + Outlook 154:709 Ap 30 '30 120w

MARKHAM, VIRGIL. Rogues' road. 317p il $2
2 Macmillan

30-30779

Romance and adventure in the wilderness of Wales in 1726, concerned with a scamp, a dashing highwayman, a gypsy girl, a dwarf, a fiddler, and several mysterious happenings in general. The book is by way of a sequel to the author's former Welsh romance, The Scamp.

Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '30 250w

"An undue eagerness to sustain the mystery has caused the author frequently to have his characters resort to unrecognizable disguises and have them act at cross purposes, which is baffling not only to them but also to the reader. It is not profound writing, but Virgil Markham has a nice sense of words, and his rapid motion, pure objective relating of action, in the haze of long ago, makes wholesome and pleasant fiction."

+ — N Y Times p7 Ja 4 '31 320w

"We don't quite know why the story fails to come off. Cloaks and pistols and midnight on the moor and the other trappings of romance always put us in a pleasant state of expectancy, and the author handles these things well. The people have just the right touch of unreality for romance, and there is nothing the matter with the plot. But there's no clearness, either in the action or the speeches. You never quite know what's going on. It's a story told in a fog." W. R. Brooks

— + Outlook 156:585 D 10 '30 200w

MARKS, LIONEL SIMEON, ed. Mechanical engineers' handbook, prepared by a staff of specialists. 3d ed 2264p il $7 (35s) McGraw
2

621.02 Mechanical engineering—Handbooks, manuals, etc. 30-18374

"Since 1924, when the second revision was made, many changes have taken place, even in such a settled and sedate profession as mechanical engineering. That this has been recognized by the editors is well attested by seven new sections, including among other subjects, high- and low-temperature carbonization, refractories, and electric furnaces. Some 16 sections have been completely rewritten, and many more have had the benefit of considered revision. Among these are many of the subjects with which the chemical engineer must have at least a handbook acquaintance."—Chem & Met Eng

Booklist 27:116 N '30

"Obviously, one's immediate estimate: 'a little bit of everything, and a lot about a good many things,' errs on the side of universality. Even Marks misses an occasional trick in subjects quite alien to mechanical engineering. Nevertheless, this reviewer sees ample justification for a course he has long followed, of first taking almost any engineering problem to Marks. More frequently than not this ends the search." T. R. Olive

+ Chem & Met Eng 37:764 D '30 200w

St Louis 28:235 O '30

MARKS, STANLEY P. Pipe and tube bending and jointing. 159p il $1.75 (6s) Pitman
2

696 Pipes. Tubes. Pipe-fitting [29-21539]

"Describes and illustrates the equipment required and the methods employed in bending and jointing pipes and tubing of lead, copper, aluminium, zinc, tin, iron and steel, with chapters on electric conduit and ebonite tubing, and useful miscellaneous matter."—Pratt

N Y New Tech Bks 15:9 Ja '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:26 Mr '30

Pratt p22 summer '30

St Louis 28:245 N '30

MARKUN, LEO. Mrs Grundy; a history of four centuries of morals intended to illuminate present problems in Great Britain and the United States. 666p il $5 Appleton

170.9 Ethics—History. Great Britain—Moral conditions. United States—Moral conditions 30-13518

Mrs Grundy, as the personified guardian of social morals thruout four centuries, is given an historical biography by the author of this survey. In the first part of the book Mr Markun discusses moral standards and practices in Great Britain, from John Calvin to Queen Victoria, while the second part is devoted to a similar account of the rise and fall of moral standards in these United States. Such matters as drinking, costume, sex in art and literature, social manners, gambling, birth control, prostitution, etc. are taken up.

"This work has merit as a study of the ceaseless shift in folkways and mores, as a Kulturgeschichte of taste and manner, and as an interpretation of contemporary American moral life. Sociologists who have any of these three interests will appreciate this volume; those who have all three will find it particularly valuable."

+ Am J Soc 36:342 S '30 120w

"Those who are interested in a scientific and naturalistic approach to morals have felt the lack of a book giving the factual background for generalizations upon our changing and various mores. Mr Markun's contribution, entirely undistinguished as it is, can scarcely claim to have filled the gap satisfactorily." W. R. Crawford

— Ann Am Acad 151:307 S '30 150w

Booklist 27:10 S '30

"Mrs. Grundy is a diverting book, not for the scholar, but for the average reader who may need to be told that manners differ in different times and that each time has considered its code of social conduct one of supreme ethical rightness." A. B. Clarke

+ Bookm 71:560 Ag '30 450w

"The story is a vivid one, and the various pictures and wood-cuts of the times add to its impressiveness. 'Mrs. Grundy' is a fantastic account of a fantastic people, whose moral consistency has resided, not in the varying objects of condemnation, but in the act of condemnation." Lorine Pruette
+ Books p1 My 18 '30 1100w

Reviewed by Ralph Bergengren
Boston Transcript p2 Je 21 '30 1950w

Current Hist 32:1031 Ag '30 100w

Reviewed by J. H. Tufts
Int J Ethics 41:270 Ja '31 450w

"It is only a peep-show of Anglo-Saxon morals to which we gain admittance. We are given the low-down on them in this idle book but no more. It reveals no interest in any theory of morals, or in the particular speculations of any moralists. It makes no attempt to inquire into the determining values of the periods of civilization which it surveys." William Seagle
— Nation 131:530 N 12 '30 650w

Reviewed by Arthur Krock
N Y Times p4 Je 1 '30 1200w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 My 14 '30 1000w

"Although it is in some respects a valuable book, and interesting, it does little in the way of general interpretation. It tells how people held certain ideas at various times, but it doesn't tell why they held them. At least it contains a mass of material that is not elsewhere available under one cover. And the illustrations are many and illuminating." W. R. Brooks
— + Outlook 155:106 My 21 '30 100w

Reviewed by F. G. Seabury
Outlook 155:509 Jl 30 '30 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:81 N '30

St Louis 28:202 S '30

Reviewed by Preserved Smith
Sat R of Lit 7:34 Ag 9 '30 650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p887 O 30 '30 350w

MARLBOROUGH, SARAH (JENNINGS) CHURCHILL, duchess of. Memoirs; together with her Characters of her contemporaries and her Opinions; ed. with an introd. by William King. 340p il $5 Dutton [12s 6d Routledge]

B or 92 Great Britain—History—1689-1714
[30-27948]

A new edition of the memoirs of the intrepid Sarah, duchess of Marlborough, who was "Mrs Freeman" to Queen Anne's "Mrs Morley." The reprint is made from three earlier books written by the duchess: her Account of the conduct of the Dowager Duchess of Marlborough, published in 1742; The private correspondence of Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, which appeared in 1838; and The opinions of Sarah Duchess-Dowager of Marlborough, published in 1788.

"Mr. King's introduction is a readable sketch of the duchess' career and a valuable account of the origin and characteristics of the documents. For one who knows his English history well the book will be entertaining reading." William MacDonald
+ Books p7 Ag 3 '30 650w

"Swift hated her and he was a good hater. Perhaps they were too much alike to appreciate each other. 'The furies' he wrote 'reigned in her breast, the most mortal enemies of all mortal passions, which were sordid Avarice, disdainful Pride and ungovernable Rage.' All this is true, but Sarah Jennings had an ability, and as one reads these pages, special pleading though they be, she seems to have an honesty of her own. At least she was an indomitable woman and a good fighter, and her experiences were among those about whom it is enlivening to read." S. L. Cook
+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 5 '30 1780w

"If ever the record of a palace comedy was worth preserving, it is the redoubtable Duchess of Marlborough's 'Account of her Conduct from her First Coming to Court to the Year 1710.' Not only is it written in an extremely entertaining way, with all the naif vigour of a powerful personality absolutely sure that she was always in the right, but the development and peripety of the comedy affected European history very deeply." Bonamy Dobrée
+ Nation and Ath 47:251 My 24 '30 820w

"A well-printed modern edition, fully indexed and with an adequate introduction. They do not, however, rank very high in the literature of memoirs—the duchess had few literary graces—and they are far too biased to be of great documentary importance. Their interest lies in the completeness with which they reveal the mind of their remarkable writer, the bold spirit which carried her from obscurity to such heights, and her power of sustained hatred."
New Statesman 35:162 My 10 '30 150w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 Je 24 '30 380w

St Louis 28:273 N '30

Sat R 149:529 Ap 26 '30 100w

Reviewed by D. H. Willson
Sat R of Lit 7:208 O 11 '30 550w

"It is a form of remorselessness hard indeed to forgive. We heartily recommend the book as a wonderful self-study wholly unselfconscious. Her condemnations of her friends are bitter in the extreme and she herself stands in the midst of them, the only unforgivable figure."
Spec 144:sup621 Ap 12 '30 80w

"The Duchess tells her side of the story with extraordinary vigour and point. The sidelights which she throws upon the Court life of the period are intensely interesting. But how much more she could have told us, if she had wished, and if the intrigues in which she and Marlborough were engaged left nothing to be concealed! Her skill in skating over thin ice excites one's admiration, even while one regrets it. The present reprint would have been the better for an index and a few notes."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p363 My 1 '30 1100w

MARLOW, LOUIS, pseud. See Wilkinson, L. U.

MARLOWE, CHRISTOPHER. Black Forest. 224p il $2.50 Dodd [8s 6d Lane]

914.348 Black Forest 30-12982

The history and traditions of the country of the Black Forest and its people. There are excellent photographs, a map and an index.

Booklist 27:60 O '30

Reviewed by Lisle Bell
Books p17 Ag 17 '30 120w

Cleveland Open Shelf p141 N '30

"Mr. Christopher Marlowe is a pleasant, gossipy guide to the country of the Black Forest. He does give a map: though perhaps any visitor to the Black Forest might be advised to take also Baedeker. But then this does not profess to be a guide-book in the full sense."
+ — New Statesman 34:sup xx D 7 '29 100w

"It goes at the subject in a direct, matter-of-fact style that, although it is a bit stodgy, yet is simple and clear. He treats his theme most informingly and so pays much attention to the history of every place visited."
+ — N Y Times p12 My 4 '30 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:43 My '30

"Mr. Marlowe is thoroughly at home in the Forest itself, but he is less helpful in the approaches to it. His account of Strasburg suggests that he can allow himself to be prejudiced by matters which are outside the scope of his book, and that he does not expect his readers,

MARLOWE, CHRISTOPHER—Continued
either in winter or summer, to be greatly interested in architecture. For the rest, the book is written with sympathy and a real knowledge of the country districts and the people. History is pleasantly mixed with romance and legend, and there is plenty of practical information for the traveller."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1055 D 12 '29 500w

MARLOWE, CHRISTOPHER. Harz mountains. ^{2} 226p il $2.50 Dodd

914.3 Harz mountains. Germany—Description and travel

A guide to the Harz mountain region of Germany, its people, traditions and folklore, and its villages and cathedrals, dating from the middle ages. With photographs and a sketch map.

Books p11 D 21 '30 80w

"This is the second book which Mr. Marlowe has written on Germany. The first, on the Black Forest, showed that, in spite of prejudices, he could be pleasantly moved by his subject. The present volume is less satisfactory. Mr. Marlowe can describe the valleys and mountains of the Harz as well as anybody, but when he comes to the towns which lie on the fringes of the Harz, all places of great historic interest, he shows little sympathy and understanding. The fact is that these towns cannot be appreciated if seen at the end or in the middle of a long tramp in the hills. They must be lived in to be understood."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p763 S 25 '30 400w

MARMER, HARRY AARON. The sea. 312p il $3 (10s 6d) Appleton

551.46 Ocean 30-6425

A popular survey of oceanography, setting forth what science has learned about the form and nature of the oceanic basins, the characteristics of the waters in these basins, and the movements to which their waters are subject.

Booklist 27:193 Ja '31

"Although Mr. Marmer restricts his story of the sea, in outline, to the subjects proper to oceanography, he has found room for a pleasant and profitable assortment of facts and fancies falling outside his formal framework. He includes some eminently readable introductory matter concerning ancient and modern voyagers and, rather surprisingly, devotes a number of pages to the evidence for Atlantis."
+ Books p9 Jl 13 '30 150w

" 'The Sea' by Marmer is a most welcome contribution to this field. This book, the product of years of careful work based on a lifetime's study and research by the author, brings the science of oceanography within reach of the general reader. The author is to be congratulated on producing a work of such interest in a field familiar only to the few who have had special opportunities for study and research. I heartily recommend his book to all interested in a popular but authoritative survey of physical oceanography, including its vital relation to human affairs from the earliest times to the present." G. F. McEwen
+ Geog R 20:707 O '30 750w

"There are many popular books on the sea, but they commonly err in trying to combine its science in a single volume. The physics and chemistry are often so cut down that the biologist is not given the basal facts on which the understanding of his problems depends, while the general reader is left with almost nothing. The author of the volume under notice omits biology altogether, and the result is a most readable volume that should appeal to every traveller. The volume is written simply and sincerely, and has all the requisite illustrations."
+ Nature 126:346 S 6 '30 300w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:23 Ap '30

MARPLE, ALLEN CLARK (N. O. YOUMANS, pseud.). Best seller. 314p $2 Bobbs 30-29564

"Many real figures in the modern literary and publishing worlds appear under their own names in this story of a young man who came to New York to write a novel."—Publishers' Weekly

"As fiction it is of negligible worth. But to the student of letters, rather of the Business of Letters, it is worth its weight in a metal infinitely more precious than gold. . . There are times when I seem to detect a note of exaggeration. There are times I fear that an element of ribald mockery has crept into the book. But to one who knows the publishing business, the book comes with a discomforting familiarity. The crassness, the vulgarity, the helplessness and ignorance, are here displayed in their quintessential purity such as no publisher ever quite achieves." Guy Holt
+ — Bookm 72:337 N '30 680w

"Every person, male or female, who considers devoting his superior talents to the publishing business, should be made to read this book. Every publisher should place a copy in his reception room; it might deter some of the thousands of applicants who swarm about the literary hive. . . 'Best Seller' seems as if written to give the actors in the Publishing Passion Play a chance to gape and chuckle and, in a few well chosen cases, to fume at the caricatures of themselves and their activities." G. S. Oppenheimer
+ Books p26 O 26 '30 850w

" 'Best Seller' is one of the most amusing books of the year." F. B.
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p15 N 22 '30 380w
Nation 131:656 D 10 '30 180w
New Repub 65:173 D 24 '30 100w

"It may be said with reasonable safety that spiciness has been one of the principal characteristics of the 'Ex' novels, and in this respect 'Best Seller' is not lacking, that is, provided there are any readers left who can be titillated by accounts of wild parties. If the thousands of young men in the country who plan to get into publishing read 'Best Seller' they will probably be led to believe that an infinite capacity for soaking up liquor will be the best passport they can have. This capacity has been known to be useful, but they will make a mistake if they give all their time to funnel practice. Publishing is not all gin and bitters."
— N Y Times p9 N 16 '30 700w

" 'Best Seller' is to the book business what the annual dinner of the Dutch Treat Club is to the magazine world and the Gridiron Club program to Washington politics. If there are still depressed and discontented publishers and booksellers extant, let them turn to this work and get a hearty laugh at their own merry game. 'Best Seller' is primarily a book for insiders, which in New York City means about half the population." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 O 22 '30 750w

"It seems to us a better commentary on what is the matter with the book business than any of the solemn and serious pronouncements we have read." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 156:550 D 3 '30 200w

"It is as gross a falsification of the whole truth about publishing as 'The Front Page' was of the whole truth about journalism, and to boot it has nothing of the brilliance of presentation of that uproariously funny play." Amy Loveman
— Sat R of Lit 7:305 N 8 '30 250w

MARQUAND, JOHN PHILLIPS. Warning Hill. 304p $2.50 Little 30-5243

The narrative follows the development of Tommy Michael growing up in shabby poverty from boyhood to manhood. Contrasted with his own family, poor but with fine ideals, are the rich and arrogant Jelletts who live on Warning Hill. The Jelletts have a daughter, Marianne, with whom Tommy falls in love. The gap between rich and poor, the material things of life and the spiritual, is, however, never quite bridged, even tho Tommy reaches the goal he set for himself.

Booklist 27:29 S '30

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 8 '30 550w

"The story is a sufficiently antique one, but Mr. Marquand has brought to his plot more honesty and unconventionality of treatment than it commonly receives. In the intermediate parts of the book, however, between the more dramatic scenes, it must be confessed that the conventionality of the author's theme has been too much for him."

+ — N Y Times p9 F 9 '30 320w

"A simple, restrained, yet poignant story, it is told with rare and compelling consistency."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:786 Mr 1 '30 280w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 13 '30 180w

MARQUIS, DON. Off the arm. 205p $2 Doubleday, Doran

30-15338

Hugh Cass, highbrow novelist and supreme egotist, has become bored with his lowbrow, but very charming little wife Sally. So Sally goes back to her original job as a waitress just before Hugh crashes into big money by writing the book of the month. Hugh, feeling even more intolerably important, goes off to Hollywood to supervise the filming of his novel—which doesn't film—leaving Sally to be consoled by faithful and fat Wadleigh, of best-seller fame. But when Sally also yearns for Hollywood, actually becomes a famous movie star, and gets engaged to her director, things come to a climax.

Booklist 27:29 S '30

Books p23 S 21 '30 180w

"In the old days Don Marquis would not have let his constituents down like this. 'Off the Arm' is far from his best work."

— N Y Times p25 Je 1 '30 200w

"Marquis's faculty probably lies in writing short sketches rather than long novels, which is one reason why some of the passages in this book are mirth-provoking, while the book as a whole fails to register. The take-offs on New York literary life, seen only as Don Marquis can see it, are excellent, being helped along by the use of actual characters and places." Harry Hansen

+ — N Y World p13 My 10 '30 900w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 155:106 My 21 '30 140w

"Not a remarkable work of fiction: nobody will read it twice. But a great many people will read it once with pleasure and profit, and this is more than can be said of most novels that pull a long face and make a great display of literary earnestness." H W. Boynton

Sat R of Lit 6:1124 Je 14 '30 350w

MARRYAT, FREDERICK. Children of the New Forest; ed. by May McNeer; pictures by Lynd Ward. (Children's classics) 322p $1.75 Macmillan

30-11283

A new edition of a book which was first printed in 1846. It recounts the adventures of four children of a royalist family, who, after the deaths of their father and mother, found refuge with a forester or verderer in the ancient wood called the New Forest.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 F 16 '29

Booklist 26:402 Jl '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p83 Je '30

"Admirable historical novel."

+ Outlook 155:345 Jl 2 '30 50w

"I find it hard to believe that this book will have any appeal to the modern boy and girl. The story because of its quaintness and naïveté arouses a certain warmth in an older person, particularly if the person has any memories of an earlier reading which always lend a charm. From an artistic standpoint the illustrations may be fine, but what there is in either text or illustrations for a younger reader I am at a loss to discover." Elinor Whitney

— + Sat R of Lit 6:1178 Jl 5 '30 500w

MARSH, WILLIAM JOHN, Jr. Our president Herbert Hoover. 45p il $1 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 Hoover, Herbert Clark 30-22839

A short biography of President Hoover by a Connecticut boy, who was eleven years old at the time he wrote it, and started to print it on an old press. He later turned the printing over to the Doubleday, Doran company "because they have bigger presses."

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 Jl 16 '30

Chicago Daily Tribune p4 Ag 16 '30 200w

"If we think of the naive, straightforward and trusting remarks of youngsters as amusing, then I suppose this book will amuse, but William is not a Daisy Ashford, and one cannot very well indulge in roars of laughter at the expense of an honest and wholesome boy who believes that hard study, exemplary conduct, love of father and mother, are natural; that 'boys and girls who go to Christian associations never get into trouble,' and, that 'God took wine, whiskey and beer away because it was ruining our country, our homes and the children.'" Harry Hansen

N Y World p9 Jl 15 '30 300w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins

Outlook 155:506 Jl 30 '30 80w

St Louis 28:245 O '30

Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 180w

MARSHALL, ARCHIBALD. Miss Welby at Steen. 285p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d; 3s 6d Collins]

30-6809

Miss Ellen Welby, the heroine of the story, tells thru the medium of diary entries her experiences as a governess at an English country house. Tony, the heir to the property, falls in love with her; but equal interest centers upon Lady Isabelle Bostian and her lover, and the part the young governess and would-be novelist plays in connection with this intrigue.

Booklist 26:313 My '30

Books p19 My 4 '30 180w

"A story of tranquil charm through which there runs a deeper, more serious thread."

+ Christian Science Monitor p10 My 17 '30 300w

"Mr. Marshall exploits, not for the first time, all the trappings of life in a wealthy but sedate country house. He writes so easily, naturally and graciously, that it would be merely rude to call him a snob. And perhaps he is not; but in this book, as in so many others, whether consciously or unconsciously, he makes a persuasive appeal to the snobbery of his readers." E. S.

New Statesman 34:334 D 14 '29 350w

"The simple and somewhat trite level of the writing is perfectly in keeping, though in less capable hands than Mr. Marshall's it might have been merely dull. It is a pleasure to read a book such as this, that has no truck with tawdry things, but keeps a country air."

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 23 '30 600w

Pratt p40 summer '30

"The high lights of the story, though convincingly put in, are not very convincing in themselves. But Mr. Marshall writes with so much quiet authority, and his judgment in other respects is so eminently trustworthy, that he may easily be right here too." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 148:649 N 30 '29 200w

MARSHALL, ARCHIBALD—Continued

"In employing the diary form for a novel it is particularly difficult to retain the interest, for it is apt to become filled with unrelated detail, devitalized and heavy. However, in 'Miss Welby at Steen' Mr. Archibald Marshall gives so vivid a picture of the old English aristocratic life in the country that, despite its disintegration, there is much to compensate."

Sat R of Lit 6:879 Mr 29 '30 230w

"A romantic story that indulges rather than taxes the reader! The setting is perhaps the most attractive feature of this book for an idle afternoon. Steen has all the mellow beauty of places unchanged by time. The ancestral house itself, the gardens with spacious lawns chequered by the sunlight falling through old cedars, the tiny Norman church across the fields are suggested by pleasant touches which reveal in the author a most satisfying sense of place." C. M. K.

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Je 15 '30 380w

"Miss Welby is, indeed, a character in which any author might take pride."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1054 D 12 '29 400w

MARSHALL, EDISON. The missionary. 288p il $2 Cosmopolitan bk.

30-7103

Angus Mackenzie, a young Scotch minister, goes to the Far North to expiate his father's sin of many years before. Angus finds there, at the trading post, his Eskimo half-brother Ugruk—and he also finds and falls in love with Gretchen, beautiful daughter of Konrad the trader. Unfortunately Ugruk likewise wants Gretchen, and buys her, Eskimo fashion, from Konrad for a beautiful silver fox skin. The story reaches a climax in a desperate battle for life when the two rivals and the girl are lost in a snow storm—a battle in which the faith of the young missionary triumphs.

"Mr. Marshall has packed enough plot and incident into 'The Missionary" to satisfy the most exacting."

+ Books p18 Ap 6 '30 220w

"A whale of a good story."

+ Christian Century 47:969 Ag 6 '30 230w

"That Edison Marshall knows the frozen North and can write about it convincingly he has shown in previous novels. This new one is perhaps the most thrilling tale that has come from his pen, for its emotional suspense is due as much to its spiritual entanglements and developments as to its situations."

+ N Y Times p8 Mr 9 '30 380w

Pratt p40 summer '30

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 15 '30 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p718 S 11 '30 80w

MARTET, JEAN. Georges Clemenceau; tr. by Milton Waldman. 366p il $5 (25s) Longmans

B or 92 Clemenceau, Georges [30-8929]

The author joined Clemenceau's secretarial staff in 1915, becoming head of it in 1917, and served during all the time until Clemenceau's retirement. In 1927 the series of conversations, upon which the book is founded, were begun and continued up to the time of the statesman's death.

Booklist 26:354 Je '30

Bookm 71:xxiv Ap '30 100w

"This is 'not a book, but a man,' As a piece of literature, it might be voted faulty—artless, disjointed. It lacks the decorous arrangement which Paléologue introduced into his conversations with 'The Tragic Empress'; it is free from the venomous cleverness displayed by Brousson. It is honest, intelligent, and extraordinarily convincing. Thus, and not otherwise, must Old Man Victory have growled and snarled and jested." Albert Guerard

+ Books p3 Mr 9 '30 1450w

Reviewed by Edmund Noble

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Sisley Huddleston

Christian Science Monitor p10 Mr 29 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p101 Jl '30

"This is a book not easily forgotten. The flaming words attributed to Clemenceau have all the ring and authenticity of truth. Martet's book may be colored, exaggerated, but Clemenceau, brutal, ruthless, ironic, cynical, bitter, brooding in the smoldering ashes of his life, a very giant of a man with all his faults, is there." Francis Snow

+ Current Hist 32:6 Ap '30 200w

Foreign Affairs 8:673 Jl '30 40w

"It contributes little that is new to history, but it gives an intensely vivid picture of the lonely old man. It is Clemenceau, and whatever Clemenceau was, he was seldom dull." L. S. Gannett

+ Nation 130:332 Mr 19 '30 700w

"Clemenceau's opinions upon Greek art and history are not very original; but it will be a revelation to many that he thought about such things at all. Monsieur Martet was, undoubtedly, very fond of Clemenceau, and he is not the type of man who licks the hand that struck him. This book of dialogues is valuable for these reasons only. With regard to such questions as the controversy with Foch, the appointment of a commander-in-chief to the Allied armies, the annexation of the Rhineland, Monsieur Martet does not add to our knowledge, but he shows that there was a magnanimity and simplicity about Clemenceau which an ordinary observer of the man would never have suspected." A. C. Bell

+ Nation and Ath 46:736 Mr 1 '30 230w

Reviewed by Régis Michaud

New Repub 63:131 Je 18 '30 150w

"M. Martet's book is well worth reading for its extraordinary picture of an old man, who had maintained a bold front to the world, suddenly stricken with the fear of posthumous misrepresentation. The spectacle is all the sadder in that nobody was in the least likely to revive these ancient political and financial scandals. It is all the sadder in that Clemenceau appears to have been genuinely indifferent until a short time ago."

New Statesman 34:777 Mr 22 '30 1350w

"The secretary has proved himself an excellent portrait painter. Not for him to follow in the footsteps of those who, occupying a position like his, close to some great man of this world, have leaped into print after the great man's death, with pages surcharged with blind, uncritical laudation. Martet is not only a good Boswell but a true friend. In his book, Clemenceau himself is allowed to tell the story—jerkily, at random, and when what he says redounds to his discredit Boswell mercilessly allows it to stand. The result is a picture of a man alike domineering and dominating, equally likely to flame in anger or thrill at the sight of anything beautiful—a picture, full-length and boldly executed, of Georges Clemenceau, the Tiger—satanically ruthless, irresistibly brutal, truly great." T. R. Ybarra

+ N Y Times p1 Mr 9 '30 2200w

"It is written chiefly in dialogue form, in that snappy give and take which the French use with such adroitness. It is highly entertaining and at times has the verbal play of a drama by Bernard Shaw." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p16 Mr 5 '30 1100w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 154:510 Mr 26 '30 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:47 Je '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:12 Je '30 90w

St Louis 28:147 My '30

Sat R 149:332 Mr 15 '30 900w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 30 '30 1000w

Reviewed by S. B. Fay

Yale R n s 19:819 summer '30 200w

MARTI, OSCAR ALBERT. Economic causes of the reformation in England. 254p $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan

274.2 Reformation—England. Roman Catholic church in England 30-1113

Among the factors involved in the Protestant Reformation in England Dr Marti finds that economic elements had a profound influence. The centralized wealth of unproductive church property became a menace to political power and stood in the way of the rapid expansion of commerce and industry. The middle classes, growing in social and economic importance, coveted the wealth of the Church and demanded the suppression of the monasteries. The author traces these forces thru three centuries in English history, before the final breach between the Crown and the Papacy.

"The chapters on the Reformation contain little that is new, are not always founded on the best sources, and occasionally lapse into serious errors." Preserved Smith

— Am Hist R 35:658 Ap '30 650w

Christian Century 47:690 My 28 '30 120w

"All students of this section of the history of the Church will welcome this work of Doctor Marti. His researches have given us authoritative estimates of the economic conditions prevailing throughout the nation during the period from the thirteenth to the sixteenth century inclusive. . . The book is very readable." R. E. E. Harkness

+ Crozer Q 7:113 Ja '30 400w

J Religion 10:159 Ja '30 30w

Reviewed by P. V. Norwood

J Religion 10:279 Ap '30 650w

Springf'd Republican p12 F 6 '30 120w

"Dr. Marti is completely immune from the worries of modern scholars about the critical use of authorities. All is fish that comes to his net, whether it is Matthew Paris or a mid-nineteenth-century compilation. The book, however, shows the qualities of moderation and modesty."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p373 My 1 '30 320w

MARTIN, ALFRED WILHELM. Seven great ^{2} bibles. (World unity lib.) 277p $2.50 Stokes

290 Sacred books. Religions 30-30518

The seven great oriental religions—Hinduism, Buddhism, Confucianism (Taoism), Zoroastrianism, Mohammedanism, Judaism and Christianity are set forth by means of quotations from their sacred scriptures, with a view to evaluating the contribution of each to the religion and ethics of the world.

"This is a valuable piece of work, in condensation and interpretation and in keeping with the scientific spirit of the new age." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Ja 3 '31 400w

"The extensive extracts from [the] scriptures are carefully selected to show their nature and significance so that the reader can get from them a clear conception of what each religion stands for and what it has meant to its believers. Explanatory paragraphs link the extracts together. Mr. Martin's method is successful in making these religions understandable by readers uninitiated in the subject and in imparting appreciation of their values."

+ N Y Times p40 N 30 '30 220w

MARTIN, EVERETT DEAN. Liberty. 307p $3 Norton [10s 6d Routledge]

323.44 Liberty 30-15391

In order to arrive at an explanation of the meaning of liberty, Mr Martin first discusses the Grecian conception, the contributions of Christianity and the renaissance to liberty and the attitudes of Rousseau, Voltaire and other definers of its meaning. One form of liberty appears in the guise of individual right against established authority; another defines liberty as a state of happiness, a general good. Mr Martin's theory is that liberty is not a universal, but a relative state. It is a thing of the spirit, dependent on freedom of speech and action—and democracy, the rule of the people, is its chief enemy.

Am Pol Sci R 24:1068 N '30 250w

Booklist 27:93 N '30

"A strikingly valuable contribution to that growing body of criticism which is returning to a study of first principles." A. B. Clarke

+ Bookm 71:460 Jl '30 600w

"An urbane plea for the faith of the inner spirit, appropriately illustrated with historical, philosophical and practical lore. A noble theme, handled with dignity, especially timely in an hour when liberty is in peril of being limited, as he says, 'to the freedom to make money.'" Charles Beard

+ Books p1 Je 8 '30 1300w

"This is one of the most daring books of the year. Its denunciation of the masses working through emotion is thought-provoking. It is a psychological interpretation of the history of liberty. . . Ministers and church people will learn much from this book and if it would teach them the extent to which they, as a governing group, can safely go without meddling in other people's affairs it will have served its purpose." Raymond Kresensky

+ Christian Century 47:1215 O 8 '30 650w

"It is with misgivings that one approaches Everett Dean Martin's 'Liberty.' These misgivings soon dissolve, however, before the flow of Mr. Martin's eloquence, his gift for felicitous and forcible statement, his attractive historical summaries, his broad, humane culture, his shrewd analysis and unfailing clarity. His 'Liberty' is not perhaps a profound book or a remarkably original one, but it is none the less admirable. For in spite of the great existing classics, and of the fact that much of his argument is necessarily repetition, Mr. Martin has done a task that greatly needed to be done." Henry Hazlitt

+ Nation 130:706 Je 18 '30 1050w

Reviewed by Matthew Josephson

New Repub 64:104 S 10 '30 1250w

"For a philosophical anarchist and a certain type of intellectual liberal, Mr. Martin may be furnishing entirely satisfactory nourishment. For those who look beyond the world of ideas of a civilized elite, it is poor pickings. . . The book is a good popular exposition of the idea with which it deals. It is clearly, simply and forcefully written. It is essentially a popularization and synthesis of what has been said by others in heavier fashion." R. N. Baldwin

+ — N Y Evening Post p8m My 1 '30 900w

Reviewed by R. L. Duffus

N Y Times p10 Je 15 '30 1100w

"Much of what he preaches is generally accepted; his outlook is intelligent and his case is put with dignity. But because it has not the original message of the writings of Babbitt, John B. Watson and Rousseau, but is rather a valuation of many standards and theories, it remains as a summary without an original impetus to carry it forward." Harry Hansen

N Y World p13 Je 4 '30 850w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins

Outlook 155:224 Je 11 '30 430w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:69 O '30

Reviewed by Charles Petrie

Sat R 150:623 N 15 '30 1200w

"'Liberty' is a very good book. Eminently wise if not profound, unhackneyed if not in the highest sense original. And certainly it is timely. Its author is entirely right about the confusion of American liberalism, and his analysis of the causes of this confusion and the historic development of varying conceptions of liberty is both acute and sound. . . Yet as I closed the book I could not help thinking that Mr. Martin had ignored or minimized some aspects of the problem of liberty in the modern world to an extent which makes his book a less valuable chart for the guidance of the civilized man than it might have been." Norman Thomas

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1101 Je 7 '30 3250w

MARTIN, E. D.—Continued

Springf'd Republican p10 Je 13 '30 850w

Reviewed by R. H. Abrams

Survey 64:43 O 1 '30 850w

Reviewed by R. N. Baldwin

World Tomorrow 13:471 N '30 280w

Reviewed by D. S. Muzzey

Yale R n s 20:415 winter '31 420w

MARTIN, HARRY BROWNLOW. What's wrong with your game? 240p il $2 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

796.352 Golf 30-9097

Illustrated advice to golfers on all points of the game: the grip, the swing, the stance, the club, the finish, the follow-thru, etc.

Booklist 27:19 S '30

"There must be few golfers who can learn nothing from a book in the composition of which the most famous players have been brought into consultation; on the other hand, a better primer for the tyro would be difficult to find."

+ Nation and Ath 47:448 Jl 5 '30 150w

"The book contains an enormous variety of advice, and some of the pictures have a touch of caricature which makes them rather amusing."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p539 Je 26 '30 100w

MARTIN, MRS HELEN (REIMENSNYDER). Tender talons. 281p $2 Dodd

30-24053

The story of an almost unbelievably selfish father, who enslaved his wife and children with loving kindness. One by one his wife and his four children slipped out of his life until all were gone, and he was left alone with his wrath and disappointment.

Books p14 O 5 '30 200w

"In this novel Miss Martin ventures into the field of psychiatry. Not that the story is didactic; on the contrary, the author handles her basic theme with gloves, and rarely does a technical term obtrude. In fact, the gingerly manner of presentation mars the story, leaving the reader the inevitable conclusion that much more might have been done with it."

— + N Y Times p20 N 23 '30 220w

MARTIN, MRS HELEN (REIMENSNYDER). Yoked with a lamb, and other stories. 325p $2 Dodd

30-3539

Nine short stories concerned with the daily lives of the Pennsylvania Dutch, and one novelette, "Yoked With a Lamb," which tells the love story of a wilful young society girl.

Booklist 26:313 My '30

Books p19 Mr 9 '30 130w

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 29 '30 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p112 Jl '30

"Though somewhat machine-made, the old dialect renders the nine short tales not unamusing. . . The novelette, 'Yoked With a Lamb,' which gives the book its title, is a story supposedly dealing with well-bred, intelligent people. It has no apparent relation either to literature or to life, and represents a fictional level a good many degrees below mediocrity."

— + N Y Times p9 F 9 '30 400w

Sat R of Lit 6:1179 Jl 5 '30 130w

MARTIN, LILLIEN JANE, and DE GRUCHY, CLARE. Salvaging old age. 175p $2 (7s 6d) Macmillan

612.67 Old age 30-3193

Dr Lillien Martin, the author, is seventy-eight, finds life of absorbing interest and refuses to grow old. Her book tells of the experiences she has had as a consulting psychologist in San Francisco, in her work of rehabilitating elderly people. With Miss Clare de Gruchy as her clinical assistant, she has successfully dealt with many aspects of the problem of making old age a useful and happy period of life.

Booklist 26:264 Ap '30

"The most interesting part of the book, is the recital by way of illustration of many 'cases' and their treatment and response. Her suggestions for adult education are certainly worth while."

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 21 '30 260w

Cleveland Open Shelf p71 My '30

"A much-neglected subject."

J Home Econ 22:411 My '30 80w

"Dr. Martin's book is one of the first to treat this question, whose importance is being more and more widely recognized, with understanding sympathy and with the authority that comes of extensive knowledge. It deserves to be read by every one who has passed his fortieth birthday and by those even younger who employ or have the care of elderly people."

+ N Y Times p20 Ja 26 '30 600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:81 N '30

Pratt p17 summer '30

St Louis 28:127 My '30

Reviewed by M. F. Warren

Survey 64:440 Ag 15 '30 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p399 My 8 '30 230w

MARTIN, MRS MARY STEICHEN. First picture book; everyday things for babies; photographs by Edward Steichen. unp $2 Harcourt

30-28193

"The idea back of this picture book for babies is an excellent one. The mother who prepared it was interested in securing for her children a book of pictures of everyday objects which would give them the pleasure of recognition and which would not confuse them by such intrusive signs of another personality as color and design carry with them. Hence she chose things thoroughly familiar to the child, and instead of having them drawn by an artist with a personality to express she had them photographed by Edward Steichen, who appears to have done the job as objectively as possible."—Books

"In his unique and beautiful photographs, Mr. Edward Steichen has given an almost tangible reality to the high-chair with its silver mug; to brown bread and butter; to a child's brush and comb; to teddy-bear and other daily acquaintances. Many babies between one year and three will pore over the pictures." K. G. Landon

+ Bookm 72:244 N '30 150w

"The book is a long stride in the right direction. . . Mrs. Martin apparently plans a series of such volumes. The faults of this one, perhaps inevitable in such a pioneer attempt, do little to lessen one's pleasure in the promise of others. . . The photography is, of course, unexampled." Babette Deutsch

+ — Books p8 N 9 '30 600w

"The photographs by Steichen are in soft gray tones and are so appealing that one little one to whom the book was shown reached out to pluck the teddy bear from the page." A. L. Shea

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p14 O 18 '30 80w

" 'The First Picture Book' is important partly because it is a beautifully made book, and interesting, and perhaps a profound essay toward giving the child a sense of reality and a heightened sense of the immediate environment, but more because it is the first of an avalanche of photograph picture books by Mrs. Martin and others. At least two publishers have been studying the enormous German output of such books, and Mrs. Martin herself announces a second volume in preparation." Ernestine Evans

+ Nation 131:555 N 19 '30 230w

"This is a new sort of book and it comes sponsored by the director of an experimental nursery school. No little imagination went into the photography and it was done by Edward Steichen, whose work is famous." Nancy Evans

+ N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 100w

"Although the educational theory underlying the book may not be equally convincing to every one, there is no doubt as to the beauty of the photography." A. T. Eaton

N Y Times p5 N 16 '30 100w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker

Outlook 156:580 D 10 '30 180w

"Mr. Steichen's illustrations are so artistically made and arranged as to arouse keen interest and appreciation on the part of all who view the volume. In most attractive fashion, and without text, the book depicts the daily activities and interests of the baby's life. It brings within his own mental capacity and understanding a world of realism and actuality. The child is thus enabled to draw upon his own personal experiences and through them to reach out into the realm of imagination. . . The educational theory behind this project seems to be most sound and sane." Wilhelmina Harper

+ Sat R of Lit 7:440 D 6 '30 600w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Irwin

Survey 65:340 D 15 '30 480w

MARTIN, STUART. Trial of Scotland yard. 303p $2 Harper

30-21169

The most brilliant detectives of Scotland Yard gathered one evening at an appointed hour to guard the life of the Earl of Bowcame, who had been forewarned of his death at that specified time. These special detectives had been chosen because of their individual abilities in solving or preventing previous crimes—yet it took the chief of them all to solve the mystery of the Earl of Bowcame.

Bookm 72:xxi S '30 80w

"The volume amounts to eight or nine short stories and an inclosing tale, the whole being varied, unusual and stuffed with this, that and the other." Will Cuppy

+ Books p13 Ag 17 '30 80w

"Contains some pretty good short stories, though a certain likeness of one to another has a tendency toward robbing the later ones of interest, and the manner in which they are strung together is rather annoyingly preposterous." Dashiell Hammett

+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 23 '30 40w

"The secret of the person who set out to dispose of the Earl is maintained to the last paragraph and the story is a rattling good one." Bruce Rae

+ N Y Times p20 S 7 '30 120w

"Shorn of every superfluous detail, compact models of technical skill, a number of these cases might easily have served an author less scrupulously economic as the material for a full-length thriller. This book is heartily recommended." E. C. B.

+ N Y World p5m Ag 17 '30 130w

Reviewed by R. I. Center

Sat R of Lit 7:379 N 22 '30 30w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1089 D 18 '30 220w

MARTINEZ ZUVIRIA, GUSTAVA A. (HUGO WAST, pseud.). Strength of lovers; tr. from the Spanish by Louis Imbert and Jacques Le Clercq. 315p $2.50 (7s 6d) Longmans

[30-4857]

"The eminent South American novelist here writes an historical romance of Sebastian Cabot and his expedition in search of a passage to the northward of the Straits of Magellan. The time is the early sixteenth century, and most of the action takes place on the shores of Brazil. There is a good deal of fighting, traitorous intrigue, and amorous complication."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 26:313 My '30

"An exciting and very readable story."

+ Bookm 71:xxvii Ap '30 80w

"As in his other romances, Wast writes a bedizened melodrama sounding rather more like a dime novel than the dignity of history. Windy phrases pour from a brazen throat of style. History is explained instead of being woven into the narrative. An idyll is travestied with cheap and tawdry talent."

— Books p16 Mr 23 '30 130w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 5 '30 700w

Cath World 131:380 Je '30 110w

Cleveland Open Shelf p63 Ap '30

"Inhabitants of North America know, as a rule, far too little of the history of the southern portion of the continent. Translations of such novels as 'The Strength of Lovers' should, therefore, be doubly welcome."

+ N Y Times p8 F 9 '30 630w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:32 Ap '30

"Unfortunately, 'The Strength of Lovers' is hopelessly dull. We never have the faintest interest in the fortunes of the characters, and usually the plot is so involved that we give up trying to straighten it out. From the evidence of this novel, Hugo Wast does not seem to be a natural story-teller, though it may be that some of the dullness is due to an unimaginative translation. But whatever the reason, the few bits of information that we do get in no way compensate for the boredom involved in getting them."

— Sat R of Lit 6:970 Ap 19 '30 230w

"Though the work is interesting as narrative, the creation of the leading figures is lacking in the final touch necessary to make them living flesh and blood."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 16 '30 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p300 Ap 3 '30 220w

MARTYN, WYNDHAM. Murder in Beacon street. 315p $2 McBride

30-7562

"A Harvard professor and a Radcliffe instructress find a common interest in a most peculiar murder case. A corpse is found by these two in the home of a wealthy and proud Bostonian, but before the police arrive, the body has been spirited away, and all traces removed. Professor Southard finds his solution after pursuing elusive clues to New York, California and finally back to Boston."—Bookm

"All the tricks of the trade are employed by the author to make his murder mystery click, and he does a good job of it."

+ Bookm 71:xxviii Ap '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p16 Mr 16 '30 150w

"Well-written and unusual in plot."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 30 '30 220w

N Y Times p11 Jl 13 '30 280w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 30 '30 150w

MARTYR, WESTON. Not without dust and heat. 291p $2.50 Washburn [7s 6d Blackwood]

[30-567]

"The irrelevant title covers thirteen pieces, namely, nine stories of the sea, one humorous story of the War, 'The Pipe Pushers,' one of caravanning in Derbyshire, 'A Savage Island,' one of camphor-hunting in Formosa, 'A drug in the market,' and one chapter which gloats over the Admiralty sailing directions for the Pacific Islands. Of the nine sea stories, five are in the Pacific, and one each in an Essex creek, the Bay of Biscay, Japan, and the Gulf of Pe-chi-li. None mentions love."—Times [London] Lit Sup

MARTYR, WESTON—Continued

"In spite of Mr. Martyr's original plots and genuine conception of character his final results fall far below expectations. But his is an excellent talent which will not fail him when he has something definite to say."

+ — Bookm 71:ix Ag '30 80w

"These stories are all natural. There is a technique of course; there must be. But it never obtrudes. You never are conscious of any gymnastics on the part of the narrator. The tale bubbles out as naturally as the water comes out of a spring. No effort. No phrase-making. No more formula than there is at a dog fight. Then suddenly the narrative you have been reading is rounded off with a sudden turn and you discover that it has resolved itself into a wellnigh perfect story. . . All told, this is the best collection of sea stories that I have read in years." Bellamy Partridge

+ Books p16 Ap 20 '30 600w

"Not for a long time has come to our attention a group of stories so uniformly original as are these." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '30 650w

"There are no dimensions to these stories, merely the unwinding of a spool of thread, until the tale told by the loquacious protagonist is at an end. For those who like to find their escape in the long-drawn-out narrative of another's encounter in a flat, if colorful, world, Mr. Martyr's book should nevertheless afford entertainment."

— + N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 22 '30 100w

"Mr. Martyr writes in the tradition of the old nautical yarn spinners. He writes well, and he knows what he is talking about. One feels that his experience goes deeper than usual. Any one who has ever sailed a small boat or gone anywhere on a large one will enjoy these stories."

+ N Y Times p9 Je 8 '30 420w

Pratt p38 autumn '30

Reviewed by Basil Davenport

Sat R of Lit 7:4 Jl 26 '30 500w

"All the first seven are good, the last six second-rate."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p824 O 17 '29 150w

MARX, KARL. Capital; a critique of political economy; the process of capitalist production; tr. from the 4th German ed. by Eden & Cedar Paul. 927p $3.75 Int. pub. [12s 6d Allen, G.]

331 Capital. Economics 29-11686

A new and modernized translation of the first volume of Marx's "Das kapital."

"Mr. and Mrs. Paul have done their work extremely well, and the publisher has made a readable and handy volume of a classic which in itself is somewhat forbidding."

+ Nation and Ath 44:596 Ja 26 '29 100w

"A complete translation, clothing the original in a living English style." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 59:265 Jl 24 '29 900w

"Anyone who has ever wrestled with Marx knows how terribly bad and unreadable the old translation of Das Kapital was. In the skilful hands of Mr. and Mrs. Paul, Marx reads like a different man. His argument is lucid, and something of the real quality of his own style appears in the translation. . . Here any ordinary student of Marx has a book which is likely to halve his labour and double his understanding of a great economist recognised even by his critics as an immensely important formative influence on economic and historical theories as well as on the Socialist movement."

+ New Statesman 32:420 Ja 5 '29 120w

"The present translators are very experienced, and the volume is well got up and easier to read than the other; but since there are no great differences we still wonder at the venture."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p51 Ja 24 '29 200w

MARX, KARL, and ENGELS, FRIEDRICH. Communist manifesto; with an introd. and explanatory notes by D. Ryazanoff; [tr. by Eden and Cedar Paul]. 365p $3.50; pop ed $2 Int. pub. [15s Lawrence]

335.4 Communism [30-31291]

A revised translation of the Manifesto; a history of the Communist league; a study by Engels of the revolutionary movement of 1847; and, in part two, 63 explanatory notes. The third part of the book consists of numerous appendices.

"The notes were obviously written in the first instance for Russian rather than English readers, and they include a good deal of elementary economic history which adds nothing to our knowledge. But there are also notes dealing with the rival schools of Socialists described and denounced in the text of the Manifesto, and some of them are likely to be of value to the English reader. The whole volume, however, is unduly puffed out with notes that are of relatively little importance."

— + New Statesman 35:96 Ap 26 '30 220w

St Louis 28:231 O '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p503 Je 19 '30 850w

MARY MONICA, SISTER. Cross in the wilderness; a biography of pioneer Ohio. 290p il $3.50 (10s) Longmans

B or 92 Chatfield, Mother Julia. Frontier and pioneer life. St Martin, Ohio. School of Brown county Ursulines [30-12244]

The life story of an English girl of wealth and breeding, Julia Chatfield, who became Sister Ursula, one of the foundresses of Catholic education in the United States. Parallel with the story of her life runs the history of the founding of the Ursuline convent school in Brown County, Ohio, where Sister Ursula labored for many years, and its part in the conquering of the wilderness.

"The author uses old records to achieve a fine bit of Americana, a vivid picture of a rural community through the Civil War and after. But better than that, it is a story of feminine tact and energy bringing poise and culture to a country that needed both so badly. With no literary artifice, with charm and sincerity, Sister Monica has written an exceptional book."

+ Bookm 71:xxii Je '30 80w

"Remarkably well done. Sister Monica has a sense of the dramatic, an excellent gift of characterization, and good control of a vivid style. There is a gayety in her narration, as there was in those heroines of hers, and by this discerning reticence and charming human quality her story and our pleasure in reading it are enhanced in value."

+ Books p15 Jl 20 '30 130w

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 30 '30 350w

"Gives the reader a remarkable picture of pioneer conditions in the Ohio valley of the forties and on to the troubled times of the Civil War." G. D. M.

+ Cath World 131:628 Ag '30 250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p100 Jl '30

N Y Times p32 N 30 '30 520w

"She has captured the atmosphere of the 'forties well, while her account of the Civil War troubles, which were keenly felt by the Literary Institute because of its links with both North and South, is given with spirit and interest. At times the execution of her book falls somewhat below her conception; it is sometimes rather confused in arrangement, and the style is occasionally ornate at the expense of clarity. But the volume makes adroit use of the letters of the founder Sister Ursula, who was a woman of very unusual energy and ability, of the diary of one of the helpful priests, Père Gacon, of the writings of Bishop Purcell, and of newspaper materials. It is a valuable addition to the educational and religious history of this part of the West. A number of well-chosen illustrations add to the attractiveness of the book."

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:75 Ag 23 '30 420w

"Association with these good, simple people gives to this record a lingering charm and a pensive memory."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p631 Jl 31 '30 300w

MASEFIELD, JOHN. Collected poems. 446,438p $5 Macmillan

821 29-27460

Part I of this single volume of Masefield's collected poems contains the following previously published works: Salt-water ballads; Miscellaneous poems; Sonnets, and other poems; Lollingdon Downs, and other poems; Part II, Renard the fox, and other poems; and Midsummer night, and other tales in verse.

Boston Transcript p2 F 15 '30 280w

Pratt p28 autumn '30

"Mr Masefield's talent might have flowered differently if it had emerged at a period of less conscious rebellion. But his talent has been a genuinely poetic talent at all times—that is, he has had true genius for expression, and therein has been superior to most of his contemporaries. He can be read with pleasure and studied with profit in the mass."

+ — Springf'd Republican p6e D 15 '29 320w

Wis Lib Bul 25:370 N '29

MASEFIELD, JOHN. Wanderer of Liverpool. 139p il $3.50 [8s 6d Heinemann] Macmillan

910.4 Wanderer (schooner) 30-31409

Writing partly in prose and partly in verse, Mr Masefield tells the story of a four-master British ship, the Wanderer, and her many tragic adventures. The poet narrates in a lengthy ballad the tale of the voyage on which, during a great storm, the Wanderer's captain lost his life. The volume includes also A Masque of Liverpool, and a number of ballads of sailors and the sea.

Booklist 27:189 Ja '31

"There are no embellishments, no conversation, no analysis, no summation, no philosophizing in this record. Mr. Masefield seeks his effect not by synthesis but by a patient laying out of detail. It is as if somebody set before you a series of photographs, one by one, say, of a trip abroad, withholding all comment until you had seen the last. It is a sad, beautiful story. The bareness of the prose record is both enphasized and relieved by the rich substance of the verse." Arthur Warner

+ Books p4 N 16 '30 850w

Reviewed by C. B. Palmer
Boston Transcript p5 D 3 '30 1800w

"The book is essentially prose, adorned with some verses. There is no fusion of the two elements, no consistent adaptation of means to ends, no skilful leading of the reader from the plains of exposition to the heights of poetry. Indeed, few passages in the book, whether in prose or verse, are suffused with a genuinely poetic intensity. . . There are a few more distinguished passages in the appended lyrics, but not enough to save the book." Granville Hicks

— + Nation 131:585 N 26 '30 600w

"The poems in this volume add nothing to Masefield's reputation. He has written others on the same subject, and far better. The passion is gone out of this verse, even from a group of sonnets in which the poet attempts as in an earlier series of sonnets to give his philosophy of Beauty. These late poems are full of literary images, of romantic and rather trite phrases and of that deliberate and exaggerated realism through which Masefield gropes toward his romantic illusion." E. L. Walton

— New Repub 65:198 D 31 '30 680w

New Statesman 36:180 N 15 '30 1200w

" 'The Wanderer of Liverpool' is a salty living tale, with something of a Homeric ring, as any such tale must be or, better, perhaps, since there is not the noise of battle and the clang of swords, Icelandic. The tale of the Wanderer is a latter-day saga, such a tale as none can read without stirring of the blood." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p3 N 16 '30 1450w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p16 N 5 '30 700w

Reviewed by L. T. Nicholl
Outlook 156:590 D 10 '30 150w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Grigson
Sat R 150:753 D 6 '30 750w

Reviewed by W. R. Benét
Sat R of Lit 7:388 N 29 '30 2050w

"When Mr. Masefield has more feeling to express than he cares to convey in prose he drops into, or rather ascends, to poetry in long pieces of narrative. His narrative in free verse describing the starting of the 'Wanderer' upon her first voyage is a kind of Cyclopean poetry; it is rough and irregular as though the gigantic elements of disaster were being thrown together without time to think. This is perfectly appropriate to the hugger-mugger rush of a new crew getting together in a new ship. Anyone who thinks that the artlessness is undesigned will see that he is wrong when he comes to the exquisite lyrical passages which are due to the same inspiration later in the book."

+ Spec 145:695 N 8 '30 700w

"There could be no theme more befitting a Poet Laureate. His stories of England are crowned by this narrative in prose and verse of one of the last of the sailing ships, that formed so large a part of her glory. . . This account in prose and poetry of the Wanderer is boldly conceived. It is history and a testament, a reassertion of the principle of beauty."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p911 N 6 '30 1100w

MASKELL, HENRY PARR. Soul of Picardy. 208p $4 Appleton [12s 6d Benn]

914.426 Picardy—Description and travel 30-16601

The result of leisurely rambles in the province of Picardy during the last thirty years, this book describes with insight and sympathy the people and places of the countryside—its picturesque, social, literary and architectural aspects.

Books p15 Jl 6 '30 120w

Boston Transcript p2 My 3 '30 700w

New Statesman 34:750 Mr 15 '30 80w

Reviewed by Halsey Raines
N Y Times p11 Ag 3 '30 250w

"We can commend this book as a useful supplement to the orthodox guide book."

+ Sat R 149:370 Mr 22 '30 120w

"About many of Mr. Maskell's pages one can say only that pedestrian is as pedestrian does, but on the whole the book is a pleasant piece of reminiscent travel writing." V. S. Pritchett

Spec 144:750 My 3 '30 250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p227 Mr 20 '30 750w

MASON, ARTHUR. Wee men of Ballywooden. 266p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

30-27069

Old Danny Fay sold fish, altho he was never known to buy or catch any. Every night he saddled his donkey and left his lighted pipe on the doorstep and in the morning there were fish in his two-wheeled cart. One day the people refused to buy any fish, and that night the Big Wind came up, and blew the Wee Men far away, and did great damage. Not until the Wee Men finally returned to Danny, and the people bought fish again, did luck and prosperity return to the countryside.

"Stories which to some readers may seem over-Irished and to others entirely delightful in their rendering." A. C. Moore

Atlantic Bookshelf p48 D '30 50w

MASON, ARTHUR—Continued
Booklist 27:167 D '30

Reviewed by A. L. Shea
Chicago Daily Tribune p14 N 22 '30 50w

"As I read 'The Wee Men of Ballywooden,' I feel how much better this story might have been if Arthur Mason had, like E. Nesbit, mingled his fantasy with everyday actuality. No one can write a long unrelieved fantasy (not even an accomplished writer like James Branch Cabell), for the simple reason that fantasy is only fantastic in relation to a norm of life, and unless the writer keeps returning to that norm and going out from it again, a great deal of what he writes will be in the air." Padraic Colum
— New Repub 65:23 N 19 '30 230w

"These tales are not something thought out at a writer's desk, but seem to have woven themselves out of the mists and rainbows, turf smoke and peat bogs of Ireland. A large share of the charm of the book is due to the pictures. Rarely are illustrations and text so completely a part of each other. It is impossible to think of the tales without seeing at the same time in one's mind's eye Mr. Lawson's drawings, which are imaginative, humorous and exquisite." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p26 O 26 '30 280w

MASON, BERNARD STERLING. Camping and education; camp problems from the camper's viewpoint. 283p $3 McCall co, 230 Park av, N.Y.

796.54 Camping. Moral education. Character 30-10239

"Professor Mason, of the department of sociology, Ohio State University, wanted to discover the attitude of young campers toward the environment and the activities afforded by camps, how the boys and girls are influenced by them and what are their reactions to the situations, the methods and the enjoyments of the camp. So he went straight to the campers themselves and talked directly with the boys and girls of private, Boy Scout and Y. M. C. A. camps. . . In this book he summarizes the results of his interviews, discusses their significance and draws some conclusions."—N Y Times

"The chapters on 'Camp Control' and 'Camp Leadership' seem particularly worthy. The book contains some excellent practical material. It has a well-selected bibliography and an index. The insertion of topical headings would have improved the chapter organization. While the book is addressed primarily to camp leaders it deserves a careful reading by all who care to be intelligent concerning the organization and direction of leisure-time pursuits of boys and girls." E. S. Johnson
+ Am J Soc 36:331 S '30 280w

"This is a sound digest of education and camping, interesting alike to directors of camp activities and parents; and the average reader will be interested because, although the information was culled from the rank of campers, it is correlated and pointed up by the author. Mr. Mason makes out a good case for camp training but the parent reading the book will decide to make a careful investigation before submitting his child to an environment that can have so influential a part in shaping his life."
+ Bookm 71:vi Je '30 80w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 2 '30 550w
N Y Times p27 My 18 '30 200w
St Louis 28:214 S '30

MASON, EDWARD SAGENDORPH. Paris commune; an episode in the history of the socialist movement. 386p $5 Macmillan [2]

944.08 Paris—History—Commune, 1871. Socialism in France 30-25433

Since the Russian communists recognize in the Paris Commune of 1871 a true predecessor to the soviet government, the author of this volume attempts to revaluate the Commune in the light of the socialist interpretation. The first part of the book deals with the history of the Paris Commune; part two with modern interpretations and their results.

"More diligent in its documentation than distinguished in its manner." Frederick Dupee
+ — Bookm 72:439 D '30 480w

"In general, this study is a welcome and important addition to the small body of careful writing on the history of the social revolutionary movement." E. M. Carroll
+ Hist Outlook 21:392 D '30 650w

MASON, VAN WYCK. Seeds of murder 302p $1 Doubleday, Doran 30-20817

Three datura seeds, placed to form a triangle beneath the bodies of the two gentlemen murdered in the tale, are vital clues in Captain North's solution of a perplexing case.

Bookm 72:xxv N '30 100w

"This one is fast, furious and thoroughly readable." Will Cuppy
+ Books p12 Jl 27 '30 120w

"So inexpertly treated that none of it becomes even momentarily convincing or exciting."
— N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 2 '30 80w

Reviewed by R. I. Center
Sat R of Lit 7:63 Ag 16 '30 40w

MASSINGHAM, HAROLD JOHN. Friend of Shelley; a memoir of Edward John Trelawny. 368p il $3.50 Appleton [21s Cobden Sanderson]

B or 92 Trelawny, Edward John. Shelley, Percy Bysshe. Byron, George Gordon Noël Byron, 6th baron. Shelley, Mrs Mary Wollstonecraft (Godwin) 30-29136

A biography of the picturesque and amazing man who owes his immortality to the fact that he was the devoted friend of Shelley and the intimate of Byron. Relying for the early years of his life on Trelawny's own account in the Adventures of a Younger Son, Mr Massingham devotes more than half his book to the most significant part of Trelawny's life, his association with Shelley and his relations with Mary Shelley and Byron.

"Mr. Massingham has had the courage to contemplate with fervour and to estimate with eloquence the ambiguities of Trelawny. His lengthy, singular book is not a formal or consecutive biography; it is a series of spirited considerations on Trelawny in several aspects—by himself, in contact with Byron, in companionship with Shelley, in confusion with Mary Shelley, in various relationships, and in his ultra-Landorian old age. . . . Mr. Massingham's work will be found to vibrate and echo with the impact of Shelley's life on Trelawny, and is rich in varied utterances as challenging as those of Trelawny himself." Edmund Blunden
+ Nation and Ath 47:443 Jl 5 '30 1300w

"Mr. Massingham has written a book to please himself, and done it admirably. From his psychological studies of the protagonists—Shelley and Mary Shelley, Byron and Trelawny—there emerges a clear, convincing picture and a situation which has the inevitability of tragedy."
+ New Statesman 35:505 Jl 26 '30 1300w

Reviewed by Horace Gregory
N Y Evening Post p4d N 8 '30 700w

Reviewed by Percy Hutchison
N Y Times p2 N 30 '30 1300w

"Mr. Massingham has brought us no nearer the truth; rather has he pushed up a cloud of sentimentalism around the singularly unsentimental, if romantic, head of Trelawny. He has essayed, honestly—with unnecessary violence, indeed—to envelop Trelawny in the aura of Shelley's greatness; and he has failed. But his is a most interesting failure, for he has drawn with striking lines the picture of a man who himself was a failure, who developed mentally and psychologically not one iota after the death of Shelley in 1822." Kenneth Williams

+ — Sat R 150:178 Ag 9 '30 900w

"Mr. Massingham is a militant Romantic banging the drums and cymbals of his faith at the street corners. Sometimes his strident voice cracks in the effort to make itself heard above this loud percussion, and we detect him in the act of watching his audience to see what effect his provocative and superlative pronouncements are having. . . It is inevitable that a temperament which can so agitate a writer's style must also affect his ideas. One feels that some little incident or characteristic, once it has aroused him to impatience, will upset the balance of his judgment." Richard Church

— + Spec 145:20 Jl 5 '30 1100w

"An attempt to do justice to the character of Edward John Trelawny fails of its best effect through the excessive zeal of the author. . . This biography of Mr Massingham's is, whatever one may consider its defects, a spirited and original piece of scholarship and enthusiasm."

— + Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 27 '30 550w

"With the utmost patience of thought, and with energy of phrase, Mr. Massingham has sought to illuminate the final sincerity and directness of this externally incoherent wanderer."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p571 Jl 10 '30 1800w

MASTEN, RICHARD L. Saint Udo. 295p $2.50 Houghton

30-7960

A gentle, scholarly monk of Renaissance Italy, Father Udo, invented a patron saint, Udo the martyr, because he did not like either of the saints named Udo already in the calendar. At the command of a ruthless and uncompromising duke, Father Udo was even compelled to produce relics of the saint. And then the relics began to work miracles. When Father Udo suffered martyrdom to save a lady's life he was entombed under the very altar erected to the invented saint, and it seemed as if Father Udo in very truth had become Udo the martyr.

Reviewed by Guy Holt

Bookm 71:351 Je '30 50w

"It is the same old thing done in the same old way: a story book for grown up children, with neither the competence of Sabatini's second-rate but exciting Italian tales nor the poetic fervor of Maurice Hewlett. The blood of life is not in it."

— Books p10 Mr 16 '30 180w

"With a delicate touch the author of this charming volume has woven a romance of adventure deftly against the background of an old-town medieval Italy. Father Udo is one of the finest characters that have flashed across the pages of any novel."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 16 '30 120w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p10m My 10 '30 50w

"The character of Udo, compact of guilelessness, humor, courage and love, forms the backbone of this charming medieval tale, but there are minor figures whose fortunes of love and stormy adventure we follow with equal avidity."

+ N Y Times p18 Ap 13 '30 600w

"This is not another Bridge of San Luis Rey but it is well worth reading. It has both wit and tenderness. We say with no intent to disparage that it would make a gorgeous movie. There is a certain visual appeal, there is a real romance and plenty of action. On the other hand the author has made the mistake common among contemporary writers of using a rather ordinary, colloquial speech of today, apparently in the belief that he thereby lends vitality and verisimilitude to his characters."

+ — Outlook 154:425 Mr 12 '30 230w

"It is unfortunate that the advance advertising of this mild and not unpleasant tale has chosen to invoke the names of Anatole France and James Branch Cabell. This is not a book which their admirers will welcome. In vain they will search its pages for pungent irony or unconventional comment, and they can hardly fail to be annoyed by a style which, readable enough in its quieter moments, becomes, in its attempts at eloquence, alarmingly awkward and hollow."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1034 My 10 '30 400w

"Mr Masten has written a story which moves at a good pace and succeeds very well in holding the interest. He has handled a difficult theme with understanding, sympathy and a quiet humor bearing a tinge of sophistication."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e My 18 '30 380w

MASTERMAN, JOHN HOWARD BERTRAM. Christianity of to-morrow. 320p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Cassell]

230 Christianity 29-29234

In this volume the Bishop of Plymouth asserts that "the only alternative to Christianity as a world religion is the materialism of Marx and Lenin." Many of the chapters are less a prophecy of the future of Christianity than an exposition of the Christianity of today.

Living Church 83:840 O 18 '30 300w

"Readers will admire his courageous intelligence and forceful writing, but he passes by too abruptly a good deal of modern thinking when he asserts that 'the only alternative to Christianity as a world religion is the materialism of Marx and Lenin.' "

+ — Nation and Ath 46:148 O 26 '29 150w

St Louis 28:92 Ap '30

"The author is better known as a lecturer than as a writer, and most of his chapters are cast in lecture form and lack the prophetic note that the title suggests. . . 'Men and women who are on the outer circle of organized Christianity,' for whom the book is written, will find hints and suggestions that will provoke them to think out the implications of their faith; and in this at least the author will not be disappointed. But there should have been much pruning of quotations."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p751 S 26 '29 180w

MASTERMAN, WALTER S. Yellow mistletoe. 288p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Jarrolds]

30-25739

Beginning with a death in a London tube station, the story winds its complicated way to strange pagan practices at Nemi, a hidden city in the wilds of Italy. The plot centers about the fate of a beautiful girl, Diana; and the symbolic meaning of sprigs of golden mistletoe.

Booklist 27:165 D '30

Bookm 72:xxiv N '30 80w

"This nightmare is strangely readable." Will Cuppy

Books p14 O 19 '30 100w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 156:269 O 15 '30 180w

Reviewed by W. C. Weber

Sat R of Lit 7:478 D 20 '30 120w

"The story will suit readers who like plenty of events and are not particular about coherence. Indeed, the methods of adapting the Greek legend to the story often remind one of another Greek legend, that of Procrustes."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p577 Jl 10 '30 200w

MASTERS, EDGAR LEE. Gettysburg, Manila, Acoma. ltd autog ed 219p $10 Liveright

812 30-17696

"The volume contains three plays in verse, the form being more or less loosely patterned after that of the Greek tragedies. Stated baldly, the argument of the first play is Booth's assassination of Lincoln, represented as the last stand of American liberty against the tide of plutocracy; of the second, the downfall of Philippine liberty before American imperialism; of the third, the unavailing efforts of our southwestern Indians to keep their worship of the sun, to live their life by their own lights."

MASTERS, E. L.—Continued
—N Y Evening Post

"His latest effort is on the whole so disappointing as poetry as to make it hard to take seriously even as drama. It may very well, however, be worth the while of some particular admirer of Masters to attempt to separate the chaff from the grain."
— Boston Transcript p2 Ag 13 '30 100w

"His latest volume is an example of Masters at his worst. The book is likely to embarrass any admirer of Masters's poetry, though here, as often before in his earlier work, Masters shows us that his heart and a fair section of his mental activity are in the right place. He is still the inverted American patriot, bitter, ironic, disillusioned." Horace Gregory
— Nation 131:226 Ag 27 '30 600w

"The intention behind these three dramas in verse is so vigorous, the condemnation of evil so strong, the love of the good life so manifest, one is loath to make any wholesale condemnation because the poetry itself too rarely measures up to the conception. It must be admitted, however, that the poetry nowhere is sustained. The last of the three dramas, 'Acoma,' is easily the best, and the lyrics throughout are considerably better than the recitative passages in blank verse, which are pretty turgid and dull." Edwin Seaver
— + N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 12 '30 350w

"These three pieces by Edgar Lee Masters are, to our thinking, significant in American poetry, not only for themselves, but for the vistas they suggest. We trust not only that Mr. Masters will continue along this path but also that he will have followers. But we should like to see the intellectuality of the work more artfully concealed. And especially we should like to see more full-bodied characters. Mr. Masters's dramatis personae are too often mere voices and too seldom living people." P. H.
+ — N Y Times p10 Jl 27 '30 800w

"Masters's maladroitness is all the more shocking when one thinks of the number of poets who, without once showing a tenth of the imaginative force he displays in his best work, never sink to the level of incompetence on which his performances are so frequently conducted." Granville Hicks
— N Y World p4m Ag 31 '30 350w

"Masters knows his history, and these poetic dramas possess an historical interest. Yet their long-winded blank verse becomes extremely tedious and the more lyrical passages sometimes slip into almost unbelievable banalities. It is a long way back to 'Spoon River.'" W. R. Benét
— + Sat R of Lit 6:1176 Jl 5 '30 350w

MASTERS, EDGAR LEE. Lichee nuts. 137p $2.50 Liveright
811 30-29354

These short poems, which are a kind of Chinatown Spoon River, reflect, in Chinese-American idiom, the ironic wit and ancient wisdom of the Chinaman, Yuan Chang, as he comments on American ways.

"Mr. Masters' talents, though less seriously employed, find as fruitful material in the Mott Street locale as in his immortalized Middle Western village. . . Having isolated these bland Orientals from their traditional laundries, tea shops, joss houses and tong wars, Mr. Masters finds them nicely atuned instruments for his own special brand of moral satire and ironic by-play." Ruth Lechlitner
+ Books p40 D 7 '30 480w

"The edge of his wit and the freshness of his enthusiasm seem to have been dulled. He has much the same indictment to make of America that many contemporaries have made in the last decade, and he brings those charges in no new way. His epigrams are flat and flavorless, and they have lost their power to sting."
— Boston Transcript p1 D 6 '30 250w

"The reader who fails to derive both amusement and wisdom from 'Lichee Nuts,' is more to be pitied than censured. We do not say that the wisdom of the American poet is quite that of Confucius, or the flavor of his confections quite that of the Oriental fruit. Nevertheless, in his creations of Hip Lung and Yuan Chang and Sun Wet, and the several others who apparently keep shop on Mott Street, he has gone several steps higher than Hashimura Togo of lingering memory. 'Lichee Nuts' revives to no small degree the sharp insight which distinguished the anthology of Spoon River."
+ N Y Times p16 N 2 '30 350w

"It seems to us that Mr. Masters conveys very well the Chinese attitude of passivity steeped in deep philosophy. The English used in the book is very slightly pidgin. Its imperfections are not overdone. And even though the separate poems are brief, several definite Chinese character-types are built up for the reader. On laying the book down we are sorry to leave such mellow though trenchant friends. We like this volume better than anything of Mr. Masters's that we have seen for some time." W. R. Benét
+ Sat R of Lit 7:270 O 25 '30 180w

MATEER, FLORENCE. Just normal children. 294p $2.50 Appleton
136.7 Children—Management. Children—Care and hygiene. Child study 29-22437

A discussion, with concrete illustrations, of behaviour problems common to children, set forth in practical question and answer form. What to do with children who will not sleep, eat or play normally, or with those who are backward, or nervous, or stubborn, and how to impart sex information, are among the questions taken up.

Booklist 26:192 F '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p6 Ja '30

"The book meets a fundamental need and meets it well. Teachers, psychologists, and educational workers should be familiar with it and should recommend it to parents of children in school. If this book could be put into the hands of parents and read carefully by them, a great deal of home co-operation in the solution of behavior problems could be accomplished." C. C. Crawford
+ El School J 30:712 My '30 400w
J Home Econ 22:131 F '30 150w
St Louis 28:91 Ap '30

"Here are the actual problems of actual children wisely put, with no Freudian frills and an expert command of their meaning. Here is an admirable handbook of why children fail, and what part parents have in their failure. The perspective is excellent with all the important points in focus." Joseph Jastrow
+ Sat R of Lit 7:366 N 22 '30 230w

Reviewed by A. M. Conklin
Survey 63:487 Ja 15 '30 270w

"The author, who is Director of the propitiously named 'Merryheart Schools' of Columbus, Ohio, believes that the great majority of homes, all over the world, contain more or less normal parents who are bringing up more or less normal children, and that where things go wrong here and there it does not take much to put them right; that little, however, needs to be done with great discretion, and in time."
Times [London] Lit Sup p13 Ja 2 '30 250w

MATHESON, JOHN. Needle in the haystack. ² 189p il $2.50 Morrow
30-28920

Mrs McGillicuddy had been very kind to the twins, who were boarding with her for the summer, so they felt they must help her out when she was threatened with the loss of her farm. They went looking for a needle in the haystack, which they had heard was a remedy, and sure enough it proved to be true.

"This book contains delightfully humorous illustrations, both in color and in black and white. The tale is one of magic and merry adventure suitable for children who have just begun to read."
+ Bookm 72:xxviii D '30 30w

Reviewed by A. T. Eaton
N Y Times p20 S 14 '30 350w

MATHEWS, SHAILER. Atonement and the social process. 212p $2 Macmillan
232.3 Atonement 30-10967

In this volume Dr Mathews attempts to explain Christian doctrines as patterns derived from social experience. He evaluates various theories of the atonement and restates their permanent contribution to the religious needs of today.

"The book is an example of scholarship of the highest order. It is sound in its depiction of the social origins of theological belief." J. H. Holmes
+ Books p14 Je 15 '30 130w

"An ambitious effort, requiring careful selection of illustration to be effective and convincing. It is not a work for easy readers, but rather a book for those who are willing to think intensely as they read. It is written, as is always true of Dr. Mathews's works, in the most liberal theological vein."
+ Boston Transcript p2 My 31 '30 380w

"The present volume is, in the judgment of this reviewer, the most penetrating and important of the score or more of works for which Dean Mathews has made the world of Christian scholarship his debtor." W. E. Garrison
+ Christian Century 47:689 My 28 '30 800w

"To say that it is interestingly done and represents a fresh approach would be true only to the novice in theological reading and study. It is true we have a new word—'pattern'—for an old idea. Here we have a review of the doctrines of atonement and the recognition that certain social ideas or ideals gave form to the rationalizations these doctrines take. We used to call these moulds categories, did we not? 'Pattern' is, on the whole, a more easily understood word and quite serviceable for the purpose in view. But one wonders whether that justifies a new book." S. B. Meeser
Crozer Q 7:403 Jl '30 600w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:82 N '30
Pratt p9 autumn '30
St Louis 28:203 S '30

MATHIESON, WILLIAM LAW. Great Britain and the slave trade, 1839-1865. 203p il $5 (12s 6d) Longmans
326.1 Slave-trade. Slavery in America [29-19648]

In previous volumes Professor Mathieson has dealt with the abolition of the British slave trade. In the present volume he describes the various measures taken by the British government to persuade or compel other nations to cease the importation of slaves. The book is written as preliminary to a future study of the effects of emancipation.

Reviewed by E. T. Thompson
Am J Soc 36:303 S '30 420w

"Professor Mathieson tells his complicated story in interesting fashion, though one is sometimes inclined to wish that the marked bias, which he himself avows, were a little less in evidence." Elizabeth Donnan
+ — Am Hist R 35:351 Ja '30 650w
Boston Transcript p10 N 16 '29 750w
Hist Outlook 21:189 Ap '30 100w
Int J Ethics 40:455 Ap '30 140w

"Admirably compiled and documented story."
+ New Statesman 34:sup xvi N 9 '29 220w
Spec 143:950 D 21 '29 230w

"Dr. Mathieson, who has already published an excellent book on the abolition of British Slavery, was well qualified for the task he has undertaken. He is not quite so successful in this case in disentangling his narrative, and the detail is sometimes confusing, but he has produced a valuable record and his discussion of the problems of the time raises questions that still divide conscientious minds."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p807 O 17 '29 1300w

MATSON, NORMAN HAGHEJM. Log of the Coriolanus. 189p $2 Vanguard press
910.4 Voyages and travels 30-12368

The author of "The Day of Fortune" recounts his experiences during a forty-day cruise from New Bedford to the Cape Verde Islands in the iron bark Coriolanus, built in 1873 and manned by a native crew, Mr Matson being the only white man aboard.

Booklist 27:23 S '30

"Out of it all, coupled with his own penetration and sense of humor, the author has produced an extraordinary book."
+ Bookm 71:xix Jl '30 100w
Books p9 Jl 13 '30 130w

"The author has a sensitive mind and a quick imagination that responds in a glancing, glinting way to the thousand and one appeals of such a voyage. The sum total of comment, imagination and humor gives a quality to his narrative that lifts it much above the mere chronicle of forty Summer days at sea, a quality that is enriched still more by the spirit of his portrayal of his shipmates—captain, officers and crew—casual sketches in terms of things said and done by them that make the reader see them as understandingly, humorously and appreciatively as did the author."
+ N Y Times p18 My 11 '30 330w

"A tale enchanting in descriptive beauty, in atmospheric glamor, in the tang of the sea, in the suggestion of hovering romance that never quite materializes." E. C. Beckwith
+ N Y World p7m Jl 20 '30 120w

MAUGHAM, WILLIAM SOMERSET. Cakes and ale; or, The skeleton in the cupboard. 308p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Heinemann] 30-25744

Written in the first person by one William Ashenden, an English novelist who might be Somerset Maugham himself, the story is a vehicle for impressions of the English literary world from the late 80's to the present. Various authors, critics and lady-managers who, under their slight disguises, pique the reader's curiosity to identify, are maliciously satirized. The two men whose character and fame are especially singled out for debunking are Edward Driffield, the "grand old man of English letters" and Alroy Kear, popular novelist, lecturer and critic of today. More kindly treated is Driffield's first wife, an ex-barmaid of easy virtue and great natural charm and warm-heartedness.

Booklist 27:161 D '30

"A fruity, seasoned novel whose basic material has somewhat the flavor of Romain Rolland's 'Colas Breugnon, Burgundian,' is salted and acidulated with a cynicism that takes a light smack, in passing, at most of the conspicuous members of the British world of letters. Clearly, Somerset Maugham has, in 'Cakes and Ale,' taken his fun where he finds it. And though he has produced here nothing so sturdy as 'Of Human Bondage' or even 'The Moon and Sixpence,' he has wit—and cynical wisdom." F. H. Britten
+ Books p3 O 5 '30 600w
Boston Transcript p5 N 19 '30 480w

MAUGHAM, W. S.—Continued

"The novel is a brilliant, sophisticated, amusing satire on a group of people who are especially interesting to any one who writes or really enjoys reading books. It has pages of perfectly priceless writing about writing, but it is not a classic. The book is a technical tour de force, which the author—as always—brings off successfully, but it is more a satire on the business of writing than a satire on life." F. B.

+ — Chicago Daily Tribune p10 O 25 '30 300w

"If Edward Driffield, the misty and pathetic hero of Mr. Maugham's witty and scandalous novel, is Thomas Hardy, and everybody seems to think he is, then Mr. Maugham has made a contribution of no small importance to our understanding of Hardy. Not that he needs to be taken literally in all the details of his merciless sketch, and not that he has failed to take safe cover behind a falsification of the facts. . . 'Cakes and Ale' is slight, very slight; but it abounds with observations and epigrams that are always clever, always bitter, and frequently wise." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 131:475 O 29 '30 550w

Reviewed by K. C. Tomlinson

Nation and Ath 48:140 O 25 '30 220w

"He has achieved a sardonic, pseudo-biographical sketch of an octogenarian man of letters whose friends and admirers have enabled him to die with intimations of immortality which are reasonably secure, while the old gentleman himself, weary and wise in experience, cares less for the verdict of posterity than he does for the congenial surroundings of a public house and a glass of beer. It is good material; the trouble with Mr. Maugham's treatment of it is that he does not go far enough." Howard Coxe

+ — New Repub 64:273 O 22 '30 800w

"Mr. Maugham has rarely written a more expert story than this; but the thinness of his theme is not concealed by his dexterity."

+ — New Statesman 36:28 O 11 '30 150w

"There is something bracing about the sincerity of his style. His simplicity is neither affected nor self-consciously mannered. It is the plain speaking of the man from the laboratory. It is a style that serves his general purpose of stripping life to the bone with a thin, sharp knife that lays open to view the normal flesh and the healthy flow of blood as well as the cancerous sore beneath." L. A. Marchand

+ N Y Times p7 O 12 '30 500w

"We have not had a good, ironic novel such as this in a long, long time. The story is slight; the humor is entirely in cynical characterization. It's a book for those to whom the writing, making and reading of books is a world theater." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p12 O 3 '30 850w

"Cakes and Ale is clever, but it will hardly go onto the shelf beside Of Human Bondage." F. L. R.

+ — Outlook 156:427 N 12 '30 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:88 D '30

"A very good example of a successfully handled narrative. Mr. Maugham has the dramatist's eye for the situation that can be effectively presented and with a keen perception of the ironies of existence, indicates the smile and the glance with which personal encounters are handled in real life."

+ Sat R 150:409 O 4 '30 480w

"One hopes there won't be any hard feelings about this book, because it is really a rather brilliant piece of writing, with a deal of human nature and some acute and iconoclastic literary criticism in it." Stanley Went

+ Sat R of Lit 7:240 O 18 '30 600w

"The first Mrs. Driffield seems to me the only real character in the book, and she is an interesting study of the easy-going a-moral woman, who out of good nature allows any friend to enjoy her beautiful body. Driffield himself is a far more shadowy figure, and not very successful. For the rest, there is, as usual, some very good writing in the book, and some amusing and sardonic comments on the literary life. But why should there be a rumpus? For this reason, that it is impossible to escape the feeling that Driffield is intended as a portrait of Hardy. The reader who jumps to this conclusion has every excuse." J. B. Priestley

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:299 N 1 '30 1550w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett

Spec 145:554 O 18 '30 220w

"There are a few minor indelicacies which are incongruous. Bright and amusing pages in the book are by no means lacking, and the literary satire is not wholly misplaced; there are a few pages of vigorous human interest, like the description of the cynical narrator's meeting with his old schoolmate, now a country doctor, and a grandfather; but, on the whole, Mr Maugham's somewhat petulant jest does not come off."

— + Springf'd Republican p7e O 5 '30 750w

Times [London] Lit Sup p778 O 2 '30 650w

MAUGHAM, WILLIAM SOMERSET. Gentleman in the parlour; a record of a journey from Rangoon to Haiphong. 300p $3 Doubleday, Doran [8s 6d Heinemann]

828 30-13445

Mr Maugham records a leisurely trip from Rangoon northward to Mandalay, in upper Burma, and on to Haiphong. He travels by canoe and river-boat, rickshaw, and on pony, with a retinue of attendants on donkeys. He is cordially received by the natives and has the opportunity to observe intimate details of their lives and their customs. He meets many English and European colonists, and relates the circumstances keeping them in the Orient and their experiences as told to him. The romance attached to the Asiatic places the author visits adds interest to the most commonplace details.

Booklist 26:388 Jl '30

"As a traveler Maugham is genial and tolerant. He never bores one with useless description or fills up his pages with facts cannily gleaned from Baedeker. He seldom bothers with scenery or points of interest, but he never overlooks a muleteer or a priest or a boatman if the fellow has a story in him. . . Never was Mr. Maugham more readable or so wholly delightful as in this, his latest work." Bellamy Partridge

+ Books p5 Ap 20 '30 430w

"He writes with a graceful, simple style, which perhaps need hardly be mentioned to those familiar with his earlier works. He confesses to a modest vocabulary and a total inability to polish his phrases, but has a gift for colorful description and illuminating simile which make his lines glow and sparkle like the sun-lit Oriental streams which figure so largely in this delightful volume." R. S.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 24 '30 750w

"Even supposing the reader knows his Hazlitt well, he can hardly be expected to divine that Mr. Maugham's title conceals the account of a journey to Burma. The book is so good, and good travel books are so rare, that one willingly allows him his lettered mystery. It has dignity and sensitiveness and is, in some respects, a real contribution to the literature of travel." V. S. P.

+ Christian Science Monitor p7 Ap 26 '30 680w

"Mr. Maugham's book is depressing. It is languid and tepid. It attempts to entertain and employs in the effort the genial essay, the anecdote, and two fanciful fairy tales that serve no other purpose than to prove, to Mr. Maugham, how clever he is." Isidor Schneider

— Nation 131:129 Jl 30 '30 180w

"Mr. Maugham is the perfect literary traveller. He hates facts, but out of his own complex, mellow artistry he fashions a narrative in which incidents and character sketches are like polished gems on a chain of individual workmanship. It leaves one satisfied, with that sense of possession induced in the reader by a well-wrought work." Sylva Norman

+ Nation and Ath 46:768 Mr 8 '30 480w

"Mr. Maugham is tremendously alive himself and no less keenly aware of the unchanging multi-coloured humanity which surrounds him. His prose is simple, lucid and matter-of-fact. His occasional approaches to lyricism are all the more enjoyable for being usually somewhat diffident."
+ New Statesman 34:712 Mr 8 '30 800w

"Mr. Maugham wrote the book, he tells us, for his own diversion, and that diversion the reader shares, feeling almost as if he had himself made the journey from Rangoon to Haiphong, and with an exceptionally interesting, exceptionally agreeable companion." L. M. Field
+ N Y Times p6 My 4 '30 600w
Pratt p31 autumn '30

Reviewed by Arthur Colton
Sat R of Lit 6:1159 Je 28 '30 600w

"This is a delightful book, written for pleasure and at leisure, as books should be. It contains vivid travel impressions of the Irrawaddy Shwe Dagon, Burmese servants, food, love, marriage, opium, sea-captains and sucking-pigs; also some autobiographical confidences, and the plots for a dozen novels and half a dozen plays. In short, it is good reading and good value."
+ Spec 144:sup495 Mr 22 '30 700w

"Mr. Maugham can recreate a scene in a sentence, so that it comes as vividly before the eye as the day he saw it: in this book there are many such pictures, and they are as unusual as they are delightful. Its unexpectedness is one of the chief charms of this book; for Mr. Maugham is the best of travelling companions and he has something fresh to show at every turn."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p230 Mr 20 '30 480w

MAURIAC, FRANÇOIS. The family (Les Péloueyres); tr. from the French by Lewis Galantière. 233p $2 Covici
30-19724

Two short related novels, translated from the French. "The first story, 'The Kiss of the Leper,' tells how Jean Péloueyre, a dwarf who believes that he is fated never to taste the fruits of life, who spends his days alone on the moors shooting magpies and his nights in bitter gazing at the stars, acquires a lovely bride, because his father is rich and important to the village. In 'Genetrix,' M. Mauriac tells the struggle of a possessive woman between her son and his wife." (Outlook)

Reviewed by Angel Flores
Books p3 Ag 10 '30 720w

"It is the finest of all the novels of its author that I have read, a little masterpiece in its perceptions, in its suggestiveness, in the bits of illuminating truth that flash from its pages. . . Mr. Galantière has provided a translation of unusual beauty." F. T. Marsh
+ Nation 131:416 O 15 '30 500w

"The total effect his style produces is one of elegant enervation, a gentle melancholy which imparts to all his novels a colorful languor and makes even the most violent emotions seem unreal and unimportant. When such a style is turned to analyzing minutely characters who are especially morbid, the effect of unreality is heightened and the novel becomes merely the description of individuals tormenting themselves and each other to no particular purpose." E. A.
— New Repub 64:359 N 12 '30 200w

"This novel by François Mauriac is essentially French. But it transcends the boundaries of purely national characteristics in the beauty of its lyrical expression and in the finesse with which it leads one to the inescapable tragedy of the conclusion. M. Mauriac is a fine and cunning artist—not less absorbing, and perhaps more so, because his psychological investigations lead him into the uglier and more obscure corners of the human spirit. M. Mauriac has imbued both these stories with an inescapable sincerity. They are ugly and brutal, to be sure, but their brutality is as delicate and incisive as that inflicted by the surgeon's scalpel. And no one, perhaps, has ever succeeded in making the abnormal and the neurotic seem more convincingly and more hideously normal. 'The Family' is written in a beautiful and lyrical style, to which Mr. Galantière's translation has done the utmost justice."
+ N Y Times p6 Ag 10 '30 600w

Reviewed by Milton Byron
N Y World p5m Ag 24 '30 400w

"In the macabre strain running through his book he reminds you closely of Julian Green. But where Mr. Green's tales exacerbate your nerves and fill you with a creeping horror, these stories of M. Mauriac's remain remote, exotic and unmoving."
Outlook 155:587 Ag 13 '30 340w

"The wine-country atmosphere, with its heavily stressed peasant types, does not add to the lightness of the story, and its sequel is no more cheering. Yet in its solid, well documented way M. Mauriac's book sets out to describe these people and in the end makes the description believable. It is rather uphill work to read it all, perhaps, with the memory of so many stronger and more interesting peasant novels in one's mind, but still M. Mauriac should at the least have a prize for industry and perseverance in carrying on through two volumes with such characters."
— + Sat R of Lit 7:166 S 27 '30 320w

MAUROIS, ANDRE. Byron; tr. from the French by Hamish Miles. 597p il $5 Appleton [12s 6d Cape, J.]
B or 92 Byron, George Gordon Noël Byron, 6th baron 30-7022

The biographer of Shelley and Disraeli has found fascinating subject matter in the varied and colorful career and personality of Lord Byron, as well as a wide ground for interpretation lying between the divergent points of the real and the legendary Byron. M. Maurois emphasizes the hereditary aspects of Byron's character by making a thoro and not very flattering study of his ancestors and immediate family background. Byron's deformity and his peculiar fits of passion, together with a Puritanic upbringing and narrow environment as a whole, doubtless contributed something to the less admirable aspects of his personal life; and Maurois sets forth dispassionately Byron's attitude toward his wife, and especially his relationship with Augusta Leigh, his half-sister. The biography is, for the most part, a critical interpretation of Byron the man, rather than Byron the poet.

"It was inevitable that M. Maurois should wish to exercise his experienced pen on one of the most fascinating of literary personalities. M. Maurois's habit is imaginative rather than scholarly; he usually attempts, not to present us with new facts, but to fuse known facts into a vivid portrait. In the case of Byron, candidly, he has done neither; and to any reader familiar with the Byron literature of the last twenty years the book is less entertaining than one had a right to hope." K. F. Gerould
— Atlantic Bookshelf p26 Ap '30 1000w
Booklist 26:310 My '30

"Maurois's Byron is a brilliant book, but it is also a sincere one."
+ Bookm 71:225 Ap '30 700w

"A sound and beautiful biography, filled with good sense and intelligence and that rarest of gifts, the power to withstand the temptation to be pious about life's melodrama. There is one defect, perhaps a grave one. There is too much detail and none of that magical genius which enables Lytton Strachey to fuse character and period in brief and blended presentation. You get all the events. You do not get the very flesh and soul." Donald Douglas
+ — Books p1 Mr 16 '30 1000w
Boston Transcript p8 Mr 22 '30 1100w

"Maurois' biography is built on a sound basis of research into all the available evidence. . . If the poet emerges from the crucible of criticism with much smell of fire upon his gar-

MAUROIS, ANDRE—Continued
ments, he emerges also as a towering personality which would be equally worth portrayal by the pen of genius even if it were the creation of a novelist's imagination instead of a figure in history. Maurois has done a piece of work which deserves a place among the world's great biographies." W. E. Garrison
+ Christian Century 47:432 Ap 2 '30 400w

"'Byron' is a marked advance on 'Ariel.' It is a much longer, more solid and more profound work, relying less on the facile and picturesque than the earlier book did. In fact M. Maurois is becoming reconciled to the virtues of the old-fashioned, substantial biography without forgetting the grace and the brilliance of his earlier narrative methods." V. S. P.
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 22 '30 950w

Cleveland Open Shelf p153 D '30

"The whole work is a scandalous chronicle, brilliantly put together by a writer thoroughly familiar with a subject which he has illuminated by many imaginative touches and penetrating psychological interpretation." Francis Snow
+ Current Hist 32:214 My '30 350w

"He has achieved a clear if not particularly profound or original portrait of the man whose psychology is well summed up in the statement that 'his tastes inclined him to intellectualism, his pride to dissipation.'" J. W. Krutch
+ — Nation 130:460 Ap 16 '30 950w

Reviewed by Francis Birrell
Nation and Ath 47:52 Ap 12 '30 800w

"M. Maurois has made fine use of his opportunity. He has, in the first place, made a careful study of the standard works on the subject, explored correspondence and records, and evidently visited the scenes haunted by Byron's ghost. Having thus armed himself against any reasonable fear of challenge on the score of established facts, he has set himself to reconstruct Byron's life, character, thoughts, and even the passing sentiments he felt on this or that episode of his life." R. A. Scott-James
+ New Statesman 34:742 Mr 15 '30 1500w

Reviewed by Percy Hutchison
N Y Times p1 Mr 16 '30 2100w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p14 Mr 7 '30 1000w

"André Maurois has found another subject made to his hand. His new book is to this reviewer the most satisfactory if not the most delightful of his biographical experiments. And it is certainly the one which can be most readily classed as biography. . . Its epigrammatic phrases, its acuteness, its fine Gallic maturity of attitude and opinion, its perfect finish make it a constant delight." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 154:507 Mr 26 '30 750w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:37 My '30

Pratt p36 summer '30

St Louis 28:147 My '30

"It may be said without question that the biography of M. Maurois is the most accurate, the most comprehensive, the most readable, and the most fair of all the thousand volumes dedicated to the Pilgrim of Eternity."
+ Sat R 149:295 Mr 8 '30 1500w

"M. Maurois's long-expected 'Life of Byron,' exceeds expectations; it is the most thorough piece of work he has done. He possesses Miss Mayne's qualifications, and in addition, as the world knows, has a very rare talent for narrative. In short, his book must fill with envy anyone who has worked over the same ground as himself and fascinate those to whom that ground is unfamiliar." Desmond MacCarthy
Sat R of Lit 6:844 Mr 22 '30 4200w

"M. Maurois has worked out his technique to a new and right conclusion. The mass of material—the bewildering evidence and conflict of opinion and record—is shaped fact by fact, and cemented with concealed artifice, until at last emerges a coherent and beautifully proportioned portrait. But it is more than a portrait. It is an heroic painting filled with living figures set in a scene of so triumphant a romanticism that the book stands out as another sign of the revival of enthusiasm and belief." Richard Church
+ Spec 144:sup375 Mr 8 '30 1200w

"Seldom have we read a better translation than this one, by Mr. Hamish Miles. Page follows page, and we are never crossed by the uneasy feeling that they were first written in another tongue."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p209 Mr 13 '30 1650w

Reviewed by F. E. Pierce
Yale R n s 19:827 summer '30 650w

MAUROIS, ANDRE. Country of thirty-six thousand wishes; tr. by Pauline Fairbanks; il. by Adrienne Ségur. 66p $2.50 Appleton
30-24320

The quaint and delightful adventures which came to Michelle one night after she had climbed into bed wondering if there was a country where children could have thirty-six thousand wishes.

"It is a work of art as far as paper, type and illustrations are concerned; but its author lacks something of the make-believe vigor that can fashion an excellent fairy tale out of nothing at all. It begins intensely; then the interest slackens. It loses some of its delicacy in translation. But it is well written and Segur's illustrations, especially those of the recalcitrant Pharaoh, enhance the fanciful element by their color and charm." Laura Benét
— + Books p12 N 16 '30 480w

"André Maurois' book is an outstanding contribution to the wonderland seekers' library, and will delight big children and little children alike."
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 S 20 '30 320w

"Something of the dull and perfunctory quality of this story may be due to the fact that it is a translation, but it hardly seems as though the author himself could have been greatly interested in the telling. Fairies are shy beings, and any attempt to transplant them into modern mechanical surroundings needs a touch of genius and an ability to see with a child's eyes, which M. Maurois does not have." A. T. Eaton
— N Y Times p26 O 26 '30 180w

"The moral is somehow saddening, and one cannot but feel that the author is convicted out of his own mouth. The large size, big clear type, and gay board covers, very French in character, make an attractive looking book. Adrienne Ségur is happier in her small black-and-white drawings than in the full-page color illustrations which show a certain stiffness and lack of imagination." M. W. Bianco
— + Sat R of Lit 7:326 N 15 '30 450w

"I had expected something more original from the author of Ariel. The book has its flashes of humour, and Michelle is a dear little girl, but the story as a whole does not rise much above the level of those found in the better Christmas Annuals. There is a rather depressing morality about it too, and the gist of it is this: you can't go to Fairyland unless you are rather bad at lessons, and when you do go you will soon get tired of having your own way. There are some beautiful illustrations by Mlle. Adrienne Ségur, and [the] translation runs smoothly and happily." B. E. Todd
— + Spec 145:358 S 13 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p982 N 20 '30 50w

MAVITY, NANCY (BARR) (MRS ARTHUR BENTON MAVITY). Case of the missing sandals. 316p $1 Doubleday, Doran
30-31489

When Luna, leader of a witchcraft cult in California, was murdered, her sandals disappeared. Peter Piper, the enterprising Herald reporter who had solved a good many mysteries, became interested in this one, and with his solution secured a grand scoop for his paper.

Bookm 72:xxiv N '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 N 9 '30 150w

"Half as many suspects would have made a shorter and snappier tale, but at that it's good, sound Grade B stuff." W. R. Brooks
— + Outlook 156:391 N 5 '30 100w

MAVITY, NANCY (BARR) (MRS ARTHUR BENTON MAVITY). Other bullet. 322p $2 Doubleday, Doran
30-16002

Aline Everett, who had come to live at a California ranch with her husband, fired two shots at Mortison, her lover, and believed that she killed him. But Peter Piper, an enterprising young reporter spending his vacation at Hangtown, found a third bullet—and ballistic evidence proved that it was not the shot fired from Aline's gun that killed Mortison. Peter, determined to find out who fired the third shot, kept at the case, until his most imporant clue, a ring set with emeralds, led him to the truth.

Booklist 27:31 S '30

Bookm 71:xix Ag '30 100w

Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p4s Je 7 '30 200w

"Suspense, action and humor are mingled in just the right proportions to make a highly entertaining yarn."
+ N Y Times p17 Je 15 '30 100w

MAXWELL, GERALD. Old-world Germany of to-day. 179p il $3 Dodd [7s 6d Methuen]
914.3 Germany—Description and travel
[30-688]

Travel sketches of excursions into medieval German towns: Rothenburg, Nuremberg, Hanover, and Heidelberg. With many illustrations.

"This volume of travel sketches moves at an orderly but not very exhilarating pace. The author is one of those earnest, sedate travelers to whom nothing exciting happens, which is no doubt well for his peace of mind, but imparts no tang to his descriptions."
— + Books p21 N 17 '29 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:90 D '29

"This is a well-informed book of rather slight dimensions which deals with a good many familiar places and with a few not so well known. We could wish at times that Mr. Maxwell, who is obviously familiar with many phases of German life, had gone a little more deeply into his subject. The chapter on Nuremberg is disappointingly brief, although it contains some interesting pages on the Dürer Exhibition of 1928 and a shrewd remark or two concerning Dürer's wife."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p493 Je 20 '29 500w

MAXWELL, VIOLET, and HILL, HELEN. Adventures of Galley Jack, ship's cat to the Susan P. Meservey. 112p il $1 Harper
29-16076

Snowball was a white cat who ran away from Miss Tabitha's school and became Galley Jack, a ship's cat on the Susan P. Meservey. Galley Jack in the course of his adventures meets the fairies and brownies and children of many lands.

Cleveland Open Shelf p132 N '29

St Louis 28:20 Ja '30

"For factual reasons this is a delightful little book. It also has a very important negative virtue. The bringing of children, brownies, and fairies into Galley Jack's adventures is accomplished without making the book a series of stereotyped fairy tales. This is because the call of the sea holds stronger every time than the temptation to finish everything off with an overdose of happy-ever-after pleasantness."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:594 D 21 '29 200w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 15 '29 100w

Wis Lib Bul 26:44 Ja '30

MAXWELL, WILLIAM BABINGTON. To what green altar? 327p $1 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson]
30-25302

A hardly credible tale of the miracle of redemption wrought by a woman's love for a man whose finer nature had been obscured by years of dissipation.

Bookm 72:308 N '30 300w

Books p10 D 28 '30 230w

"The readers of really sound and able fiction who have previously admired Mr. Maxwell's stories will be disappointed in his latest novel." D. F. G.
— Boston Transcript p1 N 19 '30 750w

"The volume is interesting throughout, none the less interesting because of the doubt it leaves in the reader's mind as to whether such an adventure as Margaret's would not in real life, have ended in something very different from that triumph of love which we are assured she won."
+ N Y Times p22 O 12 '30 720w

"We do not believe Margaret Dacre would have the power to dominate Andrew Lane and make him marry her. The thing having been accomplished, one follows their foot steps with a tempered curiosity."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p608 Jl 24 '30 350w

MAY, JAMES LEWIS. Cardinal Newman. 309p $3.50 Dial press [10s 6d Bles]
B or 92 Newman, John Henry 30-5073

A study of one of the great figures of Victorian England which pictures him alike as a theologian, a controversialist and a man of letters.

"This life of Cardinal Newman is brief enough to please the casual reader, and also contrasts rather pleasantly with much of the recent flood of biography in adhering to the objective method. There is, of course, something of the freshness of hero-worship in Mrs. May's reverence for the frail man of Oxford who, almost single-handed, started a religious revaluation in England whose end is still unpredictable. The objective method of the biographer as applied to the Cardinal is thus not free from a subjective bias on the part of the biographer himself. . . Mr. May's own style discloses the effect of his close association with the Cardinal's works. He has made the discussion of literary power in itself a literary delight." R. D. Skinner
+ Bookm 72:319 N '30 450w

"His book is more than a panegyric; it is a religious offering. And as such it is well done. . . Newman as thinker and reasoner does not interest Mr. May seriously. This deficiency will, of course, prevent the book from being useful to a student of Newman's mind. But for the select company for whom the eminent Oratorian is an enchantment whose thought it would not be reverent to submit to explanation, this volume, so fragrant in its piety and so filial in its surrender, will be a precious document indeed." W. L. Sullivan
+ — Books p17 Ap 6 '30 450w

"It is a beautiful biography, beautiful in its theme as in its sympathy and understanding. Often as one reads one seems to feel the actual presence of the saintly prelate giving new life and new significance to the written word." G. R. B. Richards
+ Boston Transcript p4 My 31 '30 2080w

"The triumph of Newman's failures is a fascinating story and Mr. May tells it in a fascinating way. He is keenly alive to Newman's power and genius as writer, spiritual leader, and man, and he impresses the reader with the lofty nature of those gifts and with his own admiration of their possessor." J. J. R.

MAY, J. L.—Continued
+ Cath World 131:371 Je '30 580w

"Will be received with gratitude by that not inconsiderable group of readers that still wishes to preserve its heroes and has not become wholly addicted to jazz biography. It may, indeed, give pleasure to a much larger public; often the first rate achieves a wider popularity than is anticipated by the cynic. And this is a first-rate literary biography of a man of first importance whose fascination for his fellow-men rests upon deep foundations." Ralston Hayden
+ Current Hist 32:410 My '30 1000w

"Mr. May has failed to bring out the importance of Newman's thought and he has been only moderately successful in the presentation of his character. Moreover, Mr. May deprives us of whatever pleasure there might be in reading his book by introducing irrelevant and platitudinous discourses, by dotting his pages with back-of-the-dictionary Latin, by ostentatiously representing himself as a profound student of artistic prose, by betraying a partisan spirit, and by repeating sage reflections and favored phrases."
— Nation 130:373 Mr 26 '30 150w

"Mr. Wilfrid Ward's monumental 'life' may not be superseded in our time, but there is a place for Mr. May's discursive but very sympathetic monograph. He is a self-confessed enthusiast, yet he shows no anxiety to score hits or to darken counsel." D. M. Stuart
+ Nation and Ath 46:144 O 26 '29 750w

"Mr. May is so candid as to inform us that he cannot claim to be a theologian. To write of Newman who wore his theology as a mental habit and even as a hair-shirt, has been, therefore, a holiday task. Yet it is with ease and a genuine interest that we have read this book. It contains much beautiful and mellow writing. By the use of a practiced pen Mr. May has achieved the kind of rapid, effective, colorful impression that the brush of a Sargent would have applied to a glowing canvas. He has seen his Newman, but he has not unveiled him. We are shown Newman's face. We share Newman's feelings. But Newman himself remains a mystery." P. W. Wilson
+ — N Y Times p9 Ag 3 '30 1300w

"This book is a genuine appreciation of the life of Newman by a writer who through his original research and his appreciation of his subject's great artistic gifts is capable of making it." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 155:28 My 7 '30 190w
Pratt p38 spring '30
St Louis 28:112 Ap '30

"Mr. May's book is a delicate and sympathetic appraisement of Newman's character, and, if he writes in the spirit of a hero-worshipper, he may find his justification in the fact that Newman was a hero."
+ Sat R 148:426 O 12 '29 300w

"It seems to this reviewer that Mr. May's portrait is somewhat pale and formal, and that this is due to a failure on the biographer's part to appreciate the depth of that sadness which colored Newman's later life. . . On the whole, Mr. May's book is timely and worth while. It helps to rescue John Henry Newman from a neglect due to noisy, contemporary contempt for worth of life and thinking and honest writing. It may do him that highest service which a biography can render to a literary man. It may lead a few of us to take down Newman's books, dust them off, and read." B. I. Bell
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:83 Ag 30 '30 1350w

"The merit of this biography (frankly written from the point of view of a Roman Catholic) is that it puts Newman's mental habits in such a clear light that his decision to leave the Church of England never seemed easier to understand."
+ Spec 143:339 S 14 '29 750w
Times [London] Lit Sup p832 O 24 '29 550w

MAY, JAMES LEWIS. George Eliot. 359p il $3.50 Bobbs
B or 92 Eliot, George, pseud. (Mrs Mary Ann [Evans] Cross) 30-11169

"A very readable account of George Eliot, the Victorian rebel and moralist, and an intelligent and sympathetic estimate of the work of a writer about whom little has been written of late in critical vein."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Booklist 27:25 S '30

"Actually, Mr. May's biography adds little to our previous conception of George Eliot. But, if it inflicts upon us a good deal of dull narrative, it contains, at the same time, some very lively criticism of a highly debatable order. For the student of the Victorian novel, this volume will be of the keenest interest. But for those readers whose concern with George Eliot is still dormant, it is unlikely to resurrect her from the deepening shadows of personal oblivion."
+ Bookm 71:450 Jl '30 350w
Cleveland Open Shelf p94 Je '30

"There are no new facts for Mr. May or anybody else to discover, for George Eliot's life is as open, simple, lacking in mystery as that of any person in the whole Dictionary of National Biography; in what is known of her there is nothing which calls for a novel subtle interpretation. All that another critical biographer can do is give his views of her work, celebrate the woman and the writer in the light of his personal enthusiasms, place his own emphasis on quite undisputed facts. This Mr. May has done in a pleasant, sincere book. He would have done better if he were not inclined to learnedly irrelevant references and allusions, with bits of French and Latin." John Macy
+ — Nation 131:100 Jl 23 '30 850w
Reviewed by John Chamberlain
New Repub 64:133 S 17 '30 350w
New Statesman 35:802 O 4 '30 200w
N Y Times p18 My 4 '30 1300w
St Louis 28:218 S '30

"It is hard to see what place Mr. J. Lewis May's study of George Eliot is intended to fill, pleasant reading though it is. It offers no fresh information, no previously unpublished letters such as those recently collected by Arthur Paterson. It makes no special attempt to consider the novelist in relation to her world, as did Miss Haldane a few years ago. It makes no critical examination of a special period of the life, as was Miss Deakin's task in 'The Early Life of George Eliot.' It does not attempt to follow the vicissitudes of George Eliot's literary reputation in the fifty years that have passed since her death." P. M. Fulcher
Sat R of Lit 6:1086 My 31 '30 530w
Spec 145:415 S 27 '30 150w
Times [London] Lit Sup p794 O 9 '30 1050w

MAY, STELLA (BURKE) (MRS EARL CHAPIN MAY). Conqueror's lady, Ines Suarez. 331p il $4 Farrar
Suárez, Inés—Fiction. Valdivia, Pedro de—Fiction. Chile—History—Fiction 30-28399

A romantic tale which reconstructs, from historical and legendary sources, the life of Ines Suarez, the sixteenth century Spanish Joan of Arc who, as the mistress of Pedro de Valdivia, accompanied him on the expedition for the conquest of Chile.

"Mrs. May's book reveals all of the advantages and many of the shortcomings of novelized biography. . . Her book, nevertheless, makes excellent reading. She has given us a novel of spirited adventure embellished with purple patches of fact. She has portrayed her chief character with real admiration for her personality and deeds, and reveals a wide knowledge of the period about which she has chosen to write." Charles Norman
+ — Bookm 72:178 O '30 350w

"There are some good pictures in this book, and the intention to make known to the world the ambitions of the companion of a famous conqueror, of whom nothing has yet been published, is laudatory. . . The action, the description of how conquerors conquer, is all very exciting; and the hardships of Ines and her lover, Pedro de Valdivia, when they conquered Chile, are described so vividly that one is grateful after reading these 331 pages to be living four centuries removed from the time when people were so keen on saving everybody else's soul." Jenny Ballou

+ Books p16 O 26 '30 950w

Boston Transcript p3 O 15 '30 500w

Reviewed by Rosalind Ivan

N Y Times p8 O 26 '30 500w

"A readable enough romance, done in the consciously sing-song style which popular magazine fictionists affect when dealing with ancient swashbuckling days, and with enough history of an unfamiliar scene and time to enlarge his views somewhat without burdening him."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:292 N 1 '30 250w

MAYNARD, LAWRANCE M. The pig is fat. 278p $2 Farrar [7s 6d Gollancz]

30-5935

The evil effects of prohibition is Mr Maynard's theme in this novel of post-Volstead days. The story opens with New York City's last mad celebration the night before the dry law went into effect. Following this, it traces the course of converting former saloons into speakeasies, the growing graft and corruption of the bootleg racket, and its effect upon August Wagner, old-time saloon keeper, and his young son Benny. Benny becomes a tool in the hands of the corrupt alderman's son Chick, and ends a dope fiend in spite of all of Louise Warren's efforts to save him.

Reviewed by Guy Holt

Bookm 71:351 Je '30 80w

"Lawrance M. Maynard is serving a seven-year sentence in a state penitentiary for 'breaking, entry and larceny.' It is stressed that the story of 'The Pig Is Fat' is not autobiographical. Its central figure is a dope peddler. Nevertheless, he knows the underworld through and through, and the fact lends a special vividness to what he tells." Beverly Smith

+ Books p4 Mr 16 '30 900w

Christian Century 47:499 Ap 16 '30 200w

Reviewed by Raymond Mortimer

Nation and Ath 47:796 S 27 '30 80w

"Only very occasionally is there a note which might strike a dispassionate reader as false or overly melodramatic. Endowed with a vigorous and promising style, the author has the talent of making each situation and characterization supremely important to the progression of his tale, a rare attribute for a first novel."

+ N Y Times p20 Mr 23 '30 580w

Sat R 150:375 S 27 '30 550w

MAYNARD, THEODORE. De Soto and the conquistadores. 297p il $3.50 (16s) Longmans

B or 92 Soto, Hernando de. America—Discovery and exploration 30-10942

A new biography of Hernando de Soto, Spanish soldier and discoverer, which attempts to extenuate the charge of Spanish cruelty to the Indians by stressing the religious object of the conquistadores.

Booklist 26:393 Jl '30

"There is nothing of the romantic novel and the super-film in this book, but it does not lack in action or color. Mr. Maynard is a competent historian who realizes that atmosphere is as important as events, and that motives overshadow men. His method is, perhaps, the only one adequate to describe the tumultuous times and the complex adventurers of the Spanish conquest of America." Paul Allen

+ Bookm 71:224 Ap '30 230w

"This book proves that Mr. Maynard possesses one of the chief virtues of the historian—interest. He gives a sharp, firmly drawn picture of an interesting figure, who held himself superior to his fellow adventurers, especially when they became more barbaric than those they despoiled. But Mr. Maynard takes the strange point of view that the conquistadores were often justified in their barbarity. . . Apart from matters speculative and argumentative, Mr. Maynard is direct as a well shot arrow." C. J. Finger

+ — Books p6 Ap 13 '30 700w

"His is the first complete, authentic, dependable account, based upon Spanish sources. . . Rarely has an authoritative biography of an adventurer been written in so fascinating a manner. The reading, in itself, is an adventure. The dry humor, springing up everywhere, is delightful. The ancient sources have yielded absorbing research material." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 22 '30 1700w

"For the candor of its general exposition, as of its frequent obiter dicta, Maynard's book deserves a wide dissemination. Moreover it comes to fill a need. There was a real call for a restatement in English of the exploits of Soto, since such earlier accounts as those of Wilmer, Abbott, and Ober left a great deal to be desired." J. D. M. F.

+ Cath World 132:119 O '30 650w

Cleveland Open Shelf p100 Jl '30

"Concerning the author's interpretations and opinions, questions may be raised, especially when Spanish religious piety is so often emphasized and when attempts are made to draw morals from the facts. One criticism certainly should be made; namely, that the author makes many positive assertions concerning facts which have never been proven or which are accepted as of doubtful authenticity. But perhaps this may be classed as poetic license, coming as it does from a professor of English literature. On the whole, the book is polished, pleasing, and praise-worthy. The index and bibliography are rather better than is customary in such volumes, and the illustrations are well-selected." A. C. Wilgus

+ — Hist Outlook 21:241 My '30 350w

"That Mr. Maynard, in the present volume, should have softened De Soto into a hero of the Catholic Church, is a fact to be regretted. He adds to what we know of De Soto's early maneuvers in Peru and Panama; he appreciates his hero (almost exuberantly); he amasses a bibliography. He has also discovered some startling early European pictures of the Indians. But, aside from the religious coloration of his facts, he interprets neither the character nor the significance of the explorer: this the reader must divine for himself." J. M.

— + New Repub 64:134 S 17 '30 220w

"In this new biography of De Soto and the other conquistadores, the author has attempted—in most instances quite successfully—to correct some of the long standing misconceptions and abuses heaped by most historians upon the Spanish conquerors of America. With sound judgment, and quite convincingly, he proceeds not only to revaluate these men's motives and achievements, but to reconstruct the scene of their exploits in the New World. It is true history that he tells us, and not mere conjecture." Dino Ferrari

+ N Y Times p11 My 18 '30 1250w

"Mr. Maynard has rewritten, clearly and with a full sense of its value today, an important chapter in American history." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:598 Ap 9 '30 100w

St Louis 28:147 My '30

Springf'd Republican p6 Jl 14 '30 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p383 My 8 '30 800w

MAYOR, FLORA MACDONALD. Rector's daughter. 306p $1.50 Coward-McCann

A picture of the quiet, almost stagnant, life in a little English village. The love story of the gentle, middle-aged daughter of the rector is the central theme of the book.

"A book so thoughtfully executed, so expert in its treatment of a complex character that I have an uneasy fear that it cannot be a first novel. . . Miss Mayor understands the trick (which is so much more than a trick) of imparting value to minor incidents. She employs the drama in other people's lives to quicken the life of her heroine. And without indulging in an elaborate analysis of Mary's emotions, she manages to communicate them to the reader in telling fashion." Guy Holt

+ Bookm 72:450 D '30 220w

Reviewed by F. H. Britten

Books p18 S 21 '30 400w

"Miss Mayor in many instances has evolved types rather than individuals; but no one can complain that Mary, at least, is not a three-dimensional personality. Except for this sketchiness in treatment, Miss Mayor belongs to the tradition of Jane Austen and Mrs. Gaskell and a long line of their eminent successors. Lovers of these writers need not hesitate to give her a hearing."

+ Christian Science Monitor p6 O 11 '30 450w

"Miss Mayor reveals a remarkable talent for characterization. Her figures, although they do not deviate notably from the accepted formulas, have a genuine and convincing individuality. Miss Mayor is a master of those small and revealing details which distinguish a person unforgettably from all others of his kind. She succeeds so perfectly in making her characters real and important to us, in translating us into their inner lives, that the absence of action in an external sense is inconsequential."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 31 '30 680w

"That Miss Mayor has been able to make a story out of a life in which all the climaxes are anti-climaxes is certainly proof of her writing. . . The book deals with a pace of life so measured, so timeless, so off the modern beat, that its ability to awake reactions, as you read it, bears witness to the writer's honesty and to her insight as a reflector of the society she knows." V. P. R.

+ Outlook 156:29 S 3 '30 500w

Reviewed by Helen MacAfee

Yale R n s 20:viii autumn '30 100w

MAYOR, FLORA MACDONALD. Squire's daughter. 306p $1.50 Coward-McCann [7s 6d Constable]

"The unstable son and daughter of Sir Geoffrey de Lacy are the chief characters in this interesting picture of the post-war decline of an old English family. Impoverished by the war, Sir Geoffrey sees his beloved home put up for sale, his heir a waster, and his younger daughter haunting night clubs, seeking cheap thrills and flouting all tradition and convention. It takes grief and responsibility to bring out the best qualities in his children."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Cleveland Open Shelf p78 My '30

" 'The Squire's Daughter' is less level in performance and less shapely in design than 'The Rector's Daughter,' but when it touches the emotions it touches them at a deeper level than Miss Mayor's earlier novel, and it is just as witty. 'The Squire's Daughter' grows from diffuseness into integrity, slow in starting, fragmentary and elusive." L. L. Irvine

+ Nation and Ath 44:690 F 16 '29 350w

"The merit of the story is its intense reality and its crowded canvas of authentic portraits of living people. The author's manner of narration is pedestrian in the extreme; but one's interest even in the smallest happenings to the dullest people is never allowed to flag."

+ — New Statesman 32:610 F 16 '29 200w

Pratt p41 winter '30

" 'The Squire's Daughter' is a fine achievement, challenging comparison with its predecessor and sustaining it. One misses the simplicity of plan that lent such distinction to the earlier book; but this one is marked by a realization, equally vivid, of wider and more complex issues—it is a symphony following a sonata." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 147:219 F 16 '29 500w

"The value of Miss Mayor's book is in the unexaggerated pictures of a society that took its duties and its responsibilities with dignity and cherished a good tradition of country life. Her characters are well drawn, though one realizes just where she condescends, and the conversations [are] lively and amusing."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p138 F 21 '29 350w

MAZUR, PAUL MYER. America looks abroad; the new economic horizons. 299p $3 Viking press

330.973 United States—Economic conditions. United States—Commercial policy. United States—Commerce 30-10479

A discussion of economic conditions and the position of the United States in world trade. The author, member of a Wall Street banking house, maintains that America's problem for the future is to be solved in Europe, that prosperity here depends upon the intensive cultivation of the foreign market.

"The book is a skilful, readable statement of a prevalent common-sense economic analysis of the present American business situation. The style is non-technical and confident. Although the work is not on a scientific level, it is interesting to sociologists because of its assumption of the interdependence of social and economic factors." T. C. McCormick

+ Am J Soc 36:320 S '30 250w

"An easy style and an undoubted spirit of sincerity and frankness throughout recommend the volume to all those interested in our steadily growing international relationships." A. E. Taylor

+ Ann Am Acad 150:302 Jl '30 100w

Booklist 26:381 Jl '30

"It sustains an interest in its subject in a way that can be credited to few books on economics, and if it were only read widely enough it would inject a great deal of common sense into public thinking on economic problems. We recommend it especially to Congress." F. R. Dulles

+ Bookm 71:343 Je '30 300w

"Mr. Mazur's book is a valuable contribution to the discussion of our current industrial problems. Unlike many writers on economic subjects who set out to prove a preconceived thesis, Mr. Mazur has followed wherever the questions of modern industrial progress have led him. His vision has extended beyond the narrow circle of immediate facts, and he has ranged suggestively into the future as well as into the past." David Sarnoff

+ Books p1 Ap 20 '30 950w

Christian Century 47:1530 D 10 '30 320w

Cleveland Open Shelf p69 My '30

Reviewed by John Carter

Current Hist 32:424 Je '30 320w

Foreign Affairs 8:671 Jl '30 20w

"Mr. Mazur's thesis is not new, simply because it is based on established economic thinking. Nevertheless, on the whole, he has stated this thesis more clearly than most economic writers. His book is a much-needed contribution to the literature upon the international position of the United States." R. L. Buell

+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 19 '30 1100w

Reviewed by Hiram Motherwell

N Y Times p3 Ap 13 '30 1650w

Reviewed by Clinton Simpson
N Y World p7m Je 15 '30 500w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:49 Je '30
Pratt p9 summer '30
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:10 My '30 120w

"Mr. Mazur's essay on America's present economic situation and its probable developments is both valuable and stimulating. It is delightfully written, clear for the most part, and such forecasting as he does is carefully safeguarded so as not to mislead the reader." H. K. Norton
+ Sat R of Lit 7:186 O 4 '30 800w
Special Lib 21:266 S '30
World Tomorrow 13:277 Je '30 50w

MAZZINI, GIUSEPPE. Letters; tr. from the Italian by Alice de Rosen Jervis; with an introd. and notes by Bolton King. 211p $3 Dutton [6s Dent]
B or 92 [30-24139]

This selection of the Italian patriot's letters covering a period of thirty-eight years gives an insight into his Italian policy, his thought on politics and religion, and his many friendships.

"These letters, many of them exceedingly beautiful in expression, have been excellently chosen for the American reader. They reflect completely both Mazzini's public life and his private mind. But always, and for whatever purpose they may have been written, they manifest that clear, implicit, and somewhat touching faith which was the guiding principle of Mazzini's life."
+ Bookm 71:554 Ag '30 350w

"The letters have been skillfully selected to show many sides of Mazzini's complicated life and mind. Particularly moving for their human interest are the letters relating to his life in England and the many practical difficulties an emigrant exile from Italy encountered at that time." Arthur Livingston
+ Books p15 Ag 17 '30 750w

"The importance of these letters lies in their picture of Mazzini himself. Humorless, even sanctimonious at times, his letters are unrelieved by any amusing trivialities. Everything is weighty in content, intense and emotional in expression. His fluency in expressing his deepest feelings is remarkable, and his revelations of himself are gloomy and complete. Mazzini was an interesting individual; and so, although his letters have not the charm of those of the great letter writers, they have a distinct flavor and value of their own."
+ Christian Science Monitor p5 O 18 '30 500w
N Y Times p4 Jl 13 '30 300w

"Interesting and excellently translated. They contain Mazzini's views on almost every aspect of nineteenth century life, politics, art, literature, religion; they serve as a useful supplement to Bolton King's standard 'Life of Mazzini' as well as to his equally standard 'History of Italian Unity.' In 'Mazzini's Letters' will be found a deep background for many issues of present world conditions." J. W. Eshelman
+ Sat R of Lit 7:86 Ag 30 '30 420w

"Many of the letters are intimate, and the collection illuminates the working of Mazzini's mind."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p594 Jl 17 '30 170w

MEAD, MARGARET (MRS REO F. FORTUNE). Growing up in New Guinea; a comparative study of primitive education. 372p il $3.50 Morrow
919.5 Children in New Guinea. Adolescence. New Guinea—Social life and customs. Manus (island) 30-27070

The author of Coming of Age in Samoa makes a similar sociological investigation of the youth of a primitive community on the island of Manus, one of the Admiralty group, north of New Guinea. She studies the childhood of the boys and girls. Tho taught, from infancy, control over their physical environment, they are subject neither to discipline nor any form of restraint until they attain adolescence, when they must abruptly learn to conform to a rigid, almost puritanic social code. Appendices to the book contain additional notes and comments on various interesting phases of Manus village life.

Booklist 27:153 D '30

"Miss Mead's book fails in its apparent purpose: to show America a better individual development by pointing out the virtues of the Manus. But the facts she records about the Manus have an anthropological value, and her comments on American education if taken separately from the Manus information are well worth pondering, especially by those who believe education the universal panacea." A. B. Clarke
Bookm 72:196 O '30 380w

"The book is non-technical and easy to read. It is obviously the work of an excellent observer with a mass of intimate knowledge of the village described. The work was done altogether in the native language except that for which pidgeon was the better vehicle. It is illustrated with photographs, and appendices give a background of detailed information to those who wish it." Ruth Benedict
+ Books p5 S 21 '30 1500w
Christian Century 47:1282 O 22 '30 150w

"'Growing Up in New Guinea' is an even more interesting book than Miss Mead's widely and deservedly praised 'Coming of Age in Samoa.'. . If the book had appeared as a modern 'Gulliver's Travels,' the description of Manus society would have sounded like a bitter satire on American life." Isidor Schneider
+ New Repub 64:329 N 5 '30 750w

"Dr. Mead writes easily and vividly, and she is never lacking in courage. With her theories I am sometimes in disagreement, but her research and subsequent able reporting are of great value in extending the area of sophistication regarding our own choicest beliefs and most determined ways of living; they may be first steps in the development of a technique of evaluating not merely the primitive but our own society as well." Lorine Pruette
+ N Y Evening Post p12 S 20 '30 700w

"An excellent book about primitive life."
+ N Y Times p22 N 16 '30 650w

"Some of Miss Mead's criticism is superficial, but much of it goes deep. Miss Mead senses the holes in our culture, the deficiencies in our individual life. By studying New Guinea she learns more about us. It might be interesting to know which of us the Manus nation would regard as truly primitive people." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 S 24 '30 900w
St Louis 28:292 D '30

"Dr. Mead is strongest in this study when she is presenting her anthropological data. To me she is most interesting and informing when she stays with the concrete materials, with what they do and say in Manus. Just so she is least convincing when she essays her educational comparisons. The final three chapters put her in the position of the man who tells a story and then bores us with explaining the point which was obvious all the while. These many references to the American father, what he does do and what he does not do, are neither wholly true not wholly false." Nels Anderson
+ — Survey 65:228 N 15 '30 350w

MEAD, MARIAN. Four studies in Wordsworth. 274p il $1.25 Banta
321 Wordsworth, William 30-12657

Critics of Wordsworth have spoken of his eye-mindedness, of the richness of his visual faculty and his power of seeing again in memory what had impressed his eye and mind. In these essays, the author discusses this faculty, also his treatment of light and color, to which more than half the space of the book is devoted. Wordsworth's poem, The idiot boy, is discussed in one chapter and, in the last essay, Wordsworth's conception of home. The appendix lists the light and color words used by Wordsworth and Keats.

MEAD, MARIAN—Continued

"The poetry of Wordsworth has been accorded a new appraisal and a glowing appreciation in four delicately phrased and studiously considered essays by Marian Mead. . . Although perhaps at times she is a little prolix and repetitious, she clinches her point as to the extraordinary penetrative powers of Wordsworth's eye."
+ N Y Times p29 O 19 '30 580w

"Much the longer of the four studies, more than 150 pages, [is] on 'Light and Colour in Wordsworth,' in which almost every passage in which the poet makes use of 'light or colour words' must be quoted, and many of them more than once, and not only quoted but annotated with a curious mixture of real insight, happy illustration and irritating redundancy of the obvious. . . Take it for all in all, the book contains, amid much that is somewhat tedious, a considerable number of good, well-made points, some of which will probably be surprisingly fresh to good Wordsworthians who yet have the candour to admit that they have not observed all that there was to observe in their great—and voluminous—poet."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p1076 D 19 '29 700w

MEADER, STEPHEN WARREN. Red Horse Hill. 244p il $2.50 Harcourt
30-23594

The story of a brave boy's struggle for existence, back in the days of oxen and horses. After his father's death Bud faced the problem of earning a living and found it difficult, until he went to live with the Masons on their New Hampshire farm. In time the lucky winning of a cutter race and the finding of an old will, enabled Bud to look forward to a college education and to setting up a fine dairy herd in partnership with Mr Mason.

Booklist 27:109 N '30

"Here is a book in the true tradition of American boy life, with an uncommon flavor and substance of its own. The author writes of what he knows, and he knows the life of a New Hampshire farming community in the day of oxen and horses. He knows how much horses have meant in that life—workhorses, roadhorses and racehorses, and he has put it into such a story as will warm the cockles of the heart of any country-bred New Englander who likes horseracing. It is at the same time lively enough to interest boys and girls of a motor-driven age." A. C. Moore
+ Books p7 Ag 31 '30 850w

"It is without doubt one of the best stories we have. Stephen Meader knows how to write for boys, and here he has given them not only a noble hero in Cedar, the beautiful roan colt, but also a fine picture of New England farm life with its simple hospitality and genial good comradeship." A. L. S.
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 15 '30 80w
Cleveland Open Shelf p133 N '30

"Mr. Meader does not overburden his youthful readers with atmosphere. He does not dwell upon smells—those unforgettable, sometimes poignant memories of country boyhoods. But there is no doubt he knows what he is talking about. And if one wished to give a city boy an idea of what New Hampshire used to be like and may still be like in spots, one could hardly do better than to make him a present of this book. Possibly one would not need to warn him that boys who need $920 to pay off the taxes on their long-lost grandfather's farm do not always win the $1,000 prize in the free-for-all meeting for the snow racing championship of New England. But the patchwork quilt and the motes dancing in the sun inside the hay barn are real." R. L. Duffus
+ Sat R of Lit 7:354 N 15 '30 650w

MEAGHER, MAUDE. White jade. 219p $2 Houghton [6s Scholartis]
[30-23663]

"The story of Yang Kuei-fei, the mistress of the Emperor Ming Huang, who hanged herself some twenty-five hundred years ago with a silken cord when the Tartar rebels succeeded in driving her royal lover from the throne. The lady may be referred to as the Chinese Helen of Troy. Her wantonness is considered to have been responsible for the Tartar chief's audacity, for Ming's downfall and for the years of misery which the Chinese people suffered after that."—N Y Evening Post

Reviewed by Alan Priest
Books p5 Ag 10 '30 770w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 27 '30 180w

"Miss Meagher's craftsmanship, although this is her first published book, seems that of a practised worker. Her materials are not gold and silver, but the crooked branch of a pear-tree, a fine-embroidered robe of gauze silk, bright locks of black hair, and a little pair of dangling shoes attached to nothing."
+ New Statesman 35:16 Ap 12 '30 350w

"Miss Meagher's story is somewhat precious, as such stories are likely to be, but altogether pleasurable and rare. With the help of Mrs. Ayscough the author has gone into the literature of the T'ang period for her material, the facts of Kuei-fei's life, of Ming Huang and T'ang civilization generally, which she has used for her story, being historical."
+ N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 2 '30 150w
N Y Times p7 S 14 '30 450w

"It is a fragile, dreamlike fantasy on a Chinese theme."
Outlook 155:548 Ag 6 '30 100w

"Few books in English or other Western languages have caught and entangled in their literary meshes so much of the mental atmosphere of the Chinese poet-philosophers. Here is a truer picture of that aspect of Chinese civilization than is to be found in volumes of descriptive analysis. He who has once sensed it will find it here: he who has not will never find it in the descriptive volumes." H. K. Norton
+ Sat R of Lit 7:70 Ag 23 '30 300w
Springf'd Republican p7e O 19 '30 250w

"The work shows a considerable degree of talent and originality. Not that the problems of style involved in such an undertaking are successfully tackled. The English, viewed apart from its particular purpose, is often weak and clumsy, and the dialogue is either slangy to the verge of facetiousness or marred by literary expressions. The real hero of the book is the poet Po Chü-i, who, when the story has been told first as history and then as legend, fuses these two 'truths' into his great poem 'The Everlasting Wrong.' This ballad, translated many times before, is here given in a version composed by the author from a literal rendering by Mrs. Ayscough; much of the special knowledge in which the book abounds is also provided by the same very competent collaborator."
Times [London] Lit Sup p372 My 1 '30 200w

MEANS, GASTON B. Strange death of President Harding, from the diaries of [the author] as told to May Dixon Thacker. 312p il $3.50 Guild pub. corp., 19 W. 44th st., N.Y.

B or 92 Harding, Warren Gamaliel

"This volume purports to tell the 'inside story' of what was in many ways the most extraordinary interlude in our national history—the Harding Administration. Interest in that astonishing period will continue to grow, and a hundred years hence historians will still be speculating as to the special set of circumstances which made possible the happenings of that two years and five months. . . 'The Strange Death of President Harding' makes a series of violent and amazing accusations, amazing even to those more or less familiar with what happened in Washington during that time."—Sat R of Lit

"There are three prima facie reasons for discrediting his book: first, that Mr. Means served a term in Atlanta penitentiary for violations of the prohibition laws; second, that he lays this conviction to the Harding 'Ohio gang' for whom he worked; and third, that in this very volume he admits his complicity in all sorts of wrongdoing. . . Naturally these facts call for an attitude of extreme caution toward this book. . . The extreme cleverness with which the book is put together, its skill in insinuation rather than in open charges, makes the task of refutation difficult." O. G. Villard

— Nation 130:630 My 28 '30 700w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 64:51 Ag 27 '30 1500w

"The people of this country owe Gaston B. Means a moral debt they will never be able to pay for this volume of overwhelming revelation. These things should not be allowed to happen again, and with this much evidence before us, there should be a way to prevent their calamitous repetition." A. W. P.

Outlook 155:668 Ag 27 '30 450w

Sat R 150:548 N 1 '30 850w

"Some of this book I know to be true—and so does everyone else who is informed about the Harding Administration. Some of it seems to me probable, but there is no way of checking Mr. Means's statements. Some of it I feel pretty confident is false, though I do not accuse Means or Mrs. Thacker of deliberate misrepresentation. But the significant thing about it is that there is nothing in it which is inherently improbable. The men surrounding Warren Harding were of such a character that some of them, at least, could have done everything of which Means accuses them. The facts may or may not be true; but the color is correct." Bruce Bliven

Sat R of Lit 6:1093 My 31 '30 1000w

"A book that is so sensational and so damaging that I should think that some of Mr. Harding's family or friends would invoke against The Strange Death of President Harding the law of libel, which, I understand, can be invoked even for the protection of the dead. His general picture of things under Harding is probably true and I think that he has pretty well sized up both Mr. and Mrs. Harding in point of character." Norman Thomas

World Tomorrow 13:377 S '30 250w

MEARS, ELIOT GRINNELL. Greece today; the aftermath of the refugee impact. (Stanford bks in world politics) 336p il $5 Stanford univ. press [23s Oxford]

949.5 Greece, Modern—Economic conditions. Greece, Modern—Social conditions 29-27807

"An exhaustive survey of the economic and financial situation in Greece, dealing extensively with the success with which the country has absorbed the half million refugees from Turkey."—Current Hist

"It is unfortunate that a book which contains so much of value should be marred by many irritating minor errors such as Kyparissia for Kephissia, the division of the Scotch Miss Stewart-Richardson into two American ladies, and the statement that till fairly recently the round trip from Athens to Sunium took several days. The author's geography is weak and his knowledge of Greek apparently insufficient, and in history and archaeology he makes many serious errors." Alan Wace

— + Am Econ R 20:710 D '30 900w

Am Pol Sci R 24:1060 N '30 200w

Reviewed by F. E. Williams

Ann Am Acad 150:303 Jl '30 150w

Booklist 26:275 Ap '30

Reviewed by W. D. Lane

Books p17 Mr 9 '30 700w

Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '29 1100w

Reviewed by W. J. Abbot

Christian Science Monitor p15 Ja 4 '30 250w

Reviewed by J. T. Gerould

Current Hist 31:830 Ja '30 40w

"The proportion assigned to the various topics is sound. It is in truth libelous to call the book a gazetteer. It has the facts, but the writing is good—terse, lively, as by one who can communicate amusement, and unpretentious. The maps are commercial maps; better ones might have been had for so full a study. There are some slips such as in spelling and in some geographical items and classical allusions, but they are not serious. In view of the fact that there has been no Baedeker or other guidebook of Greece published since 1912, this is the best book for a traveler about to enter that enchanted land." C. P. Howland

+ Geog R 20:697 O '30 500w

"Mr. Mears has made a most comprehensive and exhaustive survey of the nation that has sprung up in the classic land of Hellas. . . The book should prove invaluable to all, business men as well as others, who need first-hand information of a varied sort about the Greece of today. There is a certain confusion in the arrangement of the author's material and a certain monotony in its presentation; but the material is so plentiful and the presentation so painstaking that defects seem small in comparison and promptly fade into the background." T. R. Ybarra

+ — N Y Times p3 Ja 12 '30 1200w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:18 F '30 220w

St Louis 28:78 Mr '30

"He pays a well-deserved tribute to the foreign archaeological schools, but makes some odd mistakes. It is unfortunate that a book which contains so much that is good and valuable should be marred by a decided weakness in the historical, geographical and political side, and that some one more familiar with Greece did not read his manuscript."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p445 My 29 '30 1260w

World Tomorrow 13:233 My '30 80w

MEASUREMENT of man, by J. A. Harris, and others. (Minnesota Sigma xi lectures) 215p il $2.50 Univ. of Minn.

573.6 Biometry. Anthropometry. Growth 30-21826

"A volume which, written by four members of the faculty of the University of Minnesota, all distinguished in the field of biometric research, brings out the valuable contributions to the study of mankind which may be obtained by the quantitative method. Dealing with their subject under such headings as 'The Measurement of Men in the Mass,' 'Normal and Abnormal Human Types,' 'Personality and Physique,' and 'The measurement of the body in childhood,' each of the four authors presents material pertinent to his own chosen field, though all accept the thesis that 'when we consider man in the mass, many definite relationships can be detected and qualitatively expressed that would escape our knowledge if we limited our attention solely to a consideration of individuals.' "—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p3 O 11 '30 480w

"Although the four addresses will appeal chiefly to scientists in all fields, intelligent laymen with some knowledge of mathematics and a desire to learn something about the new science of biometrics, its methods and results, will find the work interesting."

+ N Y Times p25 S 7 '30 230w

St Louis 28:263 N '30

"Their book is not—does not claim to be—an announcement of original discoveries. Its chief value to most of us will be as a set of examples in the use of statistical method. As such, The Measurement of Man has the advantages of lucidity, freedom from unnecessary technicalities, and wide variety of procedure.

MEASUREMENT of man—Continued
The methods used are fundamentally sound and if an occasional calculation has gone wrong, that is only what is to be expected in any first edition of a mathematical work." J. R. Earp
+ Survey 65:229 N 15 '30 320w

MEIER-GRAEFE, JULIUS. Pyramid and temple; tr. by Roger Hinks. 361p il $5 Macaulay
916.2 Egypt—Description and travel. Palestine—Description and travel. Greece—Description and travel. Art, Egyptian 30-25101

An informal and philosophical travel-diary describing a leisurely journey thru Egypt, Palestine, and Greece. The greater portion of the book is devoted to Egypt, her monuments and sculpture, and her civilization past and present.

"The reader's principal interest, of course, lies in the critical reflections inspired in Herr Meier-Graefe by the works of art which he saw. Needless to say, these are always acute and sensitive. They are not, however, organized, or put into the form of systematic criticism. The book cannot be said to be more than the semi-professional jottings and conversation of an art critic on a holiday." Gerald Sykes
+ — Bookm 72:199 O '30 280w

"The warmth of his feeling is as penetrating and revivifying as the Egyptian sun he celebrates. One might perhaps shrink from such intensities of enthusiasm and disgust were it not that Meier-Graefe, for all his emotionalism and his scorn of scholarship, is both learned and intelligent. He knows not merely painting and sculpture, but music and poetry, not merely the art of his own time and place, but that of distant centuries and strange peoples. And he can always illustrate his understanding of a particular work by references to matters that are as relevant in actuality as they are remote in appearance." Babette Deutsche
+ Books p18 N 2 '30 1150w
New Repub 65:200 D 31 '30 150w

"Herr Meier-Graefe not only has the courage of his convictions, convictions differing widely from those usually accepted, but delights in them the more the more they differ. There is a good deal in his book besides the dominating art-criticism which is its reason for being. . . A good many people will probably find it extremely irritating, but it is safe to say that very few will find it boring." L. M. Field
+ N Y Times p11 O 19 '30 1200w

MEINE, FRANKLIN J., ed. Tall tales of the Southwest; an anthology of southern and southwestern humor, 1830-1860. (Americana deserta) 456p $3 Knopf
817 30-10495

The first volume in a new series of anthologies and reprints under the editorship of Bernard De Voto, which will include chiefly writings of the first sixty years of the nineteenth century that are native and peculiar to America. Tall Tales of the Southwest, an anthology of southern and southwestern humor from 1830 to 1860, contains samples of humor which "fed the genius" of Mark Twain, including indeed what appears to be his earliest known printed story, written when he was seventeen.

"The sketches in this volume vary greatly in merit. Some of them are genuinely funny which is a rare trait in newspaper humor a hundred years old. Nearly all of them are vivid revelations of a society, and a novelist who wanted to write of boom times in the old Southwest would find in the books quoted here an unusually rich store of material. Some of these books, and especially 'Sut Lovingood's yarns' would bear reprinting complete." Harvey Fergusson
+ Books p17 My 4 '30 850w
Cleveland Open Shelf p139 N '30

"As humor they bore me. The flatness of many and the crassness of many more make me understand the flatness and crassness of Mark Twain at his worst; but they are valuable documents in both social and literary history, and as a student I value them as I do a good bibliography or a well compiled chronological chart." P. H. Boynton
— + New Repub 63:212 Jl 9 '30 250w

"There is no way to convey any idea of the real flavor of these yarns. You must read them to enjoy them with all of their fresh, crisp and graphic manner. Altogether, a grand, solid book." Ben Wasson
+ N Y Evening Post p10m My 10 '30 400w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain
N Y Times p2 My 4 '30 1300w

"It becomes apparent at once that the editors have expended a great deal of time poking into dark corners and mulling over faded newspaper files. And they have dug up much more than 'the light-hearted ribaldry of an exuberant people,' as the jacket so excellently puts it." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 Ap 14 '30 1400w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:71 O '30
St Louis 28:215 S '30

MELLEN, IDA M. Roof gardening. 115p il $1.25 De La Mare
716 Roof gardens. Floriculture 29-12435

A practical little book on roof gardening in which the author tells of her own experiences over many years in gardening on a few square feet of roof in Brooklyn. Only such plants were used as would flourish in six inches of soil, but the list includes bulbs, vines, annuals and perennials, over sixty kinds in all. The total outlay for eight years was $360.

Cleveland Open Shelf p41 Mr '30

"She has experimented with her plantings and has learned what will grow and what will not in the shallow soil of her boxes and in this daintily made book she gives full directions for those who may want to follow her example as to how to make and care for such a city roof garden, what bulbs, seeds and plants to use and how to manage the plantings so as to keep the garden a-bloom from April to November."
+ N Y Times p26 Ap 20 '30 180w
St Louis 27:335 D '29

MELLETT, JOHN CALVIN (JONATHAN BROOKS, pseud.). Ink. 286p $2 Bobbs
30-7423

"Red-headed Arthur Morton, a born newspaper man, lands in Columbia in search of a job, on a bootlegger's truck. Instead of a job he acquires a newspaper and boldly sets to work, minus cash but with courage and convictions, to deliver the city from municipal corruption. His short but meteoric career is typical of the experiences of an editor in any stagnant town controlled by a few men." —Bookm

Bookm 71:xxvi Ap '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 Je 28 '30 460w

"As a record of newspaper experience, the book leaves practically everything to be desired. As a compound of romance and far-fetched melodrama it is a fast-moving and exciting tale, but at best it is little more than a hasty and clever piece of hackwork. The background of newspaper work and the 'vibration of the presses,' called attention to in a jacket note, are so insignificant as to be quite superfluous to the story."
— + N Y Times p21 Mr 30 '30 350w
Springf'd Republican p7e My 4 '30 120w

MELLOR, JOSEPH WILLIAM. Elementary inorganic chemistry. 229p il $1.50 (3s 6d) Longmans

546 Chemistry, Inorganic [30-17416]

A textbook adapted by the author from his former and larger work, Introduction to Modern Inorganic Chemistry, as better suited to the needs of beginners and the general requirements of the elementary course in chemistry.

"Admirably illustrated and the subject matter is presented in an attractive fashion."
+ Nature 126:395 S 13 '30 160w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:17 Ap '30

MELVILLE, SIR JAMES. Memoirs; ed., with an introd. by A. Francis Steuart. (Background of hist.) 379p pl $5 Dutton [12s 6d Routledge]

B or 92 Scotland—Court and courtiers. Mary Stuart, queen of Scots 30-8120

The memoirs of Sir James Melville of Halhill are of historical importance in that they contain intimate disclosures of court life during the reigns of Mary Stuart and Queen Elizabeth. The author, as a court diplomatist, came into direct contact with Elizabeth, and reports the duel of jealousy between the sovereign and her cousin.

"For the reader unacquainted with the history of Scotland at the time of Mary Stuart and her son, the book is filled with too many names and details to hold his attention. But for the student seeking local color and glimpses of the turbulent lairds of late sixteenth century Scotland a new edition of Melville's memoirs will be most welcome in spite of its scanty notes and entirely inadequate name and place indexes." Harold Hulme
+ — Am Hist R 36:189 O '30 450w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 19 '30 950w

"Sir James Melville's Memoirs are a valuable authority fo certain aspects of the reigns of Elizabeth, Mary Queen of Scots and James VI., with all three of whom their astute author was at various times in close contact. Mr. Francis Steuart has not taken his duties as editor very seriously. It is not a bad version and there is no doubt something to be said for making it more accessible, but there was room for a rendering which would follow the original more closely, give material for a critical estimate of Melville's credibility, and afford some substantial help to the reader who is not closely familiar with the period. The index is very defective, and no attempt has been made to supplement the very few dates given in the author's narrative."
+ — New Statesman 34:276 N 30 '29 180w

"Sir James wrote easily and copiously, as did all the great men of that era. The result is one of the most charming and illuminating books of memoirs that we possess from those fierce days. Mr. Steuart's editing of this work has been well nigh flawless."
+ N Y Times p24 F 23 '30 230w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1061 D 12 '29 300w

MELVILLE, LEWIS, pseud. See Benjamin, L. S.

MELVIN, ARTHUR GORDON. Progressive teaching; an interpretation for the guidance of teaching in the public schools. 272p $2 (8s 6d) Appleton

371 Teaching 29-23092

A study of educational problems based on the scientific theory of progressive method in teaching. The author proposes a way out of the tradition of institutionalized, formal and routine methods of teaching, by advocating a study of child psychology, thereby making education fit the child, rather than the child fit education.

Cleveland Open Shelf p121 S '30

"The content of the book is well organized; the style is clear and interesting; and the language is simple enough for the average college student. In the opinion of the reviewer, the book would be more valuable if the author had presented more experimental evidence and objective data." W. H. Gray
+ — El School J 30:555 Mr '30 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1098 D 26 '29 50w

MENCKEN, HENRY LOUIS. Treatise on the gods. 364p $3 (10s 6d) Knopf

201 Religion. Gods 30-8107

Mr Mencken's first book published since 1927 is a treatise on religion. The first of its five sections discusses the nature and origin of religion and the second, the evolution of religion. Section three considers the varieties of religion, with descriptions of ritual, sacraments and theology. The fourth section is devoted to religion in its Christian form and the final section to the state of Christianity today. Mr Mencken's own position on these matters is described in the preface as one of amiable skepticism. "I am quite convinced," he says, "that all religions, at bottom, are pretty much alike. Go beneath [the surface], and one finds invariably the same sense of helplessness before the cosmic mysteries, and the same pathetic attempt to resolve it by appealing to higher powers."

Reviewed by Reinhold Niebuhr
Atlantic Bookshelf p20 Je '30 650w

Booklist 26:340 Je '30

" 'Treatise on the Gods' is most excellent Mencken. . . Mr. Mencken approaches religion rationally. To me, I admit, that seems futile, since if religion be founded upon any truth whatsoever, that truth is self-confessedly not amenable to human reason; and the mere rationalist in his approach is thus foredoomed to find nothing. Or perhaps I might better put it that the rationalist, when he applies his common-sense to religion, reminds me somewhat of a man attempting to measure distances with a thermometer; his measuring instrument is an excellent measurer in its own way, and in its proper field, but he happens to be misapplying it. If in his attempts to dispose of religion my misguided friend has never found religion, nor even apprehended its nature, he has missed few of its parasites: and with every one of them he has diverted himself, and me also, consumedly." J. B. Cabell
+ — Books p1 Ap 13 '30 1750w

"Although the book is frankly a blast against modern Christianity as it is practiced, it is much less skittish than most of Mr. Mencken's previous volumes. . . 'Treatise on the Gods' is a stimulating book for the skeptic or for the faithful whose faith is so deeply rooted and whose desire to preserve it, intact, so passionate that any words are mere pebbles thrown against the window of his mind. Middlers or muddlers will be confused and disconcerted by the book; be made violent by the fact that this author removes old foundations without offering new ones." Fanny Butcher
Chicago Daily Tribune p16 Mr 29 '30 900w

"Scholarly, moderate in tone, and luminously expounded, this book, which has already been bitterly attacked, is an amazingly thought-provoking piece of work. Its chief defect lies in its ignoring of the indisputable fact that religion—Christian and non-Christian alike—still holds sway over the minds of the great majority of the human race today, who have not eaten and will not eat of Mencken's much-lauded Eden fruit of knowledge." Francis Snow
+ — Current Hist 32:216 My '30 300w

"This treatise will do much to restore the recently wavering reputation of its author. It easily stands among the best of his books, and seems to me likely, indeed, to survive longer than any of the others. It is vastly better, for example, than 'Notes on Democracy,' if only because there is more solid industry behind it.

MENCKEN, H. L.—Continued
It is a work of genuine scholarship, admirably organized, and for the most part surprisingly sober in tone." Henry Hazlitt
+ Nation 130:328 Mr 19 '30 1200w

Reviewed by James Thornton
Nation and Ath 47:654 Ag 23 '30 700w

Reviewed by Hazelton Spencer
New Repub 62:355 My 14 '30 1120w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson
N Y Times p3 Mr 23 '30 2000w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 Mr 14 '30 1100w

"To me the book is of great importance. I think everybody ought to read it, but read it for its central vision, not for its special plea. . . 'Treatise on the Gods' is not the work of a scientific spectator, an amiable sceptic, reviewing the religious scene. It is the mighty blow of a cleanser of the Temple, of the purifier jealous for the good life. It is a blow in a fight, not the handicap from a ringside seat." H. M. Kallen
+ N Y World p19m Mr 16 '30 1400w

"He is clearly out of his depth. There is no denying the vividness of the writing but his discussion of the nature and development of religion and its state today is little more than a rationalization of his own dislikes. Those readers who still enjoy God killing will like this book but those who have outgrown this stage will find little in it that is news." E. B. Chaffee
— Outlook 155:191 Je 4 '30 230w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:42 My '30

"It is a pity that most people will form their verdict on this book before they read it. To devout Christians it must be foul blasphemy; while devout Menckenites will hold it literally inspired, even to the painfully numerous typographical errors. But there must be a considerable number of mavericks not yet herded into either round-up who can read it with frequent edification and almost continual pleasure. For if Mencken as a thinker is as emotionally biassed as the rest of us, he is a writer of extraordinary lucidity and (when he chooses to curb his exuberance) of extraordinary power." Elmer Davis
Sat R of Lit 6:837 Mr 22 '30 300w

Reviewed by C. E. M. Joad
— Spec 145:sup463 O 4 '30 280w
World Tomorrow 13:428 O '30 550w

MENNINGER, KARL AUGUSTUS. Human mind. 477p $5 (21s); text ed $3.50 Knopf
132 Psychology, Pathological. Psychoanalysis. Mental physiology and hygiene. Personality, Disorders of 30-4506

"A well-known psychiatrist here expounds the nature of the human mind with a view to equipping the layman, the student and the professional with the means of coping with its abnormalities. Calling them 'jams in the mental machinery,' he seeks in detail to show what factors, internal and external, bring about the jams; what tendencies there are in the personality which, in certain situations, result in disaster; what the disasters look like, and what are the signals of distress; what underlie the signals or symptoms, and how their language can be understood; how the failures can be rehabilitated, and what can be done with those beyond rehabilitation, and finally how one can maintain a healthy mind."—Boston Transcript

---

"The author has aimed to produce an opportune, sound, and well-balanced survey of the entire field of mental hygiene and he has admirably succeeded. The result is an absorbing book, which is easy to read, profusely illustrated with illuminating examples of the cases cited, and one well calculated to appeal both to the casual reader and to the person who would have a more serious purpose." L. M. A. Maeder
+ Ann Am Acad 149:sup206 My '30 360w
Booklist 26:261 Ap '30

"To the psychiatrist the story is not new—but the book is not written for the psychiatrist. It is for the straphanger, the intelligent layman. 'The Way of All Flesh' is here in bright and apt phrasing, temperate, entertaining, sound and helpful. Harvard has for years been teaching by the method of case histories. Dr. Menninger owes his initial stimulus as a psychiatrist to one of this university's most brilliant psychiatrists, Elmer Ernest Southard. This book is evidence that he carries the torch of his illustrious teacher through the mazes of the human mind with vigor, honor and spirit. . . Dr. Menninger's handling of psychoanalytic discoveries is very temperate and moderate and shows a wise discrimination in presentation of the mental mechanism with splendid case material." S. E. Jelliffe, M.D.
Books p3 F 2 '30 800w
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 8 '30 550w

"Dr. Menninger's handling of the most satisfactory recent methods of obtaining self-knowledge and of conquering our narcissism, namely, those of psychoanalysis, is essentially moderate and sound. He fortunately does not lose himself in psychoanalytic intricacies, but portrays only the more stabilized and usable conceptions which this method of investigation has made available." S. E. Jelliffe
+ Nation 130:458 Ap 16 '30 600w

"Two and a half years ago Knopf published Dr. Logan Clendening's 'The Human Body,' a book which managed somehow to make physiology interesting. Now, as a companion volume, comes 'The Human Mind,' by one of the younger American psychiatrists. It is equally sprightly, and on the ground of popular appeal it has this advantage over its predecessor—the fact that the activities of that strange brain product we call the mind are perennially attractive to readers who are not in the least interested in what makes their livers work." Maynard Shipley
+ N Y Times p4 F 23 '30 950w

"In all of his chapters he amasses for our enlightenment a bewildering richness of material, and he ploughs through it with no strain, and the reader follows him as though he were sitting at his favorite cinema watching a dramatic film with some such title as the following: The Mind Is a Theatre, Your Own Desires and Ideas Are the Actors." Pierre Loving
+ N Y World p10m F 16 '30 900w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:189 Ja 29 '30 200w

"Among many books it stands out unique—a comprehensive review of psychiatry for the lay public, in which we may include doctors, lawyers, clergymen, and social workers, however much they may each and all have come to think of psychiatry as a part of their own technique." E. T. Devine
+ Outlook 154:630 Ap 16 '30 400w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:34 Ap '30
St Louis 28:127 My '30

"His book represents a great deal of painstaking work in the matter of the collection and classification of cases illustrative of abnormal psychology, and it really deserves a better literary setting and treatment than it has received. While it will hardly be appreciated by the average layman, the man in the street, it will prove to be a book of invaluable reference for all classes of workers, who come in contact with the abnormalities of the human mind, such as social workers, psychologists, trained nurses, medical students and general medical practitioners who may desire to obtain a comprehensive survey of mental medicine."
— + Sat R of Lit 6:998 Ap 26 '30 480w

"To say that the book is delightfully written only vaguely expresses it. The author has taken one of the most important subjects, if not the most important subject of all to man; he has popularized it so that it would seem that any intelligent layman not only can grasp it, but if he ever picks up the book will grasp its meaning, because he has made it so interesting. From the psychiatrist's point of view there is only one fly in the ointment. . . The book is too good." W. A. White, M.D.

+ Survey 63:724 Mr 15 '30 550w

MERCER, CECIL WILLIAM (DORNFORD YATES, pseud.). Blood royal. 290p $2 Minton [7s 6d Hodder]

30-2374

Riechtenburg, a little kingdom mythically bordering on Austria, has two claimants to its throne, while the aged Prince Nicholas is dying: they are Duke Paul and Duke Johann. Duke Paul is an arrogant fool, but his fiancée, the beautiful Grand Duchess Léonie, is worthy the brave assistance that two gallant young Englishmen, Richard Chandos and George Hanbury, give her. Richard and the Duchess Léonie fall in love, and after Léonie succeeds, for political reasons, in planting Duke Paul on the throne, she breaks her engagement and runs off to England with Richard.

Booklist 26:313 My '30

"Mr. Yates's gay and sprightly little romance is easy reading."

+ — Books p14 Mr 9 '30 250w

Boston Transcript p2 F 15 '30 170w

Cleveland Open Shelf p47 Mr '30

"In several past performances Mr. Yates has proved to be an accomplished light novelist, and it is rather disappointing that he should here expend his ability on a tale which, brightly told though it is, seems at best to be merely archaic piffle." E. C. B.

— N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 22 '30 230w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p4d Ja 3 '31 100w

"[The author] wastes little time on preliminaries and introductions. His tale gets under way at once, gathers momentum quickly and clips along at a good swift pace. An attempted kidnapping, drugged wine, an underground passage, plot and counterplot, one deadly peril after another faced bravely for the sake, not of the wretched weakling Paul but of the lovely and peerless Léonie, make the tale the liveliest kind of lively reading. The story is told with plenty of spirit."

+ N Y Times p7 Ja 5 '30 360w

"A tale that is neither original nor plausible and that smells unmistakably of the scissors-and-paste school of romantic literature."

— N Y World p10m F 16 '30 350w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:30 Ja 1 '30 100w

Pratt p41 summer '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p626 Ag 8 '29 260w

MEREZHKOVSKII, DMITRII SERGIEEVICH. Life of Napoleon; tr. from the Russian by Catherine Zvegintzov. 375p $3.50 Dutton

B or 92 Napoléon I, emperor of the French 30-3668

The author, a Russian novelist and historical scholar, in his biography of Napoleon places accent upon what he considers the main reason for Napoleon's achievements: the psychic gift of intuitive memory, that was tutor to his genius. Mr Merezhkovsky's theory is a new contribution to the many psychological studies of one of the most phenomenal characters in history.

"Merezhkovsky is a historian, and a gifted one, who combines historical method with the most brilliant literary style. The Moscow campaign, as depicted by Komroff, is, after all, merely literary virtuosity applied to historical chronicling; but Merezhkovsky infuses into the purely objective theme the vital breath of psychological interpretation, which pierces to the very heart of Napoleon's gigantic power over his armies and over the spirit of his time. This applies with even greater force in the chapters dealing with Waterloo and the last tragic phases of Napoleon's meteoric career." Francis Snow

+ Current Hist 31:1046 Mr '30 370w

"With intuitive intelligence, fine pictorial and dramatic art, and mature scholarship, Merezhkovsky has so written of the great captain as to shed a new light on the soul as well as the life of one of the greatest of men. Thus he is fully justified for following in the wake of 40,000 volumes [about Napoleon]." Charles Johnston

+ N Y Times p3 Ja 19 '30 1300w

Pratt p37 summer '30

St Louis 28:81 Mr '30

"The arrangement of the subject matter is unexceptional and mercifully sparing of anecdotes. The women, unostentatiously, but with historical accuracy, are herded into the background." F. J. Z.

+ Springf'd Republican p12 F 5 '30 550w

MEREZHKOVSKII, DMITRII SERGIEEVICH. Michael Angelo, and other sketches; tr. from the Russian by Natalie Duddington. 184p $3 Dutton [7s 6d Dent]

Michelangelo Buonarroti—Fiction 30-8355

Contents: Michael Angelo: an historical study; Love is stronger than death (a Florentine novel of the XV century); The science of love. The first is a sketch of Michael Angelo, which chooses the dramatic episode of the painting of the frescoes in the Sistine Chapel as a starting point.

Bookm 71:xxii Ag '30 80w

Reviewed by Eugene Reynal

Books p10 Ap 6 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 29 '30 400w

"No extreme fancy need be brought to present the story of Michelangelo; the facts themselves are full of drama. There is no need of added color, interpretation or overstatement. The author understands this and he undertakes his task with modesty, allowing well-known anecdotes to tell their own story. Merezhkovsky intervenes only to select the episodes, to relate them so that they will emphasize the austerity and discordance of Michelangelo's character." D. A.

+ Christian Science Monitor p5 O 18 '30 250w

"With a keen sense for the dramatic, by careful selection of vivid episodes and by juxtaposing the sharp mental and physical contrasts of Michael Angelo, the author achieves real power and pathos in this study. But, by the same token—and perhaps because of the limitations imposed on the author by so short a sketch—he does not allow us to see much of the man; of his doubts, fears and struggles." Dino Ferrari

+ — N Y Times p9 O 19 '30 800w

N Y World p11m Mr 30 '30 450w

"This is a type of biography which, if done well, and with due regard for the facts, is of far more interest to the average person than the 800-page, cradle-to-grave work. An impression rather than an interpretation, it gives the broad outlines which can easily be filled in by supplementary reading if sufficient interest has been aroused." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:388 Mr 5 '30 120w

"One opens a book about Michaelangelo written by the accomplished author of 'Leonardo da Vinci' with high expectations which are as soon disappointed. We have only an extended sketch, taking Michaelangelo at certain crises. The booklet is almost as monotonous and undistinguished as it is short."

— Sat R of Lit 6:877 Mr 29 '30 170w

MERRIAM, JOHN CAMPBELL. Living past. 144p il $2 (7s 6d) Scribner

550 Geology. Paleontology 30-8452

The author, who is president of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, in this book makes

MERRIAM, J. C.—Continued
a study of the evolution of plant and animal life as indicated by footprints, bones, leaf imprints, skeletons and other remains found in stone, pits, and caves in various parts of the country. The story as Mr Merriam tells it shows creation as a continuing process.

Booklist 26:345 Je '30
Boston Transcript p1 Ap 12 '30 500w
Christian Century 47:437 Ap 2 '30 50w
Cleveland Open Shelf p57 Ap '30

"The author has written lightly with singular grace and charm, and the absence of technical details will add to the pleasure of the general reader. The book is well illustrated; but the price seems too high."
+ — Nature 125:888 Je 14 '30 100w
N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 15 '30 60w

"Something rather unusual in books about the geological history of the world is done by Mr. Merriam, president of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, in this little but thrilling volume. For he presents fragments from the pages of that history in a way to give them an emotional appeal. He aims to show the past of millions of years ago as a living, vivid thing which can arrest the attention and grip the emotions. And he is successful, for it will be a dull reader, indeed, who does not thrill responsively to the stories that he translates from cryptic marks on long buried stones."
+ N Y Times p23 Mr 2 '30 420w
Outlook 155:346 Jl 2 '30 100w

MERRICK, LEONARD. Little dog laughed. 316p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Hodder]
30-22210

Fourteen short stories no one of which has the title which gives the book its name. Paris is the scene of more than half the tales. Contents: The elevation of Lulu; Five bells; Little birdie; The shoelace; Mate; The vengeance of Monsieur Dutripon; Poor dear George; The dovecote; The crime of Olga Jibinsky; I recall a seat; The surgeon was right; A cure for dyspepsia; The departure of papa; The epic of the heavenly cook.

Booklist 27:161 D '30
Reviewed by Lynn Anderson
Bookm 72:78 S '30 400w

"For those who enjoy short stories of a substance and flavor far removed from the mechanized order of American magazine fodder; for those who like the flavor of the English charm school which ran contemporary with the more powerful Wells-Bennett-Galsworthy movement in English letters, and for those who have admired Mr. Merrick's work in the past 'The Little Dog Laughed' is recommended heartily." F. T. Marsh
+ Books p5 Ag 31 '30 600w
Cleveland Open Shelf p150 D '30

"This new collection of tales has all the Merrick flavor and treats of most of the familiar subjects. All are done with that restrained and delicate craftsmanship which won the admiration of Merrick's fellow-writers long before he enjoyed the popular favor."
+ Nation 131:303 S 17 '30 220w

"Mr. Leonard Merrick's short stories make the most enjoyable light reading. They are humorous, sometimes a little tart, but always good-tempered." Herbert Kahan
+ Nation and Ath 47:446 Jl 5 '30 150w

"There are fourteen stories in all and with the exception of perhaps two, strangely enough, English ones, each stands out for the excellence of plot and technique that marks Leonard Merrick at his best. 'The Vengeance of Monsieur Dutripon,' slightly reminiscent of that unforgetable short story, 'The Suicides in the Rue Sombre,' is among the finest." R. C. Feld
+ N Y Times p4 S 7 '30 1350w

"Leonard Merrick's latest collection of short stories is amusing, witty, sardonic, sophisticated, brilliant, scintillating, or maybe only clever. The stories begin at the bottom of mere cleverness and ascend to the top of brillance. There are even some stories of pathos, giving a brighter shine to the wit that gleams in others. There is, I believe, only one dull story, but it is dull only by contrast to the brightness of the others." Harry Salpeter
+ N Y World p9 Ag 27 '30 950w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

"In his brief sketches and tales the author has a Gallic lightness of touch. Fun is his aim and dexterity his watchword. Particularly can he be delightful when he writes of the more Bohemian circles of the French capital."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:123 S 13 '30 420w

"Deft workmanship is Mr. Leonard Merrick's middle name, but in The Little Dog Laughed he offers more than that. The fourteen tales in the book all contribute to an understanding of a philosophy of life which is indicated by the title. Humanity's oddities and follies are 'fine sport' in these pages, yet there is no bitterness of satire, for Mr. Merrick is as urbane and tolerant as he is deft."
+ Spec 145:24 Jl 5 '30 80w
Springf'd Republican p7e S 14 '30 550w
Times [London] Lit Sup p476 Je 5 '30 550w

MESSENGER, RUTH ELLIS. Ethical teachings in the Latin hymns of medieval England; with special reference to the seven deadly sins and the seven principal virtues. (Columbia univ. studies in hist., economics, and public law) 210p $3.50 Columbia univ. press

245 Hymns, Latin. Roman Catholic church—Hymns. Christian ethics 30-20975

Believing that the hymns of the medieval church reflect not only the spiritual life and moral standards of the period, but its thought and culture as well, the author has made this study of the ethical ideals appearing in the Latin hymns of medieval England, with special reference to the seven deadly sins and the seven principal virtues.

"This book is a scholar's task and a scholar's treatment. But through the discussions of sources and meticulous substantiations a patient reader can feel the lift of Gothic struggle and Gothic aspiration."
Boston Transcript p5 Ag 23 '30 380w

"An important contribution to the study of medieval thought and culture."
+ Christian Century 47:1282 O 22 '30 60w

"Miss Messenger has succeeded so admirably in demonstrating that the full cycle of the liturgical year reflects every aspect of the ideal Christian life that one hesitates to criticize, convinced that the author is rather to be congratulated not only on the wealth of material she has gathered to illustrate the definite contribution which the hymns made to the teaching of great principles of faith and conduct, but also on her just evaluation of the moral and ethical standards of the hymns of Latin Christianity." Sister Mary Loyola
+ Int J Ethics 41:251 Ja '31 650w

METCALF, LEONARD, and EDDY, HARRISON PRESCOTT. Sewerage and sewage disposal; a textbook. 2d ed rev by Harrison P. Eddy. 783p il $6 McGraw

628.2 Sewerage. Sewage disposal 30-5633

"The second edition contains much new material, bringing the subject matter quite up to date. It comprises 783 pages, an increase of 185 over the first edition, 343 of which are devoted to sewerage and 400 to sewage and sewage disposal. The whole has been rearranged and in large part rewritten. In the first chapter will be found a brief but excellent historical review of the entire subject with an outline of the principles involved, including those of plumbing."—Am J Pub Health

"The book contains a fund of information brought up to date in a clear, concise style. Having received the scrutiny of Professors

Richard G. Tyler and Gordon M. Fair as well as other competent authorities before presentation to the public it will serve as a safe guide to the practicing engineer as well as the student, for whom it is especially intended. The general make-up of the book is excellent, the illustrations are numerous, well-selected and clear, and there is an index of 38 pages." Kenneth Allen

+ Am J Pub Health 20:798 Jl '30 700w
Booklist 26:323 My '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:25 Ap '30
St Louis 28:137 My '30

METCALFE, JOHN. Arm's-length. 387p $2.50 Scribner [7s 6d Constable]
30-8262

A character sketch of an amiable, but rather futile young Englishman, who was unable to deal with life except at arm's-length. Thru his inadequacy he became deeply involved with two women, and it was left to the women themselves to cut the Gordian knot.

Reviewed by Esther Forbes
Bookm 71:326 Je '30 250w

"An original and a powerful, if not wholly pleasant, book." Mary Ross
+ Books p18 Ap 6 '30 500w
Boston Transcript p2 Je 11 '30 250w

"An extremely readable novel. Mr. Metcalfe's characters are well drawn; the shiftless, unlucky Pounds, with their genius for making a fiasco of everything they undertake, are gems of portraiture." K. C. Tomlinson
+ Nation and Ath 47:542 Jl 26 '30 180w

"There is very little to be said about it except that the characters are as dull a collecttion of futilitarians as can be found anywhere outside of actual existence." Howard Coxe
— New Repub 62:333 My 7 '30 160w
New Statesman 35:338 Je 21 '30 200w

"The work of John Metcalfe is distinguished from almost all contemporary British fiction by its extraordinary directness and candor. . . 'Arm's-Length' is neither easy nor pleasant reading. But the reward is definite and vivid: the reward of a remarkable group of characters with whom the author has achieved clear detachment and clear identification, an ingratiating and intelligent point of view, an extraordinary credibility in the fate assigned to the persons of this weird and striking drama." Emanuel Eisenberg
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 19 '30 650w

"The concluding incidents, after the murder, are the best part of the book. They have the macabre gruesomeness which will be expected by readers of Mr. Metcalfe's previous work, 'The Smoking Leg.' This vein is quite evidently the author's forte. But it cannot well be sustained for a whole book."
— + N Y Times p8 My 11 '30 300w

"Well worth reading, although its plot is hard to follow and its style is rather determined than ingratiating. . . Mr. Metcalfe is skillful in the portrayal and development of character."
+ Outlook 154:544 Ap 2 '30 200w

"The book suffers from tediousness and obscurity; and, despite its power, one cannot accept the author's nervous exasperation as a substitute for profound feeling." V. S. Pritchett
— Spec 144:1064 Je 28 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p556 Jl 3 '30 250w

METZGER, BERTA. Tales told in Hawaii. 116p 2 il $1.25 Stokes
398 Folklore—Hawaii. Folklore—Polynesia
29-17319

"Some of the well-padded books for children offer as few as a dozen stories, handsomely illustrated. This little book has collected seventy-seven stories from the Samoan, the Maori, the Aitutakian, the Hawaiian, and other peoples of the South Seas. Here are tales we children in Hawaii heard very often, and so far as I can remember, only one story told us then is missing from this collection."—Books

---

"This book is full of new legends; and some of them may eventually become the well-known, the twice-told tales of the heroic nursery. This is an old-fashioned book in format, in illustrations and in the manner of telling. At first, it does not attract. But it has certain advantages over its gayer competitors—it may with perfect propriety grow dog-eared, the illustrations are not too precious to be filled in with crayons on a rainy day, and the stories are unpadded." Genevieve Taggard
+ Books p8 N 23 '30 450w

Reviewed by O. M. Fuller
N Y World p3e N 16 '30 80w
St Louis 28:276 N '30

"Between the covers of this gaily bound book, printed in large, clear-cut type, appear, for the first time, a collection of delightful Polynesian folk-tales, retold in very simple language for the joy of children—and for some of the rest of us who like our legends that way. These stories (in original form and language) have been told for centuries in grass huts, under cocoanut palms, around fires on coral beaches on many of the tropical islands that belong to a great island country in the Pacific, Polynesia. Many of the tales Miss Metzger has had the good luck to hear directly from Hawaiians; others she has taken from recorded legends, some of which appear in the publications of the Bishop Museum, Honolulu. Her selections have been fortunate and her manner of telling the stories is effective, so that she has made a jolly book for children." H. T. Follett
+ Sat R of Lit 7:151 S 20 '30 650w

MEYER, CONRAD FERDINAND. The saint; tr. by Edward Franklin Hauch. (Germanistic soc. of America ser.) 233p $2 Simon & Schuster

Thomas à Becket, Saint, abp. of Canterbury —Fiction
30-10710

The setting is England in the twelfth century. It is the story of the events leading up to the murder of Thomas à Becket, narrated by John the Crossbowman, a Swabian armourer who had been in the service of both à Becket and the king. By many continental critics this is considered the masterpiece of Conrad Ferdinand Meyer.

"The characters are real and in their century; the story moves logically; and it is told with admirable restraint."
+ Bookm 72:xiii O '30 50w

"Perhaps there is no German writer so difficult to translate [as Meyer]; and the translation can only be done by one whose English matches the rich, subtle and complicated prose of Meyer's German. It is not a labor of love, but a labor of genius, and in the present translation there is love, no doubt, but there is not even skill, for Professor Hauch makes Meyer sound like Sir Walter Scott." Donald Douglas
+ — Books p2 My 4 '30 550w
Boston Transcript p3 Je 14 '30 280w

" 'The Saint' in its present form does not seem a very powerful or penetrating study. Meyer, who was a consummate stylist, loses, very likely, much of his effectiveness in translation."
Nation 130:739 Je 25 '30 200w

"A good tale, well told. Beyond cavil is the charm of narration, the swiftly moving pace that carries us colorfully from scene to scene without too extended dissection—his psychology appears in the shape of inference and casual suggestion." F. H. Martens
+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 17 '30 300w

"Meyer's historical personages win life for themselves by the light his talent sheds upon their souls. Any student of this period of England's history, be he child or professor, will welcome a book that makes the perusal of historical fact so fascinating. They cannot fail also to be impressed with the poetic tone of the language. Few historical novels glitter so brilliantly, are so authentic a shrine for a saint."

MEYER, C. F.—Continued
+ N Y Times p9 My 4 '30 500w

Reviewed by Harry Fuller
N Y World p7m Je 22 '30 250w

"The work of Conrad Ferdinand Meyer, nineteenth century Swiss novelist, who wrote in German but who was much influenced by French literary form, is almost unknown in this country. This short historical novel is a masterpiece of narrative prose, pure and beautiful in the resonant quality of its style." F. L. R.
+ Outlook 154:666 Ap 23 '30 140w

"By bold invention and adaptation of the divers threads of legend and of history, Meyer has woven a surprisingly unified story. The Germanistic Society went to unusual pains to secure a competent translator for their first publication, and Professor Hauck's sensitive rendering amply repays them." Garrett Mattingly
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1172 Jl 5 '30 730w

"Conrad Ferdinand Meyer died in 1898, and it is a tribute to the lasting worth of his work that at this date it achieves new distinction. It will continue to do so inevitably for the book is historically sound in its essentials, as comparison with the encyclopedias shows, and it complements this quality with charming literary style."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Je 8 '30 260w

MEYER, ERNEST LOUIS. "Hey! yellowbacks!" the war diary of a conscientious objector; foreword by William Ellery Leonard. 209p $2 Day

355.22 Military service, Compulsory. United States—Army—Recruiting, enlistment, etc.
30-8887

Mr Meyer, who was a student of German descent at the University of Wisconsin at the outbreak of the War, narrates, in the form of a diary and letters to his young wife, his experiences as a conscientious liberal or political objector to the war. He begins with his expulsion from the university because of his stand. The story goes on with his experiences among the conscripts at Camp Taylor and Camp Sherman where, together with Mennonites and other religious sects, he underwent all forms of ignominy and torture because of his refusal to don the army uniform. He was sentenced to the penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth and to the barracks at Fort Riley, Kansas, and released soon after the Armistice.

Booklist 26:352 Je '30

"Whatever case Mr. Meyer makes, on the basis of his sympathies, antipathies and personal experiences, for the conscientious objectors, the keynote of his diary remains one of disillusion. . . His true and final conclusion might have been simply that the preservation of one's own soul is the highest task intrusted to man, and the most ultimately valuable to his fellow-man. This he states in part, but never admits altogether." Eugene Lohrke
+ — Books p18 Mr 30 '30 850w

Reviewed by Cornelius Muilenburg
Christian Century 47:1089 S 10 '30 700w

"This is a sordid and distressing story, but valuable for its study of the psychology of his fellow-objectors, many of whom, like the Mennonites, were adherents of religious sects. The saddest aspect of the whole work is its futility." Francis Snow
— + Current Hist 32:4 Ap '30 120w

"This is a well-worth-while little book. It is a moving narrative bound to touch anyone except the men in uniform who are too blind or dull to see that the preservation of liberty of conscience is the most important thing in the world, and that next to it comes refusal to bow down before the power of the state when one's mind and conscience dictate revolt." O. G. Villard
+ Nation 130:426 Ap 9 '30 250w

"His book is written in a temperate spirit and he has tried, especially in the last chapter, in which he glances back and philosophizes over his experience, to look at it all objectively."
N Y Times p20 Mr 9 '30 500w

Reviewed by Alfred Lief
N Y World p11m Mr 23 '30 500w

St Louis 28:207 S '30

"This is a useful book, but not enough. There is sterner stuff to be written on the black holes, the tortures that political objectors went through, the deaths and sufferings of men in military prisons, the cruel sentences actually served." Leon Whipple
Survey 64:34 Ap 1 '30 300w

Wis Lib Bul 26:103 Mr '30

World Tomorrow 13:476 N '30 40w

MEYER, JOHN JACOB. Sexual life in ancient ² India; a study in the comparative history of Indian culture. (Broadway oriental lib.) 591p $10.50 Dutton [36s Routledge]

392 Sex. Women in India. Ramayana. Mahābhārata

" 'Sexual life in India' is an attempt to give an account of the life of women in ancient India based upon the two great epics, the Mahabharata and the Ramayana. It covers the religious and social, as well as the sexual, sides of that life. From this material the author has extracted the most intimate details as to the relation of the sexes."—Nature

"Dr. Meyer's work has little to offer. It is a dreary edifice of pedantry, where such recherché facts as that children were desired and motherhood respected in Ancient India have to be established by endless citations and references in classic literature and the work of other scholars."
— Nation 132:24 Ja 7 '31 100w

"Prof. Meyer's study is comprehensive within limitations: it deals with the position of the daughter in the family; preparation for marriage; the duties and position of the wife; motherhood; the widow; sexual relations, both regular and irregular, and so forth. But it does not tell the whole story. The material is necessarily, in view of its source, somewhat idealised, and certain sides of sexual life do not come within its purview. This, however, does not detract from the value of the book as a social document."
+ Nature 126:600 O 18 '30 280w

Reviewed by F. G. Seabury
Outlook 156:471 N 19 '30 100w

Sat R 150:535 O 25 '30 160w

"Here is learning flung down pell-mell: the book is a quarry in which the industrious student may do his own quarrying. So liberal is Professor Meyer of quotation that the reader is tempted to ask whether a simple translation, reduced to practicable length and unrelieved by comment, might not have been more informative. One could not fairly expect a man so learned to 'popularize' his work at the expense of scientific accuracy; but one may quite fairly contend that the work would have been rendered more valuable by drastic arrangement, compression and editing."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1000 N 27 '30 750w

MEYNELL, FRANCIS. Typography of newspaper advertisements; with a display of English, American, French, Dutch and German type-faces; a table for calculating the number of words of any type which can be fitted into a given space; and a gallery of contemporary advertisements. 240p il $12.50 Stokes [£2 2s Benn]

659 Advertising. Type and type-founding. Printing—Specimens 29-29589

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"Francis Meynell is a real modernist, i.e., one who produces a purely contemporary expression out of his acknowledgment of traditional art. He fails, indeed, to define the position of the typographer in advertising with finality, but he lays down the precepts of good typography and layout in a most engaging manner." Paul Johnston

+ Bookm 71:126 Mr '30 250w

Reviewed by Elmer Adler

Books p18 Ja 12 '30 400w

"The volume is a superb example of the printer's craft, and the examples of modern typefonts alone deserve hours of study and admiration." R. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 22 '30 180w

"The type specimens, tables for type measurement, and gallery of newspaper advertisements will be of interest and practical value to all those interested in advertising. This book should prove an inspiration to advertising craftsmen." Frances Atwater

+ N Y Times p2 F 2 '30 480w

Sat R of Lit 6:932 Ap 12 '30 230w

MEYNELL, LAURENCE W. Mystery at Newton Ferry. 316p $2 Lippincott
30-22429

Just an hour before his sister arrived to visit him gay young Gerald Thorpe was shot and killed by Captain Dunning. It looked like a simple case until Gerald's sister was kidnapped and Tin Rogers, an elderly poacher, told Gerald's friend that the fatal shot was fired an hour earlier than Dunning's story implied. Then it took Sir James Erskine of Scotland Yard to straighten out the tangle.

"Nothing new in the way of mystery, but a well-rounded story."

Bookm 71:xxi Ag '30 70w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p10 Ag 10 '30 100w

"From cover to cover nothing lags in this first-rate thriller." Bruce Rae

+ N Y Times p17 Ag 10 '30 200w

"A very good yarn."

+ Outlook 155:507 Jl 30 '30 120w

Reviewed by R. I. Center

Sat R of Lit 7:63 Ag 16 '30 100w

MICHAELIS, LEONOR. Oxidation-reduction
[2] potentials; tr. from the German manuscript by Louis B. Flexner. (Monographs on experimental biology) 199p il $3 (12s 6d) Lippincott

612.01536 Biological chemistry. Oxidation, Physiological 30-10067

"Prof. Michaelis's monograph is divided into two parts: in the first the theory of oxidation-reduction potentials is described, while the second is devoted to the physiologically important systems. The work may be considered the second volume of the author's 'Hydrogen Ion Concentration', and the treatment stresses the relationship between oxidation-reduction potentials and hydrogen ion concentration."—Nature

Reviewed by W. D. Bancroft

J Phys Chem 34:2378 O '30 4000w

"The author does not claim an exhaustive treatment of the subject, since he does not consider our knowledge sufficiently advanced for a complete discussion of the physiological applications. The book gives an interesting and readable account of oxidation-reduction potentials, and should serve both to disseminate knowledge on the subject and to provide a stimulus to further research."

+ Nature 126:sup529 O 4 '30 300w

MICHAUD, REGIS. Emerson, the enraptured Yankee; tr. from the French by George Boas. 444p il $4 Harper [15s Cape, J.]

B or 92 Emerson, Ralph Waldo 30-12497

An eminent French authority on Emerson, who has translated his Journals into French, draws a living picture of the great seer. The preface is by Ludwig Lewisohn.

Booklist 27:25 S '30

"M. Michaud has told us the story of the philosopher; but the story of the man, which should be inseparable from it, he has unhappily neglected. Régis Michaud has brought to his biography no new material—or rather, it would be correct to say that he has brought to it no new and authentic material. He has, however, been guilty of a host of minor inaccuracies which undermine the effect of an otherwise conscientious piece of work."

— + Bookm 71:450 Jl '30 450w

Reviewed by G. F. Whicher

Books p5 Je 15 '30 750w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 25 '30 300w

"M. Michaud has brilliantly conveyed Emerson's American background, has (except for Thoreau) convincingly portrayed his intimate friends, and has treated with especial charm the long and intimate friendship between the sage of Concord and his 'brother' of Chelsea, Carlyle. M. Michaud's style is oddly at variance with the serene and leisurely Emerson, for it is a sharp staccato which eventually wearies the reader." J. J. R.

+ — Cath World 132:241 N '30 120w

"What M. Michaud finds thrilling in Emerson is the actual functioning of the mind, not its effects. In one sense this is a purely intellectual biography—in the sense that it is the biography of an intellect. In quite another sense it decidedly is not, for the biographer is not himself a coldly intellectual observer of his subject. He is passionately, Gallically stirred by this strong, clear working mind. His reactions are highly emotional to a purely intellectual functioning." Fanny Butcher

Chicago Daily Tribune p9 My 17 '30 500w

"His book suffers almost, as it were, from an excess of light. He is a veritable cascade of enthusiastic rhetoric unrestrained, overflowing. No one can doubt his sincerity and his profound knowledge. But in his zeal he becomes extravagant all too often. He crowds and crams the picture until he wearies us sometimes. Although sustaining the narrative with astonishing verve, he becomes almost incoherent." P. K.

+ — Christian Science Monitor p13 Jl 26 '30 500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p125 S '30

Reviewed by Huntington Cairns

Current Hist 32:1051 S '30 750w

"The book reveals admirable narrative skill; its portraits and incidents are handled dramatically and vividly; its prose is graceful and sometimes affecting. M. Michaud, I doubt not, has read his Emerson through, and he reveals a knowledge of minor figures and of our national mind and history that in a Frenchman is remarkable. The very first sentence, however, warns us that our biography is to be discreetly fictionized, that M. Michaud is a disciple of his compatriot M. Maurois. Purple padding, when it is done with caution and skill, may have its own attraction, but there are two serious objections to it; it contributes nothing essential to the knowledge of the intelligent reader, and it may lead that reader to distrust a biography through his inability to know exactly when an author is reporting reasonably well-established facts and when he is merely drawing upon his imagination. One's suspicions of M. Michaud's biography in particular increase when one observes the liberties that he sometimes takes with chronological order. More serious is the patronizing tone that M. Michaud consistently takes toward his subject. He is not above cheap witticisms at Emerson's expense." Henry Hazlitt

— + Nation 130:735 Je 25 '30 600w

"A prettified Emerson emerges from this book—the New England granite is not there. Professor Michaud handles his life with an almost transcendental disdain for external details, weaving about the few that he does mention an accurate and spirited summary, often in Emersonian phraseology, of the ideas expressed in the works and journals. In the latter respect the study is admirable. But the blended genius implied in M. Michaud's title hardly appears in his portrait, which glows with 'the gentlemanly Platonism on which the biographer loves to dwell, but shows less plainly the severer lines of Yankee common sense and grit." Hazelton Spencer

MICHAUD REGIS—Continued
— + New Repub 63:376 Ag 13 '30 750w

"It has admirable qualities of color, of vivacity, of accurate narration. It is skillfully constructed. It is one of those translations that read like an original, yet it is undeniably French in spirit and style. And yet, when all is said, the convinced student of Emerson is compelled to say of [it], like the young man who had great possessions, one thing [it] lacks, and that one thing is vital." Charles Johnston
+ — N Y Times p5 My 25 '30 1300w

"A disappointing book. Taken as a whole it suffers from a fault which, curiously enough, is summed up in the subtitle. Emerson is 'enraptured.' To justify this title M. Michaud is forced to change the quality of Emerson's life in the direction of intensity, with the result that what in the nature of things is a transient mood becomes the prevailing state of mind. . . Any one who can confuse Emerson, Ford and Carnegie is simply incapable of distinguishing between a doctrine and its hopeless degradation and perversion. All of Michaud's attempts to connect Emerson with modern America are similarly inept." C. H. Grattan
— N Y World p5m Jl 6 '30 900w

"This is the only biography of Emerson which we have read which made him not only real but sympathetic to us; and this in spite of Michaud's ejaculatory style." F. L. R.
+ Outlook 155:67 My 14 '30 230w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:67 O '30

"This book is in many ways an irritation. It is written in a jerky style, with a plentitude of gasps and catches-o'-the-breath that are galling to the nerves. And some of the euphemisms are appalling. As to matter, although there are too many trivial personalities, the author does succeed in his aim of telling the story of Emerson's life so as to explain the origin and nature of his fundamental beliefs." A. J. Hughes
— + Sat R 149:761 Je 14 '30 550w

"A pleasant and well intentioned study, but not an important or successful one. The phrase 'Enraptured Yankee' supplies a key to the book and its limitations."
+ — Springf'd Republican p5e Je 21 '30 1050w

MICHEL, ROBERT. Christ of the forest; tr. by Sybil Campbell Lethbridge. 246p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Methuen]

"A story of a Czecho-Slovakian forest, based upon a mother's delusion that her child is of divine origin."—Publishers' Weekly

Books p10 D 14 '30 100w

"A tale in which mysticism and realism are commingled in a setting of wild nature. A poetic story in which the horror of a starkly tragic climax is redeemed by great delicacy of treatment."
N Y Times p7 Ag 17 '30 400w

"The book springs pure and naïf from the same source that creates miracles. It has the quality of folk-lore, its simplicity and its innocent music."
+ Outlook 155:587 Ag 13 '30 300w

"Very curious and often beautiful little book. . . Mrs. Campbell Lethbridge's admirable translation succeeds perfectly in conveying the subtle atmosphere of the original —a triumph in this difficult art." E. U.
+ Spec 144:633 Ap 12 '30 650w

"There is an apparent delight in cruelty running through the book which spoils the occasional beauty of the author's description of forest life."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p372 My 1 '30 150w

MICHELSON, FRITJOFF, and BYRNE, LEON.
² Ocean parade; being a tale of hurricanes and some women, good and bad. 275p $3 McBride
910.4 Seafaring life. East (Far East)—Description and travel 30-28805

"Here is a rough-and-tumble true yarn of the sea, sailors, and ports for those who like their adventure raw. Two San Francisco reporters left unfinished copy in their typewriters and set out to see the Orient from the rusty fo'c'sle of the freight ship West Wanderer. They have come back with a first-hand tale of sailors and Eastern 'sailortowns.' . . A welter of deep-drinking, hard-fighting, loud-laughing adventures."—Bookm

"Once in a while the authors may be suspected of stretching a point to make a good story better, but they never sentimentalize. A freighter is a rough place; Oriental water-fronts are rougher, and the picture they make could never be called a pretty one. But it is full of gusto—the kind of reading that makes one's pulses thump. . . One would look a long while to find a better picture than this of the miscalled 'wooden men' who man the iron ships." W. H. Wells
+ Bookm 72:95 S '30 280w

"It labors under the disadvantage of having been written not by a sailor, but by two newspaper men. Like so many of their confreres when released from the hard discipline of the copy desk they overwrite; they put in too much bad philosophy and too little good reporting, and as a result they will inevitably be skipped pages at a time. But they know what they are talking about, for they shipped as ordinary seamen in an American freighter from Portland to the Far East and back. And out of the experience they got a rowdy book, sprinkled with some really exciting adventures."
— + Books p14 S 14 '30 250w

"At the heels of the flowery phrases intoned to the 'lure of the East' and that 'gray beast,' the North Pacific, inevitably yips a very small, very grimy cynicism. The adventures have to struggle to be adventures. . . In the literature of escape, count this one a foiled jail-break." Norman Matson
— N Y Evening Post p4d N 29 '30 200w

"The authors, unlike the average run of salt scribes, have more than an average familiarity with great literature and have, through the channel of quotation, made happy use of it in their whoppers. That they came back alive is in itself a miracle. That they have thrown light, and the more light the better, on how sailors live when on shore leave in Chinese, Japanese, and Russian ports is the whole truth. It is only a pity that they felt obliged to doctor their twenty-seven chapters with what happened to some of the convoys on the way to the World War and with the deeds of Dewey in Manila Bay." A. W. P.
+ — Outlook 156:28 S 3 '30 280w

MICHIGAN. UNIVERSITY. Dept. of Sociology. Study in undergraduate adjustment. 164p $2 Univ. of Chicago press [9s Cambridge univ. press]
371.8 Students 30-2752

"This is a very business-like report of an intensive scientific study of a limited group of students (about 200) by a cooperating company of investigators at the University of Michigan. Its most valuable feature is the development of a method of procedure in studying the intellectual, social and personality adjustments of undergraduates. Some of the findings are startling enough, but the author is not tempted into building a structure of remedial treatment, or even a general diagnosis, upon the observation of so small a number of cases. The present business is to create a technique by which further data may be secured and correlated."—Christian Century

Reviewed by E. B. Harper
Am J Soc 36:148 Jl '30 500w
Christian Century 47:437 Ap 2 '30 550w

MICHON, GEORGES. Franco-Russian alliance, 1891-1917; tr. by Norman Thomas. 340p $4.50 Macmillan [15s Allen, G.]

327.47 Russia—Foreign relations—France. France—Foreign relations—Russia [30-6207]

The origin and history of the Franco-Russian alliance is presented by the author as a perilous mistake, financially and politically, on the part of both powers. The author's discussion of the alliance covers its effect on Russian and French home and foreign policy, the Balkan war of 1912, the Russian revolution, and the World war.

Reviewed by S. B. Fay
Books p12 Je 1 '30 350w

"Not all of his interpretations can be accepted as entirely non-partisan and impersonal, but his array of facts, extracts from documents, go very far indeed toward compensating for his over-zealousness in attempting to prove a line of reasoning and to strengthen an argument for his theory of international administration. The bibliography is most comprehensive and a word of commendation for the excellence of the translation is also very much to the point." G. R. B. R.
+ — Boston Transcript p2 F 15 '30 550w

"M. Michon presses his points unsparingly, but his is the attack of a scholar, nevertheless, not that of the propagandist." Alexander Baltzly
+ Current Hist 31:1050 Mr '30 1000w

Reviewed by William MacDonald
Nation 130:428 Ap 9 '30 300w

"This book is well worth translating but requires to be read with great caution. It is a sweeping attack on the whole policy of the French alliance with Russia. The facts, so far as they are known, are set out with scrupulous honesty, but the inferences are sometimes rather forced."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1038 D 5 '29 230w

MID-WEST CONFERENCE ON CHARACTER DEVELOPMENT, CHICAGO, 1930. Child's emotions; proceedings of the Conference, Feb., 1930. 406p $2.50 Univ. of Chicago press [11s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

136.72 Child study. Emotions 30-22951

"The Mid-West Conference on Character Development, under the auspices of the Chicago Association for Child Study and Parent Education, was held in Chicago in February, 1930. The conference program was built up around the subject of the emotions of the child. Lectures on this subject and closely allied topics were presented by noted educators, psychologists, sociologists, social workers, and physicians. . . The emotional life of the child as it is affected by social institutions and relationships is treated, as well as emotional problems of children at different ages, different types of emotional experiences of children, and the problem of the parents and of the school with respect to the emotional life of the child."—El School J

Booklist 27:138 D '30

"This volume represents one of the most fruitful experiments of the year in conducting a conference, so that the findings would be of interest to those also who did not attend. This report will prove excellent source material for churches, parent teacher groups and all others who are interested in either a point of view or a method of conducting discussion groups." J. A. Jacobs
+ Christian Century 48:22 Ja 7 '31 480w

"The discussions represent the views of authorities in different fields, which, it should be remembered, were presented to an audience composed largely of laymen and not of scientists. Some of the addresses are highly scientific, while others are of a more popular style. Some are based on objective data, while others are based on subjective data. Some contain facts; some, opinions. The book as a whole, however, is adequately evaluated in the following words of Professor Faris: 'There is presented here a body of authoritative statements which will be a distinct contribution to the knowledge of every layman and ought to result in an attitude of scientific humility.'" L. O. Garber
+ El School J 31:230 N '30 650w
N Y Times p20 Ag 10 '30 380w
Sat R of Lit 7:59 Ag 16 '30 450w

MILAM, AVA BERTHA. Study of the student homes of China; with a foreword by Timothy Tingfang Lew. (Studies of the International inst. of Teachers college, Columbia university) 98p $1.50 Teachers college

309.1 China—Economic conditions. China—Social conditions 30-14496

Dean Milam's study of 1,270 Chinese families with students in college and other higher schools was undertaken in order to secure facts as a basis for organizing a department of home economics at Yenching university, Peking. Her report covers Chinese family organization, economic status, standards of living, and child life.

"The book is well worth having at present by the student of comparative cultures."
+ Am J Soc 36:345 S '30 100w

"The book is unreliable in many respects, and does not add anything to what we already know about China. Nevertheless, it will give a good deal of information to American readers unfamiliar with China, and if it stimulates the Chinese to make adequate investigations and to give instruction in such subjects as the prevention of disease in their schools, and arouses interest in home economics, the investigation was well worth making." J. K. Shryock
— + Ann Am Acad 153:405 N '30 400w

"A significant addition to our scanty fund of accurate, easily available information about home life in middle-class Chinese families."
+ J Home Econ 22:499 Je '30 60w

MILBURN, GEORGE, comp. Hobo's hornbook; a repertory for a gutter jongleur. 280p $3 Washburn

811.08 Ballads, American. Tramps—Poetry 30-30923

"Mr. Milburn has collected and printed nearly ninety tramp and hobo ballads. There is a distinction between these two classes, or groups, of floaters. The hobo is a migratory worker. The tramp, on the other hand, is the genuine 'knight of the road.' He does not soil his already soiled hands with toil. Mr. Milburn spent a good part of several years associating with the hoboes and the tramps for the express purpose of collecting their ballads . . . A musical arrangement is given for each piece."—N Y Times

"'The Hobo's Hornbook' is the most comprehensive collection of hobo songs so far assembled, and a great many of them have never been published before. This phase of American balladry has hitherto been neglected, chiefly, no doubt, because of the inaccessibility of its materials."
+ Books p2 Ag 31 '30 600w

"Although one can but admire the perseverance of the collector it cannot be said that 'The Hobo's Hornbook' is productive of any great amount of entertainment. The principal value of the book lies in its addition to authentic picaresque documents. Perhaps the preservation of these pieces is worth while. The tramp is far less ubiquitous than formerly, and the hobo, according to Milburn, is also a disappearing nomad." Percy Hutchison
+ — N Y Times p5 Je 8 '30 1400w
St Louis 28:215 S '30

"Here, in a scant three hundred pages, are gathered the songs of our proletarian tziganes; songs which, because of their gypsy-like character and phantom mobility, are almost inaccessible. Here are such little-known vagrants as 'The Wabash Cannonball,' 'The Big Rock Candy Mountains,' and the various 'Monika Songs.'

MILBURN, GEORGE, comp.—Continued
Such verses may lack beauty, but they are not without a brusque, open-air camaraderie. When Mr. Milburn errs it is on the side of catholicity. Thus a tear-yanker like 'The Face on the Barroom Floor' is not, strictly speaking, a hobo song, but a parlor recitation dear to the elocutionists of the Grover Cleveland epoch; 'Toledo Slim' has all the earmarks of the oopy room with the stigma of newspaper verse in every line; 'Away from Town' is an orthodox expression of 'poetic' wanderlust (complete with 'barren pavements,' 'limpid brooklets,' and 'country cheer') which happens to be the work of Harry Kemp." Louis Untermeyer
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:196 O 11 '30 1650w

"If you like hobo poetry this is as good as you can get. Music is furnished for sixteen of the songs, which adds greatly to the value of the book as most collections of hobo ballads are printed without music." Nels Anderson
+ Survey 64:45 O 1 '30 180w

MILLAY, EDNA ST VINCENT (MRS EUGEN JAN BOISSEVAIN) (NANCY BOYD, pseud.). Edna St. Vincent Millay's poems, selected for young people. 113p il $2.50 Harper
811 29-24228

Verses that were definitely written for children, such as From a very little sphinx, and the simpler lyrics that children or young people might enjoy, are included in the selection.

Booklist 26:208 F '30

"It was a happy inspiration which led to the making of this selection from Miss Millay's poems. The drawings and decorations by Joseph Paget-Fredericks represent an exceptional gift of interpretation by the artist, who has caught and reflected with remarkable skill and insight the indefinable beauty of Miss Millay's work."
+ Churchman 140:15 D 14 '29 100w
Cleveland Open Shelf p155 D '29
N Y Times p12 N 17 '29 80w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:14 F '30

"Readers who have known Miss Millay as a poet of achievement may be surprised to learn that among her verse is so much of interest to children. On the whole, the tone is more intelligent and the choice more pleasing than in many selections of poems for 'young readers.' An attractive feature of this selection, which ought to endear it to readers both old and young, is the illustrations in color and in black and white by Joseph Paget-Fredericks, a young artist whose designs for children's books seem to be much in vogue at present."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e D 1 '29 220w
Wis Lib Bul 25:416 D '29

MILLE, PIERRE. French novel; tr. from the
2 French by Elisabeth Abbott. 256p $2 (8s 6d) Lippincott
843.09 French fiction—History and criticism
30-31251

Writing from the premise that a great novel has always been one in which men and women appear as definite types, more real than reality, M. Mille discusses the work of Rousseau, Balzac, Stendhal, Flaubert, Maupassant, Loti, Anatole France, Bourget, Barrès, Romain Rolland, Proust, Gide, and, more briefly, that of the younger novelists such as Julian Green, Paul Morand and Maurois.

"To write a book about the French novel is an extremely difficult task pointing from the beginning to dryness and boredom, but M. Mille's commentary is readable and sparkling. This is due, in no small measure, to his humorous fancy and his personal, almost intimate, utterance. . . His little book moves along charmingly, almost persuasively. Persuasively, one may say, as far as the twentieth century. From there on his ideas become less convincing and his generalizations less scintillating, more irritating." Angel Flores
+ — Books p18 N 30 '30 850w

"Whoever turns to this bright, lively and wholly ingratiating monologue on the French novel for an ordered or authoritative treatment of the subject is doomed to a certain disappointment. In his preface M. Mille confides that the inspiration for his book came from Ford Madox Ford's similar causerie on the English novel several years ago. The tone of the two studies is very similar—the tone of an enthusiastic, informed but thoroughly unacademic observer of the novel's progress from its beginning to the present moment." William Troy
N Y Times p8 D 28 '30 550w

MILLEN, ELI MOFFATT. Bethel. 285p $2 Doubleday, Doran; Baptist S. S. bd.
29-27798

Bethel is the winning novel in the Christian Herald-Doubleday Doran competition for a novel interpreting the spirit and principles of Christianity. It is the story of a Kentucky mountain preacher who struggles to keep his church from the clutches of a millionaire landowner, and of the romance of his granddaughter and his neighbor's young heir.

Bookm 71:xxvii Mr '30 80w
Books p10 Ap 6 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p2 Ja 15 '30 320w

"A mediocre novel that has little more to offer than a certain faint flavor of life in the Kentucky hills." Edwin Seaver
— N Y Evening Post p9m D 7 '29 100w

"A saccharine, commonplace, poorly written and long-drawn-out little story, this prize novel is a sad commentary upon the quality of modern religious fiction."
— N Y Times p31 N 24 '29 470w

"It is a distressing thought that the judges could find no book that had at least an apprehension of the Gospels. The writing does nothing to redeem the matter. It is at once slovenly and pretentious."
— Sat R of Lit 6:741 F 15 '30 350w

MILLEN, GILMORE. Sweet man. 299p $2.50 Viking press [7s 6d Cassell]
30-16614

John Henry, son of a mulatto and a white man, grows up on a Southern cotton plantation, and early discovers that women cannot resist him. His marriage to an earnest brown girl, however, promises well until white treachery deprives him of payment for his cotton crop. John Henry, embittered, leaves his wife and wanders to wicked Beale Street in Memphis, and thence, loafing and gambling, to other towns. Women loved John Henry; some followed him. The climax to this "sweet man's" adventures, which end in tragedy, occurs when he accepts a job as chauffeur to Barbara Pennfield, a white woman in Los Angeles.

"The book might have been written by a Negro, so accurate it seems in the details of plantation, red-light district and prison, so eager it seems in sympathy and understanding of the black people. As a story it has a vigorous, keen thrust. It is only in its emotional recoil that you find what is perhaps an unfair emphasis on the helplessness of the Southern Negro." V. P. Ross
+ — Books p7 Je 8 '30 550w

"Mr. Millen may not have given us in 'Sweet Man' the epic of the negro, but he has given us a picture of a negro type that is compelling in its truthfulness. He has shown us in John Henry a negro who is in every way typical of the modern negro of today. The author understands thoroughly the innate feelings and the psychology of such a man, and has created in his titular character a living being who captures the reader's sympathy and affection with every act, every gesture. John Henry is indeed a triumph for Mr. Millen." E. H.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 9 '30 800w

" 'Sweet Man' is a good book, at times poignant, often exciting, for the most part artistically truthful, but viewed coolly and from a distance, it remains unimportant. It is without power. It is actually superficial. And the reason is to be found in the principal character, John Henry. Whether on the cotton plantation of his youth, in the army, as a sweet man on Beale Street, or as wandering laborer, gambler, lover, he remains of no consequence either as a representative figure for his people or as an individual. It is the things he does, the adventures he has that are interesting." F. T. Marsh

+ — Nation 131:101 Jl 23 '30 370w

"Gilmore Millen has painted an excellent picture of an irresponsible Negro, fundamentally and childishly good and trusting, doing things that brought him pain and unhappiness not because he was vicious but because he didn't know any way better than the first that opened to him. John Henry rings true and one finishes the book by liking him and feeling extremely sorry for him. . . One wishes that in spite of the nature of the central character the book were less sadistically erotic in spots."

+ — N Y Times p6 Je 15 '30 730w

"Millen has qualities as a writer which suggest that he will be heard from again. But his book is a story of low life, whether it deals with the cotton fields, the labor camps or the Memphis resorts, and the longer it lasts the lower it gets. The author may be realistic if he wishes, but a little subtlety would have been appreciated." Harry Hansen

— + N Y World p13 Je 18 '30 130w

"It takes courage of a high order to write a story like 'Sweet Man' and especially for a southern white man to do it. It treats courageously certain phases of Negro-white life as no novelist has yet had the courage to write. In two episodes Mr. Millen hints at what might happen, and many times has happened, in the south, but he does not quite have the temerity to do more than hint of these episodes, preferring instead to take John Henry away to Hollywood for that development. Such a criticism, however, is a minor one. 'Sweet Man' is strong meat, but only the squeamish will fail to enjoy the superbly told tale, and they will at least learn a good deal of what Negro low life can be in a Southern setting." Walter White

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1189 Jl 12 '30 650w

Springf'd Republican p9e Ag 17 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1016 N 27 '30 280w

MILLER, ALICE (DUER) (MRS HENRY WISE MILLER). Green isle. 299p $2 Dodd

30-24838

Linda's husband, Eugene, had become a degenerate thru drink. She no longer loved him, but her pity and her sense of duty would not let her break completely with him to marry Nicholas Watts, who loved her but despised her vacillating weakness. On a voyage by yacht to a tropical island the situation reaches a climax.

Bookm 72:vi N '30 80w

"Reserving a right to mistrust the temper of the tale, it takes you for a lively journey. The scenes you pass on the way are seductive, the people pleasantly familiar. Your fellow traveler, Linda, has the caprices, the contours, and the texture of the quick and the real, and can, therefore, hold your attention. You should not regret a trip through 'Green Isle.'" V. P. Ross

+ — Books p6 Ag 24 '30 650w

Boston Transcript p2 S 27 '30 280w

"The book is neither young nor mad. Herein probably lies its appeal. One feels that it has been written with eyes that have seen a little more than twenty-one years of 'life.' It is substantial, quiet and true."

+ N Y Times p7 S 7 '30 320w

"The eternal triangle loses something of its literary mossiness when Alice Duer Miller writes of Linda Fenwick, her husband, Eugene, and 'the other man,' Watts, in 'Green Isle.' The popular writer has escaped from mere routine and has produced a story dominated by three very real characters."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 14 '30 200w

MILLER, CATHERINE ATKINSON. Stunts of ^{3} all lands. 198p $1.50 Smith, R.R.

793 Amusements. Amateur theatricals. Entertainments 30-20343

Part one contains suggestions for short plays, pantomimes, etc. that can be prepared in a short time and presented at stunt night group affairs. Some of them are based on comedies or legends from Arabia, Germany, Hungary, Norway, Persia and Japan. Part two contains new ideas for parties, and new games to play at them.

Booklist 27:97 N '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:77 N '30

St Louis 28:267 N '30

MILLER, ELIZABETH CLEVELAND. Pran of Albania. 257p il $2 Doubleday, Doran

29-22133

Pran, as a member of the younger generation in Albania, is eager to shake off the old customs of her country, and wants to marry the boy of her choice. She rebels against the marriage her parents have arranged for her—but the story ends happily when she discovers that the chosen bridegroom is the lad she loves.

Booklist 26:125 D '29

Cleveland Open Shelf p131 N '29

Reviewed by Ruth Seinfel

N Y Evening Post p14m N 16 '29 40w

"The author is more than usually successful in presenting the atmosphere of a country. She writes of what she knows and loves and as a result she makes Albania very real to her readers and her characters are alive." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p24 Ja 19 '30 280w

St Louis 27:344 D '29

MILLER, FRANCIS PICKENS, and HILL, HELEN D. Giant of the western world; America and Europe in a north-Atlantic civilization. 308p $3 Morrow

327.73 United States—Relations (general) with Europe. Europe—Relations (general) with United States. United States— Civilization. Europe—Civilization 30-28725

The main theme of the book is the immense responsibilities which have fallen to the United States since the war. The authors discuss the problems involved in the relationship between America and European countries: Europe as market, playground, mission field, and sphere of investment and political entanglement; the political, economic and social consequences of American influence on Europe; and a prophecy or speculation as to the probable outcome of the present relationship.

"However one may judge the authors' conclusions, their book is a readable and provocative summary of this interplay of economic, political and cultural forces across the North Atlantic. It throws so penetrating a light upon our new international rôle that we could wish this country internationally-minded enough to make it a best seller." F. R. Dulles

+ Bookm 72:334 N '30 450w

"Intellectual acumen and moral courage shine in every page of the picture they have drawn for us. The position of predominance and power enjoyed by the United States in contemporary life is taken as a basis for an earnest, sincere and lofty investigation of the responsibilities which it entails. And a frank discussion leads to a bold conclusion which should arrest the attention of all American citizens worthy of their exceptional opportunities for good or ill in the present world. . . Their proposal is easily one of the most constructive put forward in recent years for the solution of the intricate problems of international life and a fit conclusion for a book which both in spirit and in treatment is worthy of the attention of all world citizens." Salvador de Madariaga

MILLER, F. P., and HILL, H. D.—Continued

+ Books p4 O 26 '30 1100w

Nation 131:741 D 31 '30 150w

"What Mr. and Mrs. Miller give us is a composite picture of the two sides of the Atlantic or, as they call it, the North-Atlantic area, as it has been shaped by the forces set loose by the war. Admirably placed themselves to be philosophic observers of this changing scene, sufficiently immersed in its business to be able to bring a sure touch to its description, yet not too deeply to have forfeited humor or candor or a sense of perspective, they have given us a book of subtle analysis and remorseless home truths which will interest and startle readers on both sides of the Atlantic, not to speak of the shuttle that runs beween them." Alfred Zimmern

+ Sat R of Lit 7:386 N 29 '30 1450w

MILLER, FRANCIS TREVELYAN. Byrd's great adventure; with the complete story of all polar explorations for one thousand years; with forewords by A. W. Greely and Henry Fairfield Osborn. 383p il $2 Winston [15s Paul, S.]

919.8 Arctic regions. Antarctic regions. Byrd, Richard Evelyn 30-13788

"A popular story of the historic struggles to reach the poles, the men who made them, and of Byrd's expedition to Antarctica. Many illustrations, including portraits of Byrd's party."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30

St Louis 28:217 S '30

"For all its pretentiousness and the flamboyancy of its style, this is a good popular history of Polar exploration. The chapters devoted to Byrd's achievements are actually the weakest in the book, but they are accurate and also up to date. It is in the condensed but vivid accounts of the expeditions in search of Franklin, of Greely's sufferings, of Peary's dash to the North Pole, and of the Southern expeditions of Shackleton and Scott that the book is most successful. It is a pity that more space is not devoted to the solid work accomplished by Stefansson."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p763 S 25 '30 180w

MILLER, GEORGE TASKER. Story-telling to live wire boys. 217p $2.50 Dutton

028.5 Story-telling 30-13983

A discussion of the art of story-telling in general, a study of the kinds of stories that appeal to boys of various ages, suggestions as to the acquisition of a story repertoire, and a bibliography containing lists of good stories and books that boys like. The book is especially adapted to the needs of Boy Scout leaders.

Booklist 26:379 Jl '30

J Home Econ 22:1018 D '30 30w

"A manual for scouts or any one with the duty of keeping crowds of bright uneasy boys spell-bound by stories; it goes into all details of technique and includes an unhackneyed list of good material."

+ Outlook 155:347 Jl 2 '30 50w

MILLER, HENRY WILLARD. Paris gun; the bombardment of Paris by the German long range guns and the great German offensives of 1918. 228p il $3.75 Cape [10s 6d Harrap]

940.4341 European war, 1914-1918—Campaigns—France. Germany—Army—Artillery 30-12977

"Of all the mysteries of the Great War that of the long-range gun with which the Germans bombarded Paris has had the least exact explanation. . . The title gives the impression that there was only one long-range gun but actually the Germans had eight or ten. Moreover, the guns did what they were intended to do—drop shells from a distance of seventy-five miles on the capital in order to create panic and apprehension. They worked from March until August, 1918. . . Col. Miller, recognizing that the gun was not only an important chapter in the history of artillery but also part of a thrilling tale, has made his book clear to the layman in every paragraph."—N Y World

Booklist 26:389 Jl '30

"Colonel Miller is something more than an engineer; he has a sense of the dramatic and knows how to keep the reader in suspense. . . His story is precise and sounds authoritative, though he does not cite a single authority in his text. He writes as a man who knows what he is talking about. But the bibliography, with its printers' pi of twisted German words, and the facts that he misspells Ludendorff's name throughout, assumes that Clemenceau was in office in the spring of 1917, and makes other slips in foreign names, raise questions." Lewis Gannett

+ — Books p5 F 9 '30 800w

"Grippingly related, and the details of the building, emplacement and operation of the German 'Big Berthas,' each as high as a ten-story building and weighing 200 tons, are of absorbing interest." Francis Snow

+ Current Hist 32:6 Ap '30 300w

New Statesman 35:742 S 20 '30 250w

"The story is told with a clarity and fidelity to detail which can be described only as enthralling. The excitement, the horror, the devastation in Paris; the excitement and tension and tragedy at the guns—all find a logical place in a narrative of great power and lucidity." T. J. C. Martyn

+ N Y Times p1 F 16 '30 1400w

"I do not disparage Col. Miller's account merely because there is something to be said for the proofreading. He has done a careful job of research; has brought together innumerable reports that have never been compiled in one book, and has provided us with a fascinating account of a war episode that we all know very little about." Harry Hansen

+ — N Y World p9m F 12 '30 1000w

Pratt p33 summer '30

St Louis 28:149 My '30

Spec 145:415 S 27 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p762 S 25 '30 220w

MILLIKAN, ROBERT ANDREWS. Science and the new civilization. 194p $2 (7s 6d) Scribner

504 Science—Addresses, essays, lectures. Civilization 30-6528

In these five essays Dr Millikan, a leading American physicist, makes a plea for science as the benefactor of modern life. He believes that scientific discoveries in so far as they affect this machine age are agencies of inestimable good in that they free civilization, step by step, from its ancient bondage. In his concluding essay, entitled Three great elements, he attempts to show that modern science is not inimical to man's religious beliefs.

Booklist 26:345 Je '30

"It is in the sympathetic approach of this eminent scientist to religious questions that this book will have its chief interest to many readers. Dr. Millikan is one of the large group of scientists today who affirm the validity and utility of religion. This is a refreshing book. I do not fully share the confidence Dr. Millikan expresses in the scientific trends of the time. But there is no scarcity of disillusionment and despair in the world today. A brave word from so authoritative a source is welcome." J. H. Holmes

+ Books p15 Mr 30 '30 520w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 1 '30 400w

"A series of lectures which make engaging and often stimulating reading. Dr. Millikan's views seem to be rather vague at times, but he endeavors to hold to the spiritual verities, as he conceives them, and while his theism is pantheistic, he is not guilty of the blasphemous declarations of some of our 'modern prophets.' He has a faith, such as it is, and an idealism which makes his book wholesome and Christian in its ethics."

+ — Cath World 132:250 N '30 180w

Christian Century 47:562 Ap 30 '30 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p56 Ap '30

"Although the book is a collection of various addresses, and therefore discursive in parts, there is an unmistakable air of authority about it; Millikan knows what he is talking about." B. A. Keen

+ Nature 126:267 Ag 23 '30 150w

"Dr. Millikan's anthropological knowledge is as muddled as his attitude toward literature. He conceives of an original state of bellicoseness, just as Hobbes did in his pre-scientific thinking, and he is apparently not aware of the peaceful character of neolithic civilization, with its growing domestication of animals and its conquest of agriculture. Plainly, Dr. Millikan either lacks the knowledge to make correct generalizations here, or he is willfully averse to the facts: in any event, he not merely fails as an exact thinker, exhibiting the precisions and delicacies of science; he fails as an ordinary critical mind. Dr. Erskine once wrote a book called 'The Moral Obligation to be Intelligent'; and one would at least press upon Dr. Millikan the notion that an exact scientist, above ordinary scholars and critics, has a moral obligation to be accurate." Lewis Mumford

— New Repub 63:348 Ag 6 '30 1400w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:25 Ap '30

"Dr. Millikan's modest collection of papers and addresses cannot help making one think of James Harvey Robinson's 'Humanization of Knowledge,' because, for one thing, the style in most of the chapters is beautifully simple, and because, for another thing, he really has humanized an important amount of knowledge." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p5 Mr 9 '30 1100w

Pratt p14 summer '30

Sat R 149:398 Mr 29 '30 200w

Springf'd Republican p10 Mr 14 '30 280w

Reviewed by Donald Richberg

Survey 64:324 Jl 1 '30 550w

Times [London] Lit Sup p617 Jl 31 '30 850w

MILLIN, SARAH GERTRUDE (LIEBSON) (MRS PHILIP MILLIN). Adam's Rest. 315p $2.50 Liveright

30-24041

In Adam's Rest, a small Capetown village, Miriam and Janet Lincoln grow up, marry, and have families and friends. Practical-minded Janet, married to an unsuccessful diamond-digger, has three clever sons—to Miriam's envy. Miriam, romantic and imaginative, calmly loves her husband, but she is exasperated by her pretty, slow-witted daughter Isabel. Beneath this story of Miriam's life runs the strong undercurrent of the relationships between the whites and the native Kaffirs—in particular the social and moral problems of intermarriage.

Booklist 27:161 D '30

"Adam's Rest, sincere and sympathetic as it is, inevitably induces, as have all Mrs. Millin's recent books, unfortunate comparisons with God's Stepchildren. It employs a somewhat similar South African provincial locale and is based (partially) on the same theme—miscegenation; but it lacks entirely the melodramatic power which won for the author's first book its sweeping and deserved popularity." C. P Fadiman

— + Bookm 72:69 S '30 450w

"In her latest novel Mrs. Millin shows greater depth and restraint than hitherto. She dissects her Miriam pitilessly enough in the early chapters . . . but she avoids the hammer-and-tongs vindictiveness against both the sensitive and the stupid which made 'An Artist in the Family' such an abominable book. She is not so well satisfied with a merely clever and oftentimes superficial analysis of emotion-stuffed figures." F. T. Marsh

+ Books p4 S 14 '30 800w

"'Adam's Rest' is not another 'God's Stepchildren,' but it is just as individual, and just as good as anything else Mrs. Millin has written. And that is saying a great deal for a modern novel." J. W. M.

+ Boston Transcript p1 S 13 '30 750w

"It is the material of this novel, and not its manner, which is unsatisfying. Mrs. Millin's style is still vigorous and explicit, her settings are as exotic and captivating as always. Actually, she has never done a better group portrait than this one of the half-breed Croft family, with her pathetic pride in their white blood. Certainly no one has brought to the tortuous question of miscegenation a more merciful sympathy or a more unflinching analysis than Mrs. Millin. In this, as always, she triumphs." Margaret Wallace

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d O 4 '30 500w

"'Adam's Rest' marks a new and not altogether successful departure for Sarah Gertrude Millin. For a novelist who is capable of 'The Coming of the Lord' to so limit her scope is rather distressing. In 'Adam's Rest' Mrs. Millin's material has betrayed her."

— + N Y Times p6 S 7 '30 550w

"Adam's Rest has a quiet irony pricking the pathos of the lives it describes. Although it does not surge across your consciousness to carry away emotions, it flows along with a certain life-like rhythm, a certain nice perspective, and a harmonious reality." V. P. R.

+ Outlook 156:108 S 17 '30 380w

"The book conveys the general impression that there is not much in anything, which may be true enough but lacks both novelty and entertainment value. Mrs. Millin's skill and thorough knowledge of her scene and people enable her to make more of the story than most writers could; but it could be wished that she had used her talent on a more engaging theme than the monotonous life of a placidly married woman."

— + Sat R of Lit 7:226 O 11 '30 500w

"'Adam's Rest' is another of those substantial understanding, leisurely, novels for which Mrs Millin is distinguished. There is another thing about her work. One has the feeling about her books that they are unique; had she not conceived and executed them, there would be no one else to produce them."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 14 '30 250w

Reviewed by Bruno Lasker

Survey 65:170 N 1 '30 550w

MILN, MRS LOUISE (JORDAN). Rice. 333p $2 Stokes [7s 6d Hodder]

30-9726

A story of mother love and sacrifice for an only daughter, and a tracing of that daughter's life thru many years. The background is China, and the characters are mainly Chinese peasants.

Booklist 26:358 Je '30

Bookm 71:x Ag '30 200w

"Mrs. Miln has knowledge of China and its people. She understands the yoke of their poverty and their silent, instinctive love of beauty. She makes no attempt to flavor her China with the tawdry quaintness which so often passes for reality in the Occident. 'Rice' is written with feeling in a garnished style with a rather heavy effort to escape the prosaic."

Books p12 Je 22 '30 300w

"The glamour of the picturesque patrician Chinese life transfusing other of her novels is entirely lacking in this. But its stark realism is even more compelling. Straight from Mrs.

MILN, LOUISE—Continued
Miln's understanding heart it comes. It grips the heart, this story, whose theme belongs to all ages, all races."
+ Boston Transcript p3 My 3 '30 180w
N Y Evening Post p8m Je 28 '30 100w

"Mrs. Miln has impregnated every page of her book with the spirit as well as the environs of the Chinese peasant. She has endeavored to impart to us the psychology of their slow peasant minds, their stolid, direct, beauty-loving natures. She writes with great sympathy and sincerity. Because her pathos is stern, unyielding, it escapes sentimentality. If her wordiness is sometimes tedious, if the story drags a little, we soon forget it in the absorbing reality of her China."
+ — N Y Times p24 My 11 '30 200w
Pratt p41 summer '30
Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 130w
Times [London] Lit Sup p481 Je 5 '30 150w

MILNE, ALAN ALEXANDER. Hums of Pooh; music by H. Fraser-Simson; decorations by Ernest H. Shepard; add. lyric by Eeyore. 67p il $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Methuen]

784 Children's songs 30-9841

Songs which Winnie the Pooh, Christopher Robin's beloved teddy bear, would hum during his marvelous adventures. Musical accompaniments are given.

Booklist 26:361 Je '30
Boston Transcript p4 N 12 '30 150w
Cleveland Open Shelf p89 Je '30

"H. Fraser-Simson, who has already identified himself with Mr. Milne in 'Songs from. . . Now we are six,' is quite in sympathy with the atmosphere demanded by Pooh's peculiar type of humor. He has made some melodies not too difficult for a child to sing with accompaniments that add dramatic interest. Then, Mr. Milne's notes of explanation any child would be sad to miss. E. H. Shepard has had the inspiration of creating the visual image of Pooh and his friends, and many of these well-known pictures, without which the Milne books would be shorn of much of their charm, adorn this present volume."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:964 Ap 19 '30 180w
Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 80w

MILNE, ALAN ALEXANDER. Those were the days. 887p $4 Dutton [7s 6d Methuen]

828 30-26185

A book of A. A. Milne's contributions to Punch, written in the years immediately preceding the War. The contributions consist of intimate essays and dialogues, sketches of familiar London characters, chats over the breakfast coffee, etc. The collection is divided into four volumes: The day's play, The holiday round, Once a week, and The sunny side.

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p9m D 7 '29 120w

"They simply cannot be described save in quantity. There must be 500 of them, and if you have the Punch habit you know what they are like." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p10m D 22 '29 300w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:25 Mr '30
St Louis 28:48 F '30

"For this sort of writing, those were indeed the days. Mr. Milne did not entirely originate the style which he made famous (and which made him famous) nor did it cease when he gave it up. But 'A. A. M.' of Punch (one never referred to him save by the full title) was, as it were, a lake into which streams flowed and out of which other streams flowed again. . . Those days have gone for ever. Few authors have been more fortunate than Mr. Milne in their relations with their time. His talents and his stage of development as a writer were precisely suited to those years and to that aspect of life, and when the scene had changed he had changed too." Edward Shanks
+ Sat R 148:451 O 19 '29 1450w

MILTON, GEORGE FORT. Age of hate; Andrew Johnson and the radicals. 787p il $5 Coward-McCann

973.81 Johnson, Andrew. United States—Politics and government. Reconstruction 30-31349

A sympathetic study of Andrew Johnson's character and political views is given in Mr Milton's historio-biographical presentation of the Johnsonian era. He studies and condemns the conspiracy of the radical group—Stevens, Sumner, Wade, Butler and Morgan—to overthrow the existing Constitution and establish an oligarchy; and applauds Johnson's conservative defense of the republic.

"It is based squarely on original material, and that large body of highly controversial material is handled with admirable skill and impartiality. While Mr. Milton's sympathies are obviously with Andrew Johnson, those sympathies neither blind him to the President's fatal infirmities of character nor lead him into such inconsidered vituperation as marred Stryker's biography. And Mr. Milton's style, if not as slashing and picturesque as Bower's, is fluent and dignified. . . It is Mr. Milton's chief contribution that more convincingly than any other historian he has presented the new interpretation of Reconstruction." H. S. Commager
+ Books p3 D 7 '30 1350w

"Mr. Milton's book opens a new window through which to look upon a most interesting —if discreditable—period of American history. Fascinating in substance, readable in style and carrying its own evidences of authority, it is worthy of the attention of all students of American politics." W. J. Abbot
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 D 20 '30 900w

"It is a solid work of nearly 800 pages, and shows on every page the results of meticulous, painstaking research and extraordinary care in supporting every statement and conclusion by authoritative and, wherever it exists, by official documentation. It is the last word on Johnson. With prodigious patience and diligent study of every book, record, speech and minute bearing on the life and experiences of the subject, the author has uncovered much new material and utilized fresh human documents of real historical value. The style is limpid and definite." G. W. O. O.
+ Current Hist 33:xv Ja '31 1100w

"Mr. Milton's book is the best biography of Andrew Johnson, and there have been several good biographies. . . It will remain one of the best works on the Reconstruction and a contribution of genuine value to American history." H. J. Eckenrode
+ N Y Evening Post p4d D 6 '30 650w

Reviewed by C. W. Thompson
N Y Times p4 N 30 '30 1950w

"In the work is embodied the substance of scrupulous scholarship, of research so thorough and exhaustive that specialists in its subject should quickly recognize the book's title to rank among the foremost studies of this era in American history to be published in our time." E. C. Beckwith
+ N Y World p3e D 28 '30 380w
Outlook 156:547 D 3 '30 550w

MIMS, EDWIN. Adventurous America; a study of contemporary life and thought. 304p $2.50 Scribner

917.3 United States—Intellectual life. American literature. United States—Civilization 29-22924

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:156 Ja '30

Boston Transcript p3 F 15 '30 320w
Cleveland Open Shelf p45 Mr '30
Int J Ethics 41:130 O '30 400w
Nation 130:336 Mr 19 '30 150w

"The author has a quality which Count Keyserling denies to most Americans—a sense of humour; and he does not take himself too seriously. His book is written from the standpoint of an American who believes in the future of his country, but Mr. Mims appreciates that it takes all sorts of people, along with a good deal of patience, good will and forbearance, to make a country. He covers, with less assurance but more tolerance and possibly also more information as distinct from 'intuition,' something of the same ground as Count Keyserling."
+ New Statesman 34:644 F 22 '30 200w
N Y Times p2 Jl 6 '30 1000w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:15 F '30
Pratt p32 summer '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:22 F '30 200w
St Louis 28:16 Ja '30

"A good, unpretentious commentary on contemporary American life from the standpoint of the academic observer well versed in traditional standards."
+ Sat R 149:169 F 8 '30 180w

"Professor Mims's main contention may be admitted, but the younger generation will probably feel that his real point of view is still mildly Victorian. He has not been through all their emotional reactions. His education in modernity broadened but did not revolutionize him. He has gone to school to modernity, but has scarcely lived it. His idealism is founded on the present, but it has reminiscent flavors." Arthur Colton
Sat R of Lit 6:839 Mr 22 '30 1150w
Spec 144:204 F 8 '30 260w
Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 23 '30 320w
Wis Lib Bul 26:40 Ja '30

MINNIGERODE, MEADE. Some mariners of France. 320p $3.50 Putnam

926.56 Seamen. France—Navy. France—History, Naval 30-18177

A history of French ships and sailors from the naval battle between the Venetes and Caesar in 56 B.C. to the end of the seventeenth century. The exploits of sailor kings and maritime princes are described, as well as adventures among pirates and privateers, and the last chapter contains an interesting account of the career of Jean Bart.

Booklist 27:157 D '30

"Mr. Minnigerode's book is splendidly conceived and planned. It touches on every phase of French history in relation to the sea; it contains a wealth of material, it is well balanced and admirably accurate and thorough. Which makes it all the greater pity that he has chosen to write the entire chronicle at the top of his voice, so to speak. Sentences without verbs, sentences built about present participles and linked together with monotonously repeated ands, make the reading of this book, intended for pleasure, something of a task. Only occasionally do living characters and real drama emerge from the language."
+ — Books p13 Je 29 '30 250w

"'Some Mariners of France' is a book not lacking in likable aspects. If it suggests something of machine manufacture the author at least knows how to keep his machine at high speed most of the time. The effect of the narrative would have been greatly heightened had old prints and drawings, now readily obtainable, been interspersed. And an index also should have been supplied. Why publishers will send out books in which are hundreds of names of men and places (and in this case also ships), with scores of dates, is a mystery of the trade. Granting that this book by Meade Minnigerode is historically sound, and he gives an imposing list of authorities, the lack of an index vastly curtails its value as a book of reference."
+ — N Y Times p11 Je 29 '30 1350w

"Information of the most stirring stories of the most picturesque sort crowd its pages. But Mr. Minnigerode tells what he knows in a style marred by the worst tricks of contemporary popular historico-biographical writing. And readers who like a simple, orderly style will probably share this reviewer's regret that so interesting a book should be so badly written." F. L. Robbins
+ — Outlook 155:224 Je 11 '30 280w
St Louis 28:244 O '30

"Perhaps a little less allusiveness and rather more chronological sequence would have made the book easier to read right through. Mr. Minnigerode's method is ornate and discursive, yet, taken individually, each chapter will be found to reveal wide learning and good craftsmanship."
— + Spec 145:362 S 13 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p594 Jl 17 '30 100w

MINOT, JOHN CLAIR, comp. Best animal stories I know; il. by Charles Livingston Bull and Harold Cue. 317p $2 Wilde

30-32304

Contents: The cat, by M. E. Wilkins; Big Reddy, strategist, by W. P. Eaton; Jackal of the deep, by Paul Annixter; My twenty-four-dollar toad, by D. L. Sharp; A wilderness mother, by Samuel Scoville, Jr.; The pope's mule, by Alphonse Daudet; The story of Verdun belle, by Alexander Woollcott; The wisdom of "Solomon," by Archibald Rutledge; The story of a red deer, by J. W. Fortescue; Rusty Jones's moose, by C. G. D. Roberts; The white mare, by H. E. Bates; A Leviathan, by Archibald Rutledge; The bear, by Desmond MacCarthy; Wolves and wolf tales, by W. J. Long; For the love of a man, by Jack London; The elephant remembers, by Edison Marshall; "Something," by A. P. Terhune.

Booklist 26:317 My '30

"He has selected stories as notable for their high literary quality as for the sympathetic understanding of the animal life they display. He is an animal lover himself, one who is able to appreciate the dumb but none the less eloquent expression of loyalty, fair play, truth and sincerity which are veritable characteristics of the 'beasts' we unjustly place on a lower plane than ourselves." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p3 O 19 '29 350w
Wis Lib Bul 25:413 D '29

MIOMANDRE, FRANCIS DE. Love life of Venus [La vie amoureuse de Vénus]; tr. from the French by Daniel P. Girard & Theodore Malcolm. 288p il $2.50 Brentano's

Venus (goddess) 30-7961

The life story of the Greek goddess of love.

"Except for a few purple passages, it is done with Gallic wit and irony together with a nice feeling for the old myths."
+ — Bookm 71:xxvii Ap '30 50w
Boston Transcript p2 My 7 '30 150w
N Y Times p6 Jl 20 '30 500w

"Miles away from the half-gods of Erskine, it has taken the subtle artistry of this Frenchman to touch with delicacy and bring to warm living flesh a goddess who at some time has held sway over all of us." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:590 Ap 9 '30 50w

MISCIATTELLI, PIERO. Mystics of Siena; English version by M. Peters-Roberts. 185p il $3 Appleton [10s 6d Heffer]

246 Siena. Christian art and symbolism. Saints—Art. Art—Siena. Mysticism 30-10036

As a help to the understanding of Sienese art of the fifteenth century and the religious

MISCIATTELLI, PIERO—Continued
idealism by which it was inspired, the book offers these studies of some of the saints that figure on Sienese frescoes—Giovanni Colombini, Catherine, Bernardino and Brandano.

"An engaging book that will appeal to many readers, and especially to those who have felt the charm of the Tuscan town which still on its three hills keeps the enchantment of an age forever gone."
+ Books p12 My 11 '30 220w

"From first to last it is most satisfying, most complete and most delightful in content as it is adequate in its scope." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p5 My 3 '30 1050w

"Small in size this work offers a rich and varied interest, and will amply repay the reader. The illustrations, excellent and quite happily chosen from contemporary paintings, reveal in a delightful way the habits and manners of the people of the brave little republic, whose art was ever as deeply religious as it was intensely civic." T. J. S.
+ Cath World 131:630 Ag '30 380w

Reviewed by Francis Birrell
Nation and Ath 46:436 D 21 '29 330w

"This book, with its twenty illustrations from old masters, frescoes, and works of devotion, is in itself a very slight affair. It attempts no analysis of what constitutes mysticism, nor of what differentiates the Sienese school from others. All the chapters are exceedingly brief, in fact, and one would gain a better impression of what distinguished the spiritual life of the devout Sienese from that prevalent elsewhere in Italy by a visit to the Sienese Room in the National Gallery, than from the artless and insufficient enthusiasm of these pages."
— New Statesman 34:478 Ja 18 '30 300w

N Y Times p8 S 28 '30 500w

St Louis 28:259 N '30

Sat R 148:785 D 28 '29 170w

"The author's understanding of mysticism is slight, but his eye for the picturesque is keen."
Spec 144:176 F 1 '30 70w

"The quotations and illustrations in which these mystical curiosities are perpetuated form not the least interesting feature of the book, which is competently translated and free from inaccuracies."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p164 F 27 '30 600w

MISCIATTELLI, PIERO. Savonarola; tr. by M. Peters-Roberts. 274p il $3 Appleton [10s 6d Heffer]

B or 92 Savonarola, Girolamo Maria Francesco Matteo 30-4733

A biography of the martyred Dominican friar, who is considered by the author to have been the last apostle of medieval Christian faith. Misciattelli's portrait of Savonarola differs from that drawn by a previous biographer, Villari, in that it mitigates the responsibility of Alexander VI for his death and places the blame on the Florentine faction of the Arrabbiati.

Booklist 27:62 O '30

Bookm 72:iv O '30 40w

"This is an honest and unpretentious version of the Savonarola 'story,' and the author's account of 'the events following Savonarola's death' makes, indeed, a useful and curious appendix to Villari's standard biography. On the other hand, Mr. Misciattelli has cast his book on an intellectual plane that is noticeably low, even judged by the average of the current tabloid biographies. For criticism and historical reconstruction Mr. Misciattelli has substituted certain inclinations and fondnesses of his own delicate—I will even say sweet—personality. This is one of the qualities of the book. One may or may not like Savonarola. One has to like Mr. Misciattelli." Arthur Livingstone
— + Books p7 Mr 2 '30 850w

Reviewed by G. R. B. Richards
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 15 '30 1200w

"In these stirring pages that grip the reader like a fascinating novel, Misciattelli draws for us a most striking and most authentic portrait." B. L. C.
+ Cath World 131:372 Je '30 500w

Reviewed by W. E. Garrison
Christian Century 47:433 Ap 2 '30 180w

Reviewed by Francis Birrell
Nation and Ath 46:436 D 21 '29 330w

"Savonarola has always been a stick for historians to beat each other with, a whetstone for every variety of axe. But all Signor Misciattelli has done is to find a new axe—his little book is just another piece of propaganda. Of course, his works are a tremendous success in Italy; he has just the right note of patronage for the Papacy, of glorification of the great Italian and of vilification of the riderless multitude."
— New Statesman 34:336 D 14 '29 550w

"In spite of the confusion of Savonarola's life and the entangling maze of political intrigue arising whenever Savonarola made a public appearance, Piero Misciattelli somehow manages to give us a clear picture of his hero. In this biography Savonarola is a mystic, poet, orator, realist and politican, with the attributes of greatness fatally disorganized and at war with one another. Given these characteristics it is impossible for Misciattelli's protagonist to be a dull hero, yet he never loses natural dignity and poise. Misciattelli views Savonarola's enemies with reasonable tolerance, which acts as a check upon a story that never seems quite real and always a trifle too violent to be taken with entire seriousness." Horace Gregory
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 8 '30 600w

"In this comparatively small volume the author encompasses much. He marshals his facts with authority and dramatic skill and the result is a vivid impression of a powerful personality and a turbulent period of corruption and splendor in the courts of Borgia, d'Este and the Medicis. The translation by M. Peter Roberts is entirely adequate, though one could wish that the poetry of Savonarola had been rendered with greater regard for its form. Paraphrased as it is, it loses much of its simple and moving beauty." Dino Ferrari
+ — N Y Times p11 F 23 '30 1650w

Reviewed by Bellamy Partridge
N Y World p10m F 16 '30 250w

"There should be enough mediocre to poor biographies in America to obviate the necessity of importing them. Misciattelli's volume is a matter of fact life history, written in commonplace popular style (possibly mishandled by the translator), relieved by excerpts from a few original papers, but offering the stimulus of no fresh impression of Savonarola, or of no old impression, freshly felt." F. L. Robbins
— Outlook 154:149 Ja 22 '30 130w

Sat R 148:785 D 28 '29 150w

"Frequent and tactfully chosen quotation of his prayers, sermons, and pamphlets is, indeed, the most illuminating part of the book, which, on the whole, is balanced, readable, and scholarly. Perhaps it is its very balance and the objectivity which relies so heavily upon quotation of the sources, which constitutes its weakness. The scholarship is all there, the knowledge of the subject and the period, but it remains unfused by any decisive power of interpretation."
— + Sat R of Lit 7:145 S 20 '30 550w

"Savonarola gives a vivid impressionistic picture of fifteenth-century Florence and its Prophet-Saint."
+ Spec 144:176 F 1 '30 130w

"Signor Misciattelli's biography of Savonarola is not intended for readers who expect fine scholarship, elaborate research or keen psychological insight, but rather for those who are satisfied with a simple, if somewhat unoriginal and unimaginative, account of an impressive figure and the sensational events of the time. Even so, the value of the work would have been enhanced by the addition of a very brief bibliography and of some considered account of Savonarola's writings."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p116 F 13 '30 800w
Wis Lib Bul 26:104 Mr '30

MITCHELL, MRS ALICE MILLER. Children and movies. 181p $2 Univ. of Chicago press [9s Cambridge univ. press]

791.4 Moving pictures—Moral and religious aspects. Child study 30-961

"A careful analysis of the movie habits of 10,052 Chicago children. The report indicates that all children attend the movies more or less frequently, and that the types of plays seen and enjoyed are usually too adult for younger audiences. There are many charts, graphs and tables besides the appendix containing the complete tabulation of findings."— Cleveland Open Shelf

Reviewed by Kimball Young
Am J Soc 36:306 S '30 650w
Reviewed by I. L. Peters
Ann Am Acad 149:sup207 My '30 400w
Booklist 26:227 Mr '30
Bookm 71:xiii Mr '30 140w
Cleveland Open Shelf p54 Ap '30
Reviewed by F. N. Freeman
El School J 30:636 Ap '30 350w

"Mrs. Miller's full and clear presentation of the facts she has collected and her discussion of them are wholly in the scientific spirit, objective, moved solely by the desire to dig out the truth about one of the most important social developments of the time."
+ N Y Times p13 Ja 12 '30 500w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:30 Ap '30
Pratt p25 summer '30
St Louis 28:75 Mr '30

"The material is presented with skill and interest."
+ Survey 63:732 Mr 15 '30 50w

MITCHELL, GLADYS. Mystery of a butcher's shop. 313p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Gollancz] 30-4241

A horrible murder was committed in a little English village. A neatly dissected headless human body was found hung on the meathooks of the village butcher shop. The local authorities thought they had solved the mystery more than once, but Mrs Bradley, a rather horrible elderly psychoanalyst, was the real sleuth.

Bookm 71:xxviii Ap '30 100w

"Miss Mitchell has done a neat job, suitable for persons who can do with some farcical proceedings while they are pondering upon the dismembered corpse." Will Cuppy
+ Books p14 Ap 6 '30 200w
Nation and Ath 46:sup226 N 9 '29 80w
N Y Times p20 Ap 6 '30 130w

"Irresistibly amusing, and a good detective story of the English country house school." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:350 F 26 '30 120w

"The story is written in a light vein, and the author pokes fun impartially at all her characters."
Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 170w
Times [London] Lit Sup p929 N 14 '29 200w

MITCHELL, WILLIAM. Skyways; a book on modern aeronautics. 314p il $3 Lippincott [21s Benn]

629.13 Aeronautics 30-19098

General Mitchell, commander of the air forces of the A.E.F. during the war, in this book surveys the aeronautical field today, together with a forecast for the future. He is especially interested in the commercial and military possibilities of aviation.

Booklist 27:144 D '30

"A complete yet not too technical, book on flying in all its phases. His lucid account of the amazing feats now possible is convincing and his experience as former Commander of the Air Forces gives his book the weight of authority. The reader who is swamped in his efforts to keep abreast with the times will find that this handy volume brings him up to yesterday's headlines."
+ Bookm 71:xxiii Ag '30 120w

"It has a lively interest; it has a certain charm. But the value of the book lies in the fact that it supplies perhaps the first really good picture of what the whole thing is about. The technical explanations are simple and understandable and the anecdotes are thrilling." Walter Millis
+ Books p10 Je 29 '30 550w
Cleveland Open Shelf p138 N '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:31 Jl '30

"It is not that Gen. Mitchell has anything new, novel or startling to offer, but the fact that his is a wide and understanding grasp of the actuality and the trend of modern aeronautics, and it is this that makes his book noteworthy. There are some objections to be made, a misunderstanding here and there of the science of physics, a not always clear literary style and occasionally a breach of what some people might call good taste. But when the book is viewed from the standpoint of its contents, the author's simple treatment of so vast and so complex a subject is commendable alike to the layman and the expert."
+ N Y Times p18 Je 1 '30 600w
Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 My 23 '30 620w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:77 N '30
Pratt p18 autumn '30
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:12 Jl '30 80w
St Louis 28:211 S '30

MITRANY, DAVID. Land & the peasant in Rumania; the war and agrarian reform (1917-21). (Carnegie endowment for int. peace. Division of economics and hist. Economic and social hist. of the world war. Rumanian ser.) 627p $5 Yale univ. press [20s Oxford]

333 European war, 1914-1918—Rumania. Land tenure—Rumania. Peasantry—Rumania. Agriculture—Rumania 30-25480

A detailed account of the agrarian reform effected in Rumania as a result of the World war. The first part is historical, treating the conditions of the Rumanian peasantry from the Middle ages, the political history of the land laws and the nature of the new land reform. The major part of the book is devoted to the application of the reform, its effects on the distribution of land property on production, on rural economy, and social and political conditions.

"This volume is one of the most comprehensive, able and well written that has appeared in recent years on any subject of its kind. . . Students of this field will hail this volume as a masterly piece of work, the orderly, intelligent and comprehensive presentation of essential data on a most important subject. It contains an extensive bibliography which emphasizes the wide scope of the work and the painstaking care with which the material was assembled." R. K. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 6 '30 650w
Foreign Affairs 9:171 O '30 280w
Times [London] Lit Sup p524 Je 26 '30 750w

MJOBERG, ERIC GEORG. Forest life and adventures in the Malay archipelago; tr. from the Swedish by A. Barwell. 201p pl $4 Morrow [12s 6d Allen, G.]

591.991 Malay archipelago. Zoology—Malay archipelago [30-28044]

Dr Mjöberg, the well-known Swedish naturalist who spent eight years exploring the tropical forests of Borneo, describes in this book the fauna and flora of the Malay islands. The volume is illustrated with many photographs of animal and plant life.

Books p21 O 19 '30 380w

"Dr. Mjoberg has written an outstanding book of exotic life, full of thrilling, exciting adventures, and yet giving the naturalist and scientist much valuable information. The reader comes to grips, in these pages, with wild, primitive, colorful, powerful, and death-dealing forms of life." R. K. M.

+ Boston Transcript p1 S 27 '30 500w

"Tropical leisure is achieved again with Dr. Mjöberg. His is a naturalist's account, attractively presented, of animal, tree, and plant life in Borneo and other Malay islands." Sylva Norman

+ Nation and Ath 47:90 Ap 19 '30 120w

"Among the Malayan fauna the Doctor has many remarkable species to describe, which he does simply and in short sentences, resisting almost every temptation to indulge in graphic description. This is a pity; a book in which the only imagination shown takes the form of mild humour, howsoever interesting it may be in itself, tends to leave no lasting impressions in the mind of the reader. The early travellers, returning with their highly-coloured tales of fabulous beasts and inconceivable native customs, had something to teach the majority of their present-day successors."

— + New Statesman 35:26 Ap 12 '30 180w

St Louis 28:292 D '30

"This book is admirably arranged, illustrated and printed, and is altogether very good value for its moderate price." J. S. Coltart

+ Sat R 149:395 Mr 29 '30 500w

Spec 145:473 O 4 '30 200w

MOE, LOUIS MARIA NIELS PEDER HALLING. Little bear-cub; and The dressed-up pig; picture tales for children. unp il $1 Coward-McCann

30-7747

Two stories for very little children. The first story of a little bear cub who was chased thru an exciting round of adventures by a bumble bee is entirely in pictures. The second story about a pig who dressed up in a farmer's clothes and went to market has pictures and explanatory text.

Booklist 26:361 Je '30

N Y Times p8 Mr 16 '30 50w

"This is a delightfully entertaining book for very young folk with its amusing and spirited illustrations recounting first the story of a little bear cub and then the adventures of a dressed up pig who remained a pig despite adopting the vestments of men. The first tale is told entirely by means of clever pen and ink drawings while the second has in addition to them a skeleton narrative, consisting of hardly more than captions."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:829 Mr 15 '30 100w

MOFFATT, JAMES. Day before yesterday; the Fondren lectures for 1929, delivered before Southern Methodist university, Dallas, Tex., April, 1929. 167p $2 Cokesbury press [5s Williams & Norgate]

204 Religion in literature. Literature, Modern—History and criticism 30-3775

By the day before yesterday Dr Moffatt means the period from 1860 to 1895. He analyzes the literature of that period for its attitude toward religion, and finds that the general cry was for a "third religion," which should take the place of Christianity. Some of the writers would substitute Nature for God; others professed to be guided by an instinctive faith. In his final chapter the author discusses some "fables of the faith."

"Professor Moffatt's wide reading in literature, no less than his ample but unparaded erudition in the more technical aspects of the history of religious and philosophical thought, enables him to move with ease in this alluring field." W. E. Garrison

+ Christian Century 47:592 My 7 '30 360w

St Louis 28:128 My '30

"With a resourcefulness which is evident in all that he undertakes Dr. Moffatt deals with the religious and philosophical tendencies of the period between the years 1860 and 1895, which, because it precedes the generation in which most of his readers were born, he calls 'The Day before Yesterday.'"

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p456 My 29 '30 550w

MOFFATT, JAMES. Love in the New Testament. 348p $3 Smith, R.R. [10s 6d Hodder]

171.1 Love (theology). Bible. New Testament—Criticism, interpretation, etc. 30-14585

"The main thesis in this volume is the idea that Christian love is essentially a religious rather than a social concept. The author discusses the meaning of the word in Jewish and pre-Christian sources before proceeding to his analysis of the New Testament itself. After this he deals with the teaching of Jesus in the synoptic gospels, Paulinism, the primitive church, and the Johannine interpretation."—Christian Century

"The position taken in the book is buttressed by a wealth of scholarship and an intimate familiarity with the text of the New Testament, which it would be difficult, if not impossible, to duplicate in any other present day treatment. Dr. Moffatt is so thoroughly familiar with his field that he almost disarms criticism. Certain it is that he has produced a work with which all students of Christian ethics will have to reckon. Orthodox interpreters of Christianity will find his book a veritable arsenal from which to draw material in their contest with ultra-liberals and Unitarians." F. D. Kershner

+ Christian Century 47:596 My 7 '30 1250w

"Dr. Moffatt's fine exposition of Christian love is to be welcomed as an impressive study of a vital element of Christianity about which every Christian ought to have a sound understanding."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p200 Mr 13 '30 650w

MOLEY, RAYMOND. Our criminal courts. 271p $3.50 Minton

343.73 Justice, Administration of. Criminal procedure. Jury. Courts—United States 30-23214

An essay on criminal justice as it is related to serious state offenses, with illustrations drawn from non-legal writings. Part one takes up the preliminaries to trial; part two, the long day in court; and part three, the public's interests vs. the public interest. Professor Moley has, during the past ten years, studied a number of crime problems at first hand.

Booklist 27:140 D '30

"Being familiar with nearly all of the recent crime surveys he has interesting figures and 'tendencies' to report. The book is not exactly in popular style, but any one who wishes to become acquainted with sound contemporary criticism of many of the processes of criminal justice—and to have the appropriate comment of a thorough student of the subject—will find Professor Moley's volume very useful." W. D. Lane

+ Books p4 S 21 '30 850w

Boston Transcript p2 S 27 '30 550w

New Repub 65:119 D 10 '30 80w

"It is not necessary to accept Professor Moley's general point of view—that our criminal courts have pretty generally broken down and are failing to render the service to society which they ought to contribute—to profit by reading his book. It is a good book, interesting, containing many thoughtful suggestions and filled with valuable information." R. H. Elder

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 30 '30 900w

"Into the heated whirlpool of current discussion of our criminal procedure, judicial processes, increase of crime, lessened confidence in courts, and so on, Raymond Moley's book comes with a singularly clarifying and assuring effect. That it does both clarify the situation and offer reassurance to those who are beginning to be dismayed by it is due to the author's clear, level-eyed manner of facing present conditions and the undisturbed, scientific attention he gives to them." F. F. Kelly
+ N Y Times p9 O 5 '30 1350w

Reviewed by Nels Anderson
Outlook 156:551 D 3 '30 280w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:80 N '30

St Louis 28:290 D '30

Reviewed by R. H. Abrams
Survey 65:230 N 15 '30 450w

MOLO, WALTER, ritter von. Brother Luther; tr. by Eric Sutton. 300p $2.50 Appleton [7s 6d Cobden-Sanderson]

Luther, Martin—Fiction 30-5936

"The book concerns Martin Luther, but it is a novel rather than a biography. It deals with those few historic days of the trial at Worms that did so much to change the history of Europe. The story is not so much about Luther himself as about the politico-ecclesiastical intrigue of which Luther was the central figure."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 27:29 S '30

"This novelized life of the great reformer by one of Germany's prominent literary men is neither good history nor convincing fancy. One wishes that the author, who really writes well, had a better grasp on his material and a little of his hero's subtlety."
— Bookm 71:xxvi Ap '30 100w

"The book is not uniform in quality. Parts of it are powerful, forceful, dramatic; much of it is amateurish."
+ — Boston Transcript p5 Ap 18 '30 280w

Reviewed by W. E. Garrison
Christian Century 47:786 Je 18 '30 200w

"It is a fine, vivid piece of historical writing, eminently readable." F. H. Martens
+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 17 '30 80w

N Y Times p9 My 25 '30 600w

Reviewed by Garrett Mattingly
Sat R of Lit 7:123 S 13 '30 700w

"The book pulsates with colour and passion. The splendour and squalor, the baseness and exaltation, the craft and the mysticism of the expiring Middle Ages rise out of the grave of the past at the author's urging. Herr von Molo is perhaps (with the exception of the Roman ecclesiastics) least successful in his central figure. But the spiritual force that streams from Herr von Molo's Luther at his highest moments is tremendous."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1026 D 5 '29 350w

MOLONY, JOHN CHARTRES. Savinelli. 255p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Methuen]
30-27686

"A charming story of Normandy and the alliance of the Rambaut family with the Lapeyrons. Subtly woven through the tale is the mission of Savinelli, a Corsican detective, whose racial tenacity brings him to a strange country in the performance of his duty."—Bookm

"Perhaps more important than the solution of the mystery is the author's remarkable understanding of the people of Normandy, their customs and habits and the background of the earth to which they are bound."
+ Bookm 72:x S '30 80w

"Beginning with several leisurely chapters of autobiography (of M. Lapeyron, the Parisian narrator), Mr. Molony takes sixty-five pages to reach the first mention of a main character—aside from his Corsican detective—and still more to sight a hint of trouble, all this making for 'preparation' of a kind and quality seldom encountered in mysteries. The means appears to justify the end, for the Tornelli case, when it does come off, seems realer than usual." Will Cuppy
+ Books p14 O 12 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p316 Ap 10 '30 450w

MONELLI, PAOLO. Toes up; a chronicle of gay and doleful adventures, of Alpini and mules and wine; tr. by Orlo Williams. 202p il $2.50 Harcourt

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives 30-24615

Signor Monelli, of the Alpini corps during the war, picturesquely chronicles their adventures, humorous as well as tragic, thru his diary entries made in the front line trenches.

Bookm 72:vii O '30 50w

Reviewed by Arthur Livingston
Books p22 O 26 '30 1150w

"It is fresher and more stimulating than the lifeless, chaotic nerviness of most war chronicling, and this is not only because the material is fresher. The diary form of the book is livened by a sensitive observation and a balanced judgment in the author." J. P.
+ Nation and Ath 47:sup192 My 10 '30 70w

"It is as effective a piece of war realism as any that has recently been produced." Eugene Lohrke
+ N Y Times p8 D 7 '30 250w

N Y World p3e N 9 '30 150w

"As good a war book as we have yet found. It deals with a theatre of which we have not grown tired; of ski platoons and glacier vedettes and snowstorms, as well as of bombs and blood; and even if we have vowed never to read another tale of frightfulness we should make an exception in this instance, for Signor Monelli is a writer of real distinction, and the people he interprets are too little known."
+ Spec 144:950 Je 7 '30 200w

"Monelli's 'Le Scarpe al Sole' is one of the two or three Italian War books by Italians which has qualities to commend it to a European public, and Mr. Orlo Williams has given us as good a translation of it as can be made. The picturesque touches of dialect, the Southern blasphemies, cannot be reproduced; some of the rhetorical description will not bear reproduction in another medium. But here is a picture not likely to be bettered of the mountain warfare in the Dolomites."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p335 Ap 17 '30 650w

MONFREID, HENRI DE. Pearls, arms and hashish; pages from the life of a Red sea navigator; coll. and written down with a foreword and conclusion by Ida Treat. 356p il $3.50 Coward-McCann [18s Gollancz]

B or 92 30-27965

The story of the adventures of Henri de Monfreid, a Frenchman turned Moslem, whom the English call the Wolf of the Sea. Known to the Arabs as Abd el Hai, this adventurer, smuggler and gentleman pirate has been sailing the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean for twenty years. The high points in M. Monfreid's narrative of his life, as told to Miss Treat, concern his career as a pearl-dealer, and, later, as a drug smuggler.

Bookm 72:xv N '30 100w

"Miss Treat has given us the most important contribution to the literature of rascality we

MONFREID, HENRI DE—Continued
have had in a quarter century. . . I take her to be not the reporter she claims she is, but a creative artist who, taking her subject at his most heroic aspects, has written and rewritten, hammered, shaped, filed and polished, and so made a sharp, firmly drawn picture of an interesting character." C. J. Finger

+ Books p10 N 9 '30 900w

Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 8 '30 120w

"The mass of intrigue, the inevitable bribery and backsheesh, the formal, shiftless politeness of the Arab . . . and the never ceasing comings and goings up and down and across the Red Sea, overburden this book with too great a wealth of detail. It does not lack colour, it is full of information which will interest everybody from the would-be pearl buyer to the politician. It is the record of a born navigator to whom adventure is the breath of life."

+ New Statesman 36:58 O 18 '30 550w

"Aside from its thrilling adventures his story is interesting because he has a keen and cultivated mind which is constantly in evidence throughout the narrative."

+ N Y Times p21 O 12 '30 400w

Reviewed by J. S. Coltart
Sat R 150:492 O 18 '30 380w

"This is by far the most satisfactory personal adventure narrative which has come to hand for a long while. Henri de Monfreid satisfies the most exacting reader. One is never for a moment suspicious that this amanuensis is crediting him with words he could not use or thoughts he would not entertain. The impression conveyed by Ida Treat's really superb rendering of the French sea-rover's story is that M. de Monfreid could write very well indeed if he thought it worth while, but that he expresses himself as a rule in other ways. . . We wait impatiently for the second book of the life of Abd el Hai. But he must write it himself. He is perfectly competent to do so." William McFee

+ Sat R of Lit 7:419 D 6 '30 500w

"The hero of Pearls, Arms and Hashish is very nearly but not quite, another Trader Horn. . . Certainly it is a book not to be missed."

+ Spec 145:557 O 18 '30 280w

"Miss Treat has told his adventurous story with the keenest appreciation of the romance in its strange setting; but with that she combines an instinctive distaste for what is false in the romantic: she always prefers to explain rather than to astound; and she shows a sure literary tact in introducing convincing detail in description and speech when the reader might otherwise be sceptical."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p726 S 18 '30 1000w

MONTAGUE, CHARLES EDWARD. Writer's notes on his trade. 254p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Chatto]

808 Authorship. Rhetoric 30-25545

Random essays on composition, appreciation and criticism, written in the intervals of other work by the well-known English author and journalist, who died in 1928.

Booklist 27:149 D '30

"Though unrevised, they are finished pieces of work, humorous, deft, and penetrating." A. R. Thompson

+ Bookm 72:198 O '30 220w

"To all these discussions on material and method he brings the brightness of a lively eye. . . But there was nothing dogmatic about Montague. He kept open house to bonafide travelers. He had his prejudices. The wall of taciturnity that hid regions in himself from his friends during his lifetime, is discernible also in this work as much as in any other. But he was no æsthetic snob, no 'literary gent.' Very definitely he was in the 'trade.'" V. S. P.

+ Christian Science Monitor p5 Jl 12 '30 700w

"This book is a fitting last book of a writer who recognized the seriousness of his trade. . . 'A Writer's Notes on his Trade,' besides telling us some very good things about writing, is also the best of accessories to one's reading. . . One of the most notable and delightful features of Montague's work is his abundance of illustration, both from his experience and his reading—the 'intensive' reading which he recommends in 'Quotation.' In these essays we continually come upon illuminating inspirations of criticism." James Thornton

+ Nation and Ath 46:735 Mr 1 '30 900w

"This volume will be welcome to all those who feel, as Montague so acutely felt, the tormenting joy of endeavouring to fit one's words exactly not only to one's meaning, but to some vision which will be lost unless it can, for a moment, be captured in syllables so ordered that they bear more than their natural weight."

New Statesman 34:672 Mr 1 '30 1000w

"There is an aroma, but it is delightful, of dusty books, and a melancholy glow. One feels a little homesickness for the world of things and people as words flow in to fill the room. Autumn is in the book, its spirit is elderly, deliberate and gentle, elegant in the true sense of that word, and humorous enough, the sly phrase murmured as one might say it in the deep hush of a library. He makes written words so important, alive, each one an ancient mystery, not wholly predictable in its behavior." Norman Matson

+ N Y Evening Post p12 S 27 '30 550w

Reviewed by E. L. Walton
N Y Times p11 O 19 '30 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:81 N '30

Reviewed by T. E. Welby
Sat R 149:230 F 22 '30 1400w

"Montague's essays on the problems of writing should find a wide welcome. They do not, however, go so deep into technical detail as Stevenson's 'Art of Writing,' or Sir William Watson's 'Pencraft.' They are written in an attractive style rich in happy metaphor and quotation, but were not revised by the author. . . The most outspoken of these essays are those that deal faithfully with the freakish art and writing of today. The title 'Doing Without Workmanship' is followed by some ludicrous examples of that skeletonic verse whose vogue is, perhaps, chiefly confined to America. The English sense of humour has pretty nearly laughed these bardlings out of court." Vernon Rendall

+ Sat R 149:658 My 24 '30 1100w

"Though he would probably have been the last to claim it, Mr. Montague is his own best example of what makes for distinguished style, for he represents that mastery of craftsmanship together with that hospitality of mind toward the unorthodox in usage that alone results in vigorous composition."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:81 Ag 30 '30 750w

Spec 144:sup373 Mr 8 '30 1200w

MONTAUTRE, YVONNE DUFOUR. See Dufour, Y., pseud.

MONTEFIORE, CLAUDE JOSEPH GOLDSMID. Rabbinic literature and Gospel teachings. 442p $5.50 (15s) Macmillan

226 Bible. New Testament. Gospels—Criticism, interpretation, etc. [30-31238]

"The book offers supplementary studies to Dr. Montefiore's work on the Synoptic Gospels [Book Review Digest, 1910], and makes up for the omission in that notable contribution to the study of the New Testament of all save a few parallels between the religious and ethical teaching of the Gospels and of the Rabbinical Literature. Three-quarters of the present volume are concerned with St. Matthew's Gospel, the second and third Gospels receiving comparatively slight treatment."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"A life time of patient and consecrated study is poured into the pages of this book. And more than that, an honest and a keen mind is stamped on every page. . . The student seeking an honest appraisal of rabbinic literature illustrative of gospel doctrine will find this book invaluable. He will find here much rabbinic material hitherto unavailable in English." B. D. Cohon

+ Christian Century 47:1491 D 3 '30 480w

"Dr. Montefiore has provided us with a book of sustained interest and of real value. . . As he puts down this instructive volume the reader will wish to acknowledge not only the learning and skill of the author, but the care with which he preserves a balanced judgment as between the Gospels and the Rabbinic literature."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p744 S 25 '30 1050w

MOODY, WILLIAM REVELL. D. L. Moody. 556p il $3.50 (15s) Macmillan

B or 92 Moody, Dwight Lyman 30-18035

A biography of the famous evangelist and founder of the Northfield schools and conferences, written by his eldest son.

Booklist 27:101 N '30

"Mr. W. R. Moody has entirely recast and rewritten the Life of his distinguished father written in 1900 and he has devoted a vast labor of research to investigating unpublished material, both that scattered through innumerable forgotten newspapers and that derived from private and personal sources such as letters and diaries." Gamaliel Bradford

+ Books p3 Jl 20 '30 1050w

Reviewed by T. C. Richards

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 26 '30 1900w

Christian Century 47:969 Ag 6 '30 200w

Reviewed by R. E. E. Harkness

Crozer Q 7:525 O '30 500w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p3 Jl 27 '30 1700w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:17 O '30 100w

St Louis 28:245 O '30

"Dr. Moody has done his job with excellent judgment and excellent taste. If times have changed and evangelical theology has to a considerable degree changed with them, he takes that fact for granted, without apology for old or argument for the new, and manages to maintain a nice balance between natural respect for his father and admiration for his father's work, and the critical detachment proper to the biographer of an extraordinary man." Elmer Davis

+ Sat R of Lit 7:102 S 6 '30 950w

"The author is not a biographer of the 'modern' school. He has not written an essay on evangelism, or psychoanalyzed his hero; nor has he indulged in extravagant eulogy. For the most part his facts speak for themselves, and they speak well."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 11 '30 680w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1024 D 4 '30 1050w

MOON, GRACE (PURDIE) (MRS CARL MOON). Missing Katchina; il. by Carl Moon. 286p $2 Doubleday, Doran

30-24140

The great Katchina of the rains which had kept bad fortune away from the little town on the mesa had disappeared, and so had Yazhe's old grandmother, the witch woman. Yazhe was sure her grandmother had not taken the Katchina, and so with Kawani, her stalwart, twelve-year-old friend, she set out to solve the mystery. The children had many adventures and found both the Katchina and the grandmother.

Booklist 27:109 N '30

"Mrs. Moon has spent much time among the Indians of the southwest, and always presents them with appreciative understanding. Yazhe is as delightful a little heroine as was 'Chi-Wee' and children of 10 or 12 will read her story with interest." A. L. Shea

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p12 Ag 23 '30 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p133 N '30

"Kiwani and Yazhe are not overdrawn but delightfully real and human, the incidents are well within a child's interest and comprehension and the book has the lovable quality of 'Chi-Wee, the story of a Little Indian Girl,' by the same author. Carl Moon's pictures have their usual charm and atmosphere." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p30 S 28 '30 180w

"As a story to interest children up to twelve years of age 'The Missing Katchina' is the best that Grace Moon has yet written and, although it follows somewhat the same pattern that her other adventure stories of the make-believe Indian children of the Southwestern deserts are built on, it is longer and better written. The illustrations were made by the writer's artist husband and are much better than those generally used in books about Indians, for Mr. Moon evidently knows Indians and their ways quite as well as does his wife." A. B. Applegate

+ Sat R of Lit 7:151 S 20 '30 380w

MOORE, EDWARD COLMAN. Forty years of [2] opera in Chicago. 430p il $5 Liveright

782 Chicago civic opera company. Opera—Chicago

Mr Moore, veteran music critic of the Chicago Tribune, begins this account of the history of grand opera in Chicago with the opening of the Auditorium in 1889 when Patti sang in Romeo and Juliet, and records performances given up to the first presentation of Aïda at the new Civic Opera House in 1929. The formative personalities in the history of Chicago opera: Samuel Insull, patron saint; Campanini, conductor; and Mary Garden, actress and director, receive special prominence in the book.

"It is a good source book, fairly bursting with famous names. There is some attempt at chronology, just for form's sake; but the anecdotes are the cream of the volume. Technical musical criticism is conspicuously absent. Moore has written his history in a purely sentimental fashion, with no apologies for frank, unadulterated enthusiasm. The style is simple, almost plain, very journalistic in character. It is a heartfelt tribute to a large American industrial center's interest in, and civic support of, one of the most difficult and expensive expressions of music." J. L. Greenspan

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d Ja 3 '31 850w

"Mr. Edward Moore, the veteran critic of the Chicago Tribune, has compiled a book which should find a place in every musical library. Mr. Moore is an expert journalist, and it seems rather a pity that he has not made even more of the wealth of material and the striking personalities he has had at his disposal."

+ — N Y Times p5 D 14 '30 550w

MOORE, JOHN C. Dixon's cubs. 279p $2 Houghton [7s 6d Dent]

[30-13123]

"The Cubs were the five children of Joseph Dixon, a widowed, fox-hunting Herefordshire farmer. He is killed by a fall from his horse, and a wicked uncle foreclosing on the mortgaged farm, the Cubs are thrown on the world. The characters of the five are distinguished strongly and consistently; Ralph, the simple-minded sportsman and good fellow; John, the priggish intellectual; Martin, the sneak and waster; Joan, prim and narrow; Marjorie, sweet-natured, brave and honest."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"John C. Moore manages, without belying human nature, to portray a very attractive family group during adolescence and early maturity and to place a minimum of emphasis on the love affairs of the principal characters. It is a book marked by that passionate love of the countryside which one often encounters in English novels. Indeed the background and atmosphere rather usurp the leading place, staying agreeably in the mind after the story and the characters have become nebulous memories." Guy Holt

MOORE, J. C.—Continued
+ Bookm 72:338 N '30 120w

"Here is a really fine novel, a vivid picture of life in the English hunting shires before the war, and an equally appealing description of England after the Armistice, with the shadow of change hanging over her, and of the difficulties faced by those who went into the ranks as lads and returned as grown men, to find a land so changed from the country they had left that they could hardly believe it to be the same England they had fought for during those four dreary years." G. B.
+ Boston Transcript p3 O 1 '30 600w
N Y Times p22 O 5 '30 250w

"This first novel has some very promising writing in it. Mr. Moore has some passages of poignant beauty. The characters, too, are individual and interesting. But the writing is sometimes a little heavy, and misses its effect by calling for it too loudly."
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:274 O 25 '30 350w

"The background to the action, the Hereford landscape, touches of country sights and sounds, the sketches of horses and dogs, the large part played by fox-hunting in the picture, are all excellently done."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p396 My 8 '30 220w

MOORE, OLIVE. Repentance at leisure. 314p $2 Harper
30-25156

At her home on a Mediterranean island near Capri, an English woman gives birth to an unwanted child. The child is born deformed physically and mentally. For twenty years Ruth lives in the strange, pagan solitude of the island, lost in her thoughts, before her final return to England. The story is subjectively unfolded thru the stream-of-consciousness method.

"Despite the author's seeming intent to be devious and occasionally incoherent, her natural precision of thought shines through. . . The unlikelihood of the premises on which the tale is built becomes unimportant, curiously enough, lost in the reality of the knife-edged contrast it presents."
+ — Books p17 O 12 '30 370w

"An unusual first novel, employing a lovely prose, a distinctive style and an individual form." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 250w

"As a first novel this one enjoys the advantage of originality. In structure it is of the school of consciousness containing only a modicum of dialogue and having as its purpose the unfolding of the spiritual and mental experiences of a strange and unhappy life. . . Altogether a book that is distinctly a woman's work and one that allures by reason of its intensity and mordant description."
N Y Times p6 N 2 '30 450w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p3e N 16 '30 150w

"There is nothing amateurish about it, nor, as the publisher truly points out, any uncertainty in the technique. The author, on the contrary, seems to be absolutely confident of what she wants to do and does it without a faltering step."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:475 D 20 '30 380w

MOORE, THOMAS EWING. Peter's city; an account of the origin, development and solution of the Roman question. 284p il $4 Macmillan [12s 6d Harding & More]
262.132 Roman question. Concordat of 1929. Vatican (city). Church and state in Italy
[30-13693]

"A survey of the Lateran Treaty rich in praise of Mussolini but written from the Vatican standpoint. An introductory chapter traces the history of the Roman question from Napoleonic times onwards."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Books p13 Ag 31 '30 100w

"The valuable part of the book is its detailed record of the negotiations leading up to the recent treaty and concordat and its reprinting of all the important official documents in that connection. But even the account of these recent events would be improved by the addition of some discussion of the origin and development of the idea of a 'small state,' which ultimately opened the way to the solution of the problem."
+ — Christian Century 48:28 Ja 7 '31 200w

"Mr. Moore produces a spirited and graphic narrative firmly grounded on documents and developed through an observing eye by the events he actually witnessed. His equipment as historian is not stressed, but appears rather incidental to his rather fine gift as a graphic, at times epic, narrator, while his deductions, sparingly indulged in, seem both reasonable and just." Walter Littlefield
+ N Y Times p3 Ag 17 '30 600w

Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 155:631 Ag 20 '30 120w
St Louis 28:259 N '30

"Its onesidedness is unredeemed by accuracy in matters of fact."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p771 O 3 '29 200w

MOORHEAD, ELIZABETH. See Vermorcken, E.

MORA, FERENC. Song of the wheatfields; tr. from the Hungarian by George Halasz. 283p $2.50 Brewer
30-30230

A novel of life among the peasants of Hungary during and after the World war. Like Hamsun, Ferenc Móra deals with the peasant's love for his land, his cultural isolation, and his instinctive distrust of new ideas and the ways of strangers and outsiders. The story itself tells of the love of the peasant Ferenc's wife for a Russian prisoner of war; and the marriage of the peasant Mátyás's daughter to Ferenc before her discovery that her first husband is still living.

"In disposition Mr. Móra is not unlike our own Heywood Broun. He is a gentle progressive and he likes to make as many good natured jokes as possible. Above all, he likes to fill his mouth with proverbs. His pleasant peasantries, or his peasant pleasantries, since they deal with such engaging material, are on the whole delightful." Gerald Sykes
+ Books p16 D 7 '30 450w
Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '30 400w

"Mora is considered to be the outstanding novelist in Hungary today. His book gives a vivid picture of the soil and its people and of the changes the war brought about in Hungary." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 29 '30 100w

"It is unfortunate that a novel with such a rare and spicy flavor should be forced to take the measure of it value from other great epics of the soil and of peasant life. Comparisons with Hamsun and Reymont, though they are as inevitable as the measuring of each new war book with the greatest of those that have preceded it, need not damage the reputation of Móra in his own sphere."
+ N Y Times p31 N 16 '30 650w

MORAND, PAUL. New York [tr. by Hamish Miles]. 322p il $2.50 Holt
917.471 New York (city)—Description
30-31141

New York as an intelligent Frenchman sees it. Mr Morand gives, in frank and shrewd detail, his impressions of life in Manhattan: he admires our skyscrapers, bridges, automats, theatres, movies and the bright lights of Broadway; he deplores our speakeasies, noise, public parks, Harlem, and Sing Sing's electric chair. Probably his predominant impression is expressed in the phrase, "Everything is cheerful, yet terrible."

"M. Morand's New York is astonishingly welcome in that it is not a series of coruscations. To read it is to have a justly balanced impression of the city as a workaday place, with its historic evidences and its earnestnesses. The fires of its 'night-life' blaze—but only after dark—as if from an immense pyre, the beacon on top of a vast skyscraper; but they remain at the top of the pyre and do not threaten the destruction of the civilization below. . . It is that image of corruption—for there is no image so corrupting as that of too easily gained fortune squandered in too ignoble indulgences—that, in vulgar minds, New York presents of herself to the world. And it is because M. Morand's book is admirably corrective of those impressions—because of that, if for nothing else, we should be grateful to him." F. M. Ford

+ Books p1 N 9 '30 2200w

Boston Transcript p3 D 20 '30 180w

"Humor is found all through the pages. But dashing description and humor are not all. Here and there are found observations which reveal penetrating insight. In some things he understands New York and Americans better than we understand ourselves." E. B. Chaffee

+ Christian Century 48:25 Ja 7 '31 850w

"This is an effervescent book, never pedestrian, frequently witty, and always alive."

+ N Y Times p2 N 9 '30 650w

"Morand is an observing author, he has asked countless questions and absorbed much information. His conclusions are not important. He shows that he is primarily a writer of impressions, not a thinker. It is exhilarating to read a catalog of New York's activities, written down by a man who keeps up a breathless pace cross town, up and down the avenues and through the corridors of hotels, who is always stimulated, never relaxed. It flatters us. But foreigners get a confused idea of us." Harry Hansen

— + N Y World p3e N 30 '30 380w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 156:470 N 19 '30 80w

"The talent for assimilation, which has always been M. Morand's chief charm, as well as the great obstacle to his chance of writing anything lasting, is in this book ideally employed. Both the native and the passenger on an incoming liner may find things in his book which will bring the life of the city nearer and render it more understandable. In any case, M. Morand's interest in America is liable to repay both himself and the casual reader of his deceptively facile but extremely clever book." Theodore Purdy, Jr.

+ Sat R of Lit 6:876 Mr 26 '30 500w

"In spite of its tone, which is sometimes apt to deviate uncertainly between cataloguing in the guide-book manner and painting impressionistic pictures of New York life, it contains so much that is accurate, new, and admirably set down about this most remarkable of modern cities that almost anyone, whether a native or not, will read it with pleasure." Theodore Purdy, Jr.

+ Sat R of Lit 7:504 Ja 3 '31 380w

MORDAUNT, ELINOR, pseud. See Wiehe, E. M

MORESBY, LOUIS, pseud. See Beck, L.

MORGAN, ANGELA. Creator man. 233p $2.50 Dodd

811 29-27942

Lyrics with modern themes, expressed in conventional rhyme and rhythm, presented from a moral and emotional rather than an intellectual viewpoint.

"Sincerity shines from every line of Angela Morgan's work. It is at times the eager, feverish sincerity of the reformer; it is at other times serene and unruffled as the sincerity of the reformed. Technically, Miss Morgan shows an unhappy choice of verse forms for her subject matter. . . It is only with the lofty spirit and the great earnestness of Miss Morgan's work that one can feel at all in harmony. And with that one is left sympathetic rather than enthusiastic." P. E. R.

— + Boston Transcript p4 Mr 29 '30 550w

Cath World 131:754 S '30 280w

Cleveland Open Shelf p92 Je '30

"There is a high sincerity in all of Angela Morgan's lines; an animating desire that lives should be more rich, more varied, more filled with beauty. It is undeniably true that the work as a whole suffers from its diffuseness."

+ — N Y Times p14 F 23 '30 200w

MORGAN, ANN HAVEN. Field book of ponds and streams; an introd. to the life of fresh water. (Putnam's nature field bks.) 448p il $3.50 Putnam

591.92 Fresh-water fauna. Fresh-water flora 30-21741

An introduction to the study of common fresh water plants and animals, their habits, and their homes in the brooks, ponds or native mud.

Booklist 27:96 N '30

Books p15 Ag 31 '30 130w

"Miss Morgan, who is professor of zo-ology at Mount Holyoke College, has not only done her work thoroughly and well—but in a fascinating, engaging way that makes you anxious for vacation to explore the hitherto unknown regions which are all about one. The hundreds of line cuts, the illustrations in black and white and in color add much to the value and clarity of the work."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 23 '30 230w

N Y Times p19 Ag 17 '30 280w

St Louis 28:263 N '30

"The interest in keeping aquaria and studying the simpler forms of life which abound in fresh water should be greatly stimulated by this book, and with this should be increased the appreciation of the value of our streams and ponds, as places of recreation and beauty if not ruined by pollution by sewage and industrial wastes."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:184 O 4 '30 150w

"It is pioneering in a fascinating field not hitherto opened up to the amateurs and should be appreciated in this well-watered region, with its lakes, ponds, 'shallow brooks and rivers wide.' Many a boy and girl with the aid of this clear and delightful guide could spend the summer of their lives discovering an almost unknown universe in miniature that lies at their very doors."

+ Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 3 '30 400w

MORGAN, CHARLOTTE ELIZABETH. Origin [2] and history of the New York employing printers' association; the evolution of a trade association. (Columbia univ. studies in hist., economics and public law) 139p $2.25 Columbia univ. press

655.17 New York employing printers' association, inc. Printing—History. Printing—Societies 30-22560

"The oldest trade association of employers is the New York Typothetae. To trace its origin to the various groups of pre-Civil War days, to note the influence of such men as Horace Greeley, Theodore L. DeVinne and Charles Francis, to follow its struggles, its shifting interests, its mergers, to its final evolution into the progressive New York Employing Printers Association, is the purpose of this monograph." Publisher's note

"To the scanty literature on local employers' associations this well-written little book is an addition that is none the less welcome because of the light which it incidentally throws upon the genesis of national associations. . . The treatment is systematic and well organized; there is an appendix containing sections from two collective agreements now in force, and a competent bibliography." W. T. Ham

MORGAN, C. E.—Continued
+ Am Econ R 20:739 D '30 550w

"The monograph is of value to those concerned with the employer and his problems. Trade associations of employers receive as a rule very little attention."
+ N Y Times p17 Jl 13 '30 280w

MORGAN, CONWY LLOYD. Mind at the crossways. 275p $3.75 Holt [10s 6d Williams & Norgate]

122 Philosophy, Modern. Mind and body [30-12768]

"The title of this work might mislead one into supposing that Professor Morgan's purpose was to portray mind at a crucial point in its evolution just ready to develop some new emergent character, the outcome being as yet uncertain. What he appears to essay, however, is a general philosophy of mind on the basis of the doctrine of emergent evolution, together with a resolution of the conflict between the scientific and the religious (or the teleological) points of view."—Int J Ethics

Cleveland Open Shelf p70 My '30
Reviewed by E. W. Hall
Int J Ethics 41:118 O '30 550w
St Louis 28:201 S '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p602 Jl 24 '30 950w

"Professor Morgan works out his thesis with exquisite skill. He introduces a number of new and pregnant distinctions, which if left to themselves would beg his questions but which, thanks to his careful definitions, render the elements of his thought exact and clear. Yet the reader may be in some doubt as to his actual accomplishment. There is a certain vagueness with regard to agency and the distinction between this and effective relations." W. W. Spencer
+ — Yale R n s 20:181 autumn '30 450w

MORGAN, JAMES. Birth of the American people. 335p il $2.50 Macmillan

973.2 United States—History—Colonial period. United States—History—Revolution 30-16383

A condensed and readable history of the colonizing of America, the growth of national feeling, and the revolt of the thirteen colonies that culminated in the American revolution.

Boston Transcript p1 Ag 16 '30 600w

"A notably clear, succinct and picturesque account of the whole genetic operation, from Vineland to Yorktown. The general reader cannot help but enjoy it, for it is anything but a dry medical report." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 5 '30 50w
St Louis 28:219 S '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p786 O 2 '30 220w

MORGAN, JUNIUS S.; MCKENZIE, KENNETH; and OSGOOD, CHARLES GROSVENOR. Tradition of Virgil; three papers on the history and influence of the poet. 40p $2 Princeton univ. press [9s Oxford]

873.1 Virgil (Publius Virgilius Maro)

"The volume consists of three papers read at a commemorative meeting last year. Mr. Morgan gives a concise but very thorough history of the text of Virgil in manuscript and type; Mr. McKenzie writes on Virgil and Dante—a relation unique in literature, considering the stature of the two; and Mr. Osgood argues that 'Virgil's genius exhibits a strange (and exceptional) affinity with that of far-off Britain.' "—Sat R of Lit

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 30 '30 700w
Reviewed by B. L. Ullman
Class Philol 25:406 O '30 200w
Sat R of Lit 7:91 Ag 30 '30 120w
Times [London] Lit Sup p654 Ag 14 '30 150w

MORISON, FRANK. Who moved the stone? 294p $2.50 Century [7s 6d; 6s Faber]

232.97 Jesus Christ—Resurrection 30-11395

The resurrection of Christ discussed as a practical mystery rather than as the miracle of superhuman character represented in the Scriptures. The author bases his theories concerning the removal of Christ's body from the tomb, the discovery of the empty tomb by the women at dawn, and the presence in the tomb of a white-robed young man, upon considerable research into the subject and the nature of the evidence. While Mr Morison believes that this youth was an actual eye-witness to what really happened, he does not, after all, definitely answer the question, Who moved the stone?

Booklist 26:380 Jl '30

"This is a rare book. It illuminates the central mystery of existence. He is not to be envied who can read it without a thrill. For those who have not beforehand committed themselves to a refusal to believe, it kindles a beacon of eternal hope." Howard Duffield
+ Bookm 71:469 Jl '30 550w
Books p15 S 21 '30 200w
Boston Transcript p3 Je 18 '30 600w
Reviewed by D. C. Smith
Christian Century 47:1087 S 10 '30 350w
Reviewed by Leonard Hodgson
Living Church 83:671 S 13 '30 350w

"It cannot be said that Mr. Morison—earnest and ingenious as his writing is—does much to help us. The best of the book, indeed, is comprised in Chapters II.-V., occupying rather less than a third of the whole, in which the author gives us a very learned and admirable account of the trial and crucifixion. But as the work proceeds, it becomes vague and unconvincing, and towards the end, in spite of the forcibleness of the style, we begin to wonder whether the author himself has formed any clear idea as to what really happened during the forty days of which he writes." P. M.
— Nation and Ath 46:768 Mr 8 '30 1050w
Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 26 '30 80w
New Statesman 35:54 Ap 19 '30 900w
Reviewed by Uffington Valentine
N Y Times p24 My 25 '30 450w

"The most searching survey of the evidence for the resurrection we have ever seen. He has given years to the study and he sifts the evidence bit by bit and follows the clues with all the acuteness of a master detective." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 155:191 Je 4 '30 130w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:74 O '30
St Louis 28:203 S '30

"Mr. Morison's treatment of his subject is refreshing, not to say fascinating. . . Probably no more useful and helpful volume than this has been written on the historical problem of the Resurrection, and it will be of use to men of all schools of thought."
+ Sat R 149:398 Mr 29 '30 250w

"The book is a competent, dignified, and helpful piece of work. Mr. Morison has made a popular, but scholarly restatement of the results of critical study of the extant records of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. He has done for this what Lord Charnwood did for the Gospel of St. John, made a book for the man in the street, who wants the results of criticism—sound and modern—without puzzling critical apparatus and terminology." B. I. Bell

+ Sat R of Lit 6:984 Ap 26 '30 520w

"[The author's] suggestions are in their nature unprovable; but no one who reads this book with attention will feel that they are to be lightly dismissed. Even if it be only considered as a brilliant exercise of the historic imagination, Mr. Morison's work is of absorbing interest; but beyond this, it has a claim to be considered as a serious attempt towards solving one of the deepest mysteries alike of history and of faith." Evelyn Underhill
+ Spec 144:670 Ap 19 '30 770w

"The author offers us an able and closely woven discussion, though it will not be altogether convincing to many of his readers. Not a few will share his conviction in the reality of the resurrection and the essential accuracy of the women's report on the morning of the first Easter Day, but will refuse to accept many of his hypotheses."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p279 Mr 27 '30 400w

MORISON, SAMUEL ELIOT. Builders of the Bay Colony. 365p il $5 Houghton [21s Oxford]
920 Massachusetts—History—Colonial period. Massachusetts—Biography. Puritans
A30-1055

This study is developed from the lectures given by Professor Morison of Harvard before the Lowell institute, on the occasion of the approaching tercentenary of the Massachusetts Bay colony. The characters whom he has chosen from the first generation as representing various aspects of life in the first fifty years of the colony and exemplifying the Puritan spirit are: John White, of Dorchester; Governor Winthrop, statesman; Thomas Shepard, pastor; John Hull of Boston, goldsmith; Henry Dunster, president of Harvard; Nathaniel Ward, lawmaker and wit; Robert Child, political liberal; John Winthrop, the younger, industrial pioneer; John Eliot, apostle to the Indians; and Mistress Anne Bradstreet, poet.

"These sketches are valuable as clever and penetrating studies of the thoughts and actions of the Puritans, but they contain much more. Many details of the manner of life of these early colonists are included in the contributions to our knowledge of early economic enterprise are noteworthy." R. F. Nichols
+ Ann Am Acad 152:415 N '30 230w
Booklist 27:102 N '30

Reviewed by D. L. Mann
Bookm 72:93 S '30 400w

"This luminous, eloquent and scholarly study is an attempt to recapture something of the elusive spiritual and intellectual qualities of Puritanism, and to recreate for us some of the men and women who shadowed these qualities forth in their lives and their thoughts. . . Few historians of our generation combine with erudition and catholicity of learning a style so gracious, pungent and luminous as Professor Morison. 'Builders of the Bay Colony' is a worthy successor to 'Harrison Gray Otis' and the 'Maritime History of Massachusetts.' If it lacks something of the saltiness and hard brilliance of the 'Maritime History,' it added depth and serenity. It possesses a dignity and integrity entirely worthy of its theme." H. S. Commager
+ Books p1 Je 1 '30 1800w

"Dr. Morison's very fine effort bids fair to go down as the historical survey which, perhaps, will most completely justify itself in our Tercentenary literature. . . This book deserves high praise and no higher can be given than to say that through the medium of ten great leaders the author has drawn the Puritan spirit with completeness." S. L. Cook
+ Boston Transcript p2 My 31 '30 1700w

Cath World 132:499 Ja '31 500w

"A substantial, valuable and illuminating work about the building, rather than the builders, of the Bay Colony. It is all the more illuminating, because the writer is witty as well as wise. It is all the more valuable for its extensive bibliography and its numerous illustrations, some of them unusual."
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Je 21 '30 700w

"Historical imagination and his usual fascinating style characterize this latest volume from Professor Morison. Layman and scholar will find the Builders of the Bay Colony an interesting contribution." E. T. Brown
+ Current Hist 32:844 Ag '30 1050w

"The form of presentation is wholly delightful. What the author has wished to give us is a convincing sketch of the life and spirit of the Bay Colony during its first score or so of years. Instead of narrative history he has used biography as his method, and in eleven chapters he draws the portraits of more than a dozen of the men and women of the place and period. Dr. Morison has an easy style and a pretty wit, an irony which even when directed against myself I find infinitely relishable in a day when writing, like cooking, seems to have lost its seasoning." J. T. Adams
Nation 131:20 Jl 2 '30 700w

"Altogether this is a delightful as well as an instructive book, fitly closed by the charming study of Anne Bradstreet, whom Mr. Morison claims, boldly, for the spiritual ancestress of Emily Dickinson." C. E. Fayle
+ Nation and Ath 48:109 O 18 '30 550w

"Out of Mr. Morison's collection of thirteen biographical sketches emerges one of the best histories of the first fifty years of Massachusetts Bay, and one of the best studies of the Puritan mind and character, that has yet been written. Mr. Morison is no Puritan in creed, but he is a loyal New Englander, and writes of these American founders with a sympathy all the warmer for his conviction that they are much misunderstood and traduced." Allan Nevins
+ New Repub 64:157 S 24 '30 1450w

"That too easily despised word 'puritan' has found a competent learned and persuasive defender in Professor Samuel Eliot Morison of Harvard." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p5s Je 7 '30 500w

"What Mr. Morison does most excellently in this volume is to bring some of those forgotten founders visibly to us, together with the life they lived. His research is prodigious, his authority sure; yet he often writes with a twinkle in his eye and finds a slang phrase as pat to his hand as more prudish diction. The English language is his tool, not his master; and he gives no sign of effort in being both learned and lively."
+ — N Y Times p4 Je 15 '30 1600w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p7m Je 1 '30 480w

"No one can read Founders of the Bay Colony without a renewal of interest in and sympathy for the Puritans. And in style it is a model of ease and grace." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 155:225 Je 11 '30 480w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:10 S '30 200w
St Louis 28:303 D '30

"The volume is written in a charming conversational style, which is disarming beyond expectation. The occasional lapses into the vernacular are used sparingly and with infinite skill. The aristocrat in writing has that right, and of Mr. Morison's essential aristocracy there can be no doubt if one will read his dry comment that in the hardships of early Massachusetts, the rich and delicately nurtured found it easier to adapt themselves to the rigors of their situation than did the poor and more common sort of folk." R. G. Adams
+ Sat R of Lit 7:51 Ag 16 '30 1650w
Spec 145:355 S 13 '30 1450w

MORISON, S. E.—Continued

"Prof Morison's chapters are written with unfailing spirit and often with brilliance. Originally intended for delivery as lectures, they employ some phrases of today for illustrative effect, but never cheaply or irrelevantly. By linking a general subject with a single personality or group of personalities, Prof Morison makes his interpretation of Puritan life easier to comprehend and remember."

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 8 '30 2000w

MORISON, SAMUEL ELIOT, ed. Development of Harvard university, 1869-1929. 660p il $6 Harvard univ. press [28s 6d Oxford]

378.73 Harvard university—History 30-5682

" 'The Development of Harvard University' introduces the tercentennial history of the university with which Prof Morison is now engaged, and which will appear before the celebration in 1936. Although it will eventually form part of the series, it is complete in itself. It covers the administrations of President Eliot and President Lowell, the most crucial period in American education. The volume is divided into 38 chapters, each one devoted to a branch of learning taught in the university, or to a department of the university. Each is written by the head of the department or some other authority whose memory goes back a considerable distance into the past."—Springf'd Republican

"In the nature of the case, the book bears a certain resemblance to the sundial, which records only the sunny hours. Yet the fact remains that the hours of the Eliot and Lowell administrations at Harvard have enjoyed, in the matter of academic weather, a considerable excess of 'fair and warmer' over the opposite conditions. And if it must be noted that members of well-conducted families are not given to discussing each other unsympathetically in public, it is no less true that the honestly favorable things to be said about Harvard during the past sixty years bulk large enough to fill so substantial a volume as this distinguished addition to the chronicles of the American university." M. A. DeW. Howe

+ Am Hist R 36:173 O '30 850w

"A reviewer is tempted to argue almost too loudly for the fascination the present work provides, in spite of its formidable size. It is rich reading throughout, and it is doubtful if Harvard men alone are the natural audience. It is matter for the nation and the world to read and enjoy." C. B. Palmer

+ Boston Transcript p2 F 15 '30 1800w

"The danger to be feared in a work of this nature is that of a kind of parochialism which forgets the relation of the institution described to its rivals and the outside world, and gives itself up to an orgy of self-glorification. Of this, or of that arrogance with which Harvard men are sometimes charged, there is almost no trace. On the other hand, the well-known freedom and frankness with which Harvard professors and alumni alike are accustomed to indulge in intramural criticism is given free rein by the editor, though the tone throughout is urbane and at times enthusiastic. Looking back over the book as a whole, one is forced to admit that the enthusiasm is justified. Closeness to the academic problems and failures of the moment often induces pessimism about our colleges and universities; but the record of service and devotion and accomplishment displayed in this volume is tremendous." W. A. Neilson

+ Nation 131:274 S 10 '30 850w

N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 8 '30 130w

"The cumulative effect of the lot is a very fair picture of what Harvard University has been and become during the last half century. The illustrations presenting Harvard's outstanding academic figures in that period are numerous, reasonably well reproduced and valuable toward completing the impression. Most instructive and useful of all is the light thrown on the entire period by placing side by side the inaugural addresses of Eliot and Lowell—the two men most powerful toward molding the two widely different policies which have made Harvard what it is today." H. I. Brock

+ N Y Times p9 Ag 24 '30 1200w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 22 '29 300w

"The work is inevitably of greater interest to Harvard graduates and students of American education than to the general public. But, if some of the material is necessarily matter-of-fact chronicle, a considerable part of it is individual and freshly written. There are glimpses of personality and traces of criticism. The editor has done his work well."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 2 '30 1500w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 4 '30 650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p317 Ap 10 '30 1250w

"Of Eliot and of Lowell, the two administrators of the period included in the volume, nothing appears save the inaugural address of each one, and it is a foolish reader who expects to find the personality of a college president revealed in his inaugural address. The effect of this omission is like omitting Hamlet from the play. The volume is, in brief, a compendium of many annual reports, but can hardly be said to do justice to the significance of the tercentenary of America's oldest university." H. N. MacCracken

— + Yale R n s 20:407 winter '31 450w

MORISON, SAMUEL ELIOT, and COMMAGER, HENRY STEELE. Growth of the American republic. 956p $6 Oxford

973 United States—History 30-25710

"This volume of 950 pages is to a considerable extent a revision of Professor Morison's 'Oxford History of the United States,' which appeared in 1927, and which, it may be noted, contained only 140 pages more than this newer work although it was in two volumes. The revision, however, has been very extensive, and the beginning of the story has now been thrown back to 1760 instead of only to 1783. Both works end 'in the small hours' of April 6, 1917, so there is nothing of the war or the immensely important decade and more since."—Nation

"Taken as a whole, this work represents modern scholarship at its best, offering a picture of the full life of a people at work, at play, at school, in politics or in building. . . The judgments offered are sane and fair; the style is better than in any other volume covering this field with the single exception of 'The Rise of American Civilization.' " Avery Craven

+ Books p16 N 30 '30 550w

"The collaboration has been highly successful, and the result deserves all praise. I know of no other one-volume history of 1760-1917 in which the reader will find so much narrative of actual fact and so much philosophical interpretation, clothed in so delightful a style, as he will in this book. The bibliography is exceptionally good and the maps are excellent." J. T. Adams

+ Nation 131:629 D 3 '30 600w

"The volume as a whole, with its statistical tables and careful bibliography, can be recommended both as a college textbook and for the general reader."

+ New Repub 65:118 D 10 '30 120w

"There is an admirable account of the Revolution, a clear description of the process of forming the national government, abundant but not undue material about Western growth, a sound exposition of the development of American foreign policy, a sensible treatment of the economic and political life of the old South, and all that the average person needs to remember about the Civil War and the dreary wastes of reconstruction. There is no better book for whoever wants a well-balanced view of the growth of the American Republic." William MacDonald

+ N Y Times p6 D 21 '30 800w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 156:628 D 17 '30 50w

MORLEY, CHRISTOPHER DARLINGTON. Rudolph and Amina; or, The black crook. 197p $2 Day
30-28640

Mr Morley takes for this sentimental fantasy the familiar characters and outlines of typical musical comedy. Rudolph, a handsome artist, and Amina, his pretty sweetheart, encounter the usual obstacles to love in the persons of the Black Crook and the wicked Count Wolfenstein. But virtue triumphs, Rudolph and Amina marry, and presumably live happily ever after.

Booklist 27:161 D '30

"Whether the author planned to be satirical, or whether he allowed the coltish steeds of his fancy to set their own pace, or whether he probed his ingenuity to find a fresh fashion for fiction, is unimportant to determine. Suffice it to say that, in his neat, rapid way, he has blown another shiny bubble into the particular literary heaven reserved for writers who hear the divine call to frolic." V. P. Ross
+ Books p16 N 9 '30 350w
Boston Transcript p5 D 3 '30 300w

"A gay and sparkling tale, filled with unexpected turns of humor and outrageous puns. It is written in a no less tender and sentimental vein than the Morley novels of the past; but it is, if anything, more slight in its content and more daring in its wit. 'Rudolph and Amina' is literature gone Hoboken. Mr. Morley counts once more on the perpetual desire of readers and playgoers to see villainy thwarted and virtue triumphant, no matter how implausible and melodramatic the process by which this desirable end is accomplished."
+ N Y Times p6 N 2 '30 550w

" 'Rudolph and Amina' is a charming book of not too many pages and sparingly spread with words, but there are more chuckles, giggles and boisterous 'haws' in the little tale than in any other book that is likely to engage your attention this season." E. C. Beckwith
+ N Y World p3e D 21 '30 150w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:88 D '30

Reviewed by R. C. Holliday
Sat R of Lit 7:385 N 29 '30 950w

MORLEY, CHRISTOPHER DARLINGTON, comp. Book of days; being a briefcase packed for his own pleasure & made into a calendar for sundry paramours of print. unp $2 Day
808.8 Yearbooks 30-27959

A calendar giving a quotation for every day of the year 1931. Its literary bits range from Marcus Aurelius to H. L. Mencken and from a Buddhist catechism to a useful household recipe or instructions (on March 15) for United States income tax return.

"Mr. Morley's devotees will rejoice in his book-gleanings. An excellent gift."
+ Bookm 72:xiv N '30 50w

Reviewed by B. R. Redman
Books p10 D 14 '30 80w

"Morley has taken a lot of apt quotations from his reading and applied one to each day. You've seen it done in the Longfellow calendar, no doubt, and sent one to your enemy. But this book is worth sending to your loving friend. The quotations are not all staid and solemn, filled with the gravity of life and death. There are little excerpts from Samuel Butler's Notebooks. There are remarks by Don Marquis. Those who get this book may have the opportunity of judging one bit of wisdom a day and making it their own." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p9 D 26 '30 950w

"Such a Calendar is a stimulant. There is some kind of a kick in every glass. It is good for the vaguely wandering, unpurposed, and hence dissatisfied reader, for it blazes the beginning of a hundred trails that all lead somewhere. A quotation that sets the waters flowing is better than a whole history of literature which dries them up." Arthur Colton
+ Sat R of Lit 7:472 D 20 '30 550w

MORRIS, E. G., pseud. See Goldberg, M. E.

MORRIS, FRANK, and EAMES, EDWARD A. Our wild orchids; trails and portraits. 464p il $7.50 (30s) Scribner
584.15 Orchids 29-30524

The book describes seventy-two species of wild orchids native to the United States. The authors in their search covered the northeastern United States and Canada, west to Minnesota and south to Tennessee. After a general description of orchids and their kin, and the four tribes of orchids, the book devotes a separate chapter to each of the species of each genus. At the beginning of the chapters the botanical information concerning that species is given; there follows in each case the description of adventures in trailing the flowers. The illustrations are exceptionally good.

Booklist 26:267 Ap '30

"Mr. Morris and Mr. Eames some years ago set themselves the task of hunting out every one of the seventy-two orchid species native to the Northeastern United States, and they have made a sumptuous book out of their experiences, richly illustrated with photographs."
+ Books p18 F 2 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p2 F 5 '30 380w

"Pictures of orchids are usually relatively more valuable than those of other plants since Orchids are more difficult to describe adequately in words. Consequently by obtaining photographs of all the species of orchids growing in eastern North America, the authors of the present volume are rendering a considerable service to science. . . A useful and attractive addition to any botanical library." V. S. S.
+ Nature 126:sup524 O 4 '30 220w

"A very lovely book is this, to make glad the heart of the amateur botanist. . . Oakes Ames, Professor of Botany in Harvard University and one of the foremost authorities on the orchid, welcomes the volume in his foreword as supplying in large measure the existing 'pressing need for a new popular treatise that will embody the results of recent research'. . . The authors made their own photographs and have given the book 130 beautiful page plates, four of them in color."
+ N Y Times p10 Ja 5 '30 280w
Times [London] Lit Sup p82 Ja 30 '30 180w

MORRIS, HARRISON SMITH. Confessions in art. 309p il $3.50 Sears
927 Artists, American. Art—United States—History 30-7775

"With a light and jocular touch Mr. Harrison S. Morris reviews a career largely concerned with contemporary art and artists. His acquaintance has included most of the notables of his day, but he is equally partial to relative nobodys who voluntarily or involuntarily do amusing things. Chase, Whistler, La Farge, Thayer, Rafelli, Pennell are among the artists treated."—Sat R of Lit

"His book is frankly a record of personal associations; he handles his heroes without worship or patronage, and now and then drops a reminder that he was able to hold his own in the company of the elect. Most of his gossip is new and worth relating, and he has set it down in a moderately amusing fashion."
+ Books p14 Je 8 '30 130w
Cleveland Open Shelf p150 D '30

"His book is genuinely informative as well as charming and intimate. What impresses one most, perhaps, is the appalling indifference of the American public to its great artists, an indifference which increased in frigidity in exact proportion with the greatness of the artist." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 19 '30 100w

"Mr. Morris has given us a charming collection of reminiscences which should be of interest not only to the art student, but to the intelligent layman as well." Dino Ferrari

MORRIS, H. S.—Continued
+ N Y Times p9 Ag 17 '30 550w

"It is rich in personal anecdote, in quick characterization. . . Theories of expression in art have no place here, but the way men walked, what they did, what they wore, and how they greeted one another is told with a friendly air." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p15 Ap 12 '30 300w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:22 N '30 150w

"The impressions are too brief and swift to permit of much richness, but the book in a chatty way is entertaining throughout."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1049 My 17 '30 180w

"Genial, generous reminiscences told with sprightliness and reflecting significant personalities. The volume can be welcomed for various comments on art and sidelights on personality."
+ Springf'd Republican p8 Je 7 '30 950w

"This book is irresistible. It cannot be denied that, when Mr. Morris comes to the impressions of living and recent American artists which constitute the greater part of his book, one has the feeling that most of his swans were artistically geese, but the truth is that he takes the whole subject of art into a region in which human personality and human contacts are felt to be more important than artistic quality."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p797 O 9 '30 850w

MORRIS, HARRISON SMITH. Walt Whitman; a brief biography with reminiscences. 122p $1.50 Harvard univ. press [7s Oxford]
B or 92 Whitman, Walt 29-27819

"We have here the shell of a biographical outline of Walt Whitman on which the author has hung his personal reminiscences, which have to do for the most part with Whitman's last years—those years spent in the gray frame-house in Camden, New Jersey. Plainly recounted, the picture is full of interest: Whitman on his front porch; the continual stream of friends flowing in and out of his house . . . all the little happenings, the daily minutiæ that we like to hear about famous people."—Bookm

Bookm 70:v F '30 100w
Books p18 Mr 30 '30 350w
Boston Transcript p1 Ja 11 '30 500w
Nation 130:713 Je 18 '30 80w

"Harrison S. Morris does not add a cubit to our knowledge of either Walt the man or Whitman the poet, though his adoration is sincere and his admiration pleasing. Mr. Morris knew the old man of the sea personally, but after reading his book I am more convinced than ever that we can get much closer to Whitman through his poetry and prose than through his friends." Edwin Seaver
— + N Y Evening Post p13m D 14 '29 150w
N Y Times p16 Je 29 '30 380w

"Morris has given enough intimate glimpses of Whitman to make his book a valuable addition to the first-hand records of the poet's life." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p16 D 12 '29 1050w
St Louis 28:147 My '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p160 F 27 '30 600w

MORRIS, KENNETH. Book of the three dragons; il. by Ferdinand Huszti Horvath. 206p $5 Longmans
30-23656

A Welsh hero tale, in which Manawyddan, the hero, won back the stolen treasures of the gods. Illustrations in black and white by Ferdinand Horvath.

"Written in lyrical prose and given an impressive format, this stirring legend will be the more clearly remembered because of the artist's realization of its dramatic power. We could wish that Mr. Morris had made a clear statement of the liberties he has taken with the old Welsh tales and that a bibliography of sources had accompanied his story. It is only fair to young readers as well as to older ones to insist on such accompaniment in dealing with source material." A. C. Moore
+ — Atlantic Bookshelf p48 D '30 100w

"As a child Kenneth Morris listened to tales of ancient Welsh heroes and as a man he remembered them with delight. In the 'Book of the Three Dragons' he retells these tales for other children and in so doing he makes a contribution to literature." Nancy Evans
+ Books p8 D 14 '30 550w

"'The Book of the Three Dragons' may be appreciated in all its beauty only by those with considerable background in folklore. The tongue-twisting names, the elaborate language, and the long descriptions, although all in faultless taste, are apt to be a strain upon the attention of both children and adults who are not familiar with the conventions of epic prose and poetry."
Nation 131:558 N 19 '30 100w

Reviewed by Nancy Evans
N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 50w

"From a folk tale covering a scant half page in the folklore books Mr. Morris can weave a story of exquisite beauty. These Welsh legends are told by him with all the magic that only an intimate knowledge of the wellspring of source material can bestow on a writer, and are full of the beauty and rhythm found only in the work of a poet." O. M. Fuller
+ N Y World p3e N 16 '30 200w

MORRIS, RICHARD BRANDON. Studies in the history of American law; with special reference to the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. (Studies in hist., economics and public law) 285p $4.50 Columbia univ. press
347.09 Law—United States 30-14173

An interpretation of the main characteristics of the development of American law in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The chief problems discussed are "those involving the alienability and distribution of real estate, the position of women in the law, and various phases of legal liability present under agrarian conditions." (Pref.)

"Dr. Morris has undertaken a thing which no one can do; but he has, in a patient and scholarly way, brought together a mass of material, handled it with surprisingly interesting insight, and shown himself one of the most promising young historians of America." J. H. Beale
+ Am Hist R 35:921 Jl '30 450w
Am Pol Sci R 24:527 My '30 130w

The volume is well documented, in dissertation fashion, and ought to form a real stimulus to continued interest and research in an important field of national endeavor and progress."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 19 '30 250w

"Dr. Morris' volume is interestingly written, carefully documented, and contains a useful bibliographical essay." J. McGoldrick
+ Hist Outlook 21:136 Mr '30 280w

MORRIS, WALTER FREDERICK. "G. B." (Eng title: Bretherton, khaki or field-grey?) 306p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d; 3s 6d Bles]
29-19775

A war story with a background of mystery. The story opens with an English officer's discovery of Gerard Bretherton—"G. B."—commander of a British company, lying dead in a chateau behind the German lines in the uniform of a German general, and on the sofa near him the lifeless body of the beautiful Duchess of Wittelsberg. The narrative from this conclusion-episode goes back to 1915, and in the pages following we are given the story of G. B.'s dual personality and the strange complications this case of wartime psychopathology creates.

"A forceful novel of the World War as seen through the eyes of an English officer. With none of the unpleasantness of most war books, the story runs along through a maze of major battles, giving the reactions of officers on both the German and Allied sides. An excellent mystery story, skilfully written."
+ Bookm 70:xxvi F '30 100w

"Here is a readable mystery of the World War with real sojers in action, authentic milieu and just enough hokum. . . The later pages, harking back to 1915, uncover a strange case of psychopathology and a generous number of thrilling situations." Will Cuppy
+ Books p11 D 29 '29 130w

"Mr. Morris can write. He has in him that too rare quality of being able to make a written description live. His descriptions of action, of shells bursting, of dead, of attacks, of a soldier's sensations are the best I have read any where. . . The workmanship is poor. The mechanical parts of the story shriek aloud to the heavens. The reader can see the wheels going around, and in very wobbly fashion, too." L. H. Nason
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:605 D 28 '29 1000w

MORRIS, WALTER FREDERICK. Strange case of Gunner Rawley. 312p $2 Dodd
30-27752

Lieutenant Rawley, having in a quarrel accidentally killed his superior officer, is forced to become a deserter to escape being tried for murder. So he deliberately disappears from his battery, living with men in kindred positions behind the lines. Tankard, his friend, encounters him a year later facing a German firing squad. W. F. Morris is the author of a previous story of the war—"G. B."

Bookm 72:viii N '30 50w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p23 N 16 '30 100w

"There is a lack of unity about the book, and certain weaknesses in the plot that weaken its chances, but it is a fine adventure story of the Great War, exciting and thoroughly convincing." W. R. Brooks
+ — Outlook 156:231 O 8 '30 100w

MORRISON, HENRY CLINTON. School revenue. 242p $2.50 Univ. of Chicago press [11s 6d Cambridge univ. press]
379.11 School finance. Education and state —United States. Public schools—United States 30-8254

"This volume represents an attempt to arrive at some understanding of the basis of the school revenue in the financial organization of society, of the school system as an organic part of the fiscal organization of our form of the civil state, and of the school as an economic institution."—Pref.

Booklist 26:342 Je '30

"The book is a distinct contribution to educational finance. It is not, however, light reading for anyone, particularly for the amateurs referred to several times by the author. It includes such sound theorizing and such important factual materials strikingly presented that its usefulness is assured. It ought to become an integral part of the fundamental content of the thinking of every educational statesman, of every real student of educational administration, and of every local school administrator who aspires to more than provincialism. It is a book which all such will wish to read and re-read and to which they will turn again and again. It will probably be used for years in the strong courses in school finance throughout the country." Carter Alexander and I. O. Friswold
+ El School J 30:787 Je '30 1500w

MORROUGH, E. R. (ABU NADAAR, pseud.). Temple servant, and other stories. 307p $2.50 (7s 6d) Longmans
[30-6554]

A collection of short stories, each of which has Egypt as a background, including several traditional Arab tales as told by the Bedouins.

Books p19 Ag 17 '30 80w
Boston Transcript p2 My 7 '30 750w

"Mr. Morrough writes with a vivid fancy, an awareness of the uneasy, a quickness of invention, and an occasional intensity that remind me of the early work of Mr. E. F. Benson, when he has travelled into the realms of horror."
+ New Statesman 35:152 My 10 '30 80w

"Mr. Morrough's work is well above the magazine story level. Here and there, he permits himself a flash of reflection. His characters think as well as feel. He does not limit himself to reporting sensations and ignoring thoughts. Perhaps Mr. Morrough is just a little too conscious that he has a new field to exploit. . . Mr. Morrough is more successful as a realist than as a romanticist. He can observe and record more interestingly than he can imagine and his satire has a real bite to it. He owes a good bit to Kipling but his attitude toward British imperialism is that of E. M. Forster."
+ — N Y Times p9 My 18 '30 300w
Times [London] Lit Sup p301 Ap 3 '30 220w

MORROW, ELIZABETH REEVE (CUTTER) (MRS DWIGHT WHITNEY MORROW). Painted pig; a Mexican picture book; il. by René d'Harnoncourt. 32p $2 (5s) Knopf
30-26976

Pita and her little brother Pedro lived in Mexico. Pita had the most fascinating painted China pig, with roses on his back and a tiny rosebud on his tail. The story tells what happened when Pedro wanted that pig or one just exactly like it.

Booklist 27:109 N '30

Reviewed by K. G. Landon
Bookm 72:245 N '30 60w

"Mrs. Morrow is to be congratulated on having made a genuine picture book discovery in Mexico City—a discovery which her own intimate knowledge of children and books must have assured her would be open sesame to Mexico for the children of other countries. Out of a personal experience of buying a painted pig in the market at Cuernavaca, Mrs. Morrow has told a circumstantial story for children a little older than those of picture book age, thus giving to the book a very wide range of appeal in American schools and libraries, extending from the youngest children to those who are actually studying geography and history." A. C. Moore
+ Books p8 S 21 '30 800w

Reviewed by Ernestine Evans
Books p7 N 16 '30 50w

Reviewed by A. L. Shea
Chicago Daily Tribune p14 O 18 '30 80w
Cleveland Open Shelf p134 N '30

Reviewed by Ernestine Evans
Nation 131:555 N 19 '30 50w

"This is a brilliant picture book, and the vision of little Pita looking on an array of toys gives us a sense of a child's treasury. The text is simple and sympathetic." Padraic Colum
+ New Repub 65:24 N 19 '30 50w

"This book will delight every small child and it is true to the culture of an ancient people." Nancy Evans
+ N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 100w

" 'The Painted Pig' marks a real achievement in picture books. To accompany Mrs. Morrow's pleasant little story of a Mexican boy and girl, René D'Harnoncourt has supplied draw-

MORROW, E. R.—Continued
ings of toys and children and the result is a picture book that will be a lasting joy." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p26 O 26 '30 180w

Reviewed by O. M. Fuller
N Y World p3e N 16 '30 50w

"No doubt the story was written to fit the delicious pictures of Rene d'Harnoncourt, but somewhere along its course there can be no doubt these adorable children took possession of the author and shaped the story to suit themselves." M. L. Becker
+ Outlook 156:586 D 10 '30 200w
St Louis 28:304 D '30

"Mrs. Morrow's story is reality, with the sort of realism which in Mexico cannot but have for the American child a touch of magic, a fairy implication, the delight of strangeness and the consoling certainty of fact. The illustrations are deserving of special mention, and that not entirely because they are in no respect reminiscent of the fairy land of the old world, but because at the same time they are genuinely interpretive of the new." Mary Austin
+ Sat R of Lit 7:326 N 15 '30 450w

"A picture book that children will enjoy for its brilliant colors and gayety, and grownups for its charming introduction to a foreign art. The unusual illustrations are by Count Rene d'Harnoncourt, whose collection of Mexican toys in Mexico City inspired Mrs Dwight Morrow, wife of the American ambassador, to write the story."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 S 23 '30 160w

Reviewed by Elisabeth Irwin
Survey 65:340 D 15 '30 80w

MORROW, MRS HONORE (MCCUE) WILLSIE. Last full measure. 340p $2.50 Morrow
Lincoln, Abraham—Fiction 30-19274

The concluding volume of Mrs Morrow's Lincoln trilogy is a dramatic account of the last months of his life, the Booth conspiracy, and the death of Lincoln.

Booklist 27:65 O '30
Bookm 72:vii S '30 100w

"This is the third and last of the novels by Mrs. Honoré Willsie Morrow which deal with Lincoln's life in the White House. It is a better novel than either of the others, having this advantage over them, that the historical material with which it has to do is more dramatic and of a more personal nature." Garreta Busey
+ Books p4 Jl 27 '30 900w

Reviewed by S. L. Cook
Boston Transcript p3 Jl 26 '30 1200w

"Purely from the point of view of craftsmanship The Last Full Measure is definitely superior to the earlier stories; it is more genuinely dramatic, there is less melodrama, no invention of theatrical characters, a great deal more authentic history, and finally a much more compelling and vivid portrayal of Lincoln himself. The only flaw that the book might be said to have is a certain confusion of scene; the reader is not always sure where some of the earlier chapters are placed; Booth at one point, for example, appears to be in New York and Washington simultaneously." C. P.
+ — Cath World 132:505 Ja '31 350w
Cleveland Open Shelf p149 D '30

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p4d O 18 '30 180w

"The book has been done with great and conscientious care. . . Though the novel may leave something to be desired in the matter of artistry, the care and labor expended on it are undeniably admirable. As the story of the last months of Lincoln's life, it will no doubt prove interesting to many readers."
+ N Y Times p6 Jl 27 '30 650w

"Mrs. Morrow's novels are not written for children. Their clear, warm style and the accuracy of their material make them satisfactory to adults. But they are especially rich in the picturesque quality, the spirited narrative and dialogue which delight young people, and they should become fixtures in the high-school student's library." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 155:506 Jl 30 '30 280w
Pratt p39 autumn '30

"A fine, sweeping account of Lincoln's last days, of the peril that in the background is steadily drawing nearer to him, and of the final catastrophe." Allan Nevins
+ Sat R of Lit 7:307 N 8 '30 500w
Springf'd Republican p7e O 19 '30 300w

MORROW, MRS HONORE (MCCUE) WILLSIE. Tiger! Tiger! the life story of John B. Gough. 296p $2.50 Morrow
B or 92 Gough, John Bartholomew. Temperance 30-4527

The life of John B. Gough, the reformed drunkard and temperance lecturer, tells of his long fight to conquer his own appetite and to help others.

Booklist 26:310 My '30

"His personality, interesting but by no means unusual, is somewhat obscured in this book by a temperance-tract technique."
— Bookm 71:xxiv Ap '30 80w

"Mrs. Morrow's book leaves Gough commanding the hosts of the Prohibition party to march forward, even if they did not know just where they were going. Mrs. Morrow takes her hero very seriously; she is his reverent admirer throughout and she writes with the religious passion of the old temperance movement. She enriches her story with imagined incident and conversation, though the inquisitive reader is not always sure where fact ends and fancy begins. But there is enough veracious data to provide rich material for any cynical practitioner of psychology." Lewis Gannett
+ Books p7 F 2 '30 1050w

"Mrs. Morrow knows a great deal about Gough. Doubtless, as she herself says her narrative is veracious, except for dialogue and descriptive detail. But the reader will not be satisfied that she has given it to him unadulterated. On page after page throughout the earlier part of the book he will find doubtful episode after doubtful episode, little bits put in for that awful thing in biography known as 'color.' . . Whether we have a Gough weighed in the balance of the truest biographical measure is to be doubted, but here is a vivid and entirely enlivening character sketch of a much tried man as Mrs. Morrow conceives him." S. L. Cook
— + Boston Transcript p3 Mr 1 '30 1500w
Cath World 131:635 Ag '30 130w
Christian Century 47:437 Ap 2 '30 180w
Cleveland Open Shelf p94 Je '30

"Honore W. Morrow has put the breath of life into the dry bones of John B. Gough's autobiography, but she has elevated him to the stature of a Samson. John B. Gough was primarily an orator and his autobiography was clumsily written. On the rostrum he dealt heavily in sob stuff, but his life-story—although it said much about his family life, for that was dragged into attacks upon him—does not picture him as sloppily sentimental. The author has added too much." Joe Gould
+ — N Y Evening Post p10m F 8 '30 320w

"Mrs. Morrow has been a novelist so long that she does not yet realize that the biographer has some obligations from which the writer of fiction is free. Presumably she has gone to Gough's autobiography for her facts. But the reader who is not already somewhat familiar with the social and temperance history of the last century has no means of knowing how much of the moving story she tells is fact and how much of it she has vivified and embroidered out of her imagination. For her method is that of the popular up-to-date writer of biography who casts his narrative in fiction-like form." F. F. Kelly
— + N Y Times p20 F 16 '30 1200w

"The story of Gough's life is the story of the temperance movement in America up to the eve of the Mauve Decade. As Mrs. Morrow tells it, it is not without its dramatic moments. But one comes out of the book with a feeling of the depression that follows an evening spent at the tabernacle of a Billy Sunday or an Aimee Semple Macpherson—and begins to look for a place where he can get a drink." Bellamy Partridge

— + N Y World p10m F 16 '30 380w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:37 My '30
Pratt p36 summer '30
St Louis 28:113 Ap '30

"As biography, it is uneven and incomplete, lacking adequate data in places. The first half has scenes narrated with 'vivisecting' realism; the second half seems hurried without due assimilation of facts into dramatic scenes. . . In spite of the defects of 'Tiger! Tiger!' as an individual biography, it has paramount value as a composite picture of Temperance movements from 1826 to 1875." A. R. Marble

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:824 Mr 15 '30 750w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 6 '30 1050w
Wis Lib Bul 26:104 Mr '30

MORSE, GEORGE FREDERICK. My life with animals. 196p il $2 Thomas S. Rockwell co., 343 S. Dearborn st., Chicago

590 Animals—Legends and stories. Animals—Habits and behavior 30-6050

The author, former director of the Boston Zoological Park, tells in the opening chapters how during his boyhood he became interested in the study of animals. In the latter part of the book he relates many incidents and anecdotes connected with his experience in caring for animals in the zoos.

Booklist 26:345 Je '30

"This autobiography—the first, by the way, of an 'animal man'—is one of uncommon practical information and suggestion and delight." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p1 My 24 '30 400w
N Y Times p25 Mr 30 '30 260w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30

"The book is written in a way that makes it good reading for youngsters, but it also proves interesting for grownups. The whole book is an interesting autobiography of a real animal man."

+ Springf'd Republican p14 Ap 16 '30 220w

MORSE, HOSEA BALLOU. Chronicles of the East India company trading to China, 1635-1834; v 5, Supplementary, 1742-74. 212p $4 Harvard univ. press [15s Oxford]

382 East India company. Great Britain—Commerce. China—Commerce (26-9732)

"The previous four volumes of Mr. Morse's great work on the English East India Company's commerce with China [Book Review Digest, 1927] left a partial gap for the years 1743-1753, and a complete one for the years 1754-1774. This was because the documents for the earlier period were scanty and for the latter period entirely missing. Fortunately, however, duplicate records for these years were found in the British legation in Peking, and this additional volume has been prepared on the basis of them. Like its predecessors, it quotes extensively from the original manuscripts and summarizes where it does not quote."—Am Hist R

"The present volume brings to a close Mr. Morse's long labor in finding and editing the documents of the Company as far as its China trade is concerned. Mr. Morse gives a picture of life and trade at Canton during these early years without destroying the reader's impression that he has made the acquaintance of the original documents." C. F. Remer

+ Am Econ R 20:279 Je '30 430w

"Mr. Morse has added worthily to the great service which he has long been rendering to the study of relations between the Occident and China in the past two and a half centuries." K. S. Latourette

+ Am Hist R 35:169 O '29 350w
Boston Transcript p3 Jl 6 '29 270w

"The presentation is necessarily scrappy and the narrative broken. But there is the attractive intimacy that comes from original documents." N. S. B. Gras

+ J Pol Econ 38:370 Je '30 330w
Spec 142:902 Je 8 '29 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p346 My 2 '29 800w

MORTON, DAVID. Renaissance of Irish poetry, 1880-1930. 256p $2.50 Washburn

821.09 Irish poetry—History and criticism. Irish poetry—Collections 29-27599

"A discussion of the lyric poetry of the Irish literary revival. Two especially interesting chapters are 'The natural world and its creatures' and 'The faeries of Ireland.' The author has included so many illustrative poems that the book may serve as an anthology."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Booklist 26:152 Ja '30
Cath World 130:764 Mr '30 280w
Cleveland Open Shelf p23 F '30

"Mr. Morton's selection of Irish poetry is a collection of graceful minor verse annotated with tactful comment, so tactful in fact that you are told almost nothing of the forces behind one of the most remarkable literary movements in our time." Horace Gregory

N Y Evening Post p9m N 30 '29 480w

"Prof. Morton's book is cast not in the form of an anthology but in the form of a study of the methods and subject matter of Irish poetry. His generous use of illustrations, however, provides a basis for adequate understanding of the body of work he is discussing. Morton, as befits a poet, has tried to convey something of his own enthusiasm for the subject rather than to evaluate either particular poets or the movement as a whole." Granville Hicks

N Y World p10m Ja 12 '30 100w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:34 Ap '30
Pratt p28 summer '30

MORTON, HENRY CANOVA VOLLAM. In search of Scotland. 380p il $3 Dodd [7s 6d Methuen]

914.1 Scotland—Description and travel 30-3552

The author, who went "In search of England" in 1928, has written a similar book on Scotland. Beginning with the border towns and abbeys, he goes on to explore Edinburgh, Stirling, St Andrews, Perth, climbs into the Highlands over the Devil's Elbow, discovers the mystery of Aberdeen, visits Perth and the field of Colloden, and drops down to Glasgow and the Burns country before saying goodbye to Scotland.

Booklist 26:309 My '30

"Mr. Morton's 'I's' literally spatter the three hundred and eighty pages of the book. They stir an antagonism that is perhaps unfair. For all that, his picture is vivid and his observation keen." A. B. Maurice

+ — Bookm 71:xxiii Mr '30 300w

"'In Search of Scotland' is very good. From the very first page you get the impression that here is going to be something above the level which most works of this character attain, and Mr. Morton does not let you down."

+ Books p20 Mr 16 '30 160w

"Mr. Morton touches land and people with the wand of a sensitive intuition. . . Through shrewd comment, sympathetic observation and a generous use of delicious anecdote, he proves how likeable, how lovable, is the reality of the 'dour Scot' of a too-prevalent tradition." F. B.

MORTON, H. C. V.—Continued

+ Boston Transcript p2 F 26 '30 1200w

" 'In Search of Scotland' must stand high for its faithful picture of bewitching scenes in the Highlands, its colorful portrayal of incidents he chanced to see and its glowing enthusiasms over mountains, glens and rills."

+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Je 26 '30 80w

Cleveland Open Shelf p155 D '30

"Mr. Morton proves himself a pleasant companion for desultory moments. But he is too essentially a journalist—too uniformly slick and resourceful in playing the tricks of his trade—to offer good sustained reading. His eye is too deliberately and ceaselessly alert; he lays violent hold upon beauty and romance instead of letting them break in naturally and quietly upon him."

+ — Nation and Ath 46:112 O 19 '29 180w

"Mr. Morton does really give us a lively and attractive account of the sister kingdom, even if the national sports of angling and stalking and the national game of golf do not appeal to him. The book is pleasantly illustrated with photogravure reproductions of photographs."

+ New Statesman 33:585 Ag 17 '29 220w

+ N Y Times p12 My 4 '30 250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:90 D '29

Pratt p33 spring '30

St Louis 28:143 My '30

"Those who have that peculiar itch for the knowledge of places, of their sight, taste, smell, feeling, will get real pleasure out of Mr. Morton's book. He has unquestionably evoked something which he calls Scotland. Is this, however, the real Scotland? And here, we imagine, Mr. Morton would rightly dismiss the question as not to the point. He has not set out to portray the real Scotland. He has written merely to give us his views of Scotland as seen on his own journey. Well, it was an entertaining journey and Mr. Morton's account of it is entertaining."

Sat R 148:276 S 7 '29 350w

"Mr. Morton has a fluent and pleasing style, enthusiasm for natural scenery and for urban picturesqueness alike, interest in persons, and a lively memory for historical incident. As a result his book is a pleasantly discursive volume."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:747 F 15 '30 320w

"It is particularly gratifying to note that, along with the historic glories of Scotland, he inquires into the spirit and condition of the people to-day, and is able to produce stories of yesterday as stirring and characteristic as those of yesteryear. Even when he descends to the commonplace he is entertaining. Wherever you open it you will find a good story, and plenty of information as well."

+ Spec 143:280 Ag 31 '29 160w

"Mr. Morton has covered a great deal of ground with a ready and intelligent perception. But there is a regrettable tendency to facetiousness bordering on vulgarity, and an aptness and slickness of phrase which is irritating."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p651 Ag 22 '29 400w

MOSES, MONTROSE JONAS. Fabulous Forrest; the record of an American actor. 369p pl $4 Little

B or 92 Forrest, Edwin 29-27822

"Our first native born tragedian, our stormy playboy of the mid-century who precipitated a riot in Astor Place which cost many lives, who horsewhipped N. P. Willis on Fifth Avenue, who tried his divorce case before his audiences all over the land, who lived to see his wonderful muscles fail him, his style of acting lose its hold on the public, but kept on playing 'Macbeth' when his sword had to be strapped to his hand, whose egotism was colossal and whose end was lonely and heart-breaking—what a subject for a biographer!"—Books

Booklist 26:233 Mr '30

"Mr. Moses's 'The Fabulous Forrest' lacks the gusto and the power of vivid imaginative reconstruction to bring its subject and his times to life. And it is, moreover, strangely timid and reticent about some of the very things which would most interest us. . . It is admittedly a difficult task to recreate an actor's style in words, especially when that actor died before you were born. But there is no escaping the task, if you are writing the biography of an actor. Mr. Moses isn't quite up to it." W. P. Eaton

— Books p22 Ja 26 '30 450w

Reviewed by Joe Gould

New Repub 63:80 Je 4 '30 500w

"As diagnostician, the author has proceeded with meticulous care in the examination of all the factors that molded Forrest into the first great American tragedian and the most popular stage figure this country has ever known. If one is to find fault with the biography it is in the author's too insistent concern with the background of life against which the actor moved so exuberantly. In his discussions of the politics, the culture and the manners of America in the first part of the nineteenth century, he has been apt at times to let the figure of his subject become blurred, and when he deals directly with him again after a lapse, one senses profound changes that have not been entirely explained." Howard Barnes

+ — N Y Times p5 Jl 20 '30 1100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:21 Mr '30

"As a commentary on the life of the mid-nineteenth century in the United States, 'The Fabulous Forrest' has permanent value, apart from its authority as a chapter in theatrical history."

+ R of Rs 81:15 Ja '30 320w

St Louis 28:82 Mr '30

"The crying need of an additional life of Edwin Forrest, at this late date, was not obvious. Few actors, of any time, have been analyzed, advertised, and reported more meticulously or superfluously. But his book is so full a compendium of most of the material evidence and testimony bearing upon his hero and the environment of which he was the product that it will probably interest many readers of recent generation." J. R. Towse

Sat R of Lit 6:1066 My 24 '30 770w

"Mr Moses portrays Forrest as the product of his 'fabulous' times. . . Mr Moses tells the story spiritedly and well, making a more than ordinarily interesting contribution to popular biography."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 9 '30 1000w

"Mr. Moses' book is interesting today not merely because of its retelling of this twice-told tale. Its value lies in the living impression he gives of Edwin Forrest as a type and product of his time. Forrest, whose 'full blooded Americanism was always blatant and often in bad taste,' is here for the first time set against his own period and made comprehensible in the light of his own turbulent epoch. For all his ruthless exposure of Forrest's weaknesses and shortcomings both personal and professional, Mr. Moses has done better than merely to whitewash his hero. He has explained him in terms of adolescent America, and by making us see his surroundings he has illuminated, if not justified, the man himself. The result is an unusual theatrical biography which is also excellent Americana." Rosamond Gilder

+ Theatre Arts Mo 14:84 Ja '30 950w

Wis Lib Bul 26:39 Ja '30

MOSHER, WILLIAM EUGENE, and others, eds. Electrical utilities; the crisis in public control; under the auspices of School of citizenship and public affairs, Syracuse university. 335p $4 Harper

380.16 Public utilities. Electric utilities. Public service commissions. Government ownership 29-16476

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"The book contains a well selected classified bibliography. Dr. Mosher and his colleagues are to be congratulated on producing a work of such high merit, and one which is of great and timely interest, not only to political scientists, but especially to government officials, to the utility industries, and to the general public." O. C. Hormell

+ Am Pol Sci R 24:199 F '30 1200w

"If read with the appreciation that it presents only one side of the case, this book can be commended as one carefully prepared for such a specific purpose." J. A. Dewhurst

+ Ann Am Acad 148:307 Mr '30 500w

"While the authors do not present any new views relative to either the electrical utility of the solution of the problems confronting public regulation, they serve an admirable purpose in focusing attention upon the industry and in marshaling the facts and the various modes of regulation either actually in effect or proposed. The development of the book is direct and logical." Lewis Goldberg

+ Harvard Law R 43:1180 My '30 950w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 43:84 D '29
St Louis 27:332 D '29
Wis Lib Bul 25:318 O '29

"In spite of its sound outlook upon the problem, the book is deficient in detailed analysis. If the purpose of the book is to test the adequacy of present laws in their relation to the light and power industry, it would seem important at the outset to determine the specific defects of the existing machinery. . . The book's survey of regulation by state commissions is little more than a cursory summary of the well known characteristics of that agency. No real attempt is made to delve into the successive abuses in the utility field that caused the evolution of the state commission from its early days as an advisory body to its present status as a complex organism of control." R. J. Smith

+ — Yale Law J 40:322 D '30 1150w

MOSS, GEOFFREY. That other love. 352p $1 Doubleday, Doran
30-14663

Phillida Chard during childhood had lived with her mother in Monte Carlo. She grows up to young womanhood in the home of her stepmother in London. Men are attracted to her, but with the exception of a brief affair with a married man, Phillida is indifferent to men, preferring to cherish her ambition as an artist. Later, in France, she meets a sculptress, Vera Coswell, for whom she develops an ardent friendship, and a love greater than she has felt for any other being. Phillida gives up Vera, finally, and decides to marry and have children.

Bookm 71:551 Ag '30 200w

"The attempt to make a lady out of Phillida is a dubious success, so far as her father's family is concerned. The attempt to make a psychological problem out of her, which is the author's intention, does not fare much better. Phillida remains incomprehensible, and the resolution of her fate—while it occupies much space—is as vague and inconclusive as her character has been throughout."

— Books p12 Jl 20 '30 100w

Reviewed by G. T. Hellman
New Repub 64:81 S 3 '30 60w

"Outside of the poor motivation the book is interesting and at times even more than that. The first part, depicting Phillida's life with her mother, is the best. One scene, when the child is thought lost and the lovers are hunting her in the garden, is done in a masterly fashion. The adult Phillida is never as real as the child and adolescent girl. The child is natural and appealing; the young woman is hard to account for, and, at times, boring."

+ — N Y Times p6 Jl 6 '30 450w

"The chief merit of Mr. Geoffrey Moss's novel is the naturalness of some of the characters; the chief defect is the inconsequence of the whole. . . Unfortunately, after her rescue Phillida becomes less interesting, and the novel develops into a study of relations between her and two other women, a study which few men, if any, have the necessary knowledge of women to make convincing."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p894 N 7 '29 420w

MOTHER GOOSE. Berta and Elmer Hader's picture book of Mother Goose. unp il $3.50 Coward-McCann
30-29908

Rhymes and songs from Mother Goose, games from Mother Goose, boys and girls from Mother Goose, and lullabies for very young children are all in this book, beautifully illustrated in color and in black and white.

Bookm 72:xxvii N '30 50w

"A good picture book. This must be the definite edition of the Mother Goose literature: I cannot think of a single rhyme that has been left out. Compared with René d'Harnoncourt's or with Maud and Miska Petersham's these pictures are conventional, but the convention is very charmingly and very completely carried out." Padraic Colum

+ New Repub 65:24 N 19 '30 80w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker
Outlook 156:580 D 10 '30 120w

MOTHERWELL, HIRAM. Imperial dollar. 310p $3.50 Brentano's

330.973 United States—Economic conditions. European war, 1914-1918—Economic aspects. United States—Foreign relations 29-21189

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"The reviewer commends the book unqualifiedly as the sanest, the clearest, the best thought-out study of the subject of our investments abroad." H. E. Fisk

+ Am Econ R 20:140 Mr '30 1250w
Booklist 26:189 F '30
Boston Transcript p2 Ja 29 '30 220w

"Mr. Motherwell has written a clear and concise story of the development of America's economic relationship with the rest of the world. By a happy combination of historical analysis, logical argumentation and unobtrusive, but authoritative statistics he shows how America during the second half of her national existence emerged from the lowly backwoods to dominant citizenship of the world." Percy Winner

+ N Y Evening Post p10m O 19 '29 750w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:11 F '30
Sat R of Lit 7:140 S 20 '30. 200w
Special Libraries 21:267 S '30

"The book is interesting and readable. Mr. Motherwell, although he bases his argument mainly on economic materials, succeeds in making them dramatic and understandable to the layman." Roy Veatch

+ World Tomorrow 13:227 My '30 1600w

MOTT, FRANK LUTHER. History of American magazines, 1741-1850. 848p il $10 Appleton

051 Periodicals—History 30-2074

The first of two volumes covering, in a comprehensive study, the story of American magazines from their beginning. The present volume opens with a general discussion of the nature, problems and contents of the earliest magazines printed in this country, beginning with the American magazine of 1741. Part two takes up the periodicals published during the period of nationalism, 1794-1825. In part three, the period of expansion, the author discusses types of writing in the magazines, magazine centers and foreign relations, editors and contributors, etc., giving detailed comment on the more prominent of the magazines, such as Godey's Lady's book. The appendix contains a chronological list of American magazines. The author is a specialist in American literature, and director of the School of journalism, University of Iowa.

MOTT, F. L.—Continued

"He so directs and orders the mass of information his patient research has brought forth that the general reader will find the account delightfully readable, and be in no way overwhelmed by its wealth of detail." Bertha-Monica Stearns
+ Am Hist R 35:888 Jl '30 450w

Reviewed by C. D. Clark
Am J Soc 36:330 S '30 350w
Booklist 26:259 Ap '30

Reviewed by G. C. Knight
Bookm 71:121 Mr '30 350w

"This book is the result of a research which must have been Herculean in its labor and that it comes to us in so readable a form is something upon which to congratulate ourselves as well as Mr. Mott. . . He has examined every aspect and given us a picture which has perspective and detail. He cannot give us the contents of the magazines themselves, but he does the next best thing: he makes it easy for us to go to the original files to find what we want. The indices, listings and charts will be hailed as a godsend by students in many fields." Carl Brandt
+ Books p1 Ja 26 '30 1100w
Boston Transcript p1 F 1 '30 1100w

"Professor Mott has shown in a relatively brief work published earlier his especial capacity to be the historiographer of American magazines . . . He has amassed so much material in which he finds significance that the volume now issued covers only the period up to 1850. A second volume carrying the story to the present time is to appear later. . . His thoroughly readable style enables him to convey a great bulk of information without seeming ponderous." A. S. Will
+ N Y Times p2 F 9 '30 1450w

"Dr. Mott has started an interesting current of research and has provided libraries and students of periodicals and social trends with an excellent guide to tons of material. For the early nineteenth century the magazine is a better reflection of social changes than the newspaper." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p13 Ja 13 '30 950w

"This work gives a clear statement of the motives and problems in the founding of most of the magazines of importance in the period covered." W. B. Shaw
+ R of Rs 81:8 Ap '30 1000w

"It is difficult to overestimate the value of Professor Mott's book. To have written the first scholarly, careful, and exhaustive book on an important phase of American intellectual life which has been hitherto totally untouched —save by two books, one wretchedly inadequate and the other pretending to be no more than a mere sketch—is a sufficient claim to gratitude. To have made so solid a work—necessarily ballasted as it is with a vast mass of fact and with innumerable notes and bibliographical details—at the same time an interesting and readable book is little short of black magic." John Bakeless
+ Sat R of Lit 6:754 F 22 '30 1350w

"Of particular importance to the specialist—professor or social historian—of some interest to the student of manners, and of almost none to the general reader unless he may care to look at the illustrations, and snatch airily at some amusing quotations in the text. It is a painstaking work, a monument of industry treating of American 'periodical development' from every side."
Times [London] Lit Sup p205 Mr 13 '30 1200w
Wis Lib Bul 26:64 F '30

MOTT, THOMAS BENTLEY. Myron T. Herrick, friend of France; an autobiographical biography. 399p il $5 Doubleday, Doran [21s Heinemann]

B or 92 Herrick, Myron Timothy 29-29222

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:202 F '30

Reviewed by John Chamberlain
Bookm 71:112 Mr '30 350w

"As a picture of Herrick, the indomitable friend of France, trying to maintain the pose of a strictly neutral ambassador in Paris in the face of the onrushing armies of the Kaiser, Colonel Mott's book is admirable." W. J. Abbot
+ Christian Science Monitor p7 Ja 18 '30 1500w

"The affectionate account is probably not the definitive biography, but furnishes much intimate material toward it."
+ Cleveland Open Shelf p8 Ja '30

"In one respect Colonel Mott is eminently successful, namely, in showing the human and lovable quality of the man. But the work as a whole lacks structural perspective, a defect which becomes painfully apparent toward its close, when the biographer chronicles a mass of uneventful and unimportant details concerning Herrick's later life which are certainly unworthy of recording." Francis Snow
— + Current Hist 31:835 F '30 230w

Reviewed by H. D. Ziman
Nation and Ath 47:251 My 24 '30 130w
Pratt p37 spring '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:26 F '30 200w
St Louis 28:52 F '30
Sat R 149:533 Ap 26 '30 220w

"The biography, in spite of some incoherence, succeeds in producing upon the reader the impression not only that Herrick rendered an invaluable service in an hour of crisis but that he displayed in an exceptional degree the gifts of good sense, courage, and unselfishness, together with a rare personal charm."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p343 Ap 24 '30 850w

MOTT-SMITH, MAY. Africa from port to port. 424p il $5 Van Nostrand

916 Africa—Description and travel 30-13882

The author decided to emulate Vasco de Gama and conquer the African coast line. This is an informal account of her two years' trip, during which she traveled down the west coast to Cape Town, up the east coast to Madagascar, thence thru the Red Sea to Port Said.

"Spirited adventure, shrewd observation, and practical guide-book information for those contemplating travel far from the beaten path are features of this book." A. B. Maurice
+ Bookm 71:xiv Ag '30 300w

"Personal impressions, description and facts picked up in transit are thrown together in what might be termed agreeable feminine disorder. The result is interesting reading, with considerable knowledge painlessly acquired."
+ Books p12 Je 22 '30 100w

"The adventurous woman who made the trip carried with her a background of culture, an eye for both the beautiful and the curious, and a good sense of humor. So that her record of her experiences is above the average of travel books in its readability. It is well illustrated." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 155:146 My 28 '30 80w

MOTTRAM, RALPH HALE. Rich man's daughter (Eng title: Europa's beast). 317p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Chatto]

30-25153

A continuation of the story of Geoffrey Skene, the hero of The Spanish Farm (Book Review Digest, 1924). Ten years after the war Skene is located at Easthampton as a municipal architect. Here he meets and falls in love with Olive, daughter of a local wartime profiteer, who is married to a man interested solely in aeronautics. The book traces the development of the love story of Skene and Olive to its inevitable culmination.

Booklist 27:208 Ja '31

"This new novel cluttered with exaggerated minor characters and burdened by a denouement of moviesque dimensions, is, nevertheless, saved from the mire of mediocrity by superbly realistic portraiture and a prose of dignity and restraint. . . Mr. Mottram carries out the inevitable march of events with clarity and grace. His neat, precise sentences merge imperceptibly into the classic simplicity they try to convey. His is a technique notable for its inconspicuousness. Judged as the work of one of England's finest novelists, 'A Rich Man's Daughter' forces the reader into an unwilling recognition of its failings, but regarded as a unit of creation it remains a novel of assured sincerity and tenderness, if not distinction." W. J. Fadiman

+ — Books p18 O 19 '30 750w

"Possibly he is too prone in the present instance to sacrifice story to background, speed to depth; and he is undoubtedly beginning to become conscious that he is a considerable stylist. But an author who curbs sensationalism as he has done, without prudishness or sacrifice of honesty, in 'A Rich Man's Daughter,' is entitled to a few more venial faults." J. F. S.

+ — Boston Transcript p1 N 8 '30 500w

Reviewed by Edith Weigle

Chicago Daily Tribune p16 N 29 '30 80w

"Mr. Mottram's characters are unforgettable, from the thumb-nail sketch of the old gypsy grandmother to the life-sized portrait of Olive. The author's clear, flexible prose conveys a sense of masterly ease, and with that kind of reticence that means there are generous reserves to spare. There is an architectural beauty that comes from the right fusion of craftsman and artist. This novel is as good as 'The Spanish Farm,' and any author is to be envied of whose work that could be said." K. C. Tomlinson

+ Nation and Ath 47:253 My 24 '30 280w

New Statesman 35:218 My 24 '30 40w

"An excellent romance, a romance the more satisfying because it is written in Mr. Mottram's lucid, pleasing prose." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p4d O 18 '30 120w

"Geoffrey Skene lives but the same cannot be said of the other characters in the book. Mottram has written a readable story about them but not with the moving magic that informed his story of the strange farm in Flanders."

+ — N Y Times p7 O 26 '30 550w

"Up to the crisis the triangular situation is handled with perfect logic and artistry, but there the sheer obviousness of the means employed to solve the dilemma—too long apparent to the reader as the way out the author will resort to—strikes one as the single flaw in the novel's otherwise faultless structure." E. C. Beckwith

+ — N Y World p3e N 16 '30 200w

"This volume will certainly not enhance the enviable reputation which Mr. Mottram won by his 'Spanish Farm Trilogy,' but on the other hand, from Homer down, every author has the right to an occasional nod. Let us be charitable and assume that 'A Rich Man's Daughter' was written during one of the author's nodding periods, and that having got a rather poor book out of his system, he will again settle down to fulfill the rich promise of his earlier work."

— + Sat R of Lit 7:398 N 29 '30 320w

"There are a sober grace and sensitiveness in this book which raise it high above the normal output of love stories, though love story it uncompromisingly is, perhaps surprisingly from the pen which gave us that fine, grave War-book The Spanish Farm. Young Skene, demobilized and as solitary as he is disillusioned, is very lucidly revealed. Though his surroundings are dull and his subsequent adventures ordinary enough, Mr. Mottram skilfully illumines them for us by his carefully simple choice of words and by his masterly handling. Something of the sheer reality and drama of which we are conscious behind the bald account in a newspaper story creeps into his account of the association between his hero and a bewildered and unhappy married girl. What befalls them is less and less important than what they become through each other."

+ Spec 144:1020 Je 21 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p368 My 1 '30 400w

MOTTRAM, RALPH HALE; EASTON, JOHN; and PARTRIDGE, ERIC. Three men's war; the personal records of active service (Eng title: Three personal records of the war). 375p $3 Harper [15s Scholartls]

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives 30-9746

Three personal records of war experience are given in this book: John Easton's Broadchalk, R. H. Mottram's A Personal Record, and Eric Partridge's Frank Honywood, Private. Easton, a platoon commander in the 24th Division, describes thru his character, Broadchalk, the experiences of a nineteen-year-old subaltern at the front. Mr Mottram gives an account of the Ypres salient and of administrative work. Mr Partridge, an Australian infantryman, writes of his service in the Gallipoli campaign.

Booklist 26:390 Jl '30

Bookm 72:vi O '30 100w

Books p10 My 4 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 7 '30 630w

Cleveland Open Shelf p140 N '30

"The personal records of Mr. Mottram and his book-fellows are some of the best that have appeared; Mr. Mottram's, indeed, is particularly good, avoiding any suggestion of 'literary' values, keeping to the facts, without exaggeration and without extenuation."

+ Nation and Ath 46:sup226 N 9 '29 200w

Reviewed by G. T. Hellman

New Repub 62:357 My 14 '30 180w

"All were well worth preserving, but Mr. Easton is quite definitely the most impressive of the three."

+ New Statesman 34:sup xviii D 7 '29 80w

Reviewed by Eugene Lohrke

N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 26 '30 850w

Reviewed by L. C. Woodman

N Y Times p6 My 18 '30 650w

Reviewed by Bellamy Partridge

N Y World p11m My 11 '30 280w

St Louis 28:219 S '30

"From reading these reminiscences we get more fresh facts, more new ideas about the war than we have succeeded in getting from any three novels. The general reader will be well rewarded for taking the time to follow the three men through their fighting days. The volume is worthy of being put alongside the other honest war books, and perhaps more than many of those others, it will throw cold water on the imagined satisfactions of soldiering."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:75 Ag 23 '30 320w

"Mr. Mottram is able to give us a very rare view of the War, and to bring home the full meaning of that maniac invention 'the war of attrition,' of which he saw the most significant side. The vision brings, as he says, 'complete contempt of the social, political and industrial leaders, the military ones having such insignificant influence.' His account is a masterpiece in that it passes this vision on, as indeed are both the others in this impressive book."

+ Spec 143:921 D 14 '29 250w

"In any collection of war books this volume has an important place." H. K.

+ Springf'd Republican p7e My 18 '30 1250w

MOTTRAM, R. H., and others—Continued

"Mr. Easton's is not only the best of these three accounts, but deserves to rank high in the literature of the War."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p859 O 31 '29 950w

MOULT, THOMAS, ed. Best poems of 1930. 100p $2.50 Harcourt [6s Cape]

821.08 English poetry—Collections. American poetry—Collections (A27-176)

Thomas Moult's selection of poems from English and American periodicals for the past year. Among the poets included are Conrad Aiken, Richard Aldington, A. E. Coppard, G. K. Chesterton, W. H. Davies, Mark Van Doren, Gerald Gould, Walter de la Mare, James Rorty, Evelyn Scott, Humbert Wolfe, and Victoria Sackville West.

Reviewed by Richard Church

Christian Science Monitor p9 O 25 '30 450w

New Repub 65:119 D 10 '30 50w

"Mr. Moult has to make a volume, not a thin, but honest pamphlet; and in it, therefore, he packs no fewer than eighty poems, of which, it seems to me, seventy-six might as well be represented by white paper. . . Only four kept me from throwing the book into the street. Mr. Moult, if you cannot by hook or by crook find eighty good poems in 1931, at least be bolder and search more widely: there are enough anthologists meekly trooping behind accepted taste." Geoffrey Grigson

— Sat R 150:493 O 18 '30 270w

"There are many notable names included, and yet somehow as one runs through the contributions, there seems to be an astonishing lack of salience to them. . . Though the writing is usually dignified and the subjects of interest, we remain perfectly cold to the various statements." W. R. Benét

— Sat R of Lit 7:288 N 1 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p976 N 20 '30 220w

MOWBRAY, ALBERT HENRY. Insurance; its 2 theory and practice in the United States. (McGraw-Hill insurance ser.) 639p $4 (20s) McGraw

368 Insurance 30-17053

"The author of this volume surveys the whole field of insurance: fire, marine, life, casualty and miscellaneous forms. . . The book is divided into six parts: risk; the insurance contract; types of insurance carriers; the problems of the insurance carrier; state supervision; and insurance in state policy. The appendices contain numerous forms and blanks."—Am Econ R

"The task has been well done, especially the handling of the principles underlying the underwriting business. [The author] has unified the apparently divergent principles of the various phases of insurance into a coherent whole. . . Only one chapter is devoted exclusively to life underwriting, although in volume this division exceeds all the other branches combined. In fact, the discussion of life insurance is far too brief. . . The author displays a very creditable willingness to criticize the insurance companies for undesirable practices and methods, his treatment of insurance and the State being unusually well done." F. G. Dickinson

+ — Am Econ R 20:784 D '30 250w

Booklist 27:140 D '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:80 N '30

St Louis 28:207 S '30

MOXLEY, F. WRIGHT. Red snow. 409p $1 Simon & Schuster

30-19834

"On an August day of 1935 there was a brief precipitation all over the earth of a reddish dust which struck through roofs, clothing, everything, till it came to rest on human flesh. Then it disappeared with no perceptible consequence but a little itching; and not till all the children conceived before the fall of the red snow had been born did the world realize that no more children were on the way, that human fertility had been destroyed, that when the men and women then living had died, the history of Man would end."—Sat R of Lit

Reviewed by Guy Holt

Bookm 72:207 O '30 30w

Reviewed by J. K. Atkins

Books p2 Ag 17 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p2 N 5 '30 300w

"Mr. Moxley has not the vision of prophecy nor the touch of satire. He pounds his ideas home with a sledge-hammer, and strives, against the enormous difficulties, for realism. There is nothing diffident about Mr. Moxley. He plunges in where a Swift or a Butler would fear to tread, and tells a tale full of sound and fury, signifying very little. In short, it is a hodge-podge of underdone notions, impossible situations, and rant."

— Nation 131:303 S 17 '30 150w

"The only significant feature of the book is a pervasive bitterness; but this emotion is buried under the weight of a super-literary style and Mr. Moxley's erudition. The impression ultimately conveyed is one of all-embracing and pretentious pity."

— New Repub 64:358 N 12 '30 180w

"The idea back of this savage satire on contemporary civilization is so striking and its presentation is, in parts, so excellent, that one must regret that the author has permitted it to be strangled in a confused, chaotic narrative, which, while appropriate to its subject, is bewildering to the reader. . . The idea is good, while the action is spasmodic and unsatisfying."

— + N Y Times p7 Ag 10 '30 700w

"The book has a wide sweep and is immensely detailed, but somehow it left us not only cold, but yawning, and when the last man died, we hove a sigh of relief. For there is very little in it that is human." W. R. Brooks

— Outlook 155:630 Ag 20 '30 100w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 156:147 S 24 '30 230w

"There is an excellent beginning; but the working out of the idea requires a more powerful imagination and a greater technical skill than Mr. Moxley possesses. No doubt the behavior of the human race facing slow extinction would be fantastic, and frequently obscene; but the incidents he invents are in the main psychologically improbable, and he has failed to make them plausible. They give him a chance to express his opinion on a great number of things, persons, and habits of mind that he dislikes, but the reader fails to get much excited thereby. The later chapters are frequently effective; but the picture of necessity is drab and dreary, and offers no great compensation for the unconvincing grotesqueries that have gone before."

— + Sat R of Lit 7:109 S 6 '30 320w

MOYER, JAMES AMBROSE, and WOSTREL, JOHN FRANK. Industrial electricity and wiring. 469p il $2.75 McGraw

621.3 Electric engineering. Electric wiring 30-7393

"Plainly written practical book for the electrician inexperienced in the installation and maintenance of wiring for its various purposes. Explains fundamental theory and units, and has chapters on the splicing and soldering of wires; calculation of wiring systems; wiring methods and types; electric generators and motors and their wiring; transformers and connections; industrial, residential, outdoor, and theatre wiring; estimating; control apparatus, grounding, etc. 'Written for those in the electrical industry preparing for proficiency.' "—Pratt

Booklist 26:383 Jl '30

N Y New Tech Bks 15:27 Ap '30

Pratt p17 autumn '30

MOZLEY, JOHN KENNETH, ed. G. A. Studdert Kennedy, by his friends. 251p il $2 Smith, R.R. [5s Hodder]

B or 92 Studdert-Kennedy, Geoffrey Anketell [30-14586]

Tributes by personal friends, all of them fellow-ministers, comprise this little volume dedicated to the young Irish clergyman who throughout the war was known as "Woodbine Willie." The contributors are the Archbishop of York, the Deans of Worcester and Guernsey, the Rev. P. T. R. Kirk, Dr. J. K. Mozley, and the Dean of Canterbury.

Reviewed by T. C. Richards
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 2 '30 1950w

Nation and Ath 46:sup230 N 9 '29 200w

N Y Times p17 Jl 29 '30

MUIR, AUGUSTUS. Silent partner. 306p $2 Bobbs [3s 6d Methuen]

30-4297

"Richard Hepburn is a young man in comfortable circumstances, who suffers from boredom except when playing cricket for his county. Into his flat one evening there enters a pretty girl, obviously distressed. She announces that she lives on the floor above, but refuses all further information concerning herself; nor will she explain the cause of her fear, although she begs a temporary shelter with him. Richard insists upon becoming her champion, a role which involves him in much fighting, scheming, racing about in high-power cars, eavesdropping at secret meetings of international moment and escaping torture by almost incredible good luck."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p22 F 9 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 5 '30 180w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 7 '30 120w

"This is a very closely packed and swiftly moving story of romance and adventure."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1036 D 5 '29 200w

MUIR, MRS DAPHNE. Pied piper (Eng title: Lost crusade). 277p $2.50 Holt [7s 6d Chatto]

30-21868

A story which has for its theme the tragic Children's crusade of medieval days, when forty thousand children, led by Stephen, the inspired French boy, and Charla, the girl-companion who loved him, suffered and perished on their pilgrimage to the Holy Land.

"The story is told with a sensitiveness to sound and color emphasized by a figurative language that is at times extravagant, yet never too extravagant." M. M. Waterman
+ Bookm 72:418 D '30 300w

Reviewed by D. F. Gilman
Books p13 Ag 31 '30 500w

Boston Transcript p2 O 1 '30 350w

Christian Century 47:1092 S 10 '30 150w

"One of the noblest and most tragic enterprises in history is exquisitely dealt with in 'The Lost Crusade.' " K. C. T.
+ Nation and Ath 47:447 Jl 5 '30 80w

New Statesman 35:120 My 3 '30 80w

"It is the business of the critic to criticize, and there is little in Mrs. Muir's exquisite story to call forth much, if any, adverse criticism. It is indeed a work of art, and memorable too. The story of Stephen and Charla will remain unforgetable."
+ N Y Times p9 D 28 '30 550w

"The Children's Crusade was like the annual migration of white butterflies to the sea which is often told as an instance of collective suicide. As you read Pied Piper, you see these fluttering hordes driven by instinct toward their inevitable destruction and you feel, in the author's tenuous descriptions, the same remote poetic sadness that you might feel watching the butterflies on their way to death. The book, while gracefully balanced, lies motionless." V. P. Ross
Outlook 156:68 S 10 '30 400w

"The story of this crusade is absorbing. Whatever the temptations towards sentimentality, the piteous, or the consciously pathetic, may have been, Mrs. Muir has avoided them scrupulously. In a clear, singing prose of marked beauty the story moves on to its climax, the bright banners move on to their defeat. 'Pied Piper' is a gracious book that has time for pleasant comment on its way. There is no hurry about it; character is built up bit by bit and scenes are given step by step." Gladys Graham
+ Sat R of Lit 7:69 Ag 23 '30 1050w

"One is inclined, after reading Miss Muir's courageous but awkward presentation, to deny history and declare that the Children's Crusade never occurred." V. S. Pritchett
— Spec 144:713 Ap 26 '30 150w

"Since the outward trappings of mediaevalism were naturally of too superficial an interest for her, and since the illusion of modernity was denied to her, she was compelled to fall back upon the far more difficult task of interpreting, in a rich but never purple prose, the underlying passion of the mediaeval spirit. In this she succeeded, I think, brilliantly. I should have said, at a guess, that the attempt was beyond the powers and the temper of any modern novelist: Mrs. Muir's book confutes me. I was moved by it, and convinced, in a way that no bare synopsis of the book could have induced me to believe possible." V. Sackville-West
+ Spec 144:1056 Je 28 '30 130w

"Her acquaintance with medieval life and thought is of the conventional kind. She hesitates in style between modern naivety and vague generalizations. The wanderings of the children are traced picturesquely, but the story does not move of itself, and it is significant that there is almost an entire absence of dialogue. Half-way through the book she abandons the deadweight of the theme, and, emerging into fancy, gives us another story which is more modern and successful in its appeal."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p436 My 22 '30 250w

MUIR, RAMSAY. How Britain is governed; a critical analysis of modern developments in the British system of government. 333p $4; college ed $3 Smith, R.R. [12s 6d Constable]

354.42 Great Britain—Politics and government. Great Britain—Constitutional history
30-19432

Professor Muir analyzes the changes that have come about in the British system of government during the last half-century and more particularly during the last thirty years, changes which have completely transformed its character. Among the most important of the changes discussed are the increase in range and power of bureaucracy, the growth of Cabinet dictatorship, the incapability of both houses of Parliament to exercise an effective control over the Government on behalf of the people, and the growth of rigid party organization and discipline.

Reviewed by E. P. Chase
Am Pol Sci R 24:759 Ag '30 350w

"Mr. Muir's language has a familiar sound. He does not write, however, as a carping critic, but as a sincere lover of his country who wants to see its governmental system improved in the interest of the country. . . Not the least praiseworthy features of the book are its readableness and its fairness." C. R. Woodruff
+ Ann Am Acad 152:412 N '30 450w

Reviewed by F. H. Underhill
Canadian Hist R 11:363 D '30 450w

"Altogether a most stimulating, informative, and forward-looking book. Mr. Muir does not attempt to conceal the fact that he writes as an active politician, and as a Liberal. And it will be a subject of satisfaction, not only to his fellow Liberals, but to all who agree that the subjects which he agitates call for study and action, that he is in a position to be listened to." Maurice Amos

MUIR, RAMSAY—Continued
+ Nation and Ath 47:20 Ap 5 '30 1200w

"His description of the existing system is brilliantly done: there is a vivid sense of realities and a constant use of picturesque 'reporting,' as in the account of a normal day in the Commons. For this alone the book would be valuable. It should displace the ancestral pictures of the 1860's, by Bagehot and Mill, which still adorn our walls. But Mr. Muir has given us genuine political thinking in another sense of the words. He has not only seen the facts; he reviews them with the eye of a reformer." C. D. B.
+ New Statesman 34:810 Mr 29 '30 1300w

"Prof. Ramsay Muir has the triple advantage of writing a book on Government of experience as a member of Parliament, an editor and an academic student of the subject. His work is not only faultlessly lucid but is marked by a pleasing novelty of presentation." G. E. G. Catlin
+ N Y World p8m My 18 '30 400w

Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 156:110 S 17 '30 80w
Pratt p11 autumn '30
St Louis 28:232 O '30
Reviewed by Claud Mullins
Sat R 149:392 Mr 29 '30 800w
Spec 144:678 Ap 19 '30 130w

"Mr. Muir's book, always suggestive and often searching, suffers from a certain duality of purpose. His primary business is to analyse the working of our Constitution and to note the changes which have taken place since Bagehot wrote his classic study. But, finding himself confronted by a variety of unsatisfactory developments, he goes on to consider remedies and is thus led to advocate the proposals put forward by the party to which he himself belongs. His book is thus in part a constitutional treatise and in part a Liberal pamphlet."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p284 Ap 3 '30 900w

MUIRHEAD, JOHN HENRY. Coleridge as philosopher. (Lib. of philosophy) 287p $4 Macmillan [12s 6d Allen, G.]
192 Coleridge, Samuel Taylor [30-31397]

"This most recent study of the author of 'Kubla Khan,' written by a Professor of Philosophy of the University of Birmingham, has for its purpose the establishment of Coleridge's claims as a philosopher in his own right. The attempt is also made to measure the exact extent of his influence on the philosophy of his own time and on the great revival of metaphysical study in England during the latter half of the nineteenth century."— N Y Times

"Dr. Muirhead attributes to Coleridge a philosophy far more thoroughly organized and effective than has usually been admitted. In a compact volume—the outgrowth from a larger history of idealism—Dr. Muirhead gives us a guide to Coleridge's teaching which is not only deeply instructive but entertaining; the book also contains several new passages from MSS., and fine ones too."
+ Nation and Ath 48:114 O 18 '30 180w

"A book of admirably concentrated exposition and criticism."
+ New Statesman 36:20 O 11 '30 1150w
N Y Times p15 N 16 320w

"In his preface Prof. Muirhead claims modestly to have written a book whose interest is mainly for those interested in technical philosophy. But even though the style is somewhat lacking in vigour it would be strange if it did not attract an even larger public. The spectacle of a poet who was also a philosopher of high value is sufficiently rare in the history of thought, and Prof. Muirhead has done a real service in emphasizing Coleridge's claims as one of the pioneers of English idealism." Quintin Hogg
Sat R 150:347 S 20 '30 550w
Times [London] Lit Sup p830 O 16 '30 1050w

MUKERJI, DHAN GOPAL. Disillusioned India. 224p $2.50 Dutton
915.4 India—Politics and government. India—Description and travel 30-29275

Written as a result of his recent visit to India, Mr Mukerji's book takes up the problems, the attitude and the work of India's younger generation in relation to the revolutionary movement. He has also interviewed representatives of other Indian classes and types, and has come to the conclusion that there is general inconsistency and a lack of unity of opinion regarding India and her independence.

Booklist 27:202 Ja '31

"His book is not profound, but it presents an interesting picture of India as seen by an Indian who lives in this country."
Bookm 72:xiv D '30 100w

"Every class of Indian, says Mr. Mukerji, is disillusioned about the British overlordship. Mr. Mukerji does not analyze the statistics of revolt, recite items of economic exploitation, narrate horrors of imperialistic brutality, sing a hymn of hate. His method is strictly one of personal interview, impressionistic description, reports of experiences with lawyers, politicians, women, peasants, fakirs, holy men. It is a method that is selective, as is that of those whose propaganda consists of fulminatory tirades for the one side or the other. But it is at least better humored, and there are poetic touches in his description that give the reader moments of joy."
+ Books p10 N 9 '30 200w
Reviewed by R. M. Lovett
New Repub 65:106 D 10 '30 280w

"The reader who thinks that Mukerji is going to do a lot of arguing for the East Indian cause will be happily mistaken. He will find the whole work an adventure and some of the pages carrying the lighter touch of good humor." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p9 O 11 '30 350w

MUKERJI, DHAN GOPAL. Rama, the hero of India; Valmiki's Ramayana done into a short English version for boys and girls by [the author]; il. by Edgar Parin D'Aulaire. 220p $2.50 Dutton
Vālmīki 30-23246

A retelling, for children, of the story of Rama, the mighty hero of India, and his beautiful wife, Seti, who was stolen by the ten-necked demon, Ravana. The book is founded on the poet Valmiki's Ramayana.

Reviewed by A. C. Moore
Atlantic Bookshelf p48 D '30 50w
Booklist 27:110 N '30

"In this story of the Ramayana, the great epic poem of India has been vividly and connectedly retold for young people. It will make its greatest appeal to the exceptional boy and girl and also to those adults who delight in Mr. Mukerji's poetic prose, for he has done a fine piece of work in retelling 'these doings of Rama.' The interesting illustrations are by the French artist, Edgar Parin D'Aulaire." T. C. B.
+ Library J 55:925 N 15 '30 80w
Nation 131:558 N 19 '30 150w
Reviewed by Padraic Colum
New Repub 65:23 N 19 '30 200w

"The first part of the book is better than the last, which seems slightly hurried, though the picture of Hanuman, the wise and noble monkey, in whom Pavana, the god of wind and storm, was incarnated, is unforgetable. The illustrations are disappointing; the chapter headings are excellent but the full-page drawings are more successful in suggesting the grotesque attributes of the demons than the atmosphere of the book as a whole." A. T. Eaton

+ — N Y Times p30 S 28 '30 500w

Reviewed by Beulah Amidon

Survey 65:341 D 15 '30 30w

MUKERJI, DHAN GOPAL. Visit India with me. 298p il $3.50 Dutton

915.4 India—Description and travel. India—Social life and customs 29-28062

A native of India, Dhan Mukerji, creates an imaginary American friend, Mr Eagles, with whom he visits India and to whom he reveals the art, philosophy, and the people of the country. The book, tho in the form of a travelogue, is strictly speaking a sympathetic interpretation of Indian culture and ideals.

Booklist 26:200 F '30

Bookm 71:xviii Je '30 430w

Boston Transcript p3 D 11 '29 1150w

"What a large-sized job this new work is nobody knows better than he and whether or not he has succeeded in doing it truthfully and justly needs intimate and profound knowledge of India to say. But at least he has done it very effectively, with emotional force, attractive presentation and a quality that deeply stirs intellectual interest and curiosity."

N Y Times p12 My 4 '30 350w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 153:599 D 11 '29 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:27 Mr '30

St Louis 28:51 F '30

MULFORD, CLARENCE EDWARD. Deputy sheriff. 296p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder]

30-6807

The author of "Hopalong Cassidy" herein narrates the adventures of Nueces and Shorty, of the J C ranch, and of Sheriff Bob Carson, in pursuit of the bandit chief, El Toro, and on the trail of an enterprising band of cattle rustlers.

Booklist 26:313 My '30

"The yarn is well worth swallowing for its frontier vernacular alone, and it has other attractions of speed and picturesque incident." Will Cuppy

+ Books p18 F 16 '30 80w

N Y Evening Post p10m F 15 '30 50w

N Y Times p24 Mr 16 '30 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p169 F 27 '30 70w

MULLER, EDWIN, Jr. They climbed the Alps. 217p pl $3 (10s 6d) Cape

796.52 Mountaineering. Alps 30-8883

"The author, evidently taking a great delight in mountaineering and in the story of mountaineering adventure, has presented that story in the form of extracts from the classic narratives, connected by a running comment of his own."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 27:57 O '30

Books p17 Je 22 '30 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p142 N '30

Reviewed by Sylva Norman

Nation and Ath 47:800 S 27 '30 200w

New Statesman 35:346 Je 21 '30 350w

"Although none of his material is new, Mr. Muller has made his cullings with judgment, combined them skilfully, considered them from his own individual angle of vision, and wrought them into a fascinating narrative."

+ N Y Times p21 Ap 13 '30 400w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:14 Jl '30 80w

"A very fine book, one in which the matter, the style and the illustrations are worthy of the subject." J. S. Coltart

+ Sat R 150:872 D 27 '30 550w

"The exploits of many famous climbers are recorded with the most admirable economy, and there is not the slightest touch of patronage in Mr. Muller's account of the smaller essays of adventuring amateurs: in his eyes all who woo the mountains have equal rights."

+ Spec 144:833 My 17 '30 270w

"This is a very pleasant and unpretentious book. Mr. Muller rarely obtrudes his own personality and never recounts his own exploits. In his choice of material and in his method of presentation Mr. Muller has done well."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p408 My 15 '30 600w

MULLER-LYER, FRANZ CARL. Evolution of modern marriage; a sociology of sexual relations; tr. by Isabella C. Wigglesworth. 248p $4 Knopf [12s 6d Allen, G.]

392 Marriage. Family. Love [30-13205]

Müller-Lyer's Phasen der Liebe, of which this is the first English translation, was first published in 1913. "The three stages of human love—primitive, family and personal—are here considered in their relation to the institution of marriage and its economic determinants. The study proceeds from the primitive days when chastity, sexual modesty, and erotic jealousy were unknown, through the period when woman was regarded as mere chattel, and finally down to the present and woman's struggle for economic and sexual emancipation. The last portion of the book is a forecast of the probable future and, basing his conclusions on the evolutionary phases of the past, the author predicts a more rational adjustment of sex relationships with women, economically independent, as the equivalent rather than the equal, of man." (Publisher's note)

"As it stands, it is decidedly behind the times, and is of no great value to the American student. The book is readable and is liberally documented; but like most writers in this field, the author has picked out isolated instances of customs that met with his preconceived ideas, and has ignored everything else." Paul Popenoe

— + Ann Am Acad 151:288 S '30 250w

Booklist 27:51 O '30

"This book is something of a trade curiosity. Any one who lived through the decade 1905-1915 can date it. 'Phasen der Liebe,' was published in Germany in 1913 as an expanded and academic handbook on the emancipation of women and the orderly unilateral evolution of marriage. It has been translated as it stood, to recall, I suppose, to those for whom that was the golden age the exact flavor of the here-returning past . . . Mr. Müller-Lyer, after the fashion of most wordy and academic supporters of feminism of his day, used only second-hand sources and not many of them."

— Books p16 Ap 13 '30 300w

"The attempt at an analysis of the vast subject covered by the title of the book is a failure. The material is too varied. Perhaps the author collected notes on anything connected with marriage. Some of these notes are interesting; but the book gives no clear idea of our contemporary problem." C. D. B.

— Int J Ethics 40:568 Jl '30 80w

Reviewed by V. F. Calverton

Nation 131:21 Jl 2 '30 1050w

"In spite of the delay the translation is welcome, for, although the work in no respect supersedes Westermarck's great history of marriage, it is interesting on account of its speculations with regard to the sexual life led by man's pre-human ancestors, and its interpretation of marriage as it has developed under

MULLER-LYER, F. C.—Continued
the stress of changing economic and social conditions."
+ New Statesman 35:26 Ap 12 '30 250w
St Louis 28:204 S '30

"While this account of the evolution of marriage may inspire less confidence than that of Westermarck, Briffault, or Crawley, it does provide a fresh context for well known facts and a theory that bears looking into. At the least it sets up a substantial windmill for the knights of the young science of sociology to tilt against. And any book on marriage which contains a credible demonstration of the 'pliability of sexual morality' deserves one good mark in the records." F. W. Binkley
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1012 My 3 '30 700w
Times [London] Lit Sup p136 F 20 '30 1450w

MULLINS, HELENE. Balm in Gilead. 99p $2 Harper
811 30-11159

Graceful, easily turned lyrics in a variety of verse forms, most of them reflecting a mood of resignation after suffering the disillusionments of life.

For biographical sketch of the author see N Y World p10m May 4 '30

Booklist 27:198 Ja '31

"Miss Mullins has a pleasing talent that tends to diminish into a poetic jargon. She is prolix where she might be terse with greater effect, and her best melodies often occur in the midst of larger designs which are in the act of spinning themselves far too thin. Strangely enough, although her intention is evidently to take advantage of every effective means, and all sure-fire methods—all the charms and fancies that are bound to please—she has not found yet that an ounce of brevity is worth a pound of literary dissertation. She is therefore most attractive in certain of the artificial French forms where the very form restrains her, and where her natural facility can be counted upon to overflow the tight line with an ease denied many a better poet." Genevieve Taggard
— + Books p14 Ag 24 '30 850w

"Helene Mullins's lyrics are closely stitched; they bear themselves fluently and proudly. Hers is no small skill in the sonnet, one capable of vital and well-graduated eloquences; and 'Lamenting the Inevitable' is a grave and singular music." Vincent McHugh
+ N Y Evening Post p5s Je 7 '30 70w

"When a few years ago poems signed by Miss Mullins began to appear in periodicals it became quickly apparent that a poet of rare discernment and an artist of promise had appeared on the scene. This promise has never been belied by Miss Mullins in her subsequent work, which has, on the contrary, increased in profundity, in range and in perfectness of execution."
+ N Y Times p19 Je 1 '30 500w

"Her poems are far more substantial than those of a dozen more laborious and pretentious contemporaries. She does lack, however, that final distinction that would entitle her to rank with the foremost of her fellow poets. One scans 'Balm in Gilead' eagerly, hoping that in at least one poem some perfect and powerful conception will be perfectly and powerfully expressed. It never happens." Granville Hicks
— + N Y World p7m Je 1 '30 200w

"Helene Mullins's verse is honest, admirable, and wise. Something better is coming out of her work some day, when her balances weigh and rest, and when she loses some of her too-great facility and the habit of newspaper verse." L. T. Nicholl
+ — Outlook 155:146 My 28 '30 100w

"The poems are well made, but hardly inspired. Miss Mullins has published very clever light verse here and there, but little of it is here preserved." H. M.
— + Poetry 36:288 Ag '30 200w

MUNDY, TALBOT. Black light. 315p $2 Bobbs ^{3} [7s 6d Hutchinson]
30-31029

"In which Joe Beddington and his wealthy and selfish mother go to India to try to find the daughter of an old school friend of Mrs. B's who was taken away by her Indian nurse when her parents died of cholera. Joe locates the girl in a temple, but it is only with the aid of the occult rites of a mysterious yogi that justice is finally done."—Outlook

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 N 9 '30 120w

"The author has been quite successful conveying whiffs of exotic atmosphere to his readers, but less so in vivifying his characters."
— + N Y Times p31 N 16 '30 270w

"It's a good tale of the semi-occult, semi-action kind, although it is rather too long, and the author has an irritating habit of repeating himself." W. R. Brooks
+ — Outlook 156:391 N 5 '30 150w

"Mr. Mundy seems to be in a fair way to rival Mr. Edgar Wallace. Novels stream from his industrious pen. This, perhaps, is a pity: Mr. Mundy would probably do better work if he did a little less work."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p1016 N 27 '30 180w

MUNDY, TALBOT. Cock o' the north. 340p $2 Bobbs
29-25607

"A vigorous story of frontier life in India. Gup McLeod, a Scotsman, is drawn into the power of the ex-Ranee of Jullunder, an amazingly beautiful English girl. He finds her involved in a conspiracy with the Afghan Amir, with an army concealed in the hills, but he finds also that, proud and mysterious and powerful as she is, she is surrounded by treachery and betrayal. It is to this crisis in her life that Gup McLeod brings the decision and strength that are so necessary to her. It is inevitable that the contact between these two personalities should have dramatic results." —N Y Times

Boston Transcript p8 D 28 '29 160w
Cleveland Open Shelf p15 Ja '30

"The author, who recently has shown grave symptoms of going literary, returns to his earlier and, to us, far more heartening vein of rough-and-tumble, magnificently implausible adventure. 'Cock o' the North' is a swell yarn." F. F. Van de Water
+ N Y Evening Post p13m N 23 '29 80w

"The story reaches our imagination rather than our emotions. Talbot Mundy writes vividly and has made of 'Cock o' the North' a spirited tale, rich in color and interest."
+ N Y Times p16 Ja 12 '30 200w
Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 13 '30 280w

MUNN, GLENN G. Meeting the bear market; how to prepare for the coming bull market. 276p $2.50 Harper
332.6 Speculation. Stock exchange. Stocks
30-8368

"Outlines the principles of stock movements specifically to determine the lower and upper limits of minor and major cycles, and analyses the character and probable duration of the present depression."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Booklist 27:140 D '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p69 My '30

"If it is a specific treatment on what to do now that you want, turn to 'Meeting the Bear Market' for the best tonic that has been administered yet. Its contribution lies in the concrete statistical but highly readable picture it draws of history's greatest bear market. But from this 'backcasting' comes material for forecasting. It winds up with a chapter on what the market will do from here." P. W. Garrett
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 22 '30 100w

N Y Times p20 Je 22 '30 70w
St Louis 28:206 S '30
Special Libraries 21:345 N '30

MUNRO, HECTOR HUGH (SAKI, pseud.). Short stories of Saki; complete, with an introd. by Christopher Morley. 718p il $3 Viking press [7s 6d Lane]
30-27685

Contents: Reginald; Reginald in Russia; The chronicles of Clovis, Beasts and super-beasts; The toys of peace; The square egg; Biography of Saki, by E. M. Munro.

Booklist 27:164 D '30
Reviewed by B. R. Redman
Books p12 N 8 '30 550w

"An abundant feast for all lovers of Munro's work; but we wish that we could have had The Unbearable Bassington included as well. The space occupied by the biography would have been better devoted to that exquisite satire."
+ New Statesman 36:158 N 8 '30 50w

"Short and light as his stories are they exist, as Mr. Christopher Morley says, to be read, not criticized. If dragged apart and analyzed they can become as tasteless as a cold souffiee. They were practically all written before the war, yet they are as entertaining today and as illuminating of English life as when they first delighted the readers of the Westminster Gazette." L. H. Titterton
+ N Y Evening Post p5d N 8 '30 420w
Sat R 150:636 N 15 '30 320w

MUNRO, WILLIAM BENNETT. American influences on Canadian government. (Marfleet lectures, 1929) 154p $1.75 (7s 6d) Macmillan
354.71 Canada—Politics and government
30-26406

The volume is composed of three addresses, delivered at Toronto university, by Professor Munro of Harvard. Contents: Constitutional analogies and contrasts; Political parties and practical politics; and City government in Canada.

"Though some of Professor Munro's illustrations of his thesis may seem a little far-fetched, there is a wholesome breath of iconoclasm as regards both Canadian and American institutions. The thoughtful reader will perhaps wish that the author had gone further below the surface to discuss how far the Americanization of Canadian institutions is the result of imitation and how far of similarity of economic and other conditions. But it is perhaps too much to expect a work of political theory in a course of lectures obviously intended for the layman rather than exclusively for the specialist." R. A. MacKay
Am Pol Sci R 24:493 My '30 350w
Booklist 26:300 My '30
Boston Transcript p2 F 21 '30 480w

"The lectures are most stimulating and raise problems deserving the serious consideration of all Canadians interested in the problems of government." D. McArthur
+ Canadian Hist R 11:254 S '30 700w

"Mr. Munro, although he has been for twenty-five years a member of the faculty of Harvard University, where he is now Professor of American History and Government, is by birth, heritage and upbringing a Canadian, and therefore he can be supposed to take a balanced, fair-minded view of the extent and nature of the influence this country has exerted on the political development and usages of Canada. . . The little book ought to be of as much interest to any American interested in methods of government as to those across the border, and both are likely to find in it that provocative quality that drives thinking out of ruts and sets before the mind new angles of perception."
+ N Y Times p18 Ja 26 '30 400w

St Louis 28:133 My '30
Springf'd Republican p10 Ag 6 '30 600w

MUNRO, WILLIAM BENNETT. Constitution of the United States; a brief and general commentary. 197p $1.25 Macmillan
342.73 United States. Constitution 30-12685

"The purpose of this little volume, the author explains, is to present, in concise form and non-technical language, what the various clauses of the nation's fundamental law express and imply. 'It is for those who wish to acquire a general familiarity with the national constitution as a document, but who are not minded to follow all the intricacies of constitutional interpretation.' "—Am Pol Sci R

"Here is the constitution reduced to its simplest terms." E. P. H.
Am Pol Sci R 24:782 Ag '30 200w
Booklist 27:13 S '30

"The book should prove useful to persons whose political education, as far as constitutional matters are concerned, has been neglected and to those who, with no technical or special purpose in mind, approach the subject for the first time."
Nation 131:103 Jl 23 '30 150w

"The author, who holds the Chair of American Government and History in the Harvard faculty, not only writes with the authority that comes from long devotion to his specialty, but also possesses a noteworthy faculty for the exposition and discussion of such matters in clear, concise, illuminating and interesting style."
+ N Y Times p26 Je 8 '30 300w

MUNRO, WILLIAM BENNETT. Makers of the unwritten constitution. (Fred Morgan Kirby lectures, delivered at Lafayette college, 1929) 156p $1.50 (6s 6d) Macmillan
342.73 United States—Constitutional history. United States—Politics and government
30-4253

The four makers of the unwritten constitution whose work Professor Munro discusses are Alexander Hamilton, who established the economic supremacy of the federal government; John Marshall, who interpreted the principle of nationalism into the constitution; Andrew Jackson, who democratized the constitution; and Woodrow Wilson, who accentuated the leadership of the presidential office.

"This material is developed in a light and lucid fashion that is all the more vivid because of the linking of personality with abstract idea. The book is to be read for its emphasis upon significant constitutional developments rather than for its attention to detail. As popular lectures, the characterizations must have been singularly felicitous."
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:510 My '30 230w
Booklist 26:343 Je '30
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 26 '30 380w
Nation 131:208 Ag 20 '30 180w
New Statesman 35:418 Jl 5 '30 380w

"With little pretense he compresses a vast amount of research in the simplest language and shows why certain tendencies were inevitable." J. G.
+ N Y Evening Post p10m F 8 '30 100w

"The book makes no pretense of offering anything new of fact or interpretation, but it presents forcefully and illuminatingly a feature of our governmental system that greatly needs just this kind of interesting exposition."
+ N Y Times p18 F 9 '30 450w
Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 154:352 F 26 '30 80w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:52 Je '30
St Louis 28:132 My '30
Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 9 '30 330w

MUNSON, GORHAM BERT. Dilemma of the liberated; an interpretation of twentieth century humanism. 304p $3 Coward-McCann

149.9 Humanism 30-25913

This critical study of the new humanism in America begins with an historical account of the movement. Mr Munson continues with an analysis of the humanistic temper, and describes its American counterpart in France and England. He further relates humanism to science, education and leadership, economics and politics. In his final chapters Mr Munson states his own criticism of humanism.

Reviewed by Mary Colum
Books p6 D 28 '30 1250w

"In his newest book, as in all his others, Munson devotes himself to the pursuit of perfection. This time the doctrine which seems to promise him results is humanism, but in the end he is forced to admit that it doesn't quite fill the bill. . . Mr. Munson does not advance humanism a step beyond its position of some months ago. And since he disdains to meet any of the arguments already advanced against it, there is no need critically to discuss the doctrine here. The best one can do is to extract what fun one can from the spectacle of an amiable gentleman sweating away at 'perfecting' himself. Mr. Munson's book is an abortive afterclap in a famous thunderstorm. I hardly think it is a prelude to any more fructifying rain." C. H. Grattan
— Nation 131:475 O 29 '30 900w

"Mr. Munson simply writes tosh with a deadly and pedantic earnestness. . . He is a literary yearner and always has been." Burton Rascoe
— N Y Evening Post p4d N 1 '30 1250w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain
N Y Times p5 O 26 '30 550w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 O 6 '30 200w

"Munson's style, not hitherto distinguished for its clarity, is here admirably adapted to the simple and lucid exposition of his subject." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 156:309 O 22 '30 1300w
Survey 65:395 Ja 1 '31 320w

MUNTHE, AXEL MARTIN FREDRIK. Memories and vagaries. 257p $3 Dutton [6s Murray, J.]

B or 92 30-32764

Reprint of a book published in London many years before the Story of San Michele (Book Review Digest, 1929), a simpler and slighter book but one as much infused with the love of human kind. These earlier memories of the kind and sympathetic doctor include stories and anecdotes of life among the poor of Paris and Capri. Dr Munthe writes of animals too, with a like sympathy and understanding.

"Because these studies are colored with the personality of the man who produced them, their vitality has not evaporated. The touch is less sophisticated than in 'The Story of San Michele,' the surface of prose less burnished. But what they lack in these respects they do not lack in robust vigor and warmth. Perhaps, as the author says, they could have been rewritten to make a better book, but the exercise might have resulted in more loss than gain. Dr. Munthe is wise." Lisle Bell
+ Books p5 N 16 '30 550w

"Fascinating as is this book, it will perhaps disappoint readers of 'The Story of San Michele,' and will probably puzzle those who have not read the earlier book. Lacking the fully ripened understanding of human beings, it yet contains much wise philosophy and a great deal of beautiful fantasy. If the book is read, as it was intended to be, as a prelude to the later and larger work, it will attain its rightful stature and importance."
+ Boston Transcript p2 D 27 '30 180w

Reviewed by Fanny Butcher
Chicago Daily Tribune p12 N 15 '30 500w

"It is rather a pity that an earlier collection of essays, 'Memories and Vagaries,' should have been reprinted on the strength of the reception accorded 'San Michele.' These are slight, a little pompous, not patricularly distinguished; they lack the warmth that makes 'The Story of San Michele' rich and interesting."
— Nation 131:741 D 31 '30 80w
New Repub 65:173 D 24 '30 100w

"A vital, vigorous, and amusingly opinionated book. But it is no match for the mature and more adroitly constructed 'San Michele.' Whatever popularity it attains is likely to be due to the reflected glory of its predecessor." Margaret Wallace
+ N Y Times p5 N 30 '30 1050w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 N 11 '30 900w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 4 '31 250w

MURPHY, ALISON BARSTOW. Every which way in Ireland. 232p il $1.75 (6s) Putnam

914.15 Ireland—Description and travel 30-9836

An interesting account of a summer spent in Ireland by the author, who is a girl scout, with her mother and brothers.

"Here is a book that adds gayety and a surprising amount of factual information and genuine feeling for Ireland as a country. . . With her background of books and people and her gift of keen observation and humor the author is, I think, capable of writing a considerably better book than 'Every Which Way in Ireland.' Without loss of spontaneity and with definite gain to the interest of the reader there should have been a more effective organization of the material. A good deal of it is 'every which way.' Interest and curiosity are too frequently aroused without gratification." A. C. Moore
+ — Books p8 My 25 '30 550w

Reviewed by A. L. Shea
Chicago Daily Tribune p10 Ap 19 '30 30w
Cleveland Open Shelf p128 S '30

"There seems to be no reason for the existence of this type of book except to exploit a youthful author and the Girl Scout organization." A. T. Eaton
— N Y Times p17 Je 8 '30 100w

"Alison Barstow Murphy, fifteen years old, visits with her family the country of her ancestors. Her story is interesting, because she is young and eager and faithful in the telling. Because she is young, too, or perhaps more an eager traveller than a penwoman, her style is uneven: there are prosy accounts of commonplace events interspersed with grandiose passages adapted from Irish folklore. She is at her best when describing the Irish countryside." A. H. Vance
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1078 My 24 '30 350w

"Though her journal inevitably borrows a little from the guide-books, it is a fresh and charming account of a happy pilgrimage."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p483 Je 5 '30 230w

MURPHY, CHARLES J. V. Parachute. 275p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Putnam

629.167 Parachutes 30-17274

The story of the development of the parachute, and of its perfection, thru a number of daring trials, as a safe vehicle of escape for the aviator who faces accident.

Booklist 27:54 O '30
Boston Transcript p3 Jl 12 '30 500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p137 N '30
New Statesman 35:575 Ag 9 '30 220w

Reviewed by T. J. C. Martyn
N Y Times p4 Jl 13 '30 650w

"The book is packed with anecdotes of the parachute jumpers and ought to make excellent week-end reading for aviation fans." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 Je 27 '30 770w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:85 D '30
St Louis 28:236 O '30
Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 24 '30 500w
Times [London] Lit Sup p565 Jl 10 '30 1000w

MURPHY, JOHN ALLEN. Merchandising
2 through mergers. 179p $3 Harper

338.8 Trusts, Industrial. Marketing 30-15504

"This is a discussion of the present merger situation, with particular emphasis on the effects of mergers on the sale of the products of the merged firms. The first seven chapters are given over to a discussion of the advantages, and the last six point out the disadvantages, of merger marketing. The last three chapters also point out certain ways in which coöperative marketing effort is superior to merger marketing."—Am Econ R

"On the whole the book is a good statement of the present status of opinion on the subject, by one who has evidently followed the movement and given thought to it." F. E. Clark

+ Am Econ R 20:740 D '30 450w
Booklist 27:51 O '30
St Louis 28:206 S '30

MURRAY, A. VICTOR. School in the bush; a
2 critical study of the theory and practice of native education in Africa. 413p il $5 (12s 6d) Longmans

370.96 Education—Africa

A study of the various factors at work in the tribal African village of to-day and of the way in which they affect and are affected by the schools. Against the geographical, historical, political and economic background Mr. Murray considers the actual machinery of education—the missions, the government, the vernacular language, the subjects taught and the methods of teaching them, the training of teachers and the institutions of higher education. The book concludes with a chapter on the probable future of education in Africa.

" 'The School in the Bush' is an absorbingly interesting book, and will help to overcome any prejudice that exists against the negro. Africa is no longer to be thought of in terms of Dutch farmers, diamonds and krooboys. The negro will inherit European culture no less surely than the Gaul and the barbaric Britain have inherited the culture of Greece and Rome." James Thornton

+ Nation and Ath 47:414 Je 28 '30 150w

"It surveys all the external factors which affect native culture, and is an interesting, though partisan, critique of present educational theory and practice in Africa. But Mr. Murray does not believe that the educationist can learn anything from anthropology, which he dismisses in a few phrases. He surveys all the relevant factors in short except one, which, in our view, is the most important. Only about four pages out of four hundred are devoted to a perfunctory consideration of native systems of education. . . A little less dogmatism and more humility might have added something of permanent value to this incomplete survey."

— + Spec 144:23 Ja 4 '30 220w

"Well equipped with a knowledge of modern educational theory and practice, Mr. Murray has worked up his observation of the very varied educational experiments that are now being attempted in different parts of Africa into a book of real value not merely to those engaged in work in Africa but to a far wider public. The subject-matter of the book is by no means confined to education, still less to education in Africa. In fact its title is misleading. There is a great deal in it about the theory and practice of education, but not much about schools in the bush. It deals not only with education but with the geography, history, politics and social problems of Africa. The author's political outlook is critical and somewhat radical."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p857 O 31 '29 1100w

MURRAY, SINCLAIR, pseud. See Sullivan, A.

MURRY, JOHN MIDDLETON. Studies in
2 Keats. 124p $3 (7s 6d) Oxford

821 Keats, John [31-2599]

"Most of the essays in this volume are designed to fill gaps in Mr. Murry's previous book, Keats and Shakespeare. The first essay in the volume relentlessly exposes Keats' envious friend, George Felton Mathew, who reviewed Keats' poems in the European Magazine, May, 1817. The other essays are an analysis of Keats' sudden organization of all his poetic powers, hitherto immature and mawkish, in the writing of the sonnet On first looking into Chapman's Homer, a long study of Endymion interpreted as 'a poem about love,' an interpretation of Keats' puzzling phrase, 'the feel of not to feel it,' and a rather unprofitable note on Keats' use of the word 'speculation.' "—Wilson bulletin

For biographical sketch of the author see Wilson bulletin 5:14 S '30

"We know what to expect from Mr. Murry, and find it in these essays: an extremely subtle psychological probing, bordering frequently on the mystical; an interpretation of his subject in terms of his own spiritual experience. Mr. Murry has, himself, poetic perceptions which can hardly be expressed in prose. The effort to convey his own understanding of a poet's mood leads him into twisting and minute analyses. In a sense, then, Mr. Murry in seeking to clarify, surrounds himself in mists. Yet some of these essays—in particular, 'The Feel of not to Feel It'—do bring out important aspects of Keats's nature, which, without Mr. Murry's sensitive treatment, might be overlooked." Sylva Norman

+ — Nation and Ath 48:sup214 N 8 '30 230w

"It would be a grave pity if Mr. Murry's slovenliness in expression should make lovers of poetry avoid this book, which contains not only some very shrewd, if never profound, examination of Keats's thought and character, but also some sound spade-work." Richard Sunne

+ — New Statesman 35:648 Ag 30 '30 1450w

"The results of his discerning series of studies, while confined to necessarily limited phases of the poet's work and career, are such as to cast an illumination even upon such major problems as the forces that combine to produce a great poem, and the meaning of the philosophy that 'Beauty is Truth.'. . . Incidentally, there are some valuable notes, and an appendix which is remarkable in that it contains two recently discovered contemporary reviews of the poems of Keats."

+ N Y Times p18 N 30 '30 520w
Springf'd Republican p7e O 19 '30 800w
Times [London] Lit Sup p651 Ag 14 '30 1500w

MUSIL, ALOIS. In the Arabian desert; arr. for
2 publication by Katharine McGiffert Wright. 339p il $5 Liveright

915.3 Arabia—Description and travel. Arabia —Social life and customs

Alois Musil, professor of Oriental studies, Charles university, Prague—known to the Arabians as "Sheikh Musa"—is one of the few authorities upon Bedouin life. The present volume, based upon a six-volume edition issued by the American Geographical Society, 1926-28, contains data gathered on exploring expeditions among the Arabian desert tribes, revealing much that is new and interesting on Bedouin customs and traditions.

MUSIL, ALOIS—Continued

"Professor Musil holds today a unique place among the explorers of Northern Arabia, by reason of the extent of his researches into the origins of its desert tribes; the evolution of their monotheistic religion, a concept common to all desert peoples; and the part Arabia has played in the history of civilization. . . From Professor Musil's 'Manners and Customs of the Rwala Bedouins,' Miss Wright has taken the material for 'In the Arabian Desert.' It records the adventures—most of them perilous and many of them wildly thrilling—of two topographical and ethnological explorations." Frances Bartlett

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 20 '30 1000w

"Professor Musil is the greatest living authority on the history, topography and folklore of the desert land about which Doughty, Lawrence and Gertrude Bell wrote." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:668 D 24 '30 70w

MYER, REGINALD. Chats on old English tobacco jars; with an introd. by Charles R. Beard; together with a reprint of a book on The Westminster tobacco box, pub. in 1824. 111p pl $5 Lippincott [15s Low]

739 Tobacco jars

The author, who has a collection of one hundred and fifty tobacco boxes, most of them lead, collected during the last twenty years, writes about these boxes and tobacco boxes in general. At the end is reprinted an illustrated pamphlet of 1824, dealing with a horn tobacco box in the possession of the Past overseers' society of St Margaret and St John, Westminster.

"Reginald Myer has apparently been the first to collect old tobacco jars; certainly he is the first to write a book about them. It is, to a pipe smoker, a most fascinating book; and watch the price of tobacco jars go up!"

+ Books p13 S 7 '30 250w

"To the untrained eye the jars are not very exciting objects and it is doubtful whether many people will be induced to form collections of them as the result of reading Mr. Myer's book, which is pleasant enough in a rambling, uncritical way."

Times [London] Lit Sup p353 Ap 24 '30 200w

MYERS, DENYS PETER. Reparation settlement. 249p $2 World peace foundation

940.3142 European war, 1914-1918—Reparations. Bank for international settlements 30-27112

The main body of the text is given over to a summary of the system for payment of the reparation debt; the appendix contains a discussion of the New plan, the bank for international settlements, and intergovernmental indebtedness.

Booklist 27:151 D '30

"The present handbook is a valuable summary of the history of the Young plan and the final settlement worked out at the Hague, including a chapter on the Bank of International Settlement. The appendix contains many documents, including detailed tables of future reparation payments."

+ Books p16 D 14 '30 100w

MYERS, GARRY CLEVELAND. Modern parent; a practical guide to everyday problems; with an introd. by M. V. O'Shea. 350p $3.50 Greenberg [8s 6d Williams & Norgate]

173 Children—Management 30-8588

"In anecdotal, common-sense fashion, with no apparent attempt to follow any particular school of psychological thought, the author discusses the harm done by parents who scold, disagree, are inconsistent, rob their children of responsibility, and are discourteous to their children." (N Y Times) The author is (1930) head of the Division of parental education, Western reserve university.

Booklist 27:10 S '30

N Y Times p10 O 5 '30 200w

"It is an unusual book. One would like to quote and quote, to show its spirit." F. G. Seabury

+ Outlook 156:670 D 24 '30 380w

St Louis 28:202 S '30

"The modern parent here portrayed is a model of consideration for his and her children. It's well to have this thesis stated so readably, forcibly, unreservedly; for it is one side of an issue facing millions of parents to-day. . . There will be many a protest against Dr. Myers's ultramodernism, questioning whether he has not carried a good cause too far. Children cannot be permitted to grow up wild. Rational discipline has a place and will always have one. Besides, parents are also people, and have some jobs as well as a few rights of their own. Let us compromise on a rational modernity."

Sat R of Lit 6:974 Ap 19 '30 200w

"We can recommend Dr. Myers's book as a simple contribution to ailing parents. Correctly, there is no attempt at scientific explanation if there is not any explanation for certain acts at the present time. It will enhearten the average parent and when he finds that he is beyond his depth it will encourage him to ask for and accept advice in spite of its limitations." Edward Liss, M.D.

+ Survey 65:100 O 15 '30 250w

MYERS, MRS ISABEL BRIGGS. Murder yet to come. 311p $2 Stokes [7s 6d Gollancz] 30-2773

A detestable old millionaire, Malachi Trent, is found lying dead at the foot of a ladder in his library. A heavy crash has brought Peter Jerningham, playwright, his friend MacAndrew, Sergeant Carl Nilsson, and Heldon Ryker, fiancé of Trent's niece, Linda, to the scene of the tragedy. Jerningham, in the rôle of sleuth, proves his theory that the death is the result of murder, not accident, and that, unless something can be done to prevent it, there is murder yet to come. The interest of the story centers about the mysteriously insane conduct of the lovely Linda; the Hindu servant, Ram Singh; a giant ruby stolen by Trent from a temple in the Himalayas; and a missing will.

Booklist 26:235 Mr '30

Bookm 70:xxvii F '30 100w

"A heroine strongly suspected of chronic insanity, a fiendish murderer whom you aren't likely to guess and a surprising solution arrived at by pseudo-scientific means more picturesque than practicable are among the assets of this better than average thriller. . . Peter Jerningham, an amateur of the hunch type, solves the crime with considerable skill, assisted by two sleuthing pals, one of whom narrates the details in agreeably homespun fashion." Will Cuppy

+ Books p18 Ja 26 '30 130w

N Y Times p24 Ja 26 '30 130w

"'Murder Yet to Come' won the $7,500 prize in a recent mystery-detective novel competition and in certain respects is a thriller considerably above the average, but in others not remarkable." E. C. Beckwith

+ N Y World p11m Ja 12 '30 150w

"The author can tell a story and has a real knack for creating suspense." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:150 Ja 22 '30 40w

Reviewed by L. P. Hartley

Sat R 149:174 F 8 '30 70w

"The fun of the book lies in the skill with which the author handles the clues. She lets you work with the detective, opening his mind to you as he goes from one bit of evidence to another, occasionally letting you jump to a conclusion before him, and once in a while frankly keeping you in suspense while a special clue is being hunted down. . . The style is clear and direct, the story rapid, and the plot ingenious. You will be a little disappointed in not having more details, at the end, of the criminal's procedure, a fault of most mystery stories, but the explanation is satisfactory and the chances are odds on that you will be fooled." Eugene Reynal

+ Sat R of Lit 6:716 F 8 '30 230w

"It is a sound, businesslike example of the thrilling, as opposed to the scientific, type and as such continues to hold some interest to the end. It must, however, be admitted that the reader will have solved the mystery long before this."

+ — Spec 144:345 Mr 1 '30 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p105 F 6 '30 150w

MYERS, JAMES. Religion lends a hand; studies of churches in social action. 167p $1.50 Harper

261 Sociology, Christian. Church and social problems 29-20893

"Religion Lends a Hand tells concretely what the Church is doing towards solving some of the problems of present day society. The method of the book is that of the case study. A dozen various types of approach, from a study of the milk situation in Chicago to the 'Reconciliation Trips' in New York, are described. This book should prove a useful corrective to that glib criticism which assumes that the Church does nothing except to preach an outworn creed."—Outlook

"Mr. Myers, the Federal council's industrial secretary of the commission on the church and social service, shows that the church is a real force in the world. The dozen chapters of this book exhibit the actual contributions which the church has made in certain specific situations. They show that the church is neither indifferent to economic and social conditions nor futile in its efforts to improve them."

+ Christian Century 46:1380 N 6 '29 120w

"Apart from revealing the smug condescension of religion in its present-day efforts to lend a hand, it gives varied and interesting examples of the many fields into which cautious pioneers of the cloth are anxiously feeling around. The best chapter of the even dozen is the one on the church and the twelve-hour day in steel. It gives a factual account of the twelve-year pressure on the steel trust to adopt the humaner and also more profitable eight-hour shift in its mills. There is a maximum of history and a minimum of Myers in it." Sinclair Lewis

— + Nation 129:680 D 4 '29 600w

Reviewed by E. B. Chaffee

Outlook 153:631 D 18 '29 120w

Wis Lib Bul 26:64 F '30

"It is vivid, journalistic writing spiced here and there with a delightful touch of humor. The bibliography and directory of social and industrial agencies in the back of the volume are exceedingly valuable. The total effect of the book will be a revelation both to conventional churchmen and undiscriminating critics of the social impotence of churchmen." F. A. Henson

+ World Tomorrow 13:137 Mr '30 550w

MYERS, LEOPOLD HAMILTON. Near and the far. 306p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Cape, J.] 30-4238

A novel with the background of India during the reign of Akbar. The main characters in the story are Hari Khan, a hill chieftan, lover, and adventurer; the Rajah Amar, a Buddhist; Sita, the Rajah's Christian wife; and the Princess Lalita. The plot of the story, which is to be continued in a sequel to this novel, is of less significance than the study of the religious, political and social life of the period.

"Mr. Myers's plan to write another book with the same characters is rather evident and somewhat robs this one of unity. But it is such a splendid performance that one awaits the sequel with interest."

+ Bookm 71:xxv Ap '30 100w

"Whatever the thread of the plot, it vanishes in a maze of talk. Worldweary Amar, philandering Hari, sly Mabun Das act little, recline much on terraces and lose themselves in metaphysics. With slight forethought the author, Mr. Myers, has floated a ghostly ship of dreams."

Books p10 F 23 '30 200w

"The religious, political, and amorous careers of the characters meander and intertwine with a general effect which is pleasant and intelligent, but not at all striking." L. L. Irvine

+ — Nation and Ath 46:143 O 26 '29 60w

"It is a notable book, very well written, the various points of view at once clearly and subtly expressed, the characters alive, the scene pictures deftly drawn."

+ N Y Times p25 F 16 '30 900w

"It is a finely written novel, very close in texture. . . Both plot and characters are interesting, and in the handling of them there is delicacy and sureness. Mr. Myers neither fumbles nor gropes. You leave the book with the feeling that he has as nearly accomplished what he set out to do as any artist ever does." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:268 F 12 '30 200w

"The distinction, the greatness of the book, lies in the originality of its scheme and the exquisite quality of its texture. It is as profound and as pellucid as a lake and as spontaneous as a spring." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 148:518 N 2 '29 900w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 27 '30 280w

"Each of the characters is vigorously alive and in all of them the interactions of their incurable speculative habit with their passions and disappointments is skilfully traced. . . Mr. Myers's first act makes us keen for the rest of the play."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p894 N 7 '29 550w

MYGATT, TRACY DICKINSON, and WITHERSPOON, FRANCES. Armor of light. 273p $2 Holt 30-8787

Story of the early days of the Christian church. Its scene is laid in the catacombs of Rome.

Books p15 Ag 3 '30 80w

Boston Transcript p2 My 14 '30 190w

"Ingeniously conceived and reverently treated story of the faith and fortunes of the early Christians."

+ Christian Century 47:599 My 7 '30 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p112 Jl '30

"The reader's attention is gripped by the opening sentence, and the thrilling interest never flags until the conclusion which, after the manner of real stories, satisfies all the legitimate requirements in the sequel." J. H. H.

+ Living Church 83:807 O 11 '30 230w

N Y Times p24 Ap 27 '30 380w

Reviewed by E. B. Chaffee

Outlook 155:191 Je 4 '30 230w

MYRES, JOHN LINTON. Who were the Greeks? (Sather classical lectures) 634p il $7 Univ. of Cal. [30s Cambridge univ. press]

938 Greeks. Ethnology—Greece. Greek language—History. Civilization, Greek. Greece—History 30-9296

"The purpose of these lectures is, briefly, to examine the Greeks' own beliefs about their origin, in the light of modern advances in the study of race, language, religious beliefs, arts, and crafts, observances and institutions: to supplement and revise their notions from sources of information and methods of enquiry not available in antiquity; to take note of our own ignorance in many of these matters; and to submit a program of research."—Introd.

"In working out his thesis the author calls in a rich store of material bearing on his theme as gathered not only from history proper, but also from various sciences, including physical anthropology, comparative philology, comparative religion, prehistoric archæology and folk lore of all kinds."

MYRES, J. L.—Continued

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 14 '30 730w

Nation and Ath 47:797 S 27 '30 700w

"He gives us for the first time a comprehensive synthesis of the deductions from geography and climatology, from physical anthropology and prehistoric archæology, from comparative philology and religion, from recently discovered Hittite documents and freshly interpreted Egyptian records, and above all, from the now rehabilitated traditional history of the Greeks themselves as embodied in epic, legend, and genealogy. The combination of these heterogeneous elements to form the solution of our question may be compared to a jig-saw puzzle: the validity of the solution depends upon the coherence of the resultant pattern; and Myres's work passes the test brilliantly." V. G. Childe

+ Nature 126:340 S 6 '30 1350w

"Pages of immense erudition."

+ New Statesman 35:250 My 31 '30 1100w

"Why so important, indeed so great, a book should be produced in so repellent a form is presumably known to the University of California Press, which is responsible for it. But room will have to be found for it on the shelves of librarians and serious students of the subject. The picture is, as it were, a vignette in the long panorama of world-history. Yet here we find the links with earlier civilizations and the many proofs that the Greeks, despite the strongly individual character of their culture, were in fact a more than usually hybrid race. And we find all this with such a wealth of learning that the work will be a classic upon the subject for many years to come."

+ Spec 145:55 Jl 12 '30 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p661 Ag 21 '30 1450w

N

NADAAR, ABU, pseud. See Morrough, E. R.

NADEL, HENRI, pseud. See Vendel, H. J.

NAIRNE, ALEXANDER. Every man's story of the New Testament. 294p il $1.80 Macmillan [6s Mowbray]

225 Bible. New Testament 30-31126

This simple and useful presentation of the New Testament story opens with chapters portraying the conditions of the civilized world at the time of the birth of Christ. Then follows an account of the books of the New Testament, based upon modern biblical criticism. The last chapter deals briefly with some of the books which the writer has found of the most help toward an understanding of the New Testament.

Boston Transcript p2 S 24 '30 250w

Christian Century 47:1496 D 3 '30 100w

"A surprisingly useful little book. . . Nowhere does Doctor Nairne 'talk down.' In simple, non-technical, and straightforward manner he surveys the rise of Christianity and the appearance and nature of the New Testament writings. Recent literature is made use of, but not paraded. All through the book a conversational tone is deliberately adopted. At times it is compressed to a degree that Tacitus might well have envied." M. S. Enslin

+ Crozer Q 7:524 O '30 320w

"Dr. Nairne brings out the human quality in both men and materials, and he deals with it all as a scholar profoundly versed in modern biblical criticism, so that he has at his fingers' ends a great variety of views and treatments of every phase of his story. But, notwithstanding his wide learning, he narrates his story in a clear and easy style that has much literary charm and grace. The most impressive characteristic of the book is perhaps the humanness, the historical reality with which he imbues his entire narrative."

+ N Y Times p25 S 7 '30 220w

St Louis 28:258 N '30

NAISH, WILLIAM ARCHIBALD, and CLENNELL, JOHN EDWARD. Select methods of metallurgical analysis; with an introd. by Sir H. C. Harold Carpenter. 495p $7.50 Wiley [30s Chapman]

669.9 Metallurgical analysis 30-12973

"Rapid, accurate, practical and tested methods for the analysis of the elements, commercial metals, alloys, ore, slags, metallurgical products, refractory materials, and coal, with a section dealing with electrometric titration, mineral analysis, and spectrographic methods. Numerous bibliographies."—N Y New Tech Bks

"Considerable space is devoted in Part II to descriptions of the elements. This is regrettable in view of the brevity which appears to be necessary in the methods of procedure, frequently at the sacrifice of clarity even to the experienced analyst. Too often the reader is left in doubt as to the amounts and strengths of reagents. . . It is hoped that in future editions more space will be devoted to the more important functions and less to portions which are either easily available or too general in character to be of value. The book contains a large amount of information and an extensive bibliography apportioned to each element is a helpful feature." H. C. Parish

— + Ind & Eng Chem 22:563 My '30 320w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:4 Ja '30

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:39 My '30

St Louis 28:135 My '30

NAMIER, LEWIS BERNSTEIN. England in the ^{2} age of the American revolution. 518p $8.50 (25s) Macmillan

942.07 Great Britain—History—1760-1789. Great Britain—Politics and government

"In this first instalment of a book which must presumbly cover the period from 1760 to 1783 Mr. Namier has confined himself to the preliminary setting of the stage during the first three years of George III's reign, before any important question about America had been mooted. On the same scale the undertaking will hardly be completed in less than five or six volumes, especially if Mr. Namier makes good his claim to describe England in the age of the American Revolution." (Times [London] Lit Sup) The author's "Structure of politics at the accession of George III" (Book Review Digest, 1929) was a preparatory volume to this series.

"There is a touch of something unique in Mr. Namier, a new method of tasting the intellectual pleasures of history. There are so many different ways in which things happen, or can be truly described as happening. Gibbon's is one, Carlyle's another, Macaulay's a third. Each is true, yet taken by itself each is false, for no one of them is the whole truth. In Mr. Namier's narrative things 'happen' in yet another new way—the Namier way. And it is one of the truths. The worst of it is that, like life itself, it is involved and long-drawn-out, and I doubt if it will keep every reader's full attention through the whole volume, though it will excite him over the early chapters. However that may be, Mr. Namier is a new factor in the historical world." G. M. Trevelyan

+ — Nation and Ath 48:238 N 15 '30 1250w

"Mr. Namier's second volume, like his first, leaves his readers astonished that so much still remained to be explored. All the great problems of the time, the issues over which historians wrangle, the extent and nature of the Kings system, the conditions and growths of parties, the relation of the mind of Parliament to the mind of the country, the state of opinion and sympathy on the American struggle, receive new illumination from this remarkable study."

+ New Statesman 36:149 N 8 '30 1100w

"The author has had access to hitherto unpublished letters from George II to Lord Bute and the papers of George III at Windsor Castle. His style is marked by lucidity and the poise of the historian who is more interested in the truth than in shadowy rationalizing. He has made a contribution of distinct importance to the knowledge of the Revolution's background in England." A. S. Will

+ N Y Times p3 D 28 '30 1700w

"Of Mr. Namier's minute and thorough scholarship there can be no question; but students of our Revolution will find that he has not yet turned his industry in our direction. And yet the student welcomes the present volume for what it does contain. It gives a valuable view of the relations of Bute and George III, almost movingly human; but elsewhere confining itself exclusively to politics, it gives brief statements of many almost forgotten characters, and carries out a close study of the relations between Bute and Newcastle in 1762-3. Much of the detail in the book is new and useful, and the American historian may well hope that Mr. Namier will carry his studies further."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:493 D 27 '30 230w

"Mr. Namier accumulates minute details and, with an almost excessive distrust for the generalizations of the text-books, seldom stops to sum up. But the effect of his remarkable monograph is to place the young King in a more favorable light, to discredit both Newcastle and Bute, and to show that the House of Commons, with its overwhelming Whig majority, was much more independent than is commonly supposed."

+ Spec 145:472 O 4 '30 150w

"In this volume, it must be confessed, Mr. Namier does not tell us very much more that is new than is contained in his two illuminating volumes on the 'Structure of Politics.' The great merit of those volumes was that for the first time an idea based on exhaustive researches was given of the methods of electing Parliament and of its composition at the beginning of George III's reign. . . In these respects a good deal of the material in the present volume is a recapitulation of what the author had fully demonstrated before. . . But, with this important reservation, this volume forms a most delightful survey of the political world at the accession of George III."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p899 N 6 '30 1200w

NARDI, BRUNO. Youth of Virgil; tr. by Belle Palmer Rand; with a pref. by Edward Kennard Rand. 139p $1.50 Harvard univ. press [7s Oxford]

B or 92 Virgil (Publius Virgilius Maro) 30-15178

"The translation of Nardi's little book contains corrections and additions by the author and is thus preferable to the original Italian edition. Chapter i deals with Virgil's early life and is based largely on the ancient vitae as given by Brummer. In addition, Nardi paints in the political background of those years. Chapters ii, iii, iv, except for a few pages on the juvenile poems, are devoted to the Eclogues and their political background. Nardi also makes clear in broad outline not only Virgil's debt to Theocritus but also his independence of him, thus contributing to the appreciation of the Eclogues. An Appendix contains an excellent defense of the traditional identification of Andes, the birthplace of Virgil, with Pietole, as against the assaults of Conway and Besutti."—Class Philol

Reviewed by B. L. Ullman
Class Philol 25:403 O '30 450w

"This book is an excellent short account of Vergil's early career and gives in detail the historical background of the Eclogues."

+ N Y Times p19 Je 15 '30 350w

"Prof Nardi's summary of the known or probable facts of Virgil's youthful life, education and early writing is so careful and sensitive that the reader has no disposition to question the author's deductions or opinions."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 16 '30 420w

NASON, LEONARD HASTINGS. Corporal once. 312p $1 Doubleday, Doran 30-25299

Private John L. Sullivan's chief task in the regular army on the Mexican border was to take care of the Major's Arabian horse—for which he hoped to be promoted to the office of corporal. But when Johnell set sail for France there were already too many corporals, so he continued his army career as a buck private. Mr Nason, in this latest story concerned with the A.E.F., repeats his study of the typical American doughboy.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 F 15 '30

Booklist 27:162 D '30

Bookm 72:vi O '30 100w

"A good deal of the dialogue seems written to display the author's knowledge of doughboy and flatfoot wisecracks, and the writing shows no hint of style-consciousness. But much of the conversation is, for all that, genuinely amusing, and the author, in spite of occasional rather juvenile references to 'Uncle Sammy' and 'Yanks' and 'Huns,' has given an honest portrayal of the mistakes and clumsy maneuvering of the green Americans who first went to France."

+ — Books p15 Ja 4 '31 200w

"The story abounds with vivid description of life in the trenches, on the march and in hospitals. Grim realism stalks through the pages. There is little of the glamour of war but plenty of the real experiences which many a doughboy knew." L. E. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 5 '30 330w

"Leonard Nason has carried the writing of novels about the World War to the point where they become a staple commodity. The characteristic outline of his stories does not vary to any great extent."

N Y Times p9 D 21 '30 320p

"Here is good, broad farce written on the principle that everything funny in life takes place below the belt; here are incidents, pungent allusions, bits of racy idiom over which any American soldier in a reminiscent mood will laugh his head off. Here, too, are scenes of combat, less successful than the humorous pages, because written pretty closely after what appears to have become a stereotyped pattern for American battle-pictures. . . 'A Corporal Once' is a riot of the brightest colors imaginable slapped against a background of muddy, tattered olive-drab."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:222 O 11 '30 470w

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE BOARD. Five-day week in manufacturing industries. 69p $1.50 The board

331.81 Hours of labor. United States—Manufactures. United States—Industries 29-30188

"This thorough and judicial investigation into the extent and results of the five-day week in manufacturing industries presents the facts which have been collected, studied and classified by the research staff of the National Industrial Conference Board. It considers the growth and scope of the movement, the technique by which the five-day-week schedule is managed, its advantages and disadvantages and the attitude toward it of employes and employers. The facts gathered have been tabulated in all their aspects, and in the appendix is given a list of representative companies—over a hundred — operating on a regular five-day work week."—N Y Times

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE BOARD—Continued
Reviewed by Edward Berman
Am Econ R 20:529 S '30 550w
Booklist 26:264 Ap '30
Current Hist 31:1068 Mr '30 120w

"The study is of no small value for manufacturers, students of labor problems and economists, for it presents the results of the first attempt to investigate what seems to be a very real, vital and growing tendency in American industry and to discover just what is its present status and the attitude toward it of establishments that have tried the experiment."
+ N Y Times p10 Ja 5 '30 430w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:23 Mr '30
Pratt p10 summer '30
St Louis 28:66 Mr '30
Survey 64:521 S 15 '30 50w

2 NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE BOARD. General sales or turnover taxation. (Studies in taxation and public finance) 204p $2.50 The board
336.2 Taxation—United States 29-22653

A comprehensive analysis of the various types of general sales and turnover taxes, with an examination of their economic and social, constitutional, and administrative aspects. The appendices take up, respectively, foreign general sales or turnover taxes, and turnover taxes in the United States.

"The strongest impression derived from reading this book is that it leans decidedly toward the sales tax. It is almost propagandist literature. Both sides of the case are stated, to be sure, but the objections are rendered pianissimo. Before accepting a new tax of this sort, the objections should be examined with merciless rigor. The criticisms of the sales tax in this study have the expostulatory vigor of a 'Tut, Tut!' as compared with a Jovian thunderbolt." H. L. Lutz
Ann Am Acad 147:218 Ja '30 850w

"With the publication of this study there is at least available in English an adequate comparative and historial account of sales or turnover taxes in the modern period. . . The analysis is not profound, and the study suffers somewhat from the abstract character of the treatment. The social unrest caused by the French turnover tax, for example, and the political difficulties caused by it, might well have been described." Alzada Comstock
+ — J Pol Econ 38:723 D '30 550w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:32 Ap '30

2 NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE BOARD. Lay-off and its prevention. (Studies in industrial relations) 86p $1.50 The board
331.137 Unemployment 30-15719

From a study of causes of fluctuation in labor and its results the authors proceed to a discussion of methods of stabilizing the working force. In part three, under lay-off procedure, they take up rating plans, advance notices, lay-off bonuses, unemployment insurance and seniority rights.

"A mere compilation, and not too stimulatingly written, it is neither a work of adequate analysis nor a skillfully wrought manual. It compresses so much within its short treatment that it is thin and superficial. Yet the wholly inexcusable mistake is made of omitting to mention the many splendid studies published in the past years dealing more comprehensively and concretely with the suggestions compiled in this summary. Some of the books, pamphlets and reports not cited would be indispensable to the reader who found his interest aroused by the present volume. The subject is important enough to deserve better treatment at the hands of the Board, which has done some highly competent work in other directions but nothing distinguished in connection with industry's most crucial labor problem—unemployment." Herman Feldman
— Am Econ R 20:760 D '30 250w
Booklist 27:51 O '30
St Louis 28:205 S '30

2 NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE BOARD. Mergers in industry; a study of certain economic aspects of industrial consolidation. (Studies in public policy towards business) 205p $3 The board
338.8 Trusts, Industrial. Monopolies 29-15743

"The scope is limited to consolidations where there is central control of a number of distinct operating units and where their products are marketed over wide areas. On the question whether such consolidations are good or evil from an economic standpoint, a present judgment is suspended, but the facts available to answer the question are briefly reviewed. . . After considering numerous statistics, the conclusion is reached that industrial consolidations have not provided a safe, sure and easy way to business success. Contrary to the popular conception, successful consolidations are the exception and not the rule."—Ann Am Acad

Reviewed by A. T. Johnson
Ann Am Acad 147:204 Ja '30 200w
Cleveland Open Shelf p69 My '30

"In presenting this report the National Industrial Conference Board has done a most constructive piece of work. The method of attacking the problem is sound and the presentation is scholarly. The conclusions are based upon a mass of statistics which undoubtedly represent the best and latest figures available to the public, are free from bias, and are on the whole logical. These figures include considerable material which should be as valuable to the investor as to the student of industry or of economic and social progress." Dwight Farnham
Ind & Eng Chem 22:1022 S '30 450w

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE BOARD. Public regulation of competitive practices. (Studies in public policy toward business) 2d ed rev 320p $3 The board
338.8 Trusts, Industrial. Industry and state. Competition 29-24178

Revised edition of a study of the anti-trust policy in its relation to the control of business practices, which contains a new chapter on the Trade practice conference and an extensive citation of cases and an analysis of Federal trade commission activities to date.

Reviewed by B. H. Hibbard
Ann Am Acad 151:291 S '30 700w

"The critical vein in which the book is written is most welcome. In a field of law so new and still so controversial such critical works should furnish a valuable background for evaluating the law and its administration and the attitude of common law judges. Of course every reader of such a work—no matter how erudite and fair are its criticisms—will find portions with which he disagrees. . . Whether or not one agrees in all respects with the authors is however unimportant. The book is undoubtedly a valuable one—so valuable that its anonymity is a cause for regret." I. B. Oseas
+ Columbia Law R 30:593 Ap '30 850w

"The book should be of real use to laymen who are interested in knowing something of the work of the Federal Trade Commission. . . From a very fair and almost judicial angle, the book discusses various criticisms which have been and are made of the Commission." H. D. Nims
+ Harvard Law R 43:675 F '30 900w

"This volume is a second and revised edition of a deservedly popular work. It considers a series of miscellaneous subjects covering, in a general way, what the law deems fair and permissable dealing in competitive practices. . . Together with Henderson's Federal Trade Commission, it ranks as the leading text reviewing these matters. . . The author has adequately performed his function in collating the authorities in an exhaustive manner and in discussing them with intelligence and learning. The legal principles are at all times discussed in relation to their economic and business environment. It is because of this setting that the book contains a far more satisfactory analysis of the legal questions than a text constructed on the older legalistic models." B. S. Kirsh

+ Yale Law J 39:1078 My '30 1050w

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE BOARD. State income taxes. 2v v 1, Historical development; v 2, Analysis of income taxes in state fiscal systems. (Studies in taxation and public finance) 121;214p v 1 $2; v 2 $2.50 The board

336.24 Income tax (30-6441)

The first volume of this study gives the history of state income taxes in the United States. The second volume discusses income tax problems, topically and analytically. Such matters as the legal basis of the taxes, the different exemptions they provide, the character of the rates they impose, and the details of tax administration are discussed.

Reviewed by J. W. Martin
Am Econ R 20:339 Je '30 550w (Review of v 1)

"As a whole, the work, although marred by lack of uniformity in footnote references and other minor, editorial details, is a very satisfactory contribution to the literature of taxation. It is more useful by virtue of the fact that it continually compares practice in the several states with the federal statute and with the drafts of model laws prepared by a committee of the National Tax Association." J. W. Martin
Am Econ R 20:534 S '30 550w (Review of v 2)

"Like other publications of the National Industrial Conference Board, these volumes have presumably been written not for specialists but for the information and the guidance of business executives. In view of this fact, it is scarcely valid to criticize them on the score of being largely a rehash of more definitive works on the same subject, and of treating too many of the problems presented in a highly cavalier and inconclusive fashion." Clarence Heer
Ann Am Acad 151:296 S '30 180w (Review of v 1 and 2)

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE
^{2} BOARD. Systems of wage payment. (Studies in industrial relations) 131p $2 The board

331.2 Wages 30-19588

A discussion of the essential features of wage payment systems: the time wage system; the piece wage system; early specialized incentive systems, with their modifications; plans to equalize compensation thruout the plant; and incentive systems applied to group production. An appendix contains a discussion of the composition of the working force in relation to wage systems.

Am Econ R 20:761 D '30 60w
Booklist 27:51 O '30
St Louis 28:231 O '30

NATIONAL SOCIETY OF PENAL INFORMATION, INCORPORATED. Handbook of American prisons and reformatories, 1929; Paul W. Garrett, Austin H. MacCormick, eds. 3d ed 1035p $4 The society, 114 E. 30th st, N.Y.

365 Prisons. Reformatories (25-9470)

The third issue of this handbook, which gives essential information and statistics about all the penal institutions in the United States, with general comment upon conditions in each one.

Booklist 26:343 Je '30

"The book will be uniquely helpful to all who are interested in penal affairs and problems because of its comprehensive and well organized information, and especially because it thus brings together all the varied attempts being made in the institutions of the country to better conditions and solve problems, and shows which are succeeding and which are failing, what advances are taking place and what methods are proving really constructive."
+ N Y Times p23 Mr 30 '30 380w

Reviewed by E. T. Devine
Outlook 155:430 Jl 16 '30 200w

"As a standard compendium of information on American penal and reformatory institutions The Handbook of American Prisons is unequalled. It appears annually, is based on first-hand information, is well organized and conveniently presented. The volume for 1929, edited by Paul W. Garrett and Austin H. MacCormick, is particularly important because it reveals the state of American prisons on the eve of the great series of riots and prison fires which have taken place the past year at Dannemora, Auburn, Leavenworth, Canyon City, Howard (R. I.), and Columbus." H. E. Barnes
+ World Tomorrow 13:312 Jl '30 900w

NEARING, SCOTT. Twilight of empire; an economic interpretation of imperialist cycles. 349p $2.50 Vanguard press

321.03 Imperialism. Capitalism. Economic conditions. Labor and laboring classes 30-10677

A radical economist's interpretation of the relation of imperialism to civilization and an analysis of the imperial cycle—its nature, tendency, and scope. Includes about 150 pages of quotations from various authors on the subject of imperialism.

"As the history of this book proves, fundamentalism is not confined to Christianity. Mr Scott Nearing was forced to resign from the Communist party because of the harmless thesis of this book, that imperialism runs in cycles, whereas the great Lenin believed that imperialism was the final stage of capitalism. To a layman this controversy seems as inconsequential as the disputations of medieval theologians. The only importance of this book is to prove that Communism can be as intolerant and doctrinaire as the Vatican." R. L. Buell
Books p14 Je 8 '30 900w
Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '30 230w

Reviewed by John Carter
Current Hist 32:423 Je '30 320w

Reviewed by Bernard Smith
N Y World p7m Jl 13 '30 600w

Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 155:108 My 21 '30 100w
St Louis 28:204 S '30

Reviewed by P. H. Douglas
World Tomorrow 13:376 S '30 750w

NEEDHAM, JOSEPH. Sceptical biologist. 270p $3 Norton [7s 6d Chatto]

504 Biology. Mechanistic theory of life. Religion and science 30-7141

Ten scientific essays in which the author reconciles the mechanistic theory with religion and philosophy. Contents: The sceptical biologist; The limitations of optick glasses: or, Some observations on science and on religion; Organicism in biology; The hunting of the phœnix; Lucretius Redivivus: or, The hope of a chemical psychology; S. T. Coleridge as a philosophic biologist; Julien de la Mettrie; William Harvey and the witches; Anaxagoras: or, Science and purpose; Materialism and religion; Bibliography.

"This is a cleverly-written and, from our point of view, thoroughly mischievous book." G. D. M.
— Cath World 131:378 Je '30 300w

NEEDHAM, JOSEPH—Continued

"However we may disagree with the application of the author's view, the book is extremely worth while and refreshing because of its penetrating and sympathetic knowledge of religious and theological thought and history, unusual indeed in a pure scientist. St. Augustine and Julian of Norwich are apparently as familiar to the author as Bacon and William Harvey, while modern theological questions are considered alongside of such scientific concepts as 'organicism' and Eddington's view of the cyclical nature of science. There is a keen sense of humor playing throughout the book and the wide range of subject matter and wealth of illustrations from a large view of the history of thought show clearly how well qualified Needham is to have edited Science, Religion and Reality, and make the present book keenly enjoyable." H. T. Hall

+ Living Church 83:776 O 4 '30 1200w

Reviewed by B. J. Stern

Nation 131:274 S 10 '30 450w

"It is a real and terrible ghost, one must remember, that Mr. Needham is exorcizing, and much depends on his success. One can forgive, then, a touch of the bedside manner, its complacence, its lack of imaginative unity with the patient, its wish to soothe him rather than to enlarge on his difficulties; even its trick of repeating itself, which is perhaps inevitable in collected papers. For he speaks comfortable words."

+ — Nation and Ath 46:544 Ja 18 '30 800w

"A thoroughly charming book of essays. As reprints, they involve some repetition, but they are thoughtful and pungent throughout. They point to the emergence of a reflective criticism which should prepare the way for the maturity of the modern science of biology." Ida Craven

+ N Y Evening Post p8m Je 14 '30 200w

St Louis 28:209 S '30

"A provocative book. It is also an interesting and, in parts, a charming one. It can be recommended even for summer reading, because the author advocates scepticism, and there is really no need for any one to get hot or bothered over anything in it. The chief defect it has, considered as a book, is that it is a collection of essays, all or substantially all of which have been published separately and are here thrown together without much editing." Raymond Pearl

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1090 My 31 '30 1600w

Spec 144:27 Ja 4 '30 250w

"The difficulty with the volume of essays on one subject is that the writer never gives himself the opportunity of developing his different theses fully. He cannot run threads through his 'story' and gather them up in one magnificent climax . . . The essays have had their former existence in periodicals. Nevertheless, it is a pity that the author did not develop various points more fully and in conjunction; say, the first four essays and the last two. In themselves the essays vary in merit; but this is because some of them are so excellent that it is disappointing the others are not equally so."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1087 D 19 '29 450w

NEGRI, ADA (GARLANDA). Morning star; tr. from the Italian by Anne Day. 158p $2.50 Macmillan

30-25162

A little novel translated from the Italian. It is the story of Dinin, a young Italian girl born in dire poverty, who spent her childhood years in a world of imagination. As she grew older the thought of poverty and how it had affected her beloved mother became almost an obsession, and Dinin determined to go thru the difficult process of becoming a teacher. Gradually she emerged from her world of dreams and faced reality.

"There is nothing either new or great in this book; its slight charm lies in the freshness and delicacy with which the author sketches her simple characters, but, as in most prose-poems, the result is rather a group of vague symbols than a family of living persons." Justin O'Brien

+ — Bookm 72:307 N '30 220w

"The tenderness, and the delicate imaginative quality which are among the principal charms of this novel, sometimes sink into sentimentality. Ada Negri displays, at times, a tendency to revere age for no other reason than that it is old, to regard poverty as a virtue in itself, to worship hardship for its own sake. Yet notwithstanding this mood, which allies it rather to the last century than to the present, the book has a distinguished beauty of expression, and a slender, undeniable charm."

+ — N Y Times p7 O 12 '30 500w

"The translation is good, but the story lacks humor and sturdiness, and in places verges on the morbid. It is all a little 'sicklied o'er,' and Dinin is so sensitive as to be almost neurotic. It is written in the present tense, which method carries its own risks, and there is now and then an abrupt change from third person to first which adds little to the literary quality and might prove confusing to a young reader." E. C. Miller

— + Sat R of Lit 7:438 D 6 '30 250w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 150w

NELSON, ARTHUR L., and DUNLAP, CARL H. Interior electric wiring and estimating; a practical treatise on methods and systems of wiring. 255p il $2.50 Am. tech. soc.

621.32 Electric wiring, Interior 29-16792

"A book intended for practical self-instruction and home study. Covers all phases of interior electric wiring including bells, alarm systems, signal systems, apartment building wiring, factory building wiring and estimates of costs for various types of installation. Well illustrated."—Wis Lib Bul

N Y New Tech Bks 14:57 O '29

Pratt p17 summer '30

Wis Lib Bul 26:39 Ja '30

NELSON, WILLIAM HAMILTON. Blood & fire: General William Booth. 269p il $2.50 Century

B or 92 Booth, William. Salvation army

29-23812

"The author of this stirring biography served for thirty years in the Salvation Army and writes from intimate and sympathetic knowledge of William Booth and his wife, Catherine. Its special value lies in the account of the earlier years of the movement."—Churchman

"Mr. Nelson's life of his former leader is a model of accuracy, conciseness, vigor and simple beauty. It is a long time since we have read so admirable a short biography. Other and more inclusive biographies must be sought for the full story of Booth's career, but this volume promises to remain for a long time standard." J. H. Holmes

+ Books p17 Mr 2 '30 320w

"There have been weightier books on General Booth, but not one that has hit closer to the core of the man and his work."

+ Christian Century 47:52 Ja 8 '30 150w

Churchman p17 Ja 25 '30 40w

Cleveland Open Shelf p9 Ja '30

"The book is long-winded, discursive, extremely laudatory, often dull; written from the point of view of a narrow orthodoxy and not entirely free from touches of bigotry."

— N Y Times p49 D 1 '29 420w

St Louis 28:17 Ja '30

"The work is conceived in a vein of eulogy, which is largely deserved, and does not deal with the conflicts into which the Salvation Army was plunged after Booth's death."

Springf'd Republican p12 My 15 '30 500w

NEMIROVSKY, IRENE. David Golder; tr. by Sylvia Stuart. 226p $2 Liveright [6s Constable]

30-24849

Hard and unscrupulous in his business dealings, David Golder, Jewish financier, has reached the age of sixty-eight, and is beginning to suffer attacks of angina pectoris. His parasitic, money-greedy wife and daughter care only for Golder's check-book. He is not even sure that Joyce is his daughter; and she, after a brief affair with a gigolo, plans marriage with a repulsive but very wealthy Jew of Golder's acquaintance. The father, broken-hearted, diseased, and deserted when his money-making power fails, dies a miserable and lonely death.

"Mme. Nemirovsky has had excellent publicity—most of which she really deserves—and her book has been translated already into several languages. But, on the other hand, excited critics have circulated exaggerated remarks and comparisons. They have insisted on bringing David Golder into the company of Pere Goriot, Ivan Ilyitch, and César Birotteau! . . . This is, of course, a trifle too much." Angel Flores

+ — Books p2 S 21 '30 420w

"The author of 'David Golder,' by avoiding excess emotionalism in this first book of hers, seems to have limited herself to an unnecessarily formalized set of rules. She has, nevertheless, written an intense and genuine novel." Ben Lapidus

+ — New Repub 64:358 N 12 '30 250w

New Statesman 36:148 N 8 '30 180w

"Comparisons have been made between 'David Golder' and Tolstoy's 'Ivan Ilyitch,' Balzac's 'Pere Goriot.' The comparisons seem to me to be far-fetched. The tragic implications of Mme Nemirovsky's novel are obvious. In itself, however, it is not a tragic so much as a melodramatic novel. It does not rise to the religious plane that has distinguished the world's several great books on the futility of power. It is one thing to portray, for the reader's pleasure, the fruits of corruption. It is another to leave the reader without horizon and without release." Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p4d O 25 '30 300w

" 'David Golder' is a stirring and powerful piece of work, a sordid tragedy which makes us for the thousandth time question the worth of human existence. The impression remains with the reader that it is the work of a woman who has the strength of one of the masters like Balzac or Dostoievsky, and is capable to an unusual degree of exciting pity and terror."

+ N Y Times p16 N 23 '30 500w

"An unpleasant, competently written tale about utterly disagreeable people; there is not a single character in the book that does not deserve the worst which may befall him." E. C. Beckwith

— + N Y World p3f S 28 '30 200w

"The story is ugly and powerful and is told with economy and accuracy. The unscrupulous old Jew against whose courage disillusion finally triumphs is a figure at once pitiful and beyond the reach of pity. . . An absorbing story." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 156:187 O 1 '30 150w

"This is a novel which definitely justifies itself with a rich contribution to the reader's store of vicarious experiences, and Miss Stuart's translation seems to have been very deftly done."

+ Sat R 150:598 N 8 '30 150w

"Her book is extremely worth reading. The women, Golder's wife and daughter, are perhaps caricatures rather than living personalities, but how firmly they have been drawn, and with what cruelty! In the death scenes, also, a blend of Russian pathos and realism with Gallic clarity of expression has been attained which seems to be the unique contribution of the author to present-day writing. Although her second book, 'Le Bal,' is said to be definitely a disappointment, Mme Nemirovsky in any case takes high rank on the strength of this first novel. It seems likely that a large transatlantic audience awaits a book so obviously akin in subject and manner to American taste." Theodore Purdy

+ Sat R of Lit 7:414 D 6 '30 500w

NESBIT, E. See Bland, E.

NETRAM, JOHN W. RICHARDS. Will India become Christian? with introd. by W. T. Gunn. 142p $1.50 Smith, R.R.

275.4 India. India—Religion 30-13667

"The author is an Indian Christian of the second generation. He has been an associate of E. Stanley Jones and an interpreter for him in some of his evangelistic meetings. He is an ardent nationalist, but manifests no hostility to Great Britain, which has, he says, given India the best rule it has ever had and whose coming he believes to have been 'a part of the program of God for the redemption of mankind.' "—Christian Century

Books p13 Ag 17 '30 200w

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 23 '30 280w

"The picture that he paints is almost too bright to be wholly convincing. His expectation, one gathers, is that India will become Christian by the cumulative and ultimate effect of such evangelistic processes as are now under way. 'The Kingdom of Christ is making headway as never before.' Everything that has happened has been part of the 'preparation' for the coming triumph."

Christian Century 47:942 Jl 30 '30 150w

"The title of this book presents a question which is asked in many quarters. The author is well fitted to undertake the task of answering it as he is an Indian whose experiences as missionary and traveler have given him unusual opportunities for contact with leaders of native and Christian thought. He gives an impressive word picture of the India of today, presenting the positions of all groups with evident fairness, and making unfavorable criticisms in a kindly spirit." Rittenhouse Neisser

+ Crozer Q 7:410 Jl '30 300w

"From his standpoint there is naturally only one possible answer to his question; but he has written what is in many ways a vivid and valuable book. For example, his description of the native Christians of Southwestern India, who claim the Apostle Thomas as their founder, is full of interest." Charles Johnston

+ N Y Times p1 Ag 3 '30 130w

St Louis 28:203 S '30

NEUBURGER, ALBERT. Technical arts and sciences of the ancients; tr. by Henry L. Brose. 518p il $10 Macmillan [42s Methuen]

609.3 Industrial arts—History. Engineering—History 30-21097

A translation of Albert Neuburger's Die Technik der Altertums. "The author has hoped to correlate the work of archeologists, artists and technical experts as it relates to antiquity in order to stimulate further investigation of a civilization that flourished in some cases 3500 years B.C. He quotes authorities to prove a recurring thesis that many methods employed by the ancients have yet to be excelled by moderns. Riveting, soldering and welding, are discussed as well as dyeing, weaving, leather working, the ceramic arts, agriculture, navigation, central heating in the homes of Rome, and the production of synthetic precious stones, difficult to distinguish from the authentic jewels that were their inspiration." (Springf'd Republican)

Booklist 27:144 D '30

"It is a book that should have a place on every reference shelf." B. L. Ullman

+ Class Philol 25:396 O '30 650w

"This is a disappointing book, and scarcely worth the great labour of an English translation, or the translator's occasional attempts to patch it up; and as the bibliographies of the German original have been omitted, it is impossible to check or follow up many remarkable statements without reference to it. But considering the immense field which it is designed to cover, and the very defective materials available in many parts, it is a remarkable compilation, and justifies the translator's contention that the achievements of the ancient world have been unduly overlooked in matters not only of industrial technique but also of scientific experiment." J. L. M.

NEUBERGER, ALBERT—Continued
— + Nature 126:949 D 20 '30 600w

"An excellent translation by Henry Brose of the ranking German authority on its subject. There are no less than 676 illustrations, and it is a summarium and reference-book of unusual value, as well as giving stimulant pictures of the technical sciences in operation long before we usually think they came into existence." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p4d O 18 '30 60w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:34 Jl '30

"In the course of Dr. Neuburger's exhaustive work the truth of his philosophical ideas is amply demonstrated; and it would be well if the leaders of thought in this great republic would make a very close study of this book . . . That no such book has heretofore been available is due wholly to the fact that no one possessed at once the necessary technical training and the broad scholarship required for its preparation. Here for the first time these qualities are united." Maynard Shipley
+ N Y Times p16 N 16 '30 800w
St Louis 28:263 N '30

"So compendious a volume cannot be adequately reviewed except by a board of experts, but in addition to the factual information which it contains, very generously illustrated, it has the great merit of opening our eyes to the notable achievements of the older civilizations."
+ Spec 145:473 O 4 '30 160w

"Written in a style adapted to the understanding of the lay reader, the book presents an authoritative and comprehensive background against which modern accomplishment looms, not as newly created in its multifarious achievement, but in many respects as rediscovered and readapted."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 31 '30 750w

NEUMANN, ALFRED. Guerra; tr. from the German by Huntley Paterson. 332p $3 (8s 6d) Knopf 30-9242

" 'Guerra' is the sequel to 'The Rebels.' Alfred Neumann's remarkable portrayal of the Carbonari conspiracy and the abortive Italian uprising of 1830 . . . In the sequel the atmosphere has clarified. Like a second Napoleon, Guerra returns from Elba in 1846 to plunge anew into conspiracy and revolution." N Y Evening Post

Bookm 71:viii Ag '30 100w
Reviewed by Angel Flores
Books p13 Je 8 '30 520w

"In the original German, the story may run more smoothly; as translated, its course seems ploddingly heavy. Guerra stalks his way through love and leadership in a Germanic style rather than like a fiery Italian. This despite the fact that Mr. Neumann knows his Italy."
— + Boston Transcript p3 My 24 '30 230w

"It is both effective and plausible, and the dramatic crises—of which there are many—are not at all forced." Pierre Loving
+ Nation 130:684 Je 11 '30 360w
New Statesman 35:247 My 31 '30 120w

"While 'Guerra' is hardly as satisfactory as its immediate predecessor, it must be read for its rich pageantry, for its moving theatrical quality which never descends to mere cheapness, and for the sheer fascination of the story. Its characterization offers nothing that we have not already received in 'The Rebels,' but its plot is richer and more absorbing and there is a hypnotic attraction in following the great arc of Guerra's spectacular career which the reader knows is bound to end tragically." C. P. Fadiman
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 12 '30 500w

"The whole is told with grace and energy and is couched in a style that is both dignified and attractive. Characterization is well sustained and the rich colors of a complex political, social and emotional background are applied with masterly skill. 'Guerra' is a fine piece of historical recreation."
+ N Y Times p6 Je 15 '30 650w

"Suffers very seriously through the fact that it is a sequel. It follows Herr Neumann's volume 'The Rebels,' published last year, and the author has, consciously or subconsciously, assumed that every reader of 'Guerra' has read the earlier volume. Without benefit of an antecedent interest in Guerra's earlier exploits and his younger personality, the new volume lacks suspense. It is shrewd, penetrating and it shows the inevitability of demagoguery in public leadership, but in itself it holds attention more as an essay on 'leadership' than as narrative."
— + N Y World p7m Je 15 '30 220w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

"Big though the subject is, the treatment seems to lack that quality of emotional intensity, personally experienced, which achieves universality by incidental power of telling each reader more about himself."
— + Sat R 150:51 Jl 12 '30 220w
Reviewed by Garrett Mattingly
Sat R of Lit 6:1188 Jl 12 '30 700w

"A book whose dialogue, narrative and intrigue are at first fascinating in their obliquity but are finally not a little elusive and monotonous." V. S. Pritchett
+ — Spec 144:985 Je 14 '30 150w
Times [London] Lit Sup p536 Je 26 '30 200w

NEUMANN, ALFRED. King Haber, and other stories. 269p $2.50 King, A.H.
30-8907

"The present book contains three long short stories, two of which are laid in the beginning of the nineteenth century—one in Russia and the other in a small German ducal state. The third is narrated by a hunchbacked German schoolmaster who sees a sex crime committed by his assistant, a warped soul, and cowers away from the other as though he were (as indeed he is) his own tortured, devilish alter ego. Hounded by the evil within himself, the assistant at last shoots himself."—Nation

"Mr. Neumann's stories do not depend for their quality of brilliance upon the trappings of remote periods nor upon pictorial glamor. They are sharp, incisive and actual. Their historic significance is only a garment in which to drape the figures. What really gives them their éclat is the author's high sense of drama. He has a masterly eye for the tense gestures and crises which life occasionally prompts."
+ Books p14 Mr 30 '30 500w
Boston Transcript p2 Ap 16 '30 350w

"A writer like Alfred Neumann, who deals almost entirely with codes, punctilios, quirks of honor, and the sharp tooth of conscience, strikes us at first glance as somewhat alien to his own times. We are forced, however, to put aside any suspicion that this author is trying to squeeze more drama than is legitimate out of human situations that are to all intents and purposes dead. His method is penetrating, beautiful, true, even though his kind of inner tribunal has been put to sleep by a generation that, while still perhaps admiring his English style, can make neither head nor tail of the high-minded motives that impel the characters of Joseph Conrad. Neumann bears a surface resemblance—but only a surface resemblance—to Mr. Thornton Wilder. In Neumann there is, however, less casuistry, and far more poetry and direct contact with people." Pierre Loving
+ Nation 130:550 My 7 '30 450w

"These three stories, two of which belong to a special school of historical melodrama, are well and strongly fashioned and can be recommended for this reason."
+ New Repub 62:280 Ap 23 '30 250w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p11m My 17 '30 130w

"The three novelettes in the present book reveal Neumann's gifts as a virtuoso, but have none of the qualities of permanent literature."
+ — N Y Times p9 Ap 13 '30 600w

Reviewed by Bellamy Partridge
N Y World p9m My 18 '30 520w

"These three pieces, for all their splendid glitter, are not the kind of thing that we are likely to remember for very long; at times they seem merely tentative suggestions for novels to be written later. However, we are always pleased by the excellent atmosphere and the bizarre characterizations in the volume. Throughout, we remain interested and admiring as we watch Herr Neumann's nimble and resourceful mind in action."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1179 Jl 5 '30 330w

NEUMANN, ROBERT. Flood; tr. from the German by William A. Drake. 476p $3 Covici [7s 6d Putnam]
30-10605

A long and powerful novel treating of life in post-war Germany. " 'Flood' pictures a world of profiteers who cheat and lie and swindle, of honest women turned harlots and harlots turned monstrous, of sexual aberrations, of gambling, of crime and murder, of starvation and reckless living upon the moment, of deluded mystics and gross materialists; in short, it is a world where society has disintegrated and lost its way and where the humiliation of defeat and the smashed ideals of a proletariat culminate in nothing less than a witches' dance in the stony streets, stock marts, brothels and cabarets." (N Y Times)

"There is nothing artificial in the telling. Neumann plunges headlong into the insane dance of his people, and the result is a tumultuous, whirling story so overpowering in detail and so impressionistic in style that one reading cannot possibly encompass the vastness of its material."
+ Bookm 71:322 Je '30 350w

"His idea has weight and scope. But he forgets the one thing which would leaven his book and give it life: the law of contrast. We would not know the night if it were not for the day. It is the contrasts in nature and in human beings from which we build up our perspective. And in 'Flood' Mr. Neumann forgets all contrast. He stretches a vast, black canvas before your eyes and tells you he has painted a story. You look in vain for contour, for chiaroscuro. Only a dense, inscrutable and overwhelming darkness meets your glance." V. P. Ross
— + Books p21 Mr 30 '30 700w
Boston Transcript p1 Mr 29 '30 450w

" 'Flood' is a rather mechanical and soulless book. If it fails to shock us into a catharsis it is largely because the chiaroscuro of art is unfortunately absent." Pierre Loving
— Nation 131:45 Jl 9 '30 500w

"No one of the dozens of characters ever resolves himself into a human being, except when, as in the scene between Johannes Abel and the impoverished aristocrats, there is a passage in which people appear once, and after that never again. The reason is that Mr. Neumann can give good realistic literary snap-shots, but lacks the discipline necessary for the portrayal of character development." G. T. Hellman
— + New Repub 63:81 Je 4 '30 200w
New Statesman 35:84 Ap 26 '30 160w

"In the hands of a lesser man this theme with all its implications might have been but a sensual nightmare. Mr. Neumann, however, lifts it to the horrid plane of some monstrous Walpurgisnacht. There is uncompromising force, unashamed dwelling upon usually forbidden topics without the slightest suggestion of pruriency, powerful (if somewhat unshaded) characterization, implications of philosophical detachment from the theme, and a vigorous and direct prose that carries the reader swiftly along through a volume of nearly five hundred pages. In other words, 'Flood' is very close to being a great book."
+ — N Y Times p7 My 4 '30 750w

Reviewed by P. D. Stong
N Y World p11m Ap 13 '30 680w

"A long, impressive and, to this reviewer, exhausting novel of post-war Germany, bitterly satiric and unrelieved by humor or detachment. It is a violent flood of what is called realism, a picture of the lost generation, a picture of life, perhaps as it is, perhaps as it is seen through a jaundiced eye. Neumann sees a world hysterical, hungry and vicious, a world disintegrating under the flood loosed by the War."
— Outlook 154:509 Mr 26 '30 120w

"The story is undeniably powerful. Each character is stamped brutally, in the black and white of the cinema, upon the brain, and the story writhes with repulsive life before the eyes. In spite of Mr. Neumann's somewhat hysterical impressionism, there are scarcely any absurdities of detail, and there is a great deal of method and pattern in the madness. His swift, callous, business-like manner is well adapted to impart the atmosphere of luxurious brutishness. One's chief objections to the book are that it is on the top note all the time; that there is no relief from tension; and that there are no half-tones." V. S. Pritchett
Spec 144:581 Ap 5 '30 450w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 27 '30 420w

"Perhaps the picture of social chaos is over lurid at times; but Herr Neumann appears to exaggerate only because he will not allow the principal character to depart for a moment from his rather dehumanized attitude of detachment. The story is ingenious and complicated in structure, almost too complicated; but it is handled with altogether remarkable dexterity. The last quarter of the book, packed with new twists and turns of an intensely dramatic kind, exhibits the present fashion for psychological detection. It is extremely well done, the suspense and excitement mounting until the last moment."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p510 Je 19 '30 500w

NEVILLE, MARGOT, pseud. Giving the bride away. 283p $2 McBride [7s 6d Chapman]
30-7563

"Charles and Kathie, romantically betrothed in their cradles, are to be married in a fortnight's time. Kathie is not particularly eager, and Charles, having fallen in love with somebody else, still less so, but whatever they lack in enthusiasm is more than made up for by Kathie's redoubtable mother, who covets for her daughter the title and wealth that will one day be Charles's. At this critical moment a chance meeting with a susceptible, simple-hearted Colonial millionaire prompts Charles to make one last, desperate bid for freedom by introducing him to Kathie—and a happy idea it proves to be."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Bookm 71:xxv Ap '30 100w

"Miss Neville's is the sort of amusing light novel which may be described, without odious intent in any direction, as Wodehousean, at least in everything but the Wodehousean je ne sais quoi. It is a thoroughly engaging volume, ideal for whatever corresponds to the old-fashioned hammock."
+ Books p12 Je 22 '30 120w

"There is real enjoyment in this story—lots of real-life appeal, and lots of action."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 12 '30 200w

"Here is that rarest of birds, light fiction that is brazenly and audaciously light." J. L. G.
+ N Y Evening Post p9m My 31 '30 270w

"The only evident disadvantages of joint composition, in the present instance, are seen in

NEVILLE, MARGOT, pseud.—Continued
an occasional unevenness of style. The narrative, however, is sufficiently swift and clever to cause its weak spots soon to be forgotten."
+ N Y Times p25 Ap 6 '30 170w

"It provides the reader with some first-rate fooling, which, robust though it is, never strikes one as forced or out of character."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p301 Ap 3 '30 150w

NEVINS, ALLAN. Henry White; thirty years of American diplomacy. 518p il $5 Harper

B or 92 White, Henry. United States—Foreign relations. Peace conference, 1919
30-29423

Henry White's long and useful career in American diplomacy culminated with his services as one of the five American representatives at the Peace conference in 1919. The biography throws light upon the Venezuela affair, the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, the Boxer rebellion, the Algeciras conference and above all, on the inner workings of the Peace conference, the relations of the American delegates, the struggle with the Senate and the opposition of Henry Cabot Lodge.

Booklist 27:204 Ja '31

"The lives of good men generally do not make fascinating reading, and Henry White was a very good man. . . Mr. Nevins has performed a useful service in setting down the facts of the career of this genial, lovable, self-effacing man." John Carter
Bookm 72:425 D '30 280w

"With the publication of this biography of Henry White Professor Nevins ventures into the difficult and often arid field of diplomacy, and his success is notable. With consummate skill he has interwoven the chronicle of American diplomacy with the biography of its most astute practitioner, and the result is something approaching a history of American foreign relations since 1880. . . These chapters constitute a notable contribution to the growing literature of the Peace Conference and a remarkable tribute to the high-mindedness and open-mindedness of President Wilson." H. S. Commager
+ Books p3 N 9 '30 1450w

"Mr. Nevins has saved the future investigator a considerable amount of work by his selection of those portions of the White Papers about which the future historian will probably be most curious. Of course, no biographer is infallible in such matters, but it is with deep satisfaction that the serious investigator sees such a book as this turned out not by a professional psychologist, not by a neo-journalist who prefers cleverness and brilliancy to accuracy, but by one who can have some claim to knowing what is permanently significant. Mr. Nevins's book will probably serve the future investigator as a valuable source in placing Henry Cabot Lodge in his proper niche." R. G. Adams
+ Current Hist 33:viii Ja '31 900w

"Mr. Nevins's book loses much of its value because of his habit of summarizing documents, instead of quoting more freely. After all, such a book as his is scarcely for the general reader, and the professed devotee of international affairs prefers to take his documents straight. In spite of minor criticisms of this sort, however, the book easily and immediately takes its place as an important contribution to knowledge and as delightful reading in its own right." John Bakeless
+ — N Y Evening Post p5d N 1 '30 650w

"His career was uneventful. There were no spicy passages, no racy episodes in his diplomatic progress. He made friends, both for himself and for his country, and he radiated good temper and good-will. He bridged the gap between the narrow and somewhat truculent American statesmanship of the post-Civil War era and the broader and world-wide responsibilities of contemporary American power. Professor Nevins has made a vital and scholarly contribution to the history of our times by this monument to the life and friendships of a great American gentleman." John Carter
+ N Y Times p7 N 30 '30 1500w

"The permanent value of the book is in its disclosure of the intrigues, the personalities, both here and in Paris, of the peace congress. These are based on the private letters, the diary and papers of the greatest diplomat on the American Peace Commission. . . The sensational features are in their exposure of the almost incredible hypocrisy of the partisan contention that neither the Senate leaders nor the Republican Party were accorded any recognition to the negotiations. . . Here for the first time among the leaders in the peace congress we have the story and interpretation of a great diplomat unmoved by personal animosities or partisan considerations or ambition to memorialize his own participation." C. G. Bowers
+ N Y World p3e N 9 '30 800w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:12 D '30 200w

"A fascinating and brilliant book." B. E. Schmitt
+ Sat R of Lit 7:450 D 13 '30 1750w

"Henry White has been fortunate in his biographer. This is an unpretentious volume, with no parade of 'research,' though obviously based on a thorough study of all the sources. It is fair-minded, well proportioned, well arranged, free from irrelevancies and digressions, and written without any straining after rhetorical effect. One of its features, not always to be found in the work of American writers, is its accuracy in reproducing the names of a large number of English persons and places."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1050 D 11 '30 1550w

NEW, CHESTER WILLIAM. Lord Durham; a biography of John George Lambton, first earl of Durham. 626p $7.50 (25s) Oxford

B or 92 Durham, John George Lambton, 1st earl of [30-7876]

"John George Lambton, the first earl of Durham, who died in 1840, was a brilliant and forceful Whig statesman, whose leadership of the advanced wing of his party in the period of the Reform bills gained him the nickname of 'Radical Jack.' He had a share in the passage of the famous Reform bill of 1832, but his chief fame doubtless rests on his 'Report on the Affairs of British North America,' in 1839, which pointed the way to a reconciliation of colonial self-government with imperial unity. His service as governor-general of Canada was brief and not entirely fortunate, but is historically important because he brought about in 1840 the union of Upper and Lower Canada."—Springf'd Republican

"As for the hectic mission to Canada, there is nothing very startling brought out in Dr. New's book. The story, in its essentials, is as it has heretofore been told. There is some new material drawn from the Lambton manuscripts and a good many fresh suggestions as to motives or objectives. The temper in which the quick-moving events of 1837-38 are described is conspicuously fair. Durham emerges with a rather battered halo, but no one who reads this book can fail in friendly feeling toward one who, with all his spells of pettiness and impatience, embodied nevertheless a high measure of courage, liberalism, and devotion to ideals which the world has now exalted as its own. Dr. New has done an excellent piece of work." W. B. Munro
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:756 Ag '30 650w
Boston Transcript p8 F 8 '30 950w

"Professor New has lived up to his task. In the first place, by giving it the years of source study which the complexity of the subjects and the times required; in the second, by a sturdy independence of view that gives almost as great freshness to familiar events as to the important new matters he reveals; and in the third, by an almost continuously maintained vigor and liveliness of style."

+ Hist Outlook 21:182 Ap '30 650w

"Professor Chester W. New, Professor of History in McMaster University, Toronto, has written what is likely to become the standard biography of the author of the famous Durham Report . . . Professor New gives us a fascinating narrative, and we are interested to see that he is convinced that the substantial authorship of the Report belongs to Durham himself."

+ Spec 143:951 D 21 '29 680w

"Meticulous in detail, impartial in analysis, this biography is a thoroughly exhaustive study of an important and in some respects sensational public career."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 F 14 '30 500w

"Professor New has spent years of devoted toil in examining the materials, printed and unprinted, in this country and in Canada; and he has set forth his conclusions not only with sound and broad historical scholarship and in a clear unlaboured style, but also with a fairness and coolness of temper not easily to be attained by anyone who admires Durham. The result does justice to his memory."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p17 Ja 9 '30 4600w

NEWCOMB, ARTHUR. Dowie, anointed of the Lord. 403p il $3.50 Century

B or 92 Dowie, John Alexander 30-17431

A novelized biography of John Alexander Dowie, prophet, seer, charlatan, mountebank, founder of the Christian Catholic church in Zion, and owner and despot of Zion City, Illinois. The author explains that the book is an accurate account of the personality and acts of Dowie, but aside from the man himself, his family and his successors, all the characters are fiction, as are the conversations.

"Unfortunately, Mr. Newcomb, who has the qualification of having spent eight years in closest contact with Mr. Dowie, has cast his material into that abominable bastard form, a novelized biography. It is a posthumous triumph that Dowie's personality comes victoriously through the inhuman dialogue, the awkward characterizations and the inevitable melodrama with pungency enough to make the book engrossing."

+ — Bookm 71:v Jl '30 200w

"Mr. Newcomb is admirably fair. He makes the reader feel, as he himself felt, the magnetic appeal of Dowie's many-faceted character, whose core was an unscrupulous egotism beyond comprehension. . . In the portrait Mr. Newcomb verbally paints of this modern 'Prophet Elijah,' the high lights are clarified by understanding, more from personal contact. The dense shadows, while not softened, are also not deepened by the author's disillusion or possible personal prejudice." Frances Bartlett

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 28 '30 1750w

"An amazing tale and well told." E. W. M.

+ Churchman p28 Ag 2 '30 50w

"Much of Dowie's career is neglected, but his picturesque part on the American scene is given in detail. Life in Zion City during its early history is also portrayed, without omitting any of the original color. This work is an entertaining contribution to a chapter in American social history."

+ Current Hist 32:1032 Ag '30 100w

N Y Times p33 S 28 '30 550w

St Louis 28:302 D '30

"Arthur Newcomb may have had sound reasons for making this look like fiction rather than fact; but the fictitious element adds nothing to the story and much space is wasted on irrelevancies such as the details of Dowie's trip around the world. No treatment could altogether spoil the story, but Mr. Newcomb has fallen far short of making the best of it."

— + Sat R of Lit 7:6 Jl 26 '30 250w

NEWCOME, LOUIS A. Lincoln's boy spy. 197p $1.75 Putnam

973.78 United States—History—Civil war—Personal narratives. Lincoln, Abraham 29-19625

Captain Newcome at the age of fourteen was a drummer-boy in a Boston regiment. By accident he became the bearer of important dispatches to Lincoln, which he delivered in person at the White House. Following this beginning Lincoln often employed the boy on secret-service errands, such as carrying orders to officers and helping track down Southern sympathizers.

"The simplicity of those times, the thrill of real and personal danger, and slight silhouette additions to our knowledge of Lincoln and Lee make this little book interesting and informal. The fact that the author has not tried to give his book literary distinction naturally detracts somewhat from its interest."

+ — Nation 129:602 N 20 '29 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:33 Ap '30

"Mr. Newcome has told his story well, and it will prove of decided interest to all boys. It is unfortunate that he has not documented it a little for the sake of older readers, and that it bears the marks of a failing memory, even in the mis-spelling of proper names that might easily be verified and corrected. But it is a genuine piece of Lincolniana, and as such entitled to respect." Allan Nevins

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:557 D 14 '29 300w

NEWELL, AUDREY. Who killed Cavelotti? 306p $2 Century

30-5402

Cavelotti, famous Italian opera singer, was equally famous for his love affairs and his bad debts. One afternoon, while locked in his New York hotel apartment, Cavelotti was stabbed thru the heart as he was attempting to embrace his latest amour. The young lady did not do the stabbing. There were several other people, however, who hated Cavelotti and had the opportunity to do away with him, but Detective Doyle's chief problem was to discover how the deed had been done.

Bookm 71:xxix Ap '30 100w

"This one is thoroughly readable, the might-have-happened kind." Will Cuppy

+ Books p12 Mr 9 '30 120w

Boston Transcript p4 My 10 '30 200w

"If the method of the actual killing probably will not stand too close scrutiny, the story is interestingly told, though somewhat slow paced."

+ — N Y World p11m Ap 13 '30 120w

NEWFANG, OSCAR. United states of the world; a comparison between the League of nations and the United States of America. 284p $2 (9s) Putnam

341.1 United States—Constitutional history. League of nations 30-4396

The author traces a close parallel between the Articles of confederation of the states and the Covenant of the League, and an equally interesting similarity between the first ten years' experience of the League and of the United States under its original form of organization. He offers some suggestions for improving the structure of the League and making membership more acceptable to the United States.

"Mr. Newfang's study is suggestive although his comparisons seem overdrawn."

Am Pol Sci R 24:520 My '30 180w

Boston Transcript p5 Mr 8 '30 380w

"Mr. Newfang presents his case with clarity and insight."

+ Christian Science Monitor p11 F 21 '30 500w

NEWFANG, OSCAR—Continued

Cleveland Open Shelf p38 Mr '30

Reviewed by P. C. Nash

Current Hist 33:xx N '30 850w

"Mr. Newfang's elaborate argument labors under the disadvantage—of which his enthusiasm for his proposition renders him quite unconscious—of trying to prove a parallel between two things that are fundamentally different. It is a large program to set forth in one small book, but Mr. Newfang is so enamored of it that he is not at all perturbed by the wide and stormy seas and their thickly bristling rocks and mountain tops and icebergs across which his craft would have to sail."

N Y Times p29 F 23 '30 450w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:12 F '30 250w

St Louis 28:132 My '30

Reviewed by H. K. Norton

Sat R of Lit 6:1191 Jl 12 '30 300w

Spec 144:279 F 22 '30 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p255 Mr 20 '30 100w

Reviewed by K. D. Blake

World Tomorrow 13:314 Jl '30 300w

NEWMAN, BERNARD. Cavalry goes through (Eng title: Cavalry went through). 276p $2 Holt [7s 6d Gollancz]

30-19633

In this story of the World war as it might have been, a British Napoleon, transferred to the western front from a successful campaign in British East Africa, revolutionized modern warfare and won the war in 1917 before America had even entered.

Booklist 27:162 D '30

Bookm 72:vi O '30 100w

"Audacious as the idea is, 'The Cavalry Goes Through' is completely successful within the limits which the author has set for himself—the set bounds of all those who begin a tale with a conscious 'let's believe.' Through 275 pages of not too impossible adventure he succeeds in eliciting and sustaining that 'momentary suspension of disbelief' whose creation is the first requisite of romance. And by peopling his book with many of the well known figures of the great war, under reasonably transparent pseudonyms, he gives himself an opportunity for a good deal of satire and the reader the fascination of making his own identifications." Lambert Davis

+ Books p5 Ag 17 '30 550w

Reviewed by J. B. Wharton

Nation 131:475 O 29 '30 50w

"Mr. Bernard Newman offers us a version of the war as it might have been in forthright and melodramatic fashion, and whether his conclusions are entirely serious or not they are substantial enough to be interesting. . . He has not offered anything new to military science. His book need offend no one and may entertain a few. If things had been as he arranges them, undoubtedly the cavalry would have gone through, to their own glory. And then a great many other things would have happened which he has not room enough to explain." Eugene Lohrke

N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 16 '30 480w

"Its pace makes the book very easy to read, but constitutes a strong handicap in that its effect is that of a summary that grows breathless. It sounds at the end like a résumé or the plan for a history rather than the history itself. No details—no compelling dramatic scenes or episdoes impress themselves upon the mind of the reader, who will close the book remembering only the idea behind it. . . The merit that may be granted to the book lies in its freshness. Though it will not please the public avid for the stench and blood of real warfare, it will earn the appreciation of those who respect a fertile imagination and its fruit of original ideas."

+ — N Y Times p14 S 7 '30 650w

Reviewed by A. W. Porterfield

Outlook 155:628 Ag 20 '30 200w

Reviewed by Emerson Taylor

Sat R of Lit 7:177 O 4 '30 230w

"Mr. Newman has produced a most curious blend of fantasy and reality, but his book is well worth reading. It is written with such verve that we almost find ourselves believing that time has been set back." B. E. Todd

+ Spec 144:287 F 22 '30 130w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 31 '30 680w

"Each successive episode is recorded with great skill, surprising plausibility, and a real understanding of military problems. Whether every or indeed any of the exploits of Duncan were possible is beside the point. His creator has written a book which is not only very readable and at moments humorous, but is probably also worth consideration by the military student."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p201 Mr 13 '30 450w

NEWMAN, BERTRAM. Lord Melbourne. 322p il $4.50 (12s 6d) Macmillan

B or 92 Melbourne, William Lamb, 2d viscount [30-21294]

Lytton Strachey's study of Lord Melbourne in his "Queen Victoria" revived the interest of this generation in the man who was for seven years the young queen's prime minister, as well as her affectionate friend and mentor in affairs of state. Mr Newman offers a study of Lord Melbourne's personality which centers interest in the man rather than the statesman.

"We have nothing but praise for this able and delightful book. It is well modeled and well written; it is scholarly; it is marked throughout by insight and sympathy." C. W. Colby

+ Am Hist R 36:196 O '30 550w

"The material of Melbourne's life offers considerable temptation to the sensational biographer, and Mr. Newman deserves great credit for his careful impartial and admirably discreet treatment of it. Under his hands the Victorian premier emerges as a human, recognizable, and more than ordinarily appealing person."

+ Bookm 71:554 Ag '30 400w

Reviewed by W. L. Langer

Books p19 N 23 '30 650w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 23 '30 1050w

Current Hist 32:1239 S '30 120w

"Mr. Newman selects well, and the whole biography is sane and readable. He often perorates and sometimes lapses. But he has a good sense of the period, and his most important lack is an index." H. D. Ziman

+ — Nation and Ath 47:87 Ap 19 '30 650w

"Mr. Newman's defence of Melbourne argues rather a superficial examination of the social history of the time. But he has written a very attractive book on a man who remains attractive in spite of some very ugly blots on his record." J. L. H.

+ — New Statesman 35:450 Jl 12 '30 950w

N Y Evening Post p4s Je 7 '30 100w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p3 Je 8 '30 1120w

"His biography was quite worth writing, and the author has done his work well and without any straining after effect."

+ Sat R 149:460 Ap 12 '30 300w

Spec 144:678 Ap 19 '30 140w

"Mr. Newman's work will probably become a standard book; though he cannot altogether supersede Torrens, who is much fuller on some subjects."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p307 Ap 10 '30 2200w

NEWMAN, EDWARD MANUEL. Seeing England and Scotland. (Newman traveltalks) 409p il $5 (21s) Funk

914.2 England—Description and travel. Scotland—Description and travel 30-11467

A narrative description of England, Scotland and Wales which attempts to present "almost every phase of life, scenery, art, history and architectural development." Beginning at Stratford-on-Avon the route includes Warwickshire, Oxford and Canterbury, Cornwall and Devon, Cambridge, Manchester, York and the Lake District, Liverpool, Chester, Wales, and up to Scotland, where the author visits the chief cities of both the Lowlands and the Highlands. London is omitted because the author intends to make it the subject of a later volume.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 71:xiii Jl '30 200w

"Like his travel lectures, Mr. Newman's books possess a large measure of that appeal which is referred to in the world of motion pictures as 'box office.' Which is to say that they are written with a definite knowledge of the capacity of the average public to absorb information and how to mix the business of instruction with entertaining byplay."
— Books p19 My 25 '30 280w
Cleveland Open Shelf p141 N '30

"While Mr. Newman's travel narratives are always interesting and colorful they are also superficial, and although this new one is a comprehensive and graphic survey of its many-sided theme that can be used profitably as a guide book or read at home with keen interest, it reports only the surface observation of an alert traveler."
N Y Times p12 My 4 '30 350w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:55 Je '30

"The descriptions are straightforward and generally accurate; but they are disfigured by misprints. The illustrations consist of nearly 300 photographs, mostly clear and well chosen."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p489 Je 12 '30 250w

NEWMAN, EDWARD MANUEL. Seeing France. (Newman traveltalks) 406p il $5 (21s) Funk

914.4 France—Description and travel 30-28319

The "traveltalk" lecture gives in this volume a glimpse of the places and towns in France (excepting Paris and its immediate environs) most frequented by tourists, including trips into Brittany, Normandy, the battlefields sections, the château country, Alsace-Lorraine, and the chief resorts of the Riviera.

"Mr. Newman writes his travel books for the same public that flocks to his lectures. The intent is to be comprehensive, descriptive and entertaining, leaving to others the task of interpretation or the more delicate function of criticism."
Books p21 O 26 '30 250w
Boston Transcript p5 N 26 '30 300w

NEWMAN, EDWARD MANUEL. Seeing Spain 2 and Morocco. (Newman traveltalks) 383p il $5 (21s) Funk

914.6 Spain—Description and travel. Morocco—Description and travel 30-31725

Mr Newman begins with a glance at Morocco, and dips inland at Mazagan, before entering Spain by way of Gibraltar. Spanish towns described, in the chapters following are Ronda, Cadiz, Seville, Malaga, Granada, Cordova, Barcelona, Valencia, Sargossa, Toledo, Madrid, Segovia, Salamanca, Asturias, Galicia, Burgos, San Sebastian. Several chapters are devoted to the art and the recreations of Spain.

"As a seasoned travel-talker, E. M. Newman knows his plane of action with a cultivated sureness equivalent almost to an instinct, and upon it he operates in a manner as agile as his plan is inclusive. His book on Spain and Morocco is one more demonstration of the effectiveness of his method."
+ Books p42 D 7 '30 250w
Boston Transcript p1 D 27 '30 420w

NEWMAN, ERNEST. Stories of the great operas. v 1-2 322;335p v 1 $3; v 2 $3.50 Knopf

782.1 Opera—Stories, plots, etc. (28-24373)

The first volume of this series dealing with the great operas, their stories, their music, and their composers is devoted to Wagner and his operas. The second volume includes Mozart's Figaro, Don Giovanni and The Magic Flute, Beethoven's Fidelio, Rossini's Barber of Seville and William Tell, Weber's Der Freischütz and Thomas's Mignon.

Booklist 25:152 Ja '29 (Review of v 1)
Booklist 26:149 Ja '30 (Review of v 2)

"One cannot avoid the suspicion that Mr. Newman contrived this book in something of a hurry. In point of style the writing, while bearing ample evidence of an eager enthusiasm, is distinctly inferior to Mr. Newman's average. Nor is the text by any means free from misstatements of divers sorts." Peter Bowdoin
— Books p21 My 19 '29 450w (Review of v 1)

"The action of these eight lyric dramas is recounted in great detail, in fact too much detail, with scant attention to such devices as suspense and climax. On the other hand, the fullness with which the job is done has its value, and so have the musical illustrations which intersperse the text. Another feature of this well-stocked volume is the inclusion of concise but meaty biographies of the composers treated." Peter Bowdoin
+ — Books p10 F 9 '30 150w (Review of v 2)
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:13 F '30 (Review of v 2)
Pratt p23 summer '29 (Review of v 1)
St Louis 27:54 F '29 (Review of v 1)

NEWMAN, FRANCES. Frances Newman's letters; ed. by Hansell Baugh, with a prefatory note by James Branch Cabell. 372p $3 Liveright

B or 92 29-30216

James Branch Cabell, a friend of Frances Newman and an admirer of her work, writes a prefatory appreciation to this selection of her letters. Many of the letters in the volume are to or from Mr Cabell; correspondence with H. L. Mencken, Compton Mackenzie and other literary figures, as well as with relatives and personal friends, also appears. The letters reveal Miss Newman's tastes in literary matters, her reflections on contemporary books and writers, her experiences as a reviewer and critic, and her personal idiosyncrasies.

Reviewed by T. S. Matthews
Bookm 71:124 Mr '30 580w
Reviewed by F. H. Britten
Books p4 F 2 '30 1050w

"Human letters they are, pathetic at times, but not unduly brilliant, not unduly original nor expressing any remarkable power of discrimination. . . The letters are delightfully edited and arranged. They are interesting, too. But they do no more to convince the reader that Frances Newman was a great writer than do her own books." G. R. B. R.
+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ja 15 '30 1000w

"Frances Newman commented on most everybody in her letters and for the most part disparagingly. And therefore this book will provide many a choice morsel of gossip about matters wholly outside her literary development. She captures our attention primarily as a woman—less as a thinker or a novelist. . . Even though these letters take on the character of a literary vaudeville, Miss Newman was important to American letters. She brought a fine, intractable berserker spirit to the woman's section in criticism." Harry Hansen
N Y World p15 Ja 7 '30 1100w

NEWMAN, FRANCES—Continued

St Louis 28:112 Ap '30

"Most of the evidence of what she was really like is to be found in the 'Letters,' which have been edited and arranged with admirable taste and discrimination by one of the persons who really knew her; there were few who did. These letters are fascinating, and I would no more have missed reading them than I would deliberately forget having known Frances Newman." Herschel Brickell

+ Sat R of Lit 6:843 Mr 22 '30 570w

"'Frances Newman's Letters' are not important letters, but they throw considerable light on the strength and limitations of two novels which attained some celebrity—'The Hard-Boiled Virgin' and 'Dead Lovers are Faithful Lovers.' Miss Newman's strength was in her individuality, her weakness in the influences to which she submitted in bringing her individuality to fulfilment. She had wit and a pungent mind; she yielded to bad taste. Miss Newman's vanity, her love affairs, her friendships and animosities are far from significant as reflected in this volume. Yet her personality arouses curiosity."

Springf'd Republican p8 Ja 4 '30 950w

NEWTON, ALFRED EDWARD. A tourist in
2 spite of himself. 252p il $3.50 Little

914 Europe—Description and travel 30-29130

"Piquant travel essays by the Philadelphia book collector, who 'cheerfully perambulated' through England, Belgium, France, Germany, Scandinavia, Egypt and Palestine at his wife's behest. Experiences and opinions, anecdotes having little or no connection with the scene at hand, a few guide book facts, and a frank discussion of standardized America, make up a wholly personal book which the reader will enjoy, even when he disagrees with some of Mr. Newton's pronouncements. Amusingly illustrated by Gluyas Williams."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Booklist 27:202 Ja '31

"With a detachment partly bookish and partly temperamental Mr. Newton moves about the European scene and penetrates Egypt and Palestine without falling into the lock-step of the conventional tourist. He writes about what he sees in terms of what he thinks, thereby avoiding the standardized enthusiasms and that painful habit of absorbing impressions for the sole purpose of giving them second-hand circulation. As a guide to places this book walks pleasantly at your elbow without jogging it."

+ Books p12 Ja 4 '31 220w

Cleveland Open Shelf p155 D '30

"A tourist—but what a tourist! Entertaining, urbane, scholarly, sometimes suprisingly informative and sometimes exasperating—this is a tourist who is first and last and all the time a real person. . . Personal experiences, impressions, opinions, reminders of Dr. Johnson ever and anon, anecdotes that have little or nothing to do with the scene at hand set down alongside of guide-book facts that are presented just as they were personally found out—all in all, a wholly personal book, and wholly readable." Katherine Woods

+ N Y Times p12 N 16 '30 700w

"A delightful and witty book. Mr. Newton takes himself and his habits to England and the continent without shame and without boasting, indeed makes of them the best part of the story." A. K.

+ Survey 65:167 N 1 '30 360w

NEWTON, JOSEPH FORT. New preaching; a little book about a great art. 187p $2 Cokesbury press [5s Student]

251 Preaching 30-3789

"In this volume the foremost pulpit artist of Protestant America has written about what he is wont to call 'a great art.' The volume is a confession revealing some of the deep and hidden springs from which Dr. Newton has borrowed much of his own great power as a preacher of seer-like vision. As one reads on and on through these pages of beauty and discernment he will discover that he is finding more than good advice about preaching; he will, in fact, make his own discovery of the 'house of the seer.'"—Christian Century

"This book about the art of preaching, by an eminently successful practitioner of that art, not only teaches its principles beautifully and effectively but, what is even more important, will renew the preacher's zest for his pulpit ministry."

+ Christian Century 47:437 Ap 2 '30 100w

"Dr. Newton is deeply read in the best literature of the ages and here takes with sensitive touch the spiritual pulse of his own generation." H. D. McKeenan

+ Christian Century 47:593 My 7 '30 300w

"Done with a noble insight, a searching comprehension, and a captivating beauty of expression. This is a golden little book. No preacher ought by any chance to miss it." C. M. Douglas

+ Churchman 141:17 F 1 '30 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:82 N '30

St Louis 28:129 My '30

NEWTON, JOSEPH FORT. Things I know in
2 religion; a pref. to faith. 188p $2 Harper [2s 6d Stockwell]

252 Sermons 30-25646

The emphasis of these sermons, as indicated in the title, is on experience as the basis of faith as against authority from without and theological argument.

"Joseph Fort Newton is one of the most accomplished of American preachers. He regards preaching seriously as one of the major arts, and by his own performance glorifies anew the pulpit. It is not surprising, perhaps, that so true an artist should be so devout a mystic. His message is nowhere an argument but everywhere an affirmation of faith. To souls sorely troubled by the doubts and denials of an unbelieving age, this book, so ably composed and beautifully written, will give not only comfort but glad assurance." J. H. Holmes

+ Books p14 D 7 '30 200w

"The sheer intellectual honesty with which the subjects are treated is in perfect keeping with the profound nature of the subjects. But there is more than a combination of intellect and profound subject-matter. There is a winsomeness of expression which carries these chapters almost entirely out of the field of prosaic writing into the realm of poetry. Essentially, Doctor Newton is a poet, both in thought and expression. He not only loves beauty, but he expresses beauty on every page. Those who love good style in the written and spoken word will find enjoyment in the reading of this volume; and their souls will not go unblessed." G. F. Finnie

+ Crozer Q 8:128 Ja '31 150w

NEWTON, THOMAS WODEHOUSE LEGH, 2d baron. Lord Lansdowne; a biography. 550p il $8.50 (25s) Macmillan

B or 92 Lansdowne, Henry Charles Keith Petty-Fitzmaurice, 5th marquis [30-8837]

Lord Lansdowne, author of the famous Peace letter of 1917, was for fifty years a commanding figure in British political life. In Canada and afterward in India he filled the rôle of viceroy and later on, in England, he was successively foreign secretary, war minister and Conservative leader in the House of lords.

Reviewed by C. W. Colby

Am Hist R 35:865 Jl '30 1200w

"Lord Newton, in setting down his history, has made judicious use of a mass of official as well as of private correspondence. He has produced a book which may be read with interest and historical profit."

-+ Christian Science Monitor p10 Ja 11 '30 350w

"An excellent piece of biographical work written by an English lord of frankly Tory tendencies, but almost brutally critical of the leadership of his party and specifically of the aristocratic but incompetent Lansdowne." Francis Snow

+ Current Hist 31:1046 Mr '30 170w

"The tone of Lord Newton's narrative is in happy accord with the character of Lord Lansdowne himself—free from display, gracious in manner, discriminating in emphasis." Edith Dobie

+ Hist Outlook 21:188 Ap '30 280w

"Lord Newton's charming biography of Lord Lansdowne is a joy to the casual reader no less than to the serious scholar. Any intelligent person will delight in the skill, the humor, and the sympathetic but independent attitude with which one British aristocrat has drawn the portrait of another great personality." S. B. Fay

Nation 130:72 Ja 15 '30 900w

"The book is all the better for the writer's definite point of view, and is a contribution of great importance to the history of the Conservative Party. The personal portrait which Lord Newton draws—with some help from Lord Ernest Hamilton—is that of a good son, an accomplished man of affairs, and, in all the relations of private life, a great gentleman." Haslam Mills

+ Nation and Ath 46:255 N 16 '29 1000w

"Lord Newton was ill-advised, we think, to attempt to defend the most disastrous mistake [the Lansdowne letter] which his somewhat mediocre hero ever made in the course of a very long and otherwise fairly blameless life."

New Statesman 34:159 N 9 '29 1100w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p17 D 29 '29 1800w

"The life of a man in high office who disliked publicity, and never in his fifty-odd years of public service gave a press interview, should be worth reading on that count alone. But Lord Newton's Lord Lansdowne has other claims to consideration. It is solid without being dull, and will add something to your knowledge of British foreign policy in the past half century." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 153:548 D 4 '29 80w

R of Rs 81:18 Ja '30 200w

"Lord Newton has been personally concerned, both as spectator and participant, in the events here described; and the experience of forty-five years of public life in both Houses of Parliament has given to his judgment a maturity and a tolerance too often missing in those who write political memoirs." A. A. B.

+ Sat R 148:471 O 26 '29 1100w

Sat R of Lit 6:721 F 8 '30 330w

"The book is much more than a document. It gives us real insight into the personality of a statesman who, after fifty years of public life, remained little known to the general public."

+ Spec 143:598 O 26 '29 1050w

"This book is excellent as history, as narrative; but the portrait one expects from a biography is not there. One can only suppose that Lord Newton did not have the materials wherewith to draw it, for he himself is evidently conscious of the want." H. K.

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 2 '30 1300w

"If Lord Newton has been prevented from writing an intimate book, he has certainly written an interesting book. No one who takes an interest in the English politics of 1870-1920 can fail to enjoy it. . . The book is not merely interesting, it is readable; and it becomes more so as it proceeds."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p853 O 31 '29 3550w

NICHOLSON, KENYON, ed. Hollywood plays. 312p $2.50 French

812.08 American drama—Collections 30-30195

A group of twelve one-act plays from the repertory of the Writers' club of Hollywood.

Contents: Ace is trumped, by H. H. Stinson; A simple soul, by Vernon Smith; On the razor-edge, by Rupert Hughes; Private Jones, by E. R. Schayer; A pound of flesh, by T. J. Geraghty; The cup of life, by Frances Marion; A bird in the hand, by E. P. Heath; To die with a smile, by Madeline Blackmore; Miss Baxter, by Maude Fulton; Twelve before three, by T. J. Ahearn; Semper fidelis, by A. A. Cohn; Troupers, by P. G. Ingersoll.

"They have just about the merits of the Hollywood films and just about the failings. They are theatrically effective, and unimportant." W. P. Eaton

— + Books p24 O 26 '30 150w

"However much fun the writers may have had in concocting these plays, the reading of them is quite painful. They are without exception pretty awful, even, one had supposed, for Hollywood's writers." Edwin Seaver

— N Y Evening Post p12 S 20 '30 120w

NICHOLSON, WILLIAM. Pirate twins. 28p il $1.50 Coward-McCann

30-114

Mary found the black pirate twins in a sea shell. She took them home and washed them and fed them, but they ran away. The story is told in pictures.

Booklist 26:237 Mr '30

"The most satisfying picture book of the year is 'The Pirate Twins' with a lovely stretch of English seashore for its background and a childlike unfolding of the tale picture by picture, with the briefest of text. It is a book of more universal appeal than 'Clever Bill,' to which it is a companion volume." A. C. Moore

+ Books p16 N 17 '29 100w

"With a single short line of text Mr. Nicholson's pictures tell a dramatic story over which grownups as well as children will linger with delight. The 'Pirate Twins' is a book to take to the seashore of any coast or to bring forth for the stay-at-home to enjoy for its measure of fun and its fine imaginative sense of a child's interest in a world filled with 'a number of things.'" A. C. Moore

+ Books p8 My 4 '30 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p90 Je '30

Reviewed by Nancy Evans

N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 80w

"A picture-and-story book that will be here as long as his priceless Clever Bill, and that means a long, long time." M. L. Becker

+ Outlook 153:589 D 11 '29 40w

Sat R 148:688 D 7 '29 100w

Sat R of Lit 6:905 Ap 5 '30 220w

NICKERSON, HOFFMAN. American rich. 311p $2 Doubleday, Doran

323.31 United States—Social conditions. United States—Politics and government. Leisure class 30-32994

The author contends that what America needs is a land-owning leisure class instead of the money-grabbing business man. Rulers risen from such a leisure class, he maintains, will create and spread culture and new social values.

Reviewed by Horace Gregory

N Y Evening Post p4d D 13 '30 650w

"One is not convinced, after reading Mr. Nickerson with extreme care, that his leisure class will be very interesting or even very bright. . . What Mr. Nickerson mainly suggests is a state of stuffy, more-than-Victorian boredom. Happily he does not persuade us that this Chesterfieldian Utopia is imminent." R. L. Duffus

— N Y Times p7 D 7 '30 550w

Reviewed by C. H. Grattan

N Y World p3e N 23 '30 950w

NICOLAS, JEAN HENRI. Rose manual; an encyclopedia for the American amateur. 335p il $3 Doubleday, Doran

716.2 Roses 30-11100

A comprehensive handbook on rose culture, intended for the American rose amateur. It contains reproductions of the French Gravereaux color plates for color identification and a dictionary and index of the rose.

Booklist 26:348 Je '30

"'The Rose Manual' is precisely what its title implies—an exhaustive, practical, all-embracing volume which brings the cult of the rose up to the minute, and even does considerable forecasting. Professional and amateur alike will find it immensely valuable, for it is based upon a lifetime of devotion to the rose and opportunities, both European and American, for intensive research and experimentation with the plants themselves such as few writers have ever enjoyed. Mr Nicolas is to be congratulated on a big undertaking ably carried out. His book should stand among the leaders for years to come." R. S. Lemon

+ Books p10 Je 29 '30 250w

"We find in this book interesting knowledge to possess even if one cannot use it in practice, while for the amateur rosarian it is a valuable cyclopedia."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 6 '30 380w

N Y Times p10 Ap 20 '30 220w

NICOLAY, HELEN. Andrew Jackson, the fighting president. 335p il $2 Century

B or 92 Jackson, Andrew 29-22123

An account, written for boys, of the fiery Andrew Jackson's career. His parentage, his boyhood and young manhood, his years as a militant judge and his military life are the points of chief interest up to his election to the presidency.

Booklist 26:208 F '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p124 S '30

Reviewed by M. L. Becker

+ Outlook 153:591 D 11 '29 20w

St Louis 28:54 F '30

"Written in the dignified, but animated, style which puts her other juvenile biographies into favorable contrast with much that is published for young readers, this account of the fiery Andy is a worthy companion to its predecessors from the same hand. Miss Nicolay pays her readers the compliment of taking it for granted that they desire something more than a colorful panorama. So she briefly sets forth causes as well as consequences, her fairmindedness leading her to give both sides of a dispute, no matter where the hero of her narrative stands in reference to it. Many an older reader, also, will enjoy her life of Jackson." R. J. Davis

+ Sat R of Lit 6:402 N 16 '29 230w

Wis Lib Bul 26:108 Mr '30

NICOLSON, HAROLD GEORGE. Portrait of a diplomatist; being the life of Sir Arthur Nicolson, first Lord Carnock, and a study of the origins of the great war (Eng title: Sir Arthur Nicolson, bart., first Lord Carnock). 337p il $5 Houghton [21s Constable]

B or 92 Carnock, Arthur Nicolson, baron. Europe—Politics. Great Britain—Foreign relations. Great Britain—Diplomatic and consular service 30-24087

"The book is at once the biography of Sir Arthur Nicolson, afterwards Lord Carnock, who at the outbreak of the European war was Permanent Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and a skillful and dramatic presentation in terms of the actual notes and negotiations of more than fifty years of British diplomatic history. Those years, from 1870 on, saw the rise and fall of the German Empire, and 'Great Britain,' to quote the author, 'cease to be the strongest power in the world.'"—Books

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 S 13 '30

Reviewed by Charles Johnston

Atlantic Bookshelf p46 D '30 380w

Booklist 27:205 Ja '31

"The book, while it is a brilliant piece of analysis and interpretation, is also a very good biography, and good because imaginative, and imaginative because clearly distinguishable from what is documentary on the one hand and fanciful on the other." George Dangerfield

+ Bookm 72:179 O '30 600w

"The book's importance to post-war readers is in its revelation of a type, a caste and a profession, though its charm lies in the individual portrait. That revelation is made most wholly and most fairly because the son himself was of the same profession until recently, and because Sir Arthur Nicolson was indeed typical of all that was best and gentlest of his class and period." Ernestine Evans

+ Books p3 S 14 '30 1450w

"To the great majority of the general public to whom foreign affairs are a closed and, indeed, forbidding book, Mr. Nicolson's biography will be a charming and thoroughly enjoyable revelation." D. M.

+ Christian Science Monitor p7 O 4 '30 500w

"Sir Arthur Nicolson's life has been recorded with great charm and insight by his son. Harold Nicolson is as skillful a biographer as a novelist. He has written a book which is a valuable contribution to history, as well as a delightful portrait of an interesting personality." S. B. Fay

+ Current Hist 33:xxi O '30 750w

"In delightful style and with an accurate sense of narrative values and of the realities of Weltpolitik, he sketches the career of one of the most attractive figures of British diplomacy, producing not only an absorbing story but a valuable contribution to the accounts of the origins of the war as well." F. L. Schuman

+ Nation 131:738 D 31 '30 220w

"The story runs smoothly and pleasantly through the first half of the book, but from this point onwards the student of the 'old diplomacy' begins to get the better of the biographer, and before the end all but extinguishes him. Lord Carnock, having reached the highest place, becomes more and more a vehicle for the opinions which his son, looking back on the scene, has formed about the behaviour of the statesmen and diplomatists who took part in it. They are not very flattering opinions, and a certain irony now plays upon the narrative, which falls into the Lytton Strachey vein. . . But Mr. Nicolson sets us thinking while he irritates. He brings out with great skill the veiled opposition between the professional diplomatic view and the Ministerial political view of foreign affairs." J. A. Spender

+ — Nation and Ath 47:51 Ap 12 '30 1450w

"By avoiding panegyrics and by preserving a proper perspective, Harold Nicolson disproves the dictum of the late W. R. Thayer that no son is a fit biographer of his father. By familiarity with his father's private papers, as well as with the mass of recent documentary material, he has painted a portrait as artistic in form and as solid in content as Trevelyan's 'Life of Macaulay' or Lord Newton's 'Life of Lord Lansdowne.'" S. B. Fay

+ New Repub 64:183 O 1 '30 1650w

"The painter's eye tends frequently to drop from his sitter's face, and half his energies are put into rendering the crowded background which he has filled laboriously with the whole shifting scene of Europe between 1878 and 1914. That was a worthy enterprise, which Mr. Nicolson was well qualified by his profession to undertake; but we sometimes regret that we are inevitably losing sight of Sir Arthur. For history and biography are two horses that it is not altogether easy to drive in double harness.

While Mr. Nicolson's biography is always unexceptionable, his history is illumined by flashes of visual description." Philip Guedalla

+ — New Statesman 35:17 Ap 12 '30 1250w

"Among the numerous books of memoirs which have appeared since the outbreak, and more especially since the end of the great war, there is probably not one which can claim to throw as much light on the motives which led men in the highest responsible positions onto the path toward the abyss as Harold Nicolson's biography of his father. The author, in the English edition, subtitled his book, 'A Study in Old Diplomacy' and the book fully deserves the title." Friedrich Rosen

+ N Y Times p3 S 14 '30 2650w

"It has been my fortune to have read, in the way of business, a great proportion of the books of memoirs having to do with the World War, but I do not know of one so brilliantly executed as this by Harold Nicolson. . . Far be it from me to imply that it is perfect in all its parts, but it is sufficiently perfect to stand out as one of the truly magnificent books of the war." C. H. Grattan

+ N Y World p3e O 5 '30 950w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:16 N '30 180w

"Mr. Harold Nicolson's life of his father, the professional diplomatist and head of the Foreign Office, is neither long enough to be tedious nor short enough to be scrappy. It is not overburdened with lengthy quotations from public or private documents; and when such extracts are made the long-forgotten circumstances are recalled in detail just sufficient, and no more, to explain the point. . . There is no ancestor-worship in the temperament of this youngest son. . . Nor, for all his filial affection, will he cast any halo round his own father's head. . . This gives the book a provocative spice; yet without doing its plain-man hero any harm." Richard Jebb

+ Sat R 149:454 Ap 12 '30 1200w

Spec 144:612 Ap 12 '30 1050w

"Mr Nicolson's greatest effort is to be open-minded and just, though his justice is tempered with mercy. In the main he has succeeded. Yet his success may, for the time being, impede the success of his book. His subject-matter is still controversial, and during controversy no one is more unpopular than he who attempts to keep the straight middle way. Yet as national rancors fade, and the war and its origins become objective history, this book should be more and more respected as a sane and balanced judgment." H. K.

Springf'd Republican p7e O 5 '30 2050w

"Mr. Nicolson has written an admirable life of his father, the late Lord Carnock. Many readers will open his book with some curiosity, for hitherto Mr. Nicolson has identified himself with the new and more intimate style of biography which in recent years has become fashionable. In the present biography this method would for obvious reasons have been out of place, and the author has, therefore, with delicacy and judgment, steered a midway course between the new and the old."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p283 Ap 3 '30 2050w

World Tomorrow 13:523 D '30 320w

NIELD, JONATHAN. Guide to the best historical novels and tales. 5th ed rev and enl 424p $9 Macmillan [3s Mathews]

016.8 Historical fiction—Bibliography [29-16250]

The fifth revised edition containing over eleven hundred new entries, with new subject index. The bibliography has also been brought up to date.

Booklist 26:85 N '29

Nation and Ath 45:774 S 14 '29 70w

Outlook 152:549 Jl 31 '29 50w

Wis Lib Bul 25:407 D '29

NIEMANN, WALTER. Brahms; tr. from the German by Catherine Alison Phillips. 492p $5 (18s) Knopf

B or 92 Brahms, Johannes 29-25904

"A well considered account of Brahms's life which places due emphasis on his relation to the Schumanns, takes up his friendship or enmity as regards Hanslick, Bülow, Dvorak, Wagner, Bruckner, Hugo Wolf, etc., and devotes a chapter to 'Brahms as a Man,' and another to 'Brahms as Pianist, Conductor, and Teacher.' The remaining half of the volume is devoted to a study of Brahms's works and to useful appendices."—Books

Booklist 26:277 Ap '30

"[An] expert translation of Walter Niemann's excellent volume." Peter Bowdoin

+ Books p16 Ja 12 '30 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p51 Ap '30

"The book gives a careful and detailed account of Brahms' life and works, dull in many stretches, rather smug and naïve in others." Jeffrey Mark

+ — New Repub 61:176 Ja 1 '30 550w

"It is on the whole a mediocre production, but contains the facts of Brahms's life in a readable form, the translation from the German of Mrs. Catherine Alison Phillips being admirable."

+ — New Statesman 34:744 Mr 15 '30 130w

Pratt p34 autumn '30

Spec 144:914 My 31 '30 130w

"To what class of readers Herr Niemann is mainly addressing himself is not very clear. Sometimes, as in the lengthy account of an imaginary interview at Brahms's flat in Vienna, the style approaches that of a popular magazine; and a good deal of the criticism is only airy and sentimental talking down to the level of the uninstructed amateur. On the other hand, there are a good many pages that discuss technical matters from the standpoint of the thoroughly well equipped musician; and in the non-critical portion of the book he can show research and acuteness and can speculate interestingly on the factors that went to make up the composer's personality and art."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p203 Mr 13 '30 1000w

NILES, BLAIR (RICE) (MRS ROBERT NILES, jr.). Free. 296p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Harrap] 30-4237

The author of "Condemned to Devil's Island" writes, in "Free," another story of convict life in French Guiana. Stephen Latour is a libéré who has finished his prison sentence, but is free only in the sense that he must remain in exile in Guiana for the rest of his life. He determines to escape. His first attempt is unsuccessful and he is put back in a cell again, but a riot some time later gives him another opportunity. He does escape this time, and bribes the captain of a ship that is going to Brazil to take him along.

Booklist 26:282 Ap '30

"I think no one will doubt that in 'Free' Mrs. Niles has found the literary form best suited to her varied and extraordinary gifts; the novel is her pre-destined medium. To this infinitely touching and sad story of French Guiana she brings, intensified by a completely different method, those qualities of deep sympathy, compassion, irony and highly individualized narrative style which distinguish all her work." Will Cuppy

+ Books p5 F 2 '30 700w

"Mrs. Niles has written a story of special knowledge, and, what is of far more importance, has not sacrificed her knowledge either to propaganda or to sentimentality. Her style, terse and often reiterative, admirably re-creates the monotony and inefficacy and hopelessness of the libere's life." P. E. R.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Mr 15 '30 350w

NILES, BLAIR—Continued

"Blair Niles is an artist. She projects her characters with such vividness that toward the end, when Stephen is risking everything to escape, the tension is almost unbearable. The reader feels 'I can't endure it if he doesn't get away.' " E. D. W.

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 My 31 '30 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p79 My '30

"Her ex-convicts and natives seem fictional characters intended to carry along the somewhat melodramatic plot; and the book lacks the convincing power that might have succeeded in raising it above the level of the competent serial story."

— Nation 130:276 Mr 5 '30 140w

"Although no continuity binds them, 'Free' is virtually a sequel to 'Condemned,' and, like many sequels, it has a weakened vitality. The illusion of reality is not continuously sustained and the reader is too frequently conscious of the artifice that is making a story serve as the medium for criticism of a system." R. C. B. Brown

— N Y Evening Post p10m F 8 '30 320w

" 'Free' is not so effective a document as was 'Condemned to Devil's Island.' Perhaps due to the fact that it did not come first, the reader is prepared for it. And so dark and disheartening is the document of the convicts within the walls that the deep pathos of the libéré does not cut so sharply as really it should. Mrs. Niles having compelled us once to sup on horrors, has dulled our capacity to respond to more. But she has added to the indictment which she drew in her first book."

— + N Y Times p9 F 2 '30 800w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p14 F 3 '30 900w

"The story is always exciting, for the author knows how to write a good melodrama. But it is unevenly written, mature in places, in others so juvenile that one feels that it was written hastily in order to be in time to ride the wave of interest and demand created by its predecessor."

— + Outlook 154:226 F 5 '30 80w

"There is some splendid work here. If 'Free' is not a great novel it is at least a great beginning." R. L. Roe

+ Sat R of Lit 6:924 Ap 12 '30 500w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 16 '30 260w

Times [London] Lit Sup p557 Jl 3 '30 150w

NILES, JOHN JACOB, ed Songs my mother never taught me. 227p il $2.50 Macaulay

784.71 European war, 1914-1918—Songs and music. War-songs, American. European war, 1914-1918—Humor, caricatures, etc. 29-21493

A collection of fifty-six songs having their origin in the English speaking armies and navies during the late war, and representing contributions from many parts of the world. Comparatively few of the songs are familiar to the general public, the best known being Mad'moiselle from Armentières, which had a vaudeville vogue.

Books p10 Ja 12 '30 230w

"A rich and riotous collection this, put together by three light-hearted youths. The book shows another side of the recent war, one as authentic as the glooms and horrors of recent fiction and drama, and welcome as contrast to them. It is a task well worth doing, to bring together the songs the fighting men sang spontaneously, a service that has not been rendered for any other war. This is real folkstuff and will be valuable for historians and fiction writers and dramatists." Dorothy Scarborough

+ Sat R of Lit 6:616 Ja 4 '30 850w

Springf'd Republican p6e D 15 '29 150w

NIMZOWITSCH, ARON. My system; a chess treatise; English version by Philip Hereford. 302p $3.75 Harcourt [12s 6d Bell, G.]

794.1 Chess 30-2666

Nimzowitsch, a chess wizard who has won six out of thirteen masters' tournaments, presents in this book an analysis of 'hyper-modern' methods, each principle expounded being illustrated by diagrams. At the end of the book are forty-nine illustrative games, most of them Nimzowitsch masterpieces.

Booklist 26:270 Ap '30

"Chess players who have something more than a casual interest in the game will all wish to own, or at least have access to, this book."

+ Christian Science Monitor p11 F 21 '30 400w

"His exposition of his principles is extremely interesting, and his comments on games in which are illustrated such manœuvres as a sacrifice in order to establish a 'blockade' are very illuminating."

+ Nation and Ath 46:491 Ja 4 '30 100w

"He writes of a game of chess as if it were a sort of conte, containing life and the criticism of life; and he imputes the thoughts and emotions of human beings to pieces and pawns. especially pawns (for which he has great affection and admiration) involved in the action. It is no easy task to follow his intricate arguments, but the student who undertakes it will never be bored."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1021 D 5 '29 1050w

NITCHIE, ELIZABETH, comp. Master Vergil. 115p $1 Heath

821.08 Virgil (Publius Vergilius Maro)—Poetry 30-9545

An anthology of poems in English on Vergil and Vergilian themes. The poems range from Chaucer and Lydgate of fourteenth century England to William Ellery Leonard and Babette Deutsch of today in America.

Cleveland Open Shelf p119 S '30

Pratt p28 autumn '30

Sat R of Lit 7:91 Ag 30 '30 100w

NITTI, FRANCESCO FAUSTO. Escape; with a pref. by the author's uncle Francesco Nitti. 267p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Putnam

B or 92 Italy—Fascist movement. Political crimes and offenses—Italy. Lipari Islands—Exiles 30-5047

Francesco Nitti, a nephew of the former prime-minister of Italy, tells how he came to be imprisoned by the Fascists and sent to Lipari, the Fascist "Devil's Island." He and his two companions, Roselli and Lussu, escaped the guards under cover of night, and fleeing in a high-powered motor launch, gained their freedom on foreign soil.

Booklist 26:278 Ap '30

"Nitti gives an impression of writing better than he has any idea of doing. He is aware that the adventure is a remarkable one, especially by virtue of its happy ending. He is aware also that his book should serve a purpose to arouse hatred of the tyrant and strike the chord of libertarian sentiment. What he is not aware of, one may be sure, is the number and the richness of the figures, scenes, impressions with which, quite artlessly, he has packed his absorbing narrative." Arthur Livingston

+ Books p1 F 2 '30 1100w

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 1 '30 400w

"Quite aside from the fact that the book is an indictment of a political system, it is a thrilling and a fascinating book, probably much more so than the author suspected when he wrote it. It is a record of an adventure which a fiction writer would have had a hard time imagining, and probably it would have lost its drive and power with any attempt at 'writing.' Mr. Nitti sets it all down with few adjectives, either descriptive or exclamatory." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p9 F 15 '30 550w

"As a narrative of almost incredible adventure the book could not be better. As a denunciation of the brutalities which inevitably accompany such a dictatorship as Mussolini's, it is as powerful as it is truthful." Hiram Motherwell

+ Nation 130:247 F 26 '30 350w

"It seems likely that Mr. Nitti was not unassisted in writing that first chapter, but this is unimportant. The fact remains that the story is thrilling. It is the obvious intention of the body of the book to horrify the reader. If Mr. Nitti fails of his purpose, it is not because his facts seem untruthful. A certain self-pity, querulousness and overemphasis on bloody whips and insane jailors—overenthusiasm for the vivid detail—rob him of the dignity of a true martyr." C. A. Chapman

+ — New Repub 62:307 Ap 30 '30 230w

"Let everybody read this book. It is as absorbing as the story of Silvio Pellico, or as La Tulipe Noire."

+ New Statesman 34:748 Mr 15 '30 700w

"The author of 'Escape' appears to be a natural writer of considerable literary ingenuity, if not of actual talent. . . Taken at face value, it is a rattling good tale of adventure, quite as vivid in episode and characterization as Silvio Pellico's 'Le Mie Prigioni,' which may have served as its model." Walter Littlefield

+ N Y Times p3 F 2 '30 1650w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p9 Ja 31 '30 900w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:320 F 19 '30 150w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:38 My '30

Pratt p37 summer '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:14 Mr '30 160w

St Louis 28:133 My '30

Sat R 149:428 Ap 5 '30 480w

"The story itself is a good one, though it suffers by attenuation. But even the nephew of a former Italian premier is of no vital importance to the American public. And the tale of his misfortunes and his happy escape, although excellently presented, fails to bring the emotions to thrill pitch and hold them there. The chief interest for American readers will be in the writer's exposition of the methods of the Fascist dictatorship. Here his restraint, his refusal to resort to high and fevered denunciation, in pleasing contrast to his distinguished uncle's introduction, cannot fail to impress."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:969 Ap 19 '30 380w

Spec 144:537 Mr 29 '30 550w

" 'Escape' has a lively style and is told with a lively sense of the dramatic which makes good reading, quite apart from the controversial nature of the subject matter. The opposition to Mussolini has here a courageous, sincere advocate."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 23 '30 470w

"This is a striking book, which cannot fail to impress Anglo-American opinion. Its strength lies in the fact that instead of challenging Fascist theory it exhibits the wrongs which the application of that theory has inflicted on an individual. It is therefore exceedingly damaging, for both English and American critics are inclined to condemn a system which outrages the liberty of the subject; and its effect will be the greater because there can be no question of its author's absolute sincerity."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p178 Mr 6 '30 950w

"The story is simply and calmly told and is for that reason all the more effective." H. C. Engelbrecht

+ World Tomorrow 13:280 Je '30 450w

NIXON, JUSTIN WROE. Emerging Christian faith. 327p $2.50 Harper

230 Christianity 30-10964

A discussion of pertinent religious questions by the minister of Brick Presbyterian church of Rochester, New York.

Reviewed by J. H. Holmes

Books p14 Je 15 '30 220w

"Candor, clearness and sincerity—qualities that never fail to appeal—characterize the author's treatment. No attempt is made to minimize the seriousness of the present religious situation, to underestimate the bigness of the task of readjustment, or to sidetrack the difficulties involved. It is the message of one who has obviously been compelled to wrestle with formidable perplexities, fighting his way step by step to more satisfactory vantage ground. He wishes to share his insights with those baffled by the factors responsible for his own struggle. Incidentally, too, he hopes to contribute to the emergence of tomorrow's faith. . . Constructive throughout, 'An Emerging Christian Faith' justifies the author's aim—to furnish 'a point of view and a sense of direction for further inquiry.' " W. E. Hammond

+ Christian Century 47:753 Je 11 '30 870w

"The charm of fine literature, smooth, delightful reading, and sane, balanced consideration, if not the sanest yet published, of the problems of the adjustment of Christian faith to the later science and philosophy. It is unusual to find serious matters discussed in such clear, lucid English, without confusion of thought, or vague and unfinished conclusions." S. B. Meeser

+ Crozer Q 7:530 O '30 650w

Reviewed by E. B. Chaffee

Outlook 155:388 Jl 9 '30 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:82 N '30

NOBLE, BARBARA. Years that take the best away. 325p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Heinemann]

30-14882

This novel describes the relationship of Jennifer Langstaffe, a sensitive, introspective young girl, to her inconsequential mother, Iris; her elder brother, Julian, a healthy, rather commonplace type; her younger sister, Jill, average and likeable; her brooding, egotistic brother, James, who commits suicide; her cousin Claire, whom she adored, and who died; her Aunt Sydney, who during the War had loved a German, and who tried to use Jennifer as a spiritualistic medium to establish communication with him; and Terry, the fun-loving Irish lad to whom she became engaged, but who let her down because he could neither comprehend nor sympathize with her spiritual intensity.

Booklist 27:30 S '30

"Miss Noble writes extremely well and she has uncommon ability in the sketching of character, especially in that of the unhappy James."

+ Books p15 Jl 27 '30 250w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 6 '30 320w

"The children in 'The Years that Take the Best Away' have that distilled essence of childish understanding and spiritual precociousness which places their elders at a hopeless disadvantage. Jennifer, the child on whom the author has concentrated, has some entirely delightful moments, though her want of sympathy for her morbidly unhappy brother James is not understandable." K. C. Tomlinson

+ Nation and Ath 47:326 Je 7 '30 220w

"With extraordinary delicacy and single-mindedness she describes a family in the process of growing up; and the disastrous or difficult or beautiful relationship between the brothers and sisters is given so much life that the ending of the book cannot check its progress in one's mind, as one continues to read the pages after they are closed."

+ New Statesman 35:119 My 3 '30 320w

NOBLE, BARBARA—Continued

"It is very easy, when writing of adolescents, to become sentimental, or if not sentimental, overly psychoanalytical. Miss Noble, in this, her first novel, has avoided both, has at all times hewed to the line and has drawn vividly a picture of a child in the formative years undergoing that inevitable process of, not so much disillusion as the toning down of the sensitivities. Without making her children unduly precocious she has made them distinct personalities."

+ N Y Times p8 Je 1 '30 480w

"Two episodes [in the book] are evidences of the marked narrative skill of a novelist who is yet a slave to the minutiae of grey psychological detail, which accumulates, not by the building of art, but by virtue of the mere passing of time." V. S. Pritchett

— + Spec 144:713 Ap 26 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p436 My 22 '30 200w

NOCK, ALBERT JAY, and WILSON, C. R. Francis Rabelais; the man and his work. 359p il $5 Harper

B or 92 Rabelais, François 30-959

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:278 Ap '30

"The reviewer is sorry to report that Mr. Nock and C. R. Wilson seem to lack the necessary qualifications for the criticism of Rabelais. Their scholarship appears in places to flag. And what is worse, two fundamental defects vitiate their work. They approach their subject in a spirit of unmixed piety which, one soon realizes, is at best sublimated prudery and they undertake to demonstrate too simple a thesis. . . The second defect must be indicated briefly. The authors contend throughout that Rabelais was a story-teller, a great artist, and they write of him as if that fact, which is of course obvious, made it impossible for him to have been a great satirist." Eliseo Vivas

— Nation 130:250 F 26 '30 750w

"The essay itself is authoritative and convincing. By intelligent handling of their documentation, the authors reconstruct a biographical and historical background that is of value in helping the reader to an understanding enjoyment of Rabelais's work." Ramon Guthrie

+ New Repub 62:160 Mr 26 '30 450w

New Statesman 35:286 Je 7 '30 600w

"If we are patient with them, there is a good deal to be got out of [their commentary], though it was unpardonable to have provided no index to their book, or even a list of chapters with the contents. They dislike the dull dogs and the prudes, and they stress above all the master's gift as an inimitable story-teller; but they are a little solemn in making their points, and they labour under one grave disadvantage. The very thing which they are trying to do for us was done twenty years ago by Anatole France in his lectures. And Anatole France was sufficiently in sympathy with his great forbear to give just that light touch to his running narrative—that flavour of l'esprit Gaulois which it is impossible for men of another race to supply." A. P. Nicholson

— + Sat R 149:360 Mr 22 '30 1150w

Reviewed by J. M. Berdan

Sat R of Lit 6:729 F 15 '30 950w

"They have set forth the facts known about the life of Rabelais in a lucid and continuous fashion, and, moreover, related him appropriately to the background of his time."

+ Spec 144:sup627 Ap 12 '30 420w

NODIER, CHARLES. Francesco Colonna, a fanciful tale of the writing of the Hypnerotomachia; tr. by Theodore Wesley Koch. 62p il priv ptd Northwestern univ. lib., Evanston, Ill.

29-29397

Translated from the French this story purports to be founded upon the acrostic contained in the Hypnerotomachia, the only illustrated book published by Aldus. It concerns the delicate love story woven around a scholarly Italian priest during the Middle ages, and Polia, a beautiful descendant of an ancient Roman family.

"The tale is delicately beautiful, and a lovely pulsating shadow of long-ago Italy. It is, moreover like a re-introduction to the personality of Nodier. At the end of the volume is a short postscript by the translator on 'The Perfect Book.' "

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 19 '30 250w

Sat R of Lit 6:1182 Jl 5 '30 100w

NOLEN, JOHN, ed. City planning; a series of papers presenting the essential elements of a city plan. (Nat. municipal ser.) 2d ed 513p il $3.50 (15s) Appleton

710 City planning. Regional planning

29-25171

"The new edition of City Planning contains additional chapters on the more recent development of control over use of private land, on legislation, and on the extension of planning principles beyond the confines of any one political jurisdiction. The book is a collection of authoritative statements as to what the problems and growing pains are and how we can solve or obviate them."—Am Pol Sci R

Reviewed by C. E. Eliot, 2nd

Am Pol Sci R 24:766 Ag '30 250w

J Home Econ 22:1017 D '30 80w

"Excellent as is the new material, the very need for it indicates the greatest flaw in he volume. It is a great pity that all the eminent authors who contributed to the original volume were not asked to revise their chapters up to date, for much has transpired in the field of city planning since the book was written thirteen years ago. Yet this revised volume even with its limitations has an important place in planning literature." L. D. Lasker

+ — Survey 64:440 Ag 15 '30 380w

NORMAN, CHARLES. Bright world, and other poems. 86p $2 Morrow [4s 6d Dent]

811 30-14417

"Charles Norman, an American, who is now working on a biographical study of Christopher Marlowe, whose life became an absorption with him, is but twenty-six years old, but 'The Bright World' is his second volume of poems. He has travelled in South America, France, and England. His new book begins with sonnets and preludes that tell a love story. Mr. Norman conveys well the atmosphere of his city, New York. The city is often background for sad and ascetic thought."—Sat R of Lit

"At his best, Mr. Norman reaches up into that high clear impersonality, amounting to imaginative clairvoyance, of which Elinor Wylie gave us the most recent familiar example; and if he does not long sustain himself at such altitudes he keeps at any rate the mood and manner of one who has been there. He may some day return to stay."

+ Bookm 72:85 S '30 650w

"His poetry in 'The Bright World' is imitative of other poets, written after the manner of poets without being in any way clearly his own. Mr. Norman's imagery, his language, his attitudes are those of one who has read poetry to the saturation point but has actually no strong talent for expression of new ideas in any authentic form." E. L. Walton

— Books p17 Je 22 '30 230w

Reviewed by Vincent McHugh

N Y Evening Post p5s Je 7 '30 50w

"There are lines which are dramatically powerful, moving and beautiful; yet not one of the pieces, with perhaps a single exception, is wholly successful. At present Charles Norman is mainly derivative; but he has outbursts in which he is momentarily his individual self. And there is so much of sheer exuberance behind it all we feel certain that as time goes on he will lose hold on his progenitors and walk vigorously alone."

— + N Y Times p23 Je 1 '30 350w

"This poet never quite strikes the resounding chord. He attempts difficult things: he wishes to be sonorous and majestic, or comprehensive in his treatment of cosmic themes, or incisive in his interpretation of literary events and characters. But anti-climax haunts his lines, disappointing the reader who seeks memorable phrases, acute perception of the ways of modern life, and sympathetic interest in the emotional adventures of youth. One hopes that in time he will be able to show greater power of expression and more solid substance of feeling."
— Poetry 35:171 D '29 100w

St Louis 28:215 S '30

"Mr. Norman has not yet clenched his title as poet. In his former book his accent seemed, somehow, surer. Here there is a good deal that moves us, and at the end of the book there are indications in his vignettes of Telemachus, Faustus, and King Henry that a fine poetic dramatist may be in the making. . . On the whole, this young poet gives much promise, though his epithet and phrase might often, in this book, be more salient. At a guess, this would seem to be an in-between volume, a comparative lull before a new gathering of power." W. R. Benét
— + Sat R of Lit 6:1144 Je 21 '30 550w

NORMAN, CHARLES BOSWELL. Corsairs of France; foreword by Edward C. Caswell. 314p il $3.50 Clode

944 France—History, Naval. Privateering
29-25761

Short biographies of some of the most famous French privateers and naval commanders who lived in the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth centuries: Jean Bart, Leville of Dunkirk, Jacques Cassard of Nantes, Duguay Trouin and Robert Surcouf of St Malo, and François Thurot of Boulogne.

Boston Transcript p4 N 30 '29 350w

"Though they have all been rather neglected by standard historians, their deeds left obscure, this book restores to them a full measure of their glory. The volume should prove fascinating for devotees of sea literature." Gustavus Myers
+ N Y World p11m D 15 '29 170w

NORRIS, CHARLES GILMAN. Seed; a novel of birth control. 436p $2 Doubleday, Doran
30-21871

For several generations the Carters had prospered on their California ranches. Their women bore many children—some of them too many. The larger portion of the novel follows the story of young Bart and his wife Peggy who come to New York, where Bart hopes to win fame as a writer. As he struggles to earn a living, the babies arrive, one after another. Peggy, being an ardent Catholic, is against birth control. A coldness springs up between them because of their ill-adjusted marital relations and Bart turns to another woman—a woman who is influential in bringing about his ultimate success as an author. Peggy takes the children back with her to California but after ten years Bart decides that he wants his wife and children again, and asks Peggy's forgiveness. The latter chapters of the novel contain arguments for and against birth control.

"His title will win him many immature readers; but with a pedestrian and humorless style, a rambling and unexciting plot, and carefully differentiated but charmless characters he offers too little of the emotional reward which a reader looks for in a novel. To those whose minds are already made up about birth control, his cases will bring no new light, and scarcely carry conviction one way or the other." A. R. Thompson
— Bookm 72:70 S '30 350w

"The ranch setting in California, the Long Island suburban scenes, the elaborate caste of kith and kin are all done with the precision and detail of a Belasco stage set. But the people who move across them are merely puppets, explaining the arguments, rebutting objections, at the will of the author: an elaborated version of a morality play, or a legal brief 'novelized.' Though creation is its theme, the smug and competent self-assurance of the point of view smothers, in my opinion, any chance that the story afforded to create a living character." Mary Ross
— Books p3 Ag 17 '30 680w

"We here and now heartily commend the author's evident anxiety to give a correct presentation of Catholic teaching, even though his attempt is but partially successful. . . Our chief criticism of Seed is that quite unconsciously the author leaves the reader with an incorrect, because inadequate, notion of the Catholic attitude on Birth Control. As a matter of fact, to present the Catholic case properly, one must present it whole. . . All in all Seed, though an interesting story, is not a weighty contribution to the literature of social betterment." J. McS.
— + Cath World 132:114 O '30 1050w

"'Seed' is a novel of heroic proportions, and it would have heroic quality if it were not so concerned with proving something." Fanny Butcher
+ — Chicago Daily Tribune p12 Ag 23 '30 450w

"'Seed' does not escape the pitfall of monotony which awaits most treatise fiction. We become too involved in unraveling the interrelationships of the family clan and too irritatingly aware of the underscored moral to sympathize with the difficulties of the main characters. As a sincere plea for the sane dissemination of contraceptive information and as a competent analysis of passion, love, and parenthood, this work is eminently satisfying; but as a novel it remains lethargic and overlong."
— + Nation 131:228 Ag 27 '30 220w

New Repub 64:331 N 5 '30 250w

New Statesman 36:336 D 20 '30 350w

Reviewed by Horace Gregory
N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 16 '30 1000w

"'Seed' seems the product of a very patient trowel rather than that of a flowing pen. It is a roman à thèse, but not offensively so, for there is no preaching in it that does not spring from the point of view of one character or another. Nevertheless, in spite of the absence of the soap box, it leaves one with the impression that Charles G. Norris got his situation first, and then cast about him for suitable characters to plod through it. The result is that, while most of the motivations are plausible, they are often simply adumbrated, and the reader is more or less forced to be his own dramatist." John Chamberlain
— + N Y Times p7 Ag 17 '30 550w

"Seed has the power of holding the reader's interest, and possibly making him debate the subject also, which is salutary. It is written with dignity and restraint; it is not a novel of suggestion, nor will the sniffers and the snoopers be able to make anything of it. It appeals deliberately to those who want to think about a subject that is much discussed but rarely gets into print. And it is definitely not a sex novel." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p9 Ag 14 '30 900w

Reviewed by V. P. Ross
Outlook 156:147 S 24 '30 300w

"Neither side in the controversy is likely to be suited, and beneath the weight of the argument the story springs a leak and founders."
— Sat R of Lit 7:109 S '30 380w

NORRIS, C. G.—Continued

"The book contains a great host of characters and scenes and is not much more than an interesting accumulation." V. S. Pritchett

— Spec 145:990 D 20 '30 200w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 14 '30 500w

NORRIS, KATHLEEN (THOMPSON) (MRS CHARLES GILMAN NORRIS). Margaret Yorke. 313p $1 Doubleday, Doran

30-17710

A story of the conflict of wills and ideals of two women, one thoroly fine and the other superficial and worldly-minded, in which the honors all go to the first.

Booklist 27:106 N '30

"Mrs. Norris humanizes her characters by abundant and vivid details. Her straightforward method of narration is commendable and her journalistic style is not unpleasant. She can write graphically—never memorably. Certainly we should admire any one whose perspective is so immutably roseate, but sometimes her optimism is at the expense of conviction." J. R. Meade

+ — Books p13 Ag 31 '30 450w

"The Cinderella flavor of this kind of tale has an abiding appeal to the human heart. Her latest novel is very easy and pleasantly readable, keeping one's interest, in spite of its apparent triviality, by its characterization." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 12 '30 1770w

"Mrs. Norris possesses a prodigious facility, because, no doubt, of her remarkable prolificacy. But her style lacks variety and her characterizations and plots follow set patterns she has employed fifty times before. Each chapter begins with a description of nature in her best onomatopoeic manner, followed by a minute account of clothes and meals, elaborated by a bit of painful introspection on the part of the protagonists. This, for twenty-five chapters, is bound to become rather palling." J. C. Greenspan

— + N Y Evening Post p8m Je 28 '30 400w

"Everybody knows that [Mrs] Norris can tell a good story. She has the gift of keeping the reader's interest to the end, although in the present case the characters, with one exception, are lifeless and the morality too pointed."

— + N Y Times p7 Jl 6 '30 450w

"Mrs. Norris looks deep into women's hearts and writes what she finds there." Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 Je 21 '30 100w

Pratt p39 autumn '30

NORRIS, KATHLEEN (THOMPSON) (MRS CHARLES GILMAN NORRIS). Passion flower. 312p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Murray, J.]

30-5407

Cassy runs away from her wealthy father to marry a poor boy, Dan Wallace. The struggle to make ends meet and provide for two small children gets on Dan's nerves. Then Dulce, who is wealthy, seductive and unscrupulous, falls in love with Dan and persuades him to divorce Cassy. Three years later Dan, grown tired of Dulce, tries to leave her and go back to Cassy and his children. The triangle finds its only possible solution in tragedy.

Booklist 26:313 My '30

"No novelist ever wrote more directly from the heart than Mrs. Norris. And if in the present emotional novel melodrama creeps in sometimes, well, it does into real life, and far more often than we admit or are willing to admit. . . Never were the sophistries and fallacies of the 'divorce problem' more unerringly pierced." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 F 5 '30 1000w

"The narrative has no great penetration, but is readable."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e F 16 '30 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p124 F 13 '30 200w

NORTH, JOHN. St Peter and the profile. 288p $2 Duffield [7s 6d Jarrolds]

30-23088

On a day when everything seemed to be going wrong Miss Mellow, a London typist, went home early from the office. As she rested in Greenwich Park she met a strange, courteous elderly gentleman, who talked with her. And that was how Miss Mellow came to be connected with the mysterious St Peter Ledborough, the eminent portrait painter.

Books p28 D 7 '30 180w

"Its light-hearted fantasy is of the school of Locke rather than of Waugh, and the writing tinkles gaily without demanding too serious attention. The old portrait painter, the young lady and the suburban couple hover tremulously on the brink of reality, and that we hardly believe in them is not the least of their charm."

+ New Statesman 35:386 Je 28 '30 70w

"It is very well written. It is not a tremendously important book and never set out to be, but it is an interesting one and one that will repay a reader who likes to know the thoughts and opinions of an author as well as his story."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:222 O 11 '30 180w

"Light as it is, there is vitality in its frothiness and the tale of Miss Mellor's adventures makes pleasant reading for a summer day."

+ Spec 145:107 Jl 19 '30 100w

"A dexterous comedy in which lighthearted humour is combined with a grave concern for style and form."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p481 Je 5 '30 150w

NORTH, JOHN. Unmarried life; a comedy in twenty-four hours. 287p $2 Duffield [7s 6d Jarrolds]

[29-801]

A prospectively dominant mother-in-law is one of the reasons why Charles, of the S. O. Trading Company, hesitates to advance his acquaintance with Foy beyond the mildly engaged status. But Mrs Broadwater, Foy's mother, is a determined lady and presents Charles with an ultimatum. Meanwhile Foy introduces the force of competition by pursuing Dennis; and the fact that Dennis goes to spend week-ends in a country cottage with his lovely secretary, Joan, adds somewhat to the story's complications. The efficient Mrs Broadwater, however, manages to bring order out of these twisted love affairs.

Books p21 Mr 30 '30 160w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 29 '30 140w

"Although his jaunty style wears thin in spots Mr. North has evolved a mocking, amusing and very human little study of six people. . . He is never quite as funny as he tries to be or should be. But he is consistently amusing. In characterization he has a deft touch."

+ — N Y Times p9 F 9 '30 400w

Reviewed by O. M. Fuller

N Y World p11m F 16 '30 130w

"Amusing light comedy, engagingly written. The conversation is witty, but not too witty to be real." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:269 F 12 '30 60w

"An ingenious little comedy, very lightly treated, but with a hint of bitterness behind the banter. The characters are securely lodged on a plane remote from reality; one cannot take them very seriously. And yet in this artificial world the proportions are so well kept that emotions retain their values, though they lose their power to hurt. It is never very funny but it does not fall below a certain standard of amusingness, and it is well and crisply written." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 146:856 D 22 '28 180w

"It is not bad farce, although it would be better if it were just a little brisker. Not quite enough happens, and there are stretches where Mr. North slows down perceptibly in order to get his breath for a fresh start. But in spite of this difficulty, 'Unmarried Life' is good fun, and often ingenious fun."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:809 Mr 8 '30 220w

"Some of the situations are ingenious. But a story of this kind needs to move at a brisker pace."

— + Spec 141:745 N 17 '28 70w

"Mr. North's rather charming and not very profound power of spinning a light tale improves with each new book. He becomes more expert in contriving neat situations dependent mainly upon the humours of exasperation."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p29 Ja 10 '29 130w

NORTH, ROBERT CARVER. Bob North with dog team and Indians. 170p il $1.75 (6s) Putnam

29-18227

The story of a boy's adventures with his father in northern Ontario. They set out with dog teams from a Hudson Bay post and made an eight hundred mile trip under perilous conditions.

"Its simple descriptions are clear and the thrill of great cold distances appeals to us particularly, but the 'humor' in the volume seems to be a variety more amusing to adults—who so frequently don't need as genuine a brand as do the younger people." M. G. Bonner

+ — N Y Times p36 O 6 '29 70w

"A very interesting view of the Northland through young, discerning eyes."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:406 N 16 '29 230w

Times [London] Lit Sup p851 O 24 '29 30w

NORTH, WILLIAM (RALPH RODD, pseud.). Secret of the flames. 308p $2 Dial press

29-20007

A mystery story, the scene of which is a small English village. A young doctor finds an apparently locked and shuttered house burning furiously. He discovers the aged paralysed owner murdered in the midst of the flames, and rescues the charming granddaughter of the murdered man. From then to the end of the book surprise follows on the heels of surprise.

"Despite a slight tendency to trip over his own complications, Mr. Rodd has achieved something fair to middling in the way of a shocker, sub-class incredible." Will Cuppy

— + Books p24 N 10 '29 100w

"The story, up to a certain point, is as interesting as it is mysterious, but it grows a bit wearisome when the author begins to explain the true inwardness of the mystery. There have been so many complications that more pages are required for their unraveling than most readers will be able to read without losing interest."

N Y Times p25 Ja 12 '30 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks.

+ — Outlook 153:520 N 27 '29 40w

"Here is a mystery tale which, if not startlingly original, is at least thoroughly up to specifications and guaranteed to do all that a mystery tale can reasonably be expected to do. The author handles his complications skilfully: the thread is twisted again and again, but every turn arises from the original situation, and the narrator plays scrupulously fair; nothing is introduced merely to baffle or perplex the reader, and however far afield the action seems to wander, all its mazy windings lead to the solution."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:762 F 22 '30 180w

NORTON, WILLIAM BERNARD. Church and newspaper. 271p $2.50 Macmillan

070 Church advertising. Publicity—Churches. Newspapers. Journalism 30-25639

The author, after long experience as a minister and as religious news editor for the daily press, has written this practical book to show ministers and church leaders how to obtain more and better religious publicity.

"Mr. Norton's book has many merits and much usefulness, but it might have been what it is not—a book of real importance." J. H. Holmes

+ — Books p13 Ja 4 '31 550w

"Written primarily for preachers, this very vital human document of a reporter and editor has much of interest, and inspiration for every newspaper man. It is no bromide of glittering generalities but full of rich experiences and pertinent examples of the best kind of reporting. Keen of insight, clear and crisp in diction, thoroughly human in interest, Dr. Norton is worth reading, marking and inwardly digesting by preacher and newspaper man alike." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 8 '30 100w

"Next to actual experience as a news reporter, 'Church and Newspaper' is the best route toward understanding daily journalism. Dr. Norton's quarter of a century experience as religious editor of The Chicago Tribune gave him grasp of the newspaper world to which few clergymen ever attain." John Evans

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p10 O 11 '30 380w

Christian Century 47:1496 D 3 '30 80w

"Were I a bishop over my brethren rather than a mere reviewer I should require every minister to read this book studiously. The parish minister, in whatever place he may be located, has much to do with the newspaper, mighty molder of public opinion. Well may he desire the daily press as his ally, a desire possible of realization through mutual understanding and appreciation only. Church and Newspaper will foster and forward such, as will no other book known to me." W. R. McNutt

+ Crozer Q 8:137 Ja '31 320w

NORWOOD, CYRIL. English tradition of education. 340p $3.50 Dutton [10s 6d Murray, J.]

370.942 Education—England [29-29590]

The Headmaster of Harrow outlines the present English school system and the dangers that threaten it, and contrasts the underlying principles of English education with the American.

Boston Transcript p1 Ag 9 '30 750w

J Home Econ 22:865 O '30 80w

Nation and Ath 46:646 F 8 '30 900w

St Louis 28:233 O '30

NORWOOD, ROBERT WINKWORTH. His glorious body. 229p $2 Scribner

237 Immortality 30-8610

Immortality is the central theme of these Lenten meditations by the rector of St Bartholomew's Church, New York City.

Boston Transcript p10 Ap 26 '30 320w

Christian Century 47:787 Je 18 '30 80w

Churchman p5 N 22 '30 320w

"Dr. Norwood has a vigorous style and poetic imagination. There is a robust quality in his writing and it is not difficult to catch a hint in it of the even greater fervor of his spoken word. But it cannot be said that he adds anything new to the problem of the relation of personality to the merchanism of the physical. . . If the author had filled his beautiful biblical rhetoric with specific meaning relevant to the moral problems which a modern man faces in this industrial civilization his book would be more convincing."

NORWOOD, R. W.—Continued

+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 19 '30 380w

Springf'd Republican p10 My 20 '30 160w

NOTCH, FRANK K., pseud. King Mob; a study of the present-day mind. 226p $2 Harcourt

301 Social psychology. Crowds. United States—Civilization 30-14821

Defining the mob as "a group of persons unable to think straight because they are affected by the consciousness of their own numbers," the author decries the effect of mob rule upon our present civilization. He shows how modern advertising and salesmanship in every field, from the lowest necessity of life to the highest "cultural" adornment, are directed toward the organized mob—not the individual. The result, he believes, is not enlightenment, but general decline and corruption.

Booklist 27:13 S '30

"His book is a joy to read; it is short, swift, belligerent and witty. It names names, with no bones about it. The Messrs. Simon and Schuster, Arthur Brisbane, Hendrik Van Loon, Lewis Browne, Joseph Stalin, James Harvey Robinson, Haldeman Julius, John Watson, William James and John Dewey—all are left in bloody bandages; the first named practically stripped of epidermis. Advertising comes in for terrific butchery, with plenty of case material . . . 'Mr. Notch's' indictment, while stimulating, is far from satisfying. . . He is an intellectual snob, and thus approaches his subject as a prejudiced rather than as an impartial witness. He hates bounders and vulgarians; is quick to show 'the contempt of a fine mind for the intelligence of the public.' Does he care about culture for its own sake purely, or is his proficiency with the meat ax complicated by a desire to keep the herd from knowing as much as he does?" Stuart Chase

— + Books p1 My 18 '30 1600w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 5 '30 280w

"Notch's judgments are keen and his generalizations usually have the virtue of common sense though his thesis seems a bit far-fetched when his misgivings about the mob spirit in a theater audience lead him to relegate the drama to a secondary place in the field of art. Neither the wit nor the style of the book are distinguished although 'Notch' is widely advertised as being the pseudonym of a well-known writer." E. VR. W.

— + Cath World 132:376 D '30 450w

Current Hist 32:824 Jl '30 200w

"This is a curious book, revealing an odd mixture of merits and defects. The author is a man with a genuine literary gift. Much that he has to say is shrewd and discerning, and all of it is set forth with an exhilarating passion. But his arguments are sometimes more distinguished for animus than for plausibility, and when he attempts metaphysics the results are deplorable. The book, moreover, is badly organized: Mr. Notch constantly loses sight of his goal, and reminds one of nothing so much as the man who leapt on his horse and rode off furiously in every direction." Henry Hazlitt

— + Nation 130:572 My 14 '30 1450w

N Y Times p10 My 25 '30 750w

"Books have a strange way of betraying their authors. Here comes a new commentary on the mass called 'King Mob.' It attacks the popularizers of science and biography because they bring erudite and abstruse ideas within easy reach of the mob. It puts into words of one syllable what Oswald Spengler discussed in the most erudite vocabulary. It is in itself a product of popularization, a representative of the very attitude it attacks, for it takes for granted that it will be understood by the mass." Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 My 8 '30 900w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins

Outlook 155:66 My 14 '30 600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:69 O '30

St Louis 28:204 S '30

"From the first to the last page 'King Mob' reveals the deft hand of the literary craftsman. The fluent yet forceful style with its tempered wit and restrained denunciation—the style of a scholar who is also a man of the world—would alone suffice to give distinction to the book. Furthermore, the author possesses a high and austere taste and a keen-edged logic. He knows, one suspects, the classics intimately; he is well read in history and philosophy; if his knowledge of recent physics seems, like that of most of us, to be derived mainly from Eddington, he turns his Eddington to good account. He is very much alive, very alert." E. S. Bates

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1139 Je 21 '30 850w

"While the author makes a trenchant assault upon 'popular' books, and derides our craze for sophistication, he drops now and then into a 'popular' and 'sophisticated' style. . . His language is spirited and incisive, but his thought is a bit supercilious."

— + Springf'd Republican p10 My 10 '30 1100w

NOWAK, KARL FRIEDRICH. Kaiser and chancellor; the opening years of the reign of Kaiser Wilhelm II; tr. by E. W. Dickes. 290p il $3.50 Macmillan [21s Putnam]

943.08 Germany—History. William II, German emperor (abdicated 1918). Bismarck, Otto, fürst von 30-28206

Dr Nowak deals in detail with the first two years of William II's reign and explains the steadily widening breach between the Kaiser and Bismarck which culminated in the dismissal of the chancellor. The book, which is based upon official documents and conversations with the Kaiser at Doorn, presents his case critically and provides an analysis of his character and temperament. The interesting illustrations are reproduced from originals in the private collections of the Kaiser.

Bookm 72:xii D '30 100w

"There is no denying the skill of the recital. The narrative moves rapidly and absorbingly through two hundred pages of text. The list of authorities and the corroborating documents are relegated to the appendices where they do not check the reader in his onward course. The book is also carefully indexed as to names and subject matter. Plainly, it is intended both for the profit of the scholar and for the enjoyment of the intelligent lay reader." W. K. Stewart

+ Books p18 N 16 '30 950w

Current Hist 33:xxiv Ja '31 200w

"Dr. Nowak's work is not only the first authoritative account of the relations between Wilhelm II and Prince Bismarck (the book being based upon documents and private papers supplied by the former Kaiser at Doorn, these papers being tested by reference to a host of other published documents touching upon these relations), but it is of paramount importance as a sincere and thoroughgoing exploration of Kaiser Wilhelm's political legacy, an inheritance that led almost directly to the World War." M. A. Hallgren

Nation 131:739 D 31 '30 700w

Nation and Ath 48:440 D 27 '30 150w

"The chief importance of Herr Nowak's book is probably revealed in his opening chapters where the informative influences which shaped the youth and early manhood of Wilhelm are emphasized as in no other book. Not the least valuable opinions of the first two years of his reign are the 'Press Comments' to be found in the index." Walter Littlefield

+ N Y Times p10 N 9 '30 230w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith

N Y World p3e D 28 '30 300w

"We approach Herr Nowak's book, 'Kaiser and Chancellor,' prepared to give full credit to its arguments, for we know him to be in the confidence of the ex-Emperor. But we are disappointed, because Herr Nowak has, to mix our metaphors, whitewashed the Kaiser by throwing mud at too many other people in the story."
— + Sat R of Lit 150:641 N 15 '30 650w
Spec 145:640 N 1 '30 750w
Times [London] Lit Sup p847 O 23 '30 1900w

NOYES, ALFRED. Last voyage. (Torch-bearers, v 3) 183p $2.50 Stokes
821 30-31821

The third and concluding volume in Mr Noyes's trilogy in praise of the great work scientists have done. The present poem depicts a great liner at sea, on which an operation, performed to save a child's life, is directed over the radio by a famous surgeon on another transatlantic liner. The poem also contains an imaginary debate between Pasteur and Renan.

Boston Transcript p2 D 17 '30 1300w

"Not only is 'The Last Voyage' a poet's call out of the depths of a wrestle with life, but so is the entire trilogy. In this concluding part a lofty work is brought to a lofty close." Percy Hutchison
+ N Y Times p2 D 7 '30 700w

"The poem tries to do too many things at once. Soon it becomes almost a jumble. Certain interlude-poems are introduced that do not seem to belong at all to this particular book. . . The poem as a whole is of no such stature as the second book of the trilogy, 'The Book of Earth,' which remains to us the best of the three." W. R. Benét
— Sat R of Lit 7:420 D 6 '30 1250w

"For many readers the attraction of the book will lie in its virile portraiture and in its vivid descriptive passages, spiced sometimes with humour and irony. But Mr. Noyes reaches his highest level in the interpretative interludes and epilogue, in which his conviction of the unity of life, 'scientific' and spiritual, finds utterance nobler and more profound than any which he has yet given us." Gilbert Thomas
+ Spec 145:855 N 29 '30 380w

"As ever, he relies upon a rapid change from metre to metre and form to form; lyrical, ballad, elegiac tunes are poured forth so abruptly that the whole work refuses to combine. Volubility is his handicap; he certainly, as he goes, makes the impression of being ardent, audacious, and swift in human range, but all passes by without consolidation. The silences and the last concentrations of Hyperionic interpretings in this sphere of men and gods are the secret that is wanting."
Times [London] Lit Sup p1060 D 11 '30 700w

NUCKEL, OTTO. Destiny; a novel in pictures. unp il $3 Farrar [8s 6d Marriott]
30-20832

Like Lynd Ward's God's Man, this melodramatic story is told entirely thru the medium of a related series of pictures,—leadcuts in this instance. The pictures relate the trials, tribulations and downfall of a German working girl, who is from childhood a victim of poverty, ignorance, exploitation and crime.

"Destiny is sheer melodrama. It would, however, be unfair to dismiss the absurd story without pointing out the excellence of the pictures that tell it. Nückel uses lead-cuts and achieves a delicacy of values that is surprising."
— + Bookm 71:xxvii Ap '30 120w

"Since the book is offered as a novel, the fair thing seems to be to take the draughtsman-author at his word and judge his work primarily as so much story telling, keeping criticism of his designs as such strictly in second order. On this basis Herr Nückel will come off badly. From the title to the end his fable is cheap and feebly realized. . . On the artistic side not much need be said about Herr Nückel's lead cuts. They are more mature and careful than Mr. Ward's, and in the possible false-naive technique employed professionally very able, without being otherwise remarkable." F. J. Mather
— + Books p5 Mr 23 '30 950w

"A full-bodied, old-fashioned, melodramatic romance. The pictures themselves are effective from the point of view of design and aside from their function of telling the story. Some of them have a grim humor." C. A. C.
+ New Repub 62:335 My 7 '30 170w
N Y Times p11 My 18 '30 550w

"The girl is never more than a victim, a pawn in the grasp of circumstance. We hardly ever see her face. Men exploit her, but just what her allurements are we do not see. She is never presented in anything but a drooping posture. She seems fated to be pursued, led hither and yon, thrown aside. Possibly pictures cannot convey subtleties. They must deal with dramatic situations, with clean cut events. Yet Lynd Ward in 'Gods' Man' developed a symbolism which held the story together and permitted the reader to exercise his imagination." Harry Hansen
— N Y World p12 Mr 8 '30 600w

"It is a very German book, filled with a kind of heavy luridness bordering frequently on the absurd, but the novelty of form and medium carry the thing off."
Sat R of Lit 6:1113 Je 7 '30 330w

NUNGEZER, EDWIN. Dictionary of actors, and of other persons associated with the public representation of plays in England before 1642. (Cornell studies in English) 438p $5 Yale univ. press
927.92 Actors and actresses. Theatre—England
29-18350

An encyclopaedia of all available information regarding actors, theatrical proprietors, stage attendants and others connected with the presentations of plays in England before the year 1642. The author is (1929) assistant professor of English in the University of Oklahoma.

"It is a 'Who's Who in the English Theater,' so far as the records disclose, in those early years. It represents a large amount of research. Three Shakespeares are listed. The best known is William. We wonder how many performances of his plays there were in Oklahoma while this book was being compiled." W. P. Eaton
+ Books p26 D 8 '29 80w

"A most useful book which every student of English drama should buy forthwith. The bibliography is somewhat puzzling both in its arrangement and its selection. There may be good reasons, but Mr. Nungezer has not given them. The printing of the book is very pleasing, but wider margins for the owner's notes are desirable. But it is ungrateful to grumble at small points. Mr. Nungezer has not only compiled a standard book of reference; he has also succeeded in making it most readable." G. B. Harrison
+ — Modern Philol 27:364 F '30 650w

"An extraordinary amount of labour must have gone to the making of this book, and it should be of extraordinary service to students of the Elizabethan stage. Its value, of course, must depend upon its completeness and its accuracy. The measure of these can only be established by frequent use. . . Though every page of the dictionary is packed with details and references to the sources of the compiler's information, the book is made very nearly readable by his care to put in quotations from contemporary writers bearing on his subject, and subsequent information such as the memorial to Heminge and Condell."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1098 D 26 '29 220w

NYSTROM, PAUL HENRY. Economic principles of consumption. (Merchandising and distribution ser.) 586p il $5 Ronald

339.4 Consumption (economics). Cost and standard of living 29-22439

"This book deals with consumption—what people want and why. It describes consumption in its economic and business aspects, it, indicates what is consumed and at what cost.' It traces recent changes in consumer demand and shows the directions or trends of these changes. It attempts to get beneath the surface of these facts, to explain them and to state their principles." (Pref.) The standards of living which determine the market for goods are discussed with great thoroughness and many tables aid in the analyses of these standards.

"The book is primarily a collection and arrangement of the facts which we know regarding the market. It fills extremely well the gap which has been conspicuous in many marketing courses and in the minds of some of those engaged in marketing of the characteristics of the consumers which influence sales. It will appear unfortunate to some that the author has not seen fit to weave these facts into a general theoretical framework and thus give a theory of consumption. For all those who deal directly with the market, however, the book will be extremely valuable." W. C. Waite

+ — Am Econ R 20:161 Mr '30 480w

Am J Soc 36:345 S '30 80w

Reviewed by H. L. Frain

Ann Am Acad 150:308 Jl '30 200w

Booklist 26:343 Je '30

"The work is solidly packed with good material. To the conventional surveys on standards of living, population problems, distribution of wealth and income, and summary budgetary studies always found in such texts, have been added interesting and compact specialized chapters on food, housing, clothing, home furnishing, health maintenance, leisure and its uses, and savings. . . The whole tenor of the book is uncritically optimistic. Perhaps no one could produce a book every year on new and complicated subjects, hold down a half dozen quasi-business jobs and serve as professor at Columbia University without dropping into habits of writing marked by haste, undue reliance upon research assistants and stenographers, and lack of time to carefully examine premises or the implications of conclusions drawn." R. A. Brady

+ — Books p19 F 9 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p69 My '30

"Professor Nystrom has brought together more information about consumption habits in the United States than any other writer on the subject. The book covers a wide range of material and will particularly appeal to the statistically minded, as it has a great deal of definite information about the various social and economic facts which bear upon consumption in general. There is very little duplication of the material which appeared in the Economics of Fashion." F. M. Williams

+ J Home Econ 22:219 Mr '30 900w

"Nearly six hundred lively pages of what people want and why reveal the careful thought and logical conclusions of an internationally recognized authority on all the angles and problems of modern distribution." F. A. Fall

+ Outlook 154:389 Mr 5 '30 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:49 Je '30

"Economic Principles of Consumption, by Prof. Paul H. Nystrom of Columbia University, who has conducted much research in the current facts of retail merchandising, contains an amazing supply of data on this subject. It is such a canvass of up-to-date business opportunities as we have not seen elsewhere in print Business men can get suggestions from it." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 80:26 D '29 120w

Survey 63:732 Mr 15 '30 30w

"It is a revealing study of how America lives and, while quite the reverse of radical propaganda, there is pabulum here to feed the crusading zeal of economic revolt."

+ World Tomorrow 13:315 Jl '30 80w

NYSTROM, PAUL HENRY. Economics of retailing. (Merchandising and distribution ser.) rev ed 2v 456;689p il $10 Ronald

658.87 Retail trade 30-2891

"The new two-volume work by Professor Nystrom is an amplification of a former work by the same author which appeared during the pioneer period of merchandising endeavor. The work amplifies much of his former material. The new sections of the book are in accord with the new comprehensive picture of what retailing actually is. They give a picture of the needs of the average administrator in terms of volume, turnover, and profits in order to make a business more effective."—Ann Am Acad

"These two volumes constitute an encyclopedia of retail theory and practice. The completeness of detail is notable. There are many statistical tables which summarize the results of recent researches. Both volumes are copiously illustrated." R. F. Elder

+ Am Econ R 20:304 Je '30 500w

Reviewed by J. R. Doubman

Ann Am Acad 150:308 Jl '30 150w

Booklist 26:408 Jl '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p67 My '30

"May be regarded either as a large book or a small library. . . Reveals the careful thought and logical conclusions of an internationally recognized authority on all the angles and problems of modern distribution." F. A. Fall

+ Outlook 154:389 Mr 5 '30 120w

St Louis 28:138 My '30

O

O. HENRY MEMORIAL AWARD. Prize stories of 1929; sel. and ed. by Blanche Colton Williams. 394p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

Short stories—Collections (21-9372)

Contents: Big blonde, by Dorothy Parker; The homesick ladies, by Sidney Howard; Him and her, by Katharine Brush; Alice, by Sherwood Anderson; The king of the cats, by Stephen Vincent Benét; The apothecary, by Louis Bromfield; Speakeasy, by Katharine Brush; Treat you clever, by Maristan Chapman; Elephants through the country, by Mary Johnston: Manicure, by Margaret Leech; Two red-haired women, by Don Marquis; Sinners, by Kathleen Norris; Buttin' blood, by Pernet Patterson; A coffin for Anna, by Elise M. Rushfeldt; Professional pride, by Ruth Burr Sanborn; Mrs. Sabin, by Caroline Slade; The silver sword, by Wilbur Daniel Steele.

Booklist 26:162 Ja '30

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

Bookm 70:562 Ja '30 600w

Boston Transcript p3 F 21 '30 200w

"By far the cleverest writing is that to be found in Mr. Bromfield's The Apothecary, which, despite its melodrama, is a fascinating macabre yarn. In general one finishes the volume wondering why year after year it continues to get itself published. It is only necessary to read the editor's introductory remarks to realize that her standards of selection are hardly artistic ones."

Nation 130:686 Je 11 '30 280w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p11m N 9 '29 400w

"After reading these seventeen stories one would willingly exchange almost any other quality in fiction for the rare faculty of vital imagination. In general, the book displays a paucity of both ideas and feeling. Some of the stories are ingenious, but almost none is original. And the prevailing effect is closer to sentimentality than to clear and genuine emotion."

— N Y Times p7 D 22 '29 580w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p12 N 8 '29 550w

"There is perhaps warrant for regarding the collection as a fair average annual collection rather than 'one of the most distinguished in the series.' Certainly, however, any complaint of incompetent writing or lack of readable quality would be unwarranted. Readability, indeed, may be the outstanding characteristic of the 17 stories taken collectively, and enjoyable wine needs no bush."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e D 29 '29 280w

O. HENRY MEMORIAL AWARD. Prize stories of 1930; sel. and ed. by Blanche Colton Williams. 384p $2 Doubleday, Doran

Short stories—Collections (21-9372)

The winners of the first prize in the O. Henry memorial award for 1930 are: Dressing-up, by W. R. Burnett, and Neither Jew nor Greek, by W. M. John. Second place is given The Sacrifice of the maidens, by E. M. Roberts; and third and fourth places, respectively, to Coroner's inquest, by Marc Connelly, and Careless love, by Roark Bradford. Judges for this year's awards were Herschel Brickell, John Macy, Frances Gilchrist Wood, and Blanche Colton Williams.

Booklist 27:165 D '30

Reviewed by N. J. Dusenberry

Books p26 N 16 '30 350w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p4d N 8 '30 220w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain

New Repub 65:225 Ja 7 '31 200w

"The selection of some of the stories that go to make up this year's collection implies a sense of values that should automatically tend to rule out certain of the more trite examples which are included. How else may we explain, for example, the presence in the same volume of Elizabeth Madox Roberts's stylistically excellent 'The Sacrifice of the Maidens' with Irvin S. Cobb's painfully factitious and obvious 'Faith, Hope and Charity'? There must be two points of view represented in the voting, the one determined that literary values shall prevail and the other quite openly receptive to commercial values. The dualism renders the O. Henry collection worthless as an index to the progressive development of the short story in America, although it does succeed in giving us a cross-section of the art from top to bottom." John Chamberlain

— + N Y Times p2 D 28 '30 1150w

O'BRIEN, EDWARD JOSEPH HARRINGTON, ed. Best British short stories of 1930; with an Irish and colonial supplement. 284p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Cape, J.]

Short stories—Collections

Contents: Love to the angels, by Mary Arden; Stays, by G. M. Attenborough; The comic actor, by H. E. Bates; Tam McWhirker's elephant, by Richard Carol; The journey, by Padraic Colum; The miracle, by L. A. Coppard; The vocation, by Kathleen Coyle; The mother, by Richmal Crompton; Revelation, by Rhys Davies; The way he went, by Norah Hoult; Why Adonis laughed, by S. G. Millin; Happy ending? by Naomi Mitchison; Culpability, by A. N. Monkhouse; Miss Naseby's life, by Florida Pier; The Corsican inn, by V. S. Pritchett; The wind bloweth where it listeth, by Lorna Rea; First blood, by Herbert Read; The bath, by H. H. Richardson; Hellmut lies in the sun, by Edward Sackville-West; Orpheus, by L. A. G. Strong; "Stay, Corydon, thou swain," by S. T. Warner; The secret, by Malachi Whitaker; I met a man going to St. Neots, by Romer Wilson.

Booklist 27:163 D '30

"Their work seems less turbulent than the American, of firmer texture, quieter, wider and perhaps more finished, but the trend is always in the same direction and the determined probing, the directness, the total absence of all affectation and literary hyperbole, and the artistry of the patterns are the same." Frances Greene

+ Books p21 N 23 '30 150w

"The editor's judgment is good and his knowledge of the field prodigious. It must necessarily occur that any critical reader will dislike some stories which are triple starred on his roll of honor and some that are included in his book. To this the editor can reply that some of them he does not like either, but that critical judgment takes precedence over personal preference. His judgment inclines favorably toward those writers who create, or seem to be on the way to creating, new forms and genres of brief fiction, rather than to those who merely put new words to the old tunes, however cleverly. Which is as it should be."

+ Christian Century 47:1417 N 19 '30 140w

"This volume can be heartily recommended. It is full of the stuff of human life; in its fantastic moments, as in the tales by Romer Wilson and by Sackville West; in its picaresque moods, pictured by V. S. Pritchett; in its poignant phases, as in the stories by L. A. G. Strong and Mary Arden, and in its tragic revelations, through the work of Richmal Crompton and Norah Hoult." Richard Church

+ Christian Science Monitor p12 N 29 '30 350w

"On the whole I cannot see where the English short story writers have advanced one step beyond James Joyce's 'Dubliners,' published so many years ago. It is all good, sound work, rather richer in substance and less callow in treatment than the American counterpart, but not nearly so young and foolish and hopeful as the product of Mr. O'Brien's imaginary center of our literary life." Edwin Seaver

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d N 8 '30 150w

"The British stories are better than the American, less labored and tortuous and less obscure. The newer American short story writers have acquired much of the skill and polish which we have been taught to praise in the British. On the other hand, they seem to have sacrificed some of that exuberant vitality which is a prime asset in our novel writing." E. H. Walton

N Y Times p4 N 9 '30 230w

Sat R 150:636 N 15 '30 150w

Spec 145:859 N 29 '30 180w

"The general standard, it should be said, is not high; the more practiced hands are represented by middling examples of their work, and the younger writers, on the whole, are disappointing. Three or four of the stories are definitely poor, and are hardly worth a place in a collection of this kind. But it is pleasant to be able to say that a couple of the younger writers make the best showing. Mr. H. E. Bates's 'The Comic Actor' and Mr. Rhys Davies's 'Revelation' are much the most attractive things in the volume."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p1009 N 27 '30 500w

O'BRIEN, EDWARD JOSEPH HARRINGTON, ed. Best short stories of 1930; and, The yearbook of the American short story; sixteenth annual issue. 322p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Cape, J.]

Short stories—Collections (16-11387)

Contents: Along a sandy road, by Ellen Bishop; Suffer little children, by Clifford Bragdon; Two men free, by Whit Burnett; The faithful wife, by Morley Callaghan; The way of the transgressor, by G. S. Coates; The voice of the turtle, by E. C. Draper; Answer, by R. P. Furniss; Blue sky, by Walter Gilkyson; Summer dust, by Caroline Gordon; Adventure, by Emily Hahn; Happiness up the river, by Harry Hartwick; September sailing, by E. H. Kittredge; A red coat for night, by Manuel Komroff; At the swamp, by Janet Lewis; The little wife, by William March; The cradle of civilization, by Dorothy Parker; The white pigeon, by Gouver-

O'BRIEN, E. J. H., ed.—Continued
neur Paulding; The patriot, by William Polk; Theft, by K. A. Porter; The vineyard at Schloss Ramsburg, by W. H. Upson.

Booklist 27:164 D '30

"Mr. O'Brien, as usual, makes excellent selection of what is most vital and significant in the new literature. These stories, nearly all of them, possess a three-dimensional quality. Their creators are thinking and feeling clearly, deeply and directly and, accordingly, are writing so." Frances Greene

+ Books p21 N 23 '30 550w

Boston Transcript p2 D 27 '30 180w

Christian Century 47:1417 N 19 '30 140w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain

New Repub 65:225 Ja 7 '31 400w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p4d N 8 '30 600w

"It seems as if Mr. O'Brien had become plot shy. One pictures him backing away in distaste from almost all narratives that have strong, surprising climaxes or too well rounded a plot. There is an abundance of good writing and good craftsmanship in these two most recent collections of short stories, British and American. How is it, then, that so many of the stories are so very, very dull? The answer naturally suggests itself that minutely observed and honestly reported fragments of experience do not necessarily make first rate stories unless the experience itself is inherently interesting." E. H. Walton

— + N Y Times p4 N 9 '30 500w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p10 O 25 '30 850w

Sat R 150:636 N 15 '30 100w

"Surface colour, hard superficial brilliance are the main characteristics of Mr. O'Brien's American short stories. They are a great improvement on previous collections, and are as pertinent and economical as Herr Feuchtwanger's dossier is diffuse. One does not doze among them. They crackle as sharply and as briefly as November fireworks. Underneath the slickness there is often a tiredness, a desolate emptiness of heart—testimony of the imitative sophistication of a young country." V. S. Pritchett

Spec 145:738 N 15 '30 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1009 N 27 '30 500w

O'BRIEN, HOWARD VINCENT. Abandoned woman. 310p $1 Doubleday, Doran

30-25300

Because she wanted something more from life than her money-making husband could give her, Joan Hilliard left him and her children to live with Val Morlas, a temperamental and struggling young artist. While Val was helpless, discouraged, and in need of her, Joan loved him; but when, thru the influence of another woman, he became successful, Joan left—becoming once more an "abandoned" woman. Then came the news that her husband had lost everything in the stock crash, that he and the children needed her. And Joan went back to them.

"Mr. O'Brien has shown a rare and real understanding of the French milieu. . . He has done, too, the suburban life of the middle west with as much conviction as Joseph Hergesheimer did it in 'The Party Dress.' " F. B.

Chicago Daily Tribune p10 O 25 '30 330w

"If, now and then, a too familiar situation temporarily robs the story and characters of reality, the novel as a whole is competent and true. Joan Hilliard's personality is clearly realized; many of the minor characters—suburbanites and expatriates—are delightful. 'An Abandoned Woman' is not a distinguished novel, but it is well worth reading."

+ — N Y Times p9 N 16 '30 400w

"Mr. O'Brien, who is literary editor of the Chicago Daily News, has donated much better wares to the literary market. In all matter of workmanship, however, the book is well done; its subject matter is merely trite, but it will hold a certain interest for those who will read, largely to know whether Joan's gypsy life with the artist will last and if not, what she will do next. At least two of the characters of the book, outside of the main one, are a delight in drawing and characterization."

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:165 S 27 '30 220w

O'CONNOR, JACK. Conquest. 293p $2 Harper

30-24051

Jard Pendleton is a tough and rough maker of the West—a villain with tremendous courage, a killer of many Indians, but none the less a hero and a conqueror of his environment. The story of Pendleton's exploits and adventures presents a cross-section of life in the old Southwest.

"This is his first book. It is not a perfect book. Its worst fault is a certain looseness of construction. It is episodic and somewhat rambling. Parts of it are vivid, splendidly realized, and parts are merely a loose and easy chronicle. The writing is seldom brilliant, but it is always vigorous and unaffected. At its best it communicates human experience with that stinging immediacy which is the triumph of prose as a fictional medium." Harvey Fergusson

+ — Books p7 O 5 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p5 N 12 '30 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1017 N 27 '30 220w

O'CONNOR, WINFIELD SCOTT. Jockeys, crooks and kings; the story of Winnie O'Connor's life as told to Earl Chapin May; woodcuts by Lynn Ward. 219p $3 (10s 6d) Cape

B or 92 Horse-racing 30-18827

Winnie O'Connor describes his early training and apprenticeship, the famous horse owners for whom he rode, his rapid rise to fame in America, followed by his European career—in France, Germany and Spain. During the war Winnie served with the American forces at Bayonne. He now lives in retirement in Brooklyn.

"His story is simply told and pleasantly written, with good humor and an easy, intimate charm. Such horses as Lutteur, Causerie, Yankee and Trianon III have been his mounts and he has raced in all the greatest classics, including even the Grand National at Liverpool. His associations thus established are frankly portrayed, and many interesting and amusing details of his life, of the race track and of the patrons of the track are here set forth." W. B. Bradford

+ Books p5 Jl 20 '30 600w

New Statesman 35:802 O 4 '30 250w

"Inevitably something of Winnie O'Connor's right stable flavor is lost between the telling by Winnie and the writing by Mr. May. Sometimes the stuff smells more strongly of typewriter oil than of good leather and saddle soap. But take it all in all, it is a fair job of collaboration. The result is the preservation of a picture not altogether inadequate of a phase of life and of the racing game which is well worth preserving." H. I. Brock

+ — N Y Times p5 S 28 '30 950w

"His reminiscences are naïve and genial and spiced with simple philosophy. Chiefly they consist in accounts of training and racing and in anecdotes about the rich and great and about the crooks that horse-racing attracts. A good many of the stories are amusing and show that Winnie O'Connor had his own ideas about things and could keep his own counsel. And of course the book is full of horses and the love of them." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:468 Jl 23 '30 150w

"The anecdotes are illuminating and ring true; yet without them and the light they throw on people highly placed, this autobiography, as such, would be good reading."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p755 S 25 '30 850w

O'CONOR, NORREYS JEPHSON. There was magic in those days. 62p il $2 Stokes
30-27100

A story of the fairy country of the Leprechauns, based upon a tale called 'The King of the Leprecane's journey to Emania." It tells of a visit made by the king of these little people, Yuvan, and his court poet, Esirt, to the strange land occupied by human beings.

Reviewed by A. C. Moore
Atlantic Bookshelf p48 D '30 80w

"The writer has retained the quality of beauty and simplicity of the old legends. The illustrations, in which the imagination of the artist has caught and reproduced the same simple and heroic quality, the exquisite printing, and the imaginative title, all combine with the text itself to make this a volume to be treasured." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p12 O 12 '30 270w

"As gay and rollicking a tale as has ever been printed of the wee folk in Ireland." O. M. Fuller
+ N Y World p3e N 10 '30 80w

"Is far too precious both in style and format." B. E. Todd
— Spec 143:869 D 7 '29 30w

ODEGARD, PETER H. American public mind. 308p $2.50 Columbia univ. press
917.3 Public opinion. United States—Civilization. United States—Social conditions. United States—Politics and government
30-27934

A discussion of the various forces that have shaped character and opinion in America. Following two foundation chapters on individual and social behavior, the author takes up the family, the church, the school, the newspaper, the political party, advertising and propaganda, the arts, and censorship and democracy.

Booklist 27:202 Ja '31

Reviewed by Winifred Raushenbush
Books p18 N 2 '30 600w

"There is much of the classroom tone about the volume; in fact it too often seems to be merely rewritten from a series of lecture cards. The notes are far more enlightening than the general run of college lectures on social science, but the final product remains fragmentary, lacking careful synthesis and integration. The opening chapters on 'The Foundations of Personality' and 'Social Behavior' are especially desultory; the discussion of 'pressure politics,' however, raises the level of the book well above the commonplace." B. J. Stern
— + Current Hist 33:xx Ja '31 400w

Reviewed by E. S. Bates
N Y Evening Post p4d N 1 '30 850w

"The book is provocative, pungent at times and earnest throughout. This is probably the representative type of current American criticism of our national defects." A. S. Will
+ N Y Times p14 D 14 '30 1700w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:18 D '30 150w

"Professor Odegard has acquitted himself of a difficult assignment in a most creditable manner. He has not, to be sure, discovered just what 'public opinion' is, nor yet the whole process of its making. But he has gathered together and arranged in logical sequence what material there is on the subject and—what is more—has made a most interesting book if it. . . He has given us an excellent survey of the American mind with its great preponderance of emotional over rational content. A study of that part of this mind which thinks and which in the end may have a larger influence than he would at present grant, would furnish most excellent material for a second volume." H. K. Norton
+ Sat R of Lit 7:412 D 6 '30 750w

"After 'Pressure Politics: the Story of the Antisaloon League,' Peter Odegard's new book is a disappointment. . . Instead of collecting and analyzing data, Prof Odegard mostly makes generalizations and quotes opinions when he deals with the press, motion pictures, the radio, books and censorship. Some of his statements are too sweeping. . . There is no significant welding of the material as there was in Prof Odegard's book on the Antisaloon league."
— Springf'd Republican p12 O 16 '30 550w

ODOEVTZEVA, MME IRINA. Out of childhood; tr. by Donia Nachshen. 252p il $3 Smith, R.R. [12s 6d Constable]

Louka, the temperamental and imaginative younger sister of Vera, blissfully yearned after the handsome Arsenin Nikolaevitch—the suitor who was not quite serious in his attentions to Vera. Vera, loving Arsenin, married a man whom she did not love, but who could give her comfort and luxury. The story chiefly concerns Louka and her adolescent growing pains.

"Out of Childhood is useless to children of fourteen; and the spectacle of a young girl playing jokes on her older sister, having romantic sessions with Azrael, and doing handsprings from fairy tales to Freud, can scarcely interest grown-ups."
— Bookm 72:309 N '30 220w
Boston Transcript p5 N 12 '30 200w

"This story of a girl's adolescence, full of dreams and fancies, full of dread and delight, full of half-understood expectation and of forbidden desires, is of rare loveliness. It is slight in substance. Vera loves Arsenin, who plays with her and goes; Vera marries Vladimir, still loving Arsenin, and Louka her younger sister is in love with the same poor-hearted fellow. That is all, but out of it Miss Odoevtzeva has made a thing of unforgettable beauty—and the story's entrancing quality is properly enhanced by Miss Donia Nachshen's illustrations."
+ New Statesman 35:768 S 27 '30 180w

"The book is very suggestive, very emotional and very jerkily written. The author has an irritating habit of changing her tenses in the middle of the most purple passages. The illustrations exactly match the text in their ludicrous modernity."
— Spec 145:361 S 13 '30 250w

"The author gets her best effects through exercising a remarkably fastidious gift of suggestion, the result of which is that she always gives the appearance of shrinking from positive statement of any kind. . . The whole thing is a clever and very interesting achievement, in which Miss Nachshen, whose translation appears to be all that it should, collaborates in the liveliest and most telling fashion with some thirty odd pen-and-ink illustrations, all of them full of life and imagination and genuinely illustrative of the qualities of the writing."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p732 S 18 '30 700w

ODUM, HOWARD WASHINGTON. American epoch; southern portraiture in the national picture. 379p $3.50 Holt
917.5 South—Civilization. South—Social conditions
30-27845

This study of the development of the South is presented thru "four generations of southern Americans whose changing cultures have provided the most dramatic episodes in our national history, whose backgrounds and experiences comprehend all of the basic elements in the architecture of modern civilization." (Pref.) The first generation, that which reached its prime in 1865, is typified by John W. Southern and Major Thomas Leaven, with their families and neighbors. The second generation is represented thru the lives and ideas of their sons and daughters, the builders of the new South. The third generation, their children's children, comprised the leaders of the early twentieth century. Upon the fourth, which will reach its prime in 1965, Mr Odum believes will rest the task of determining the nature of a new epoch in America.

ODUM, H. W.—Continued

Booklist 27:153 D '30

"Mr. Odum has gone a long way, if not all the way; he presents at least some of the materials on which intelligent and effective criticism will have to be based. He offers much that should commend itself to Southerners, those who are still regional-minded as well as those who are not, and to anyone who is interested in the South and its grave problems." Eugene Armfield
+ Bookm 72:330 N '30 320w

"In trying to account for my acute disappointment at this latest contribution of the gifted author of 'Rainbow Round My Shoulder' I find myself of necessity somewhat on the defensive. For 'An American Epoch' has already been warmly commended by able critics North and South. Personally I believe that those Southerners who, like myself, come away from its perusal with a feeling of emptiness may attribute their frustration to two factors: the central theme of 'An American Epoch' is not illuminating and the book includes too much sociological jargon." Stringfellow Barr
— Books p2 O 26 '30 1000w

Boston Transcript p2 O 29 '30 220w

Reviewed by G. B. Winton
Christian Century 48:23 Ja 7 '31 950w

"The title of the work discloses Odum's theme but gives no indication of the charm with which he tells the story of the part the South has played and is playing in the civilization of America. The old South is redrawn, perhaps overdrawn on the romantic side, but the paradoxes and the culture that were the ante-bellum South are well portrayed." E. F. Brown
+ Current Hist 33:iv N '30 260w

"What a storehouse of facts and images is this book! Mr. Odum sits in a priceless mint of information, showering his treasures with a lavish hand. The golden items lie in heaps behind him. But it is very difficult for the casual reader to bring away from their contemplation anything more than dazzled eyes. Novelists who want to reconstruct a Southern scene will need no further bibliography. Economists will find here a story of the growth of the textile industry which is accurate, complete and understanding. But though Mr. Odum, by means of his Uncle-John-and-Old-Major method, has (regrettably, I think) sought to 'make a story' of what is an amazing factual treatise, he will hardly hold the sustained attention of those who want their information concisely collated and their romances all of a piece." Arthur Krock
+ — N Y Times p1 O 19 '30 1300w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p14 O 9 '30 1100w

Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 156:628 D 17 '30 80w

"The final impression of the book is one of confusion: confusion of styles ranging from a nervous picturesque, sketchy type of writing to one of blank statistical summaries; confusion of treatment, of technique in handling such a wealth of material; confusion as to the 'four generations' which he attempts to limn. Perhaps it was impossible to blend the qualities of 'Rainbow Round My Shoulder' and a social study of so vast a scale. One has the feeling that a greater book might have been written if the author had waited longer and had revised more carefully. . . The book ought to be invaluable for editors, teachers, scholars, as well as for the general public. The very full bibliography at the end will stimulate still further study of the problems and conditions suggested." Edwin Mims
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:483 D 27 '30 1750w

Reviewed by L. I. Jaffè
Survey 65:283 D 1 '30 680w

ODUM, HOWARD WASHINGTON, and JOCHER, KATHARINE C. Introduction to social research. (Am. social science ser.) 488p $4 Holt

307 Social surveys. Research. Social sciences 29-17238

Beginning with a discussion of the range of social research, and of the relationship between social science and the physical sciences, the authors analyse the various types of approach: analogical, biological, psychological, anthropological, politico-juristic, economic and sociological. Six types of method are then taken up—the historical, the case, the survey, the experimental, the statistical, and the scientific-human. The concluding chapters take up the following types of procedure: personnel and common-sense technique, exploring the sources, utilizing available aids, analyzing, interpreting, and presenting results, social analysis and social denominator, and a representative bibliography.

"It is difficult to assign a position to this volume in the literature on social research. Certainly, the book makes no original contribution to research procedure, as I suppose the authors would acknowledge. Nor is it a critical work—the authors have done little in the way of searching comparison or evaluation. . . To the merit of the book stands its vast sweep, its voluminous citations, the flexibility of point of view of the authors, and their refusal to ride any particular theory. However, the volume could obviously have benefited by more thought and by less citation and quotation, by the surrender of flexibility and indefiniteness to consistency and clarity." Herbert Blumer
— + Am J Soc 35:1109 My '30 1200w

"The chapters are very sensible, though often skating on the thin ice of the trivial. The general description of existing research agencies is conveniently accessible in no other book." H. D. Lasswell
+ Am Pol Sci R 24:474 My '30 270w

"The authors are peculiarly equipped to treat this extremely broad subject because of their intimate contacts with the large number of bodies engaged in the supervision of research projects throughout the country. They have very successfully and convincingly presented, by brief citations, the whole range of authoritative opinion on the various topics treated, supplemented by much valuable illustrative material drawn from practically the entire field of actual social research. The volume is decidedly 'meaty' and by the same token not easily read." F. A. Ross
+ Ann Am Acad 147:216 Ja '30 470w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:14 F '30

Reviewed by S. C. Wallace
Pol Sci Q 45:307 Je '30 200w

"This volume is a veritable compendium of background information for the teacher of social research, furnishing an impressive array of valuable source material which it would take a lifetime to collect for oneself, and which has never before been assembled with a similar objective. The twenty-five chapters contain a masterly discussion of the fields of science in general, and of social science in particular." E. L. Lattimore
+ Survey 63:485 Ja 15 '30 230w

OESTERLEY, WILLIAM OSCAR EMIL, and ROBINSON, THEODORE HENRY. Hebrew religion; its origin and development. 400p $2.50 Macmillan [10s 6d S.P.C.K.]

296 Jews—Religion 30-15636

In part one the authors take up the background of Hebrew religion, with its animistic and polytheistic stages and nomadic period. Part two begins with the religion of Israel under the god Yahweh in the wilderness and traces religious beliefs up to the fall of Jerusalem. Part three, on Jewish religion, covers the period of exile, the Persian period, and the Greek period.

"This is a book which deserves a place beside such standard works as Fraser's 'Golden Bough' and James' 'Varieties of Religious Experience.' " W. W. Wimberley

+ Christian Century 47:1154 S 24 '30 420w

Reviewed by H. L. Nathan

Nation and Ath 47:654 Ag 23 '30 80w

"An admirable work, which it is hardly too much to say all who profess and call themselves Christians should read."

+ New Statesman 35:282 Je 7 '30 1050w

"An informing accent of Hebrew religious history for the general reader and at the same time a complete textbook for the religious student. The authors are well-known Semitic teachers in England. Their account is comprehensive and painstaking and gives the emphasis to different elements that is necessary for the general reader's understanding of so large a subject."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 S 23 '30 300w

OESTERREICH, TRAUGOTT KONSTANTIN. Possession, demoniacal and other, among primitive races, in antiquity, the middle ages and modern times; [auth. tr. by D. Ibberson]. 411p $5 Smith, R.R. [21s Routledge]

133.4 Demoniac possession 30-17623

"The major part of Professor Oesterreich's treatise on 'possession' is devoted to the pathology of the states of mind which present the phenomenon of dual personality. The subject, however, involves a close scrutiny of demoniacal possession as recorded during the Middle Ages, in the Bible and Jewish religious literature generally, in the folk-lore of the modern and ancient world, and among primitive or illiterate people to-day."—Nation and Ath

"This book is said to be for the ordinary reader, but it unfortunately presents certain typical faults of German scholarship. It is a mine of information, but it requires a great deal of hard digging to get at this information. Besides lacking a glossary of rare technical terms, the cases are poorly arranged." Woodbridge Riley

— + Books p3 Jl 13 '30 1000w

Nation and Ath 47:118 Ap 26 '30 200w

"Professor Oesterreich has made a contribution to the study of religious psychology which may be disliked or repudiated, but cannot be ignored."

+ New Statesman 34:610 F 15 '30 800w

N Y World p5m Ag 3 '30 200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:81 N '30

O'FLAHERTY, LIAM. Return of the brute. 198p $2 Harcourt [5s Mandrake]

30-4656

A psychological study of nine men in a bombing squad: the Corporal in command; Gunn, a huge, simple fellow who has a protective affection for Lamont, a nineteen year old student, nervous and afraid; George Appleby, a religious fanatic; Michael Friel, a policeman in civilian life; Simon Jennings, nicknamed The Gent; Jeremiah McDonald, the butt of the company, owing to his stupidity; Daniel Reilly, an excellent soldier with a taste for drink; and James Shaw, the most reliable and respected man in the company. The story tells what happens to these men, subject to continuous hunger, fear, filth, and suffering; and of their deaths one by one, till only Reilly is left.

For biographical sketch of the author see N Y World p3e N 23 '30

"It is one picture of war, whether accurate or not one does not question, since the brush is handled with evident sincerity. As a war book it dates back to the period when horror was still the major part of the testimony of many witnesses. As a piece of creative writing there are some, at least, who will find the slow, sure and ponderous piling up of atmosphere to a final effect of chaos and darkness, a witness of Mr. O'Flaherty's skill." Eugene Lohrke

Books p5 F 23 '30 800w

Cleveland Open Shelf p62 Ap '30

New Repub 62:227 Ap 9 '30 140w

"Here is a potentially exciting story which emerges as a series of episodes almost entirely without significance because the author has chosen to show nothing more than the representative side of a violent atmosphere. . . Things are merely told, without conviction; people merely function, without perceptible motivation." Emanuel Eisenberg

— N Y Evening Post p11m F 8 '30 550w

"If one is to ask each author for a balanced view of the world, then O'Flaherty is undoubtedly on the wrong course. But if one goes to all of literature for balance, then the work of O'Flaherty is a weight necessary to a true balancing of the scales. In any case, this study of the nine men, victims of war, is worked out with a wholly admirable skill."

+ — N Y Times p7 F 16 '30 750w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:388 Mr 5 '30 50w

"The book, though as vivid and startling and dreadful as one could wish, does not ring true as an account of the war. The details are convincing enough, but the general impression is of a nightmare based, indeed, on actuality, but so transmuted by the author's characteristic, besetting fancies, that as a contribution to history (whatever may be its relation to art) it is not trustworthy." L. P. Hartley

— Sat R 148:686 D 7 '29 380w

Reviewed by Alan Porter

Spec 143:882 D 7 '29 150w

" 'The Return of the Brute' is powerful and stark. It is a bitter piece of work, showing war at its worst, but it is the sort of thing which O'Flaherty can do well, and, within its limits, it is real and effective. The intensity, unnaturalness and horror of a particular phase of the war are dramatically described."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 2 '30 170w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple

Survey 64:35 Ap 1 '30 50w

"Mr. Liam O'Flaherty is well known as a writer of great gifts, with an asperity and something nigh to cruelty generally mitigated by a very pretty wit. Here the wit is absent, the asperity is reinforced, and there is, unfortunately, an air of unreality about the whole scene."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p938 N 21 '29 250w

O'FLAHERTY, LIAM. Two years. 322p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Cape, J.]

B or 92 30-27694

Following his discharge from service after the War, Liam O'Flaherty spent two years vagabonding and picking up odd jobs here and there, at sea and on shore in various countries. He began by shipping to Rio de Janeiro. His other experiences included jobs as a lumberjack in Canada, night porter in a hotel, printer's devil in Boston, worker in a canned milk factory, waiter and dish washer—mostly undertaken out of sheer curiosity and an avid hunger for contact with unusual people and places. At the end of these two years, while working in a Hartford tire factory, Mr O'Flaherty began to write his first short stories.

Booklist 27:157 D '30

"Because of its graphic impressions of places, people and fields of activity the book has distinct value as a contemporary document. For the example that it provides of the enormous potential experience open to the modern man unhampered by any positive values or convictions, it possesses an immediate significance. What is feeble in the work are those sections in which Mr. O'Flaherty endeavors to extract a meaning from his experience. Much of his abstract speculation dissipates in a mist of rhetoric and even his mental processes become twisted and separated. . . Such an expert

O'FLAHERTY, LIAM—Continued
craftsman as Mr. O'Flaherty would do better to seek self-expression through some less obviously personal medium." William Troy
+ — Bookm 72:322 N '30 650w

"A reader's experience with 'Two Years' is very like listening to a brilliant conversationalist talking of lands and people near and far; talk that is witty, ironic, somber, gay and not a little wild. Mr. O'Flaherty is an Irish romantic, to whom is given with his other gifts a purse of commonsense and a staff of humor. Most of the other recent travel autobiographies have been called human documents. Perhaps we should call this one an inhuman document: it is honest, inconsistent, ironic, beautiful and ugly, and bitter." Coley Taylor
Books p4 O 5 '30 600w

"Mr. O'Flaherty's 'Two Years'—on four continents—makes unusually fast reading. It will appeal to those who are already very much interested in this talented young Irish storyteller, and to those who enjoy a true account of rough-and-tumble adventures. On the other hand, it will not appeal to those who expect an autobiographical fragment either to reveal some events of general significance or to portray an unusual man. There is nothing in Mr. O'Flaherty's experiences that is more than momentarily exciting or amusing, and what he shows us of himself only makes us realize that he is at his best when concealed behind his story-teller's mask. The man himself is not so interesting as his talents." Gerald Sykes
— + Nation 131:448 O 22 '30 450w

Reviewed by Barrington Gates
Nation and Ath 47:736 S 13 '30 280w

"He has the Irishman's gift for story telling, and he has what is almost a genius for bringing people alive in short descriptions."
+ New Repub 65:118 D 10 '30 150w

"Mr. O'Flaherty is a modern swashbuckler. He takes his adventures with a dangerous quietness, is intensely aware that he is a very tough fellow, and knows the trick of telling a story in which he can manage unobtrusively to throw a good deal of light on his own prowess. In the two years described in this book he was successively brewer's fireman, hotel boy, bank clerk, hobo, factory-hand, waiter and dishwasher. Adventures tumble on every page, and they are entertaining if somewhat incredible to read."
New Statesman 35:684 S 6 '30 500w

"He is supposed to be giving you two years out of his life, a brief post-war autobiography, but don't you believe it. He has written instead a grand travel book and has told what seem to be magnificent lies. The best part of it is that you don't care particularly where the lies end or the truth begins, because all of it is fine, breathless reading. What is more, it seems impossible for O'Flaherty to tell you a single trivial incident in his wanderings without converting it into a short story." Horace Gregory
+ N Y Evening Post p4d O 4 '30 700w

Reviewed by Percy Hutchison
N Y Times p4 O 5 '30 1300w

Reviewed by Clinton Simpson
N Y World p3e N 16 '30 600w

"Nobody can read his pages without exhilaration and a certain admiration. But the reader will not always believe in O'Flaherty, though he can write better than nine writers out of ten. If Borrow is beer and Stevenson is strong tea with plenty of sugar, Liam O'Flaherty provides a run of cocktails with a clot of blood instead of the conventional cherry. It is a strong and restless book, with provoking sips of Bolshevism and Bohemianism." Shane Leslie
Sat R 150:321 S 13 '30 800w

"O'Flaherty is strong, courageous, contemporary-minded, aggressively sincere; he has already published a half-dozen books, and is only thirty-four years old. If he continues, his will be a name to set down as a companion to Robert Louis Stevenson and Laurence Sterne." Oakley Johnson
+ Sat R of Lit 7:303 N 8 '30 350w

"By turns bold and reticent, impossible to lay aside, this queer snatch of autobiography by Mr. O'Flaherty has little seeming kinship with either his lovely short stories or his terrifying novels. Those by their economy and simplicity suggest the pains with which he tears literature out of himself: the present book is written without effort, is in many ways disagreeable, sometimes ridiculous and seldom literature. . . As a case-history for the study of psychology this book is valuable, but as the story of a human being it is oddly unsympathetic, though eventful and strikingly original." Iris Barry
— + Spec 145:356 S 13 '30 600w

"The chief interest in this book lies not so much in the adventures described, many of which are sordid and disgusting, as in the honesty of the self-revelation. We leave the book with a curiously vivid impression of a young Irishman of great physical strength whose feckless, dreaming mind was entirely out of control. Mr. O'Flaherty takes an intense interest in his fellow-men, which gives a strength of outline to his pictures of a stokehold's mixed company or to a typical gathering round a coffee-stall on the Thames Embankment."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p621 Jl 31 '30 900w

OGBURN, MRS DOROTHY. Ra-ta-plan—! 328p $2 Little 30-4657

At a house-party on an island off the Georgia coast one of the guests, Fraser Court, is murdered during a terrific thunder storm. Monty Hartman, a psychoanalyst, uses his knowledge to determine, psychologically, who the murderer might be, and Monty pays for his investigations with his life. It is the refrain of an old French song which is sung by Thérèse Dieudonné, another of the guests, that furnishes an important clue to the solution of the murders.

"This is an unusual story, carefully plotted to arouse the enthusiasm of a jaded crime reader."
+ Bookm 71:xxviii Mr '30 80w

"'Ra-Ta-Plan—!' is decidedly worth your attention. It's out of the ordinary on all counts and is particularly devised for civilized readers." Will Cuppy
+ Books p18 F 16 '30 150w

"For those who like a mystery story which is subtle, this has been written to order; nothing at all like it has been published since the craze for mystery stories gained its present impetus."
+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 8 '30 350w

"The author has succeeded in making each of her characters a distinct personality, an achievement so rare in mystery fiction as to be worthy of special notice."
+ N Y Times p24 F 9 '30 200w

"Miss Ogburn's impressive handling of character suggests that her field is a more serious type of novel than that of the mystery."
+ N Y World p11m F 9 '30 150w
Springf'd Republican p7e Je 15 '30 200w
Wis Lib Bul 26:68 F '30

OGBURN, WILLIAM FIELDING, and JAFFE, WILLIAM. Economic development of post-war France; a survey of production. (Columbia univ. Council for research in the social sciences. Social and economic studies of post-war France) 613p il $6 Columbia univ. press [30s Oxford]

330.944 France—Economic conditions. Reconstruction (European war)—France. France—Industries. Finance—France
29-29370

This, the third volume of a series of social and economic studies of post-war France, surveys French production for the decade following the war. Part one describes the post-war territorial expansion of France, her financial situation, credit conditions, etc. Part two contains a series of studies of French mines, key industries, foreign trade and combination tendencies. In the appendices selected statistical data are given.

Reviewed by A. H. Hansen
Am Econ R 20:705 D '30 1150w

Reviewed by William MacDonald
Am Hist R 35:875 Jl '30 280w

"The economic recovery of France since the world war is one of the outstanding European developments and deserves the careful statistical study and skillful exposition which the authors have given it. The remarkable recuperative powers of the people, the reformation of their industry, and their use of the resources which were brought to them as a result of the war are all excellently reviewed." C. L. Jones
+ Ann Am Acad 149:207 My '30 250w

"A well-planned and extremely interesting survey of production of French natural resources, such as coal, iron, oil, electric power and food, and also such manufactures as textiles and chemicals."
+ Current Hist 32:614 Je '30 180w

"A book whose array of quantitative data does not detract from its readableness and whose lucidity and style make the volume as fascinating as it is thorough. It is a welcome addition to the economic literature of post-war Europe available in the English language. The excellent bibliography is suggestive of the scope of the work." A. E. Taylor
+ J Pol Econ 38:712 D '30 720w

OGDEN, GEORGE WASHINGTON. Wasted salt. 299p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Hodder]
30-4851

Colin Campbell inherited his father's reputation for bad luck but he determined to change it when he set out for Medicine Grove, across the Kansas border. He met with many setbacks, but triumphed over his enemies and realized his cherished ambition to become a newspaper man in Medicine Grove.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 My 11 '30 70w

"With the West as a background, written as Mr. Ogden writes it, and the action, abounding in humor and true-to-life characters, the story cannot fail to prove of interest to those who like tales of the cow-country."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 29 '30 200w

"The sketches, even of the cowards, the boasters and the roughs, are full of humour. Gip Lott, the travelling quack, and McCamish, the unintimidated local editor are equally original but more sympathetic."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p193 Mr 6 '30 150w

OGG, FREDERIC AUSTIN. English government and politics. 783p $4.25; trade ed $6 Macmillan

342.42 Great Britain—Politics and government 29-19699

Beginning with a study of the origin of English institutions, Professor Ogg outlines the constitutional development of British government, and the structure of England's administrative organization: council, cabinet, ministry, parliament and party organization. He also discusses the position occupied by the king and the survival of the kingship, and closes with chapters on the Irish Free State and imperial affairs.

Booklist 26:189 F '30
Boston Transcript p6 N 27 '29 950w

"Professor Ogg has brought his fine and comprehensive grasp of politics and his remarkable range of knowledge to bear upon the most intricate of all studies of Constitutions and their actual functioning under the conditions which have produced them. It is no slight achievement on Professor Ogg's part to have made clear within the compass of a volume of 770 pages the nature and operation of the complex constitutional and political system of the British people."
+ Current Hist 31:862 F '30 120w

"Professor Ogg has written what is, I think, quite the best descriptive account of the English political system I have seen since the war. His work is full and impartial and accurate. It strikes just the right balance between permanent and fluctuating elements. It displays an awareness of the great issues, a knowledge of the vast literature, and a power to pick its way among a mass of confusing detail which deserve high praise. Certainly no better textbook on the subject now exists." H. J. Laski
+ Current Hist 31:1048 Mr '30 1300w

Reviewed by R. L. Schuyler
Nation 130:549 My 7 '30 1050w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:24 Mr '30
Pratt p11 summer '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:12 Mr '30 130w
St Louis 28:38 F '30
Springf'd Republican p6 F 17 '30 700w

"Over the whole field Professor Ogg shows an easy grasp and familiarity, expounds clearly, discusses impartially, and avoids any error more serious than that of making the ideal of Dominion status for India the exclusive property of the Labour Party. The text, moreover, is well documented and we are given an excellent bibliography. . . Professor Ogg has made a remarkably good class-book; he has hardly made, or attempted to make, an addition to constitutional literature."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p146 F 20 '30 350w

OKE, RICHARD. Frolic wind. 263p $2.50 Brewer [7s 6d Gollancz]
[30-454]

Four spinster sisters, whose combined ages total 315, are holding a houseparty at Pagnell Bois, the Jeune family estate. The guests, who are all celebrities, converse in the sophisticated and approved manner of modern social lions. Two of the younger guests, Charlecote, an artist, and Cecily Jewell, a dependent of the Jeunes, fall in love. The death of one of the elderly sisters, Lady Athaliah, and the discovery of her collection of pornographic treasures, brings the story to a climax.

Books p17 My 18 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p2 F 15 '30 280w

"Mr. Oke has talent. He can write; he can make attractive people and manipulate them with skill; he can create an atmosphere. He is also something of a satirist, altho his view is more romantic than satiric. But, unfortunately, his work is marred by an excessive cleverness and a forced ending."
+ — Nation and Ath 45:632 Ag 10 '29 220w

Reviewed by Ruth Seinfel
N Y Evening Post p10m F 8 '30 480w
N Y Times p8 Ja 19 '30 550w

"Brilliantly written, and if the author does not succumb to the temptation of becoming just one of those clever young men, we believe that he may some time justify his publishers' prediction, so hopefully expressed on the jacket." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:149 Ja 22 '30 100w

" 'Frolic Wind' is a work of the modern school. Its author has read both Mr. Aldous Huxley and Mr. Ronald Firbank, and his own book shows that he has marked and inwardly digested them. . . Its ancestry is not against the book. Mr. Huxley and Mr. Firbank are both lively, coloured and up-to-date writers, and so is their imitator. . . The book is not meant to be sensible. It spins along its course as vivid, vertiginous, inconsequent and metallic as a top, giving the same brief pleasure that a top gives." L. P. Hartley
+ Sat R 148:54 Jl 13 '29 200w

"Out of England comes a first novel by Richard Oke, 'Frolic Wind,' which shows a fine youthfulness coupled with both wit and sophistication. An amusing book full of a light satirical comedy aimed at the cannibalistic qualities of age which lives upon the vigor and brains of youth, it seems too bad that it should have any purpose but the producing of laughter. The flaw

OKE, RICHARD—Continued
of the book is that Mr. Oke, having set about to attack vain old age, follows his completely successful satirical sallies with a melodramatic Armageddon which is neither diverting nor convincing." Jonathan Daniels
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:848 Mr 22 '30 600w

"Frolic Wind is an unusual and very clever first novel. . . Mr. Oke, we imagine, is young. He has the defects of his virtues. He is, at all events, thoroughly alive." Gilbert Thomas
+ — Spec 143:134 Jl 27 '29 200w

"Mr. Oke presents to us a fantastic house party, and he does it with all youth's gallantry and derision. We recognize talent, and we hope in time for sincerity."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p556 Jl 11 '29 470w

OKEY, THOMAS. Venice and its story. [rev ² ed] 325p il $5 Dutton [15s Dent]
914.53 Venice—History. Venice—Description

The fourth and revised edition of a standard work upon Venice. Part one gives the history of the city; part two is in the nature of a modern guidebook to Venice and the outlying islands. The book is illustrated with forty colored plates and many drawings in black and white.

"The many illustrations, from watercolor sketches and line drawings, are rarely lovely."
+ Boston Transcript p1 D 27 '30 280w

"A pleasant and revised edition, illustrated with water-colours, drawings, maps and reproductions of the Old Masters, of a book which should be familiar to everyone who wishes to enjoy Venice intelligently."
Times [London] Lit Sup p971 N 20 '30 60w

OLCOTT, FRANCES JENKINS. Wonder tales from Goblin hills; from the German and English. 268p il $2 (6s) Longmans
398.2 Folklore—Germany. Fairy tales
30-24472

A collection of German folk tales about goblins, dwarfs, witches, manikins and kobalds, interspersed with poems from the German classics. Under the section entitled Interesting things Miss Olcott supplies a "tiny history" of German wonder tales (including bibliography) and a "tiny dictionary" of German names and places.

Booklist 27:167 D '30

Reviewed by A. L. Shea
Chicago Daily Tribune p11 S 20 '30 50w

St Louis 28:304 D '30

"Here we have not only an excellent collection by an acknowledged authority in the field of folk lore, but one perfectly arranged, classified, and reinforced with a wealth of useful information. Whether the children for whom the stories are intended will profit by these additional features we are in some doubt. Certainly it is to be hoped that with their usual intuition they will skip the preface, whose repeated reference to 'the educational value of this book' would kill the volume outright for them. Once past this hazard, they will find the stories themselves a delight; brief, direct, vigorous,—the real flavor of the folk tale as evident in the simplicity of style as it is in the tales recounted by Jacobs or by the brothers Grimm." Eleanor Shane
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:344 N 15 '30 450w

Reviewed by B. E. Todd
Spec 145:sup899 D 6 '30 50w

"Merely considered as a piece of book-making, this volume leaves much to be desired, but children perhaps will not mind its looking text-bookish and educational; the invaluable young faculty of disregarding inessentials will come to their aid and interest will make the pages seem gay."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p979 N 20 '30 200w

OLCOTT, VIRGINIA. Anton and Trini, children of the Alpland. 152p il 76c Silver 30-1705

A picture of the everyday life of boys and girls in Switzerland—their games, their customs, their schools, their parties—as told thru the adventures of Anton and Trini, who live in the Alpland. For children from eight to ten.

Booklist 26:317 My '30

"Frankly an educational text, this little volume has nevertheless a pleasant story interest and a way of describing cheese making, wood carving, cattle herding, all day picnics, &c., with a zest that will make them interesting to children." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p18 F 16 '30 80w

OLDEN, BALDER. On virgin soil; a novel of exotic Africa; tr. from the German by Lorna Dietz. 316p $2.50 Macaulay
30-5066

The war as it was fought in German East Africa by a grotesque collection of derelicts and planters, serves as a background for the figure of Lieutenant Huessen, commander of the worst band of devils in the whole of that section of the country. Huessen, in contrast to the men whom he commanded, was thoroly fine, but the end of the war found him mad.

Books p12 Mr 16 '30 280w

"The novel is much more than a story or a description of colonial warfare in modern times. It is a colorful presentation of the life of Africa in fresh, arresting and even haunting phrases." R. K. M.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 15 '30 400w

"The author has an admirably objective manner in his treatment of simple souls and does nothing to soften—or, apparently, to heighten—the somewhat acrid atmosphere of existence in the tropics. Gall and bitterness are here, with just a modicum of war's heroic aspects."
+ Nation 130:402 Ap 2 '30 100w

New Repub 63:215 Jl 9 '30 150w

" 'Virgin Soil' is a strong, virile, mercilessly revealing, yet finely poetic evocation of the war in an arena whose vast, unperturbed distances contrast vividly with the terrific sufferings, the fantastic adventures of the handful of white men riding stolen horses and zebras, and supported by blacks who fight loyally for a chance to plunder, the heroic, whisky-reeking defenders of a lost cause." F. H. Martens
+ N Y Evening Post p7s Mr 1 '30 320w

" 'On Virgin Soil' lacks the power and the substance which would make it a notable book. It is light, graceful and stimulating. As a symptom of nostalgia for a lost colony, 'On Virgin Soil' possesses an interest for the German public which will be missing among Anglo-Saxon readers. Even so, it is a valuable reminder of the tenacity, the gayety and courage with which the German colonists held on in the face of overwhelming odds for four weary years of bitter warfare. The epic of the East African war is yet to be written, but here is a good curtain-raiser."
+ — N Y Times p21 My 11 '30 450w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:320 F 19 '30 80w

OLDEN, RUDOLF. Stresemann; tr. by R. T. Clark. 226p il $3 Dutton [10s 6d Methuen]
B or 92 Stresemann, Gustav. Germany—Politics and government
30-18178

The biography of the German statesman and foreign minister who became a world figure with the signing of the Locarno treaties and who brought Germany into the League of nations, is not only an account of his life and character but also a review of German politics during the last quarter of a century.

Booklist 27:63 O '30

"Historical perspective is impossible in a biography appearing so closely upon the death of its subject. But unfortunately this life of the great German statesman is also disappointing in other ways. Stresemann seldom comes alive; he remains buried in a tangle of German politics, and we know little more of him after finishing Herr Olden's book than could easily be learned from the most superficial study of his public statements and a newspaper account of his career." F. R. Dulles

— Bookm 71:557 Ag '30 280w

"The present biography will appeal to those who are genuinely concerned with the evolution and problems of modern Europe. It is no hectic pseudo-psychological product of the modern school, but a homely, serious essay by an author who, without special sources of information, carefully studied the man's career and pondered on the ultimate significance of his policies and accomplishments. There is nothing rhapsodical in his narrative. He sees the man's shortcomings as well as all his sincerity and genuine greatness." W. L. Langer

+ Books p3 Je 29 '30 1000w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 9 '30 750w

"A splendid essay on the career of the late German statesman; a book written with understanding and psychological grasp."

+ Foreign Affairs 8:675 Jl '30 20w

Nation 130:711 Je 18 '30 200w

"Herr Olden has very carefully described the sequence of events which influenced Stresemann's career, or which Stresemann himself influenced; and he gives proper emphasis to the great change in Stresemann's political opinions. Herr Olden cannot, therefore, be charged with lack of conscientiousness. Nevertheless, his continuous philosophical commentary upon facts which explain themselves makes the narrative somewhat confusing." A. C. Bell

+ — Nation and Ath 47:114 Ap 26 '30 700w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p5m Jl 6 '30 250w

Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 155:471 Jl 23 '30 30w

"Herr Olden mercifully omits painful eulogizing; showing an objectivity of treatment which is commendable. The book is of great interest." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 82:11 Ag '30 150w

St Louis 28:245 O '30

"Herr Olden has not produced an easy book to read, it is so crammed with facts, but a careful study will well repay the time taken and add much to the reader's knowledge."

+ Sat R 149:393 Mr 29 '30 1100w

Spec 144:435 Mr 15 '30 250w

Springf'd Republican p6 S 22 '30 700w

Reviewed by J. P. Gavit
Survey 65:168 N 1 '30 230w

Times [London] Lit Sup p199 Mr 13 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Johannes Mattern
Yale R n s 20:206 autumn '30 200w

OLDFIELD, CLAUDE HOUGHTON (CLAUDE HOUGHTON, pseud.). I am Jonathan Scrivener. 382p $1 Simon & Schuster [7s 6d Butterworth]

30-20079

"Jonathan Scrivener appoints as his secretary a man he has never seen; leaves England, and has the secretary installed in his flat. Here come Pauline and Middleton and Denvers and other people; they get to know one another, each finds he does not really know Scrivener—and at the end Scrivener appears. Is he Death, or the Devil, or merely the author of the book?"—New Statesman

Booklist 27:105 N '30

Reviewed by R. S. Josephy
Bookm 72:xxi O '30 200w

"The form of the story allows the author to indulge in much speculation and to put forth any number of theories affecting many and varied sides of life. Many of these are thoughtful, engaging, novel. But it seems a pity that he has chosen to use the stereotyped convention of the mystery plot on which to hang them. And yet it must be admitted that as a mystery alone it holds the interest." F. T. Marsh

+ — Books p2 Ag 3 '30 700w

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 13 '30 500w

"It attempts to be at once mystery, psychological analysis and a descriptive picture of different levels in post-war London society. In none of these aims is it successful. The characters might have been conceived in an off moment by any one of a dozen minor British novelists. Possible interest in them or in the motives actuating the mysterious Jonathan Scrivener who brings them together, is soon lost in pseudo-psychological musings." Eugene Armfield

— New Repub 64:161 S 24 '30 230w

New Statesman 34:782 Mr 22 '30 130w

"The story is ably written, with a good deal of dramatic suspense, and although the action lags at times, the reader is never for a moment inclined to abandon Mr. Houghton in his search for a solution."

+ — N Y Times p6 Ag 3 '30 500w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p4m Ag 31 '30 420w

"The story can be taken as a complex, but emotional, pursuit of a plot. It can also be taken symbolically as man's quest of his own ultimate values. It is strangely metallic, without appeal to the senses. Yet between the lines, you catch bright glints of half uttered truths and luminous conjectures."

+ Outlook 155:586 Ag 13 '30 280w

"The novel is written with competence, though its moralizing is somewhat too obvious, its dialogue rather aims at brilliance than succeeds in obtaining it, and its five major characters never emerge into convincing reality. Nevertheless the narrative is interesting, and the plot fresh and ingenious. An atmosphere of mystery is created, and a sense of the pregnance of events is successfully maintained. The characters, though not entirely successful, at least are something more than lay figures, and their conversation, if not notable for originality, has pith and thoughtfulness." Amy Loveman

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:23 Ag 2 '30 380w

"The story is told in somewhat stilted fashion, and those who like an author to finish off all the ends of a tale will be annoyed: but one remembers this book vividly and speculates about it."

+ — Spec 144:792 My 10 '30 100w

"This is an original novel with an air of experiment. . . The fine dialectic skill which Mr. Houghton showed in his former novel is here displayed to greater advantage; these explorations of character in conversation both hold our interest of themselves and promise a surprising or informative solution. Is each of these characters finding his or her own egotism and self-preoccupation reflected in the many-sided personality of Scrivener, who has but come and gone? Has Scrivener, with uncanny oversight, grouped them together, for his imperious and secret amusement? Mr. Houghton suggests more questions than he can answer."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p276 Mr 27 '30 250w

OLIVEIRA MARTINS, JOAQUIM PEDRO. History of Iberian civilization; tr. by Aubrey F. G. Bell; pref. by S. de Madariaga. 312p $5 (12s 6d) Oxford

946 Spain—Civilization [30-6646]

"The book is an essay by a Portuguese liberal of 1879 to prove that his people have always been democratic and should return again to democracy. . . The main thesis of the book is that the civilization of the peninsula was produced by the fusion of the racial characteristics of a people of African origin (an assumption concerning which he had doubts), and Indo-European ideas of political organization and culture, imposed chiefly by the Romans. Invaders from Africa, Carthaginian and Moorish, merely

OLIVEIRA MARTINS, J. P.—Continued
strengthened the original social traits: conquerors from Europe, Roman and German, brought the ideas which united the people into a state. The ideas most discussed are individualism, and mysticism."—Am Hist R

"This translation of a book which was first published in 1879 has little of value for the historical student." F. Duncalf
— Am Hist R 36:183 O '30 300w

"He is as essentially sound and readable today as ever. Half a century has passed and he is not seriously dated." V. S. P.
+ Christian Science Monitor p10 Mr 29 '30 600w

"Both the translator and the distinguished scholar who writes the preface agree that Senhor Martins is far from the scientific historian that he believes himself to be. Nevertheless, he writes so well and with such fertility of ideas that his book, with all its exaggerations, is one of the most interesting historical productions of this century."
+ Nation 131:103 Jl 23 '30 150w

"Fifty years have passed since Martins' fervent and stimulating interpretation of Iberian history first appeared in Lisbon; and it is a long time to wait for a translation of a work of such value, for his book has not been superseded."
+ New Statesman 34:846 Ap 5 '30 1000w

Reviewed by Dino Ferrari
N Y Times p11 Ag 31 '30 850w

"This is the best study of the Iberian fact which has ever been made, for Oliveira Martins has just those qualities of controlled passion and brilliant intuition which are recognized today as the most essential to the historian, and which are incidentally the peculiar possession of the Iberian genius."
+ Spec 144:sup488 Mr 22 '30 700w
Times [London] Lit Sup p426 My 22 '30 750w

OLIVER, BASIL. Cottages of England; a review of their types and features from the 16th to the 18th centuries; with a foreword by Stanley Baldwin. 91p il $7.50 Scribner [21s Batsford]

728 Architecture, Domestic. Architecture—England 30-26175

"This beautiful book is the outcome of a movement in England, initiated by the Royal Society of Arts for the preservation and protection of beautiful old cottages. Mr. Oliver has restricted its scope, because of the wealth of material at hand, to England alone and to cottages only, or houses of purely cottage type. Its chief attraction and interest for American readers are the full-page illustrations that have been beautifully reproduced from what must have been strikingly fine photographs of cottages and hamlets representative of the centuries included. There are almost a hundred of these plates, which are supplemented by many fine drawings in the text of details and features. Mr. Oliver describes them all with appreciation, backgrounding and diversifying his text with brief mention of historical or social connections and extracts from old and modern authors."—N Y Times

Booklist 26:228 Mr '30
Boston Transcript p3 F 21 '30 400w

"The examples are scheduled, very soundly, under their dominant material, as stone built, timber framed, with cob and other synthetic fillings, and with tile, slate, or wood covering, and as brick built and flint built. The connection between text and illustration is admirably maintained throughout the book, several line drawings by Mr. Oliver and others helping to make the details of construction clear."
+ New Statesman 34:sup xiv D 7 '29 800w
+ N Y Times p50 D 8 '29 220w

"His exposition of the nature of this inheritance is both comprehensive and readable, if the reader is not one to be frightened by a technical expression here and there. The ninety-nine superb plates are alone worth the price."
+ Spec 144:247 F 15 '30 150w

"As Mr. Baldwin says in his foreword, the book with its illustrations demonstrates 'more competently than any amount of propaganda ever could the vigour of design, and suitability for their purpose and setting, of the types of old cottages still to be found in all parts of the country.' There is not a trace of merely sentimental pleading in the book."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1083 D 19 '29 320w

OLIVER, GEORGE. See Onions, O., pseud.

OLIVER, JOHN RATHBONE. Foursquare; the story of a fourfold life. 305p $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan

B or 92 Physicians—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. Insanity. Medical jurisprudence 29-24319

Dr Oliver is warden of Alumni memorial hall of Johns Hopkins university, professor of the history of medicine in the University of Maryland, a practicing psychiatrist, an Anglican priest, and a medical officer in the courts of Baltimore. This autobiography describes in turn the four-fold activities of his life: his experiences with criminals and murderers in the courts and prisons; his patients in his psychiatric practice; his academic life; and his religious activities.

Booklist 26:233 Mr '30

"The book is really a notable contribution to the humanistic point of view of life. Every lawyer and every judge, every doctor and every priest could read it to advantage. Oliver tells in an inimitable way, and most simply, stories of the lives that he has touched intimately in his several capacities; and no human story is ever uninteresting or even dull. It is an unusual book by an unusual man." W. A. White, M.D.
+ Books p37 D 1 '29 470w

"Dr. Oliver's autobiography is a book for the personal shelf; one to rub shoulders with the other volumes which form a part of the owner's mind as truly as do the gray and white nerve structures beneath his hair." W. H. C.
+ Boston Transcript p3 D 14 '29 500w

Reviewed by W. E. Garrison
Christian Century 47:869 Jl 9 '30 500w

"An absorbing book showing how a man can be as successful in four capacities as in one and can thereby infinitely enrich his own life and increase his value both to himself and to the community. Would that we had many more such 'foursquare' men!" Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p12m D 21 '29 350w

"With his religious experience of which he writes in his last half-dozen chapters, Dr. Oliver deals sparingly and with delicacy, but none the less he creates a poignant impression of years of uncertainty and spiritual loneliness, ending at last in the content and happiness of priestly ministrations."
+ N Y Times p9 D 22 '29 600w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:21 Mr '30
St Louis 28:52 F '30

"The very defects of Dr. Oliver's superqualities only serve to add to the fascination of his book. This man is one of the remarkable figures of our time. His nature is rich, his life abundant, his sympathies wide and full, his love of men and human things a native grace of his pure spirit. We hope that he has many books still to write, and that one of them will be a biography of his inner, personal life, to match this, the biography of his outer professional life." J. H. Holmes
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1087 My 31 '30 1620w
Springf'd Republican p7e F 23 '30 1000w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1076 D 18 '30 1100w
Wis Lib Bul 26:105 Mr '30

OLIVER, JOHN RATHBONE. Rock and sand. 524p $2.50 Macmillan

30-25904

Having discovered a little French-Canadian summering place called Cap à l'Ours, Colonel and Mrs Randolph (who is a social climber) and their children locate there and make friends among the English and Canadian residents. Thruout, the author contrasts the culture, the ambitions and religious convictions of the Americans with their French Catholic acquaintances, at the expense of the former.

" 'Rock and Sand' as a tract comes off rather badly. Energy and worldliness conspire in the case of all the Canadian and American principals but one to make sand appear to have been as firm a foundation as rock. The novel is by no means dull. In style and presentation it is nearer to Charles Kingsley or Charles Reade than to present modes. But Mr. Oliver knows so well how to tell a melodramatic story and, in spite of a gloss and frame of formal sentimentality which he gives them in this book, he knows people so well that the book is not at all the lame tract it might seem to be from the account given. It is often very shrewd, very quietly ironical, generally humane and wise in its middle register." E. T. Booth

+ — Books p14 N 23 '30 380w

Boston Transcript p3 D 20 '30 350w

"Oliver knows the Catholic mood, and he understands the forces which operate deep within human personality, but he fails to understand the vital, creative, consecrated spirit which is a part of real Protestantism. From a literary standpoint, 'Rock and Sand' is not as successful as the other books its author has written. The plot tends to meander, and in places it plods along laboriously. Characterization is good, but the nature description lacks vividness. But when Oliver enters the door of the Catholic sanctuary, he writes with confidence and power." Cornelius Muilenburg

+ — Christian Century 48:20 Ja 7 '31 550w

N Y Evening Post p4d N 1 '30 80w

" 'Rock and Sand' is not very well constructed, but though most of its characters seem exponents of a point of view rather than living people, the picture of the little French-Canadian community, its sufferings during the long Winter months and its attitude toward the 'étrangers' who bring prosperity is quite interesting."

+ — N Y Times p32 D 7 '30 320w

"The author's wide experience of psychology permits him to use a variety of characters and to present them fully. But the plot of the novel is a pretty clumsy affair, and the lessons are so heavily underlined as to repel even the most sympathetic reader." F. L. R.

— Outlook 156:311 O 22 '30 100w

OLIVER, WADE WRIGHT. Stalkers of pestilence; the story of man's ideas of infection; introd. by Theobald Smith. 251p il $3 Hoeber

610.9 Medicine—History. Infection and Infectious diseases 30-22236

"Mr. Oliver, who is Professor of Bacteriology in Long Island College Hospital, tells in this book the story of man's bitter struggle with disease and of his slow but steady growth in knowledge of its nature and of how best to battle with it."—N Y Times

"The book is well written, well documented, abundantly and well illustrated, and correct as to facts; but we consider the name misleading. The most notable omissions, considering the title, are of those who have stalked pestilences from the administrative standpoint, and one can hardly excuse the failure to maintain Villemin and his epochal studies on tuberculosis." M. P. Ravenel

+ — Am J Pub Health 20:1259 N '30 250w

"The book is filled with condensed information concerning the long story that it tells in short space and should interest not only the medical student but also the intelligent general reader for whom the theme is attractive."

+ N Y Times p17 Ag 31 '30 280w

"Oliver's book is well written and is a true scientific contribution to the history of medicine, at the same time being sufficiently popular in type to appeal to the average reader. Oliver also has given careful attention to references in the literature. His book, which has already appeared in parts in the American Journal of Surgery for 1929, can be most highly recommended."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:275 O 25 '30 80w

OLIVIER, EDITH. Triumphant footman. 303p $2.50 Viking press

30-21168

A few years after Browning discovered that "square old yellow book" there lived in Florence a kindly, uncomplaining English captain and his semi-invalid wife. Early in life "poor Maryanne" had decided on her most becoming rôle: she would be delicate; and having made up her mind nothing could persuade her to change her course. This absurd couple possessed a delightfully clever and invaluable footman upon whom Fate smiled and even sometimes laughed aloud. After the death of his patrons the intrepid Alphonse galloped from adventure to adventure and acquired wealth, a title, and a charming bride.

Booklist 27:105 N '30

"Alphonse Biskin is hazily sketched. Because of his shadowy qualities, the story is not so amusing as it should be. The method is too objective, and the scenes are frequently flattened by narrative when action and dialogue would sharpen the effect. A more careful delineation of Alphonse himself would heighten the reader's interest in the situations he produces. The value of the novel, therefore, is distinctly more cinematic than literary. On the screen its presentation would be highly diverting." E. R. Richardson

— + Bookm 71:550 Ag '30 450w

"These are gay and innocent adventures so delicately composed that to try to retell them would rob the reader of his fun. The whole is preposterous, of course, deliciously so. Miss Olivier tells a tale for the joy of the telling. 'The Triumphant Footman' is of the genre of Sylvia Townsend Warner's stories, or the earlier books of David Garnett." Mary Ross

+ Books p4 Jl 20 '30 530w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 20 '30 650w

"Alphonse is a familiar and fruitful creature of comedy; but, after the first delightful episode in Florence, when one has learned the technique of his quick-change antics, he ceases to hold interest because he is merely repeating himself. Once she has tangled him in his own intrigue, Miss Olivier's ingenuity and invention seem to have failed her, and she brings the episode to an abrupt close. Her real achievement is Mrs. Lemaur, a fidgety malade imaginaire, in whose service Alphonse languishes. Unfortunately this excellent woman does not survive the author's satire for more than half of the book, and one's interest vanishes with her. Miss Olivier writes wittily." V. S. P.

— + Christian Science Monitor p13 My 24 '30 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p149 D '30

New Statesman 34:741 Mr 15 '30 400w

"Miss Olivier, rather than overindicate her mots and situations, has allowed some of them to fall a little flat. Several of her inventions are excellent, and a few plainly forced. It is clear that a slightly more urbane continuity in the writing might have surfaced these latter with the valid gloss of the convention." Vincent McHugh

+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 26 '30 550w

OLIVIER, EDITH—Continued

"Miss Olivier has, in 'The Triumphant Footman,' made an attempt at humor that is not very humorous and an attempt at fantastic adventure that is seldom better than boring. In spite of this, she has created one character, not her main one, which is remarkable and which redeems the book."

— + N Y Times p6 Ag 17 '30 500w

"The charming tomfoolery of this story will keep you fascinated and amused from the first page to the last. Its deft, precise prose will at once soothe and tickle you. Light as gossamer, it is none the less firm and careful in construction, and lit by quick, sparkling character sketches and by scenes of delicate tenderness. In The Triumphant Footman the art of light fiction is perfectly practiced, originality is matched with skill, and wisdom, itself, masquerades in mask and domino." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:505 Jl 30 '30 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

"This is a light and delicate story, well-written, and stylish without being modish. The matter is delicate as well as the manner, and the book is graced by a feeling in the author for amusing situations. Alphonse, the footman, moves through the pages whether with a false beard, a real beard or no beard at all, with equal conviction, romance and good manners, and the reality of the characters is never called in question because of one's pleasure in encountering their lightly fantastical selves."

+ Sat R 149:428 Ap 5 '30 100w

"The fertility of Miss Olivier's fancy, the choice of her incident, and the rollicking nature of her complications were a surprise to us, doubly so because they were hers and because they seemed to us of a type more natural to the masculine novelist than to the feminine. It is rarely that the woman writer concerns herself with picaresque episode, and certainly rarely that she handles it with deftness and ease. But 'The Triumphant Footman' wears its roguery with no sense of unfitness, and proceeds through its entanglements with most satisfactory cleverness. It is an amusing book, an ingenious book, and a delightfully gay book." Amy Loveman

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1203 Jl 19 '30 650w

"In Mrs. Lemaur, that grotesquely crinkled fake invalid, Miss Olivier had created a wonderful mark for her satire; in fact, after the exquisite fooling of the first Florentine episode, I would willingly have sacrificed the too triumphant Alphonse for his mistress." V. S. Pritchett

— + Spec 144:445 Mr 15 '30 200w

"Miss Edith Olivier tells an agreeable story. She calls it a farcical fable; and it is pleasant to find that the quiet and precise humour which was incidental in her earlier novels has here been quickened into gaiety, and has taken charge of the whole book. Miss Olivier's story is admirably told, with a vigorous and yet delicate absurdity."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p294 Ap 3 '30 400w

OLNEY, DOROTHY (MRS JULIAN OLNEY), and OLNEY, JULIAN. Home-owner's manual. 240p il $2.50 Century

643 Dwellings 30-9852

"This book takes the house after it has been built and carries it on from that point through the various processes essential to turn it into a home. It will tell you what you want to know about both exteriors and interiors, from matching wallpapers to garden trellises."—Survey

Booklist 26:346 Je '30
J Home Econ 22:1017 D '30 30w
N Y New Tech Bks 15:16 Ap '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:71 O '30
Pratt p19 autumn '30
Survey 64:448 Ag 15 '30 50w

OLRIK, AXEL. Viking civilization; rev. after ² the author's death by Hans Ellekilde [tr. by Jacob Wittmer Hartmann and Hanna Astrup Larsen]. (Scandinavian classics) 246p il $3.50 Am.-Scandinavian foundation; Norton

948.01 Civilization, Scandinavian. Vikings 30-30010

A clear and concise portrayal of the rise and growth of the Viking age in Norse history. Mr Olrik, a distinguished Danish scholar, discusses the development of Viking myths and legends, romantic sagas and art. Two chapters are given to Iceland and its sagas and Icelandic scholars. A final chapter takes up the era of the ballads.

Booklist 27:200 Ja '31

"This is not a detailed history, but a clear and scholarly interpretation of early Norse culture from the beginning to the height of its influence in the Middle Ages. Of particular interest are the last five chapters dealing with the literary evolution—the growth of saga and ballad from the alliterative poetry of the ancient skalds." R. C. B. B.

+ N Y Evening Post p4d Ja 3 '31 150w
N Y Times p14 N 16 '30 650w

OMAN, CAROLA. See Lenanton, C. M. A.

OMAN, SIR CHARLES WILLIAM CHADWICK. Studies in the Napoleonic wars. 284p $3 Scribner [8s 6d Methuen]

940.27 Military history, Modern. Europe—History—1789-1815. Europe—History, Military 30-20627

The author includes in these studies four stories of the Secret service during the Napoleonic wars; a description of the battle of Maida in Italy, when the superiority of the British line over the massed columns of the French was demonstrated; an account of Napoleon's cavalry; a paper in defense of military history; and a study of the Duke of Wellington as prime minister, giving the reasons for his failure in politics.

Booklist 27:22 S '30

"The strictly military studies are excellent, particularly 'Column and Line in the Peninsula.' The four Tales of the Secret Service are capital yarns, better than Phillips Oppenheim's. Two of them, at least, have been used as a basis for historical romances. The discussion of Wellington as Prime Minister is illuminating. The weak spots are the philosophical essays."

+ — Books p10 Je 29 '30 250w
Boston Transcript p1 Jl 19 '30 380w
N Y Times p17 Jl 20 '30 520w
St Louis 28:219 S '30

O'NEILL, ROSE CECIL. Goblin woman; with drawings by the author. 345p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

30-32843

Romance strangely transcends the sophisticated realism of a suburban New England town when Helga (the Goblin woman) comes to live at River House. Miss O'Neill's Helga is a personification of innocence and emotional sincerity in a social group that is anything but innocent or sincere. Yet Windsor is attracted by Helga's beauty, and Gullia, his mistress, by the beauty of her mind and character. Behind all this, however, lies the sordid secret of Helga's past.

"An amazing book. At its best, it is full of wild, poetic extravagances; at its worst, it is coy and fluttery; and its happy mean is subtle, witty prose that commends itself to reading aloud in snatches or to lavish quotation. Miss O'Neill is a woman of ample imagination who writes with that quality of eloquent Irish abandon which discounts in advance the fear of being, occasionally, ridiculous." F. H. Britten

+ — Books p7 N 9 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p2 N 29 '30 250w

"Here is a book for painters; a book for all lovers of fine untrameled usages of the English language—even a book for all who love a Meredithian (but far lighter) stilting of that same language to say something that might not otherwise be said. It is all here; it is very apparent, too, that Miss O'Neill's ancestors sang as they pursued their goblins. . . She has filled some early American decanters with Celtic mead of her own making, and whoso can drink so stoutly is invited to share the opulent, the extravagant brew made on a smoky fire of God knows what mingled peat . . . stirred with a stolen witch's broom cooled—and rendered fiery, too—in some dim cavern, or cairn, or open heath of Cuchulain and Dirdre." Donald Corley

+ N Y Evening Post p4d D 13 '30 600w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 350w

ONIONS, OLIVER, pseud. (GEORGE OLIVER). Open secret. 321p $2.50 Houghton [7s 6d Heinemann]
30-30573

Having fallen desperately in love with Bettine Frühling, Halsey Vibart finds himself enmeshed in the intrigues and plots of international secret service—for Bettine is a spy by profession. As an under-current to this main interest of the story runs the rather pathetic love affair of Clarry Moss and Lottie Smith, a laundress.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 Mr 1 '30

Bookm 72:xxiv D '30 100w

"The Open Secret has a number of loose strings, and though they all get neatly tied together in the end, they do not hold the parcel very tightly. . . If the contents of the parcel are unimportant, why should one bother about the quality of the string that ties it up? The characters are not hewn out of their surroundings, nor even built up with scenery round them: they just happen, but not convincingly."

— New Statesman 36:240 N 29 '30 350w

"Its major plot is involved with an elaborate mystery of which the reader can never make head or tail and which the author himself suddenly abandons altogether in the last pages of his book. Otherwise, the novel is genuinely imaginative and droll and often fascinating. 'The Open Secret' is excellent entertainment." Edwin Seaver

+ — N Y Evening Post p6d N 15 '30 80w

"The book, as it is written, is a disappointing picayunish pantomine, at times almost a burlesque of its own seemingly serious intentions. But there is a rough-and-ready entertainment in random scenes; the characters are sometimes fascinating, and motivated by human desires rather than by mysterious designs of secret societies; and the author reveals intelligence and insight in dealing with some of his incidents."

— + N Y Times p28 N 30 '30 450w

N Y World p3e D 21 '30 220w

"The Open Secret is still a secret to this reviewer, who while acknowledging the finesse of the writing and the excellent management of the characters, still feels that it is not his fault that he never got the essential clue which would have let him see specifically what it was all about." W. R. Brooks

— + Outlook 156:430 N 12 '30 120w

"Here is a book a man might read, sprawled anywhere, with a pipe in his mouth. Yet it is done with a conscience. There is not a slovenly line in it. And the characters are not 'flat.' They are distinctly real, and they develop. The few tantalizing love scenes are quite charmingly done and leave no brown aftertaste. Modern and sophisticated as the book is, there is not a spot of mildew in it, or decadence."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:492 D 27 '30 450w

"His description and dialogue are witty and well observed, but unfortunately all is lost upon the rather wooden characters, stock types which cannot gain our sympathy. At the same time, though it cannot be treated as a serious work, the story is rather better than the ordinary thriller."

+ — Spec 145:952 D 13 '30 80w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 150w

"In this new novel of his he comes before us as a writer with a serious purpose, one who sees the indications of a universal struggle between the principles of Fascism and Bolshevism, already working furiously in the political vat. On that aspect of his novel, however, we need not comment here. But we must be duly grateful to him for his vividly seen and caustically described excerpts from modern reality."

Times [London] Lit Sup p938 N 13 '30 500w

OPPENHEIM, EDWARD PHILLIPS. Lion and ^{2} the lamb. 294p $2 Little [7s 6d Hodder] 30-20816

"The adventures of David, Lord Newberry, who was betrayed by the toadlike Tottie Green and his gang, and went out for revenge without benefit of police."—Outlook

"To say that this latest opus of the prolific Englishman is a whopping good story is, of course, superfluous. Nothing Oppenheim ever wrote, probably, was not a good story. What will interest connoisseurs is the fact that here they will have the opportunity to become acquainted with the nefarious activities of a wholly new Oppenheim gang, the Lions, under the leadership of one of the most engagingly ugly criminals in fiction."

+ Books p13 Ag 24 '30 400w

"The story is fascinating, is crammed full of action, and is not too improbable."

+ N Y Times p24 S 14 '30 300w

"This is a good one." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 155:678 Ag 27 '30 50w

Times [London] Lit Sup p701 S 4 '30 200w

OPPENHEIM, EDWARD PHILLIPS. Million pound deposit. 316p $2 Little [7s 6d Hodder]
30-2052

A secret formula for making artificial silk has been stolen. Lord Dutley, a member of London's higher society, whose fortune depends on the lost formula, determines to retrieve that important document. Altho his friends regard Lord Dutley as a rather soft-headed individual, he succeeds in his quest.

Booklist 26:235 Mr '30

"Mr. Oppenheim writes as brilliantly as ever, mixing the world of fashionable London and the complex realm of modern industry with his accustomed mastery."

Bookm 71:xxx Mr '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p15 F 2 '30 120w

N Y Times p23 Mr 9 '30 130w

N Y World p11m F 9 '30 200w

"The story is plausible, easily written, and often exciting." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:109 Ja 15 '30 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p301 Ap 3 '30 100w

OPPENHEIM, EDWARD PHILLIPS. Slane's ^{2} long shots. 282p $2 Little [3s 6d Hodder]

A series of episodes, or stories, in which Sir Jasper Slane, gentleman detective, finds the solution to various mysteries by employing his "long shot" methods of criminal investigation.

"This latest Oppenheim creation will afford much pleasure."

+ Bookm 72:xxvi N '30 50w

"First class Oppenheim." Will Cuppy

+ Books p10 D 21 '30 300w

"Told in the easy, flowing, thoroughly plausible manner of Mr. Oppenheim, the yarns make interesting reading." Bruce Rae

+ N Y Times p16 D 28 '30 220w

OPPENHEIM, EDWARD PHILLIPS. What happened to Forester. 260p $2 Little [3s 6d Hodder]

30-12740

Ten short stories with themes of adventure, mystery or romance.

Booklist 26:399 Jl '30

Bookm 71:xx Je '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 My 11 '30 120w

Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p8m My 24 '30 50w

"On the whole, those who like Mr. Oppenheim at his best—in such stories as 'The Great Impersonation'—will be disappointed in this book."

— N Y Times p9 Je 22 '30 200w

"A series of adventures, each, despite awkward situations and a spice of danger, a matter for generous mirth."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p62 Ja 23 '30 220w

ORAGE, ALFRED RICHARD. Art of reading. 349p $2.50 Farrar

804 Books and reading. Literature 30-8513

Short critical essays covering a wide range of literary interest which have been contributed by the author, a teacher and critic, to various journals over a period of years.

Reviewed by C. A. Smart
Books p10 My 18 '30 850w

"There are some splendid things, of much clarity and judgment, in his remarks on mysticism when he is dealing with Maeterlinck and, incidentally, with Richard Jefferies. In his insistence on common sense as the starting point in a sane philosophy Mr. Orage comes near to home, and we feel that here is in some degree a fellow-thinker with M. Jacques Maritain."

+ Cath World 131:509 Jl '30 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '30

"A. R. Orage has a vast reputation for profundity, and indeed is more than a literary critic in the eyes of his intimates: he is a sage. But I fail to see what it is that so interests our Columbuses of the spirit, for I can find nothing in the man except an Englishman who happens to be a fairly interesting critic. This latest book of his is made up of selected excerpts from literary notes originally printed in the New Age. It is amusingly miscellaneous, and whoever tried to get some order into the chaos did not do a very good job. In fact the book would have been just as interesting if it had not been marked off into sections, and more interesting if the labor so expended had gone into dating the excerpted passages." C. H. Grattan

— Nation 130:684 Je 11 '30 970w

"Those who believe that they thirst for the strong waters of the modern mind are here advised that they can drink in 'The Art of Reading' for many a year before they shall have absorbed all its virtues. What is more, to drink there is to enjoy such English as one will read through stacks and stacks of contemporary books and periodicals and not find. Not ornate English, but English that is potent, sparkling, clear; a style bright with intellectual vivacity." G. B. Munson

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 29 '30 750w

"Mr. Orage is a critic endowed with insight and originality; he expresses himself trenchantly and at times devastatingly. Unfortunately, his book is made up of a mere miscellany of refurbished short articles and reviews." S. A. Coblentz

+ — N Y Times p16 My 18 '30 300w

"Orage is an original and provocative critic and has always been an influential one. His range of interest is wide and the subjects of these papers are as varied as books and writers are. . . Any one who enjoys speculating about what he reads and why he reads it will find Orage's book stimulating."

+ Outlook 154:545 Ap 2 '30 240w

St Louis 28:215 S '30

"It is journalism, but of a distinguished kind. And it is excellent criticism, free from provincialism either geographical or intellectual." James Orrick

+ Sat R of Lit 7:210 O 11 '30 250w

ORAGE, ALFRED RICHARD, ed. Psychological exercises. 68p $1.25 Farrar

151.2 Mental discipline. Mnemonics

30-28328

A collection of mental tests of which the editor says "The exercises collected in the present volume are designed to supplement the deficiencies of the existing tentative methods. They are neither intelligence tests, nor simply puzzles offered to ingenuity; but first and chiefly, practical exercises in that conscious and deliberate manipulation of our mental resources which alone is entitled to be called the real Art of Thinking." (Pref.)

"This book ends a mystery in none too impressive a fashion. It reveals just what Mr. Orage's initiates meant when they spoke of his 'psychological exercises.' For a long time those who have stood apart from the Orage furor have imagined that these were something pretty impressive, but now anyone can consult this book and find that they are no more remarkable than cross-word puzzles, anagrams, and other parlor games that involve a certain literacy. . . One can imagine idle people having some good fun with Mr. Orage's exercises, but they won't, one fears, become much wiser in consequence."

— Nation 131:449 O 22 '30 230w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p14 S 26 '30 280w

ORCUTT, WILLIAM DANA. Magic of the book; more reminiscences and reflections of a bookman. 314p $5 Little

655 Books. Type and type-founding. Printing 30-27743

"With a long career as a practical bookmaker behind him, Mr. Orcutt writes not for his fellow professionals or for the initiated amateurs of typography but for the larger public. He has shared with this public the record of his own happy journeying through the world of books and their makers. We find him writing of the early Colonial printers who preceded him at the Cambridge University Press, of the attempts which are being made to 'transform the Vatican Library from "a prison house of books" into the most accessible as well as the most valuable literary institution in Europe,' of 'the language of type' as it speaks through the letters cut by the great designers, of his work with the publicity department of the Red Cross during the war, of the contribution of Sweynheym and Pannartz to the history of printing, of the great Giambattista Bodoni whose type was an offense to the eyes of William Morris, and of the magnificent book collections which have been gathered together by such men as Morgan and Huntington."—Books

Booklist 27:193 Ja '31

"It is, in a way, a patchwork quilt of a volume, but each one of the patches, whatever the total effect of their arrangement, bears testimony to the maker's absorbing passion. And if some of us find Mr. Orcutt's approach to typography excessively sentimental and his style too frequently exclamatory we should remember that he must excite and persuade before he can instruct the audience that he has chosen to address." B. R. Redman

+ — Books p27 N 2 '30 500w

"He imparts information automatically, as it were, but he does not follow the school-book style. He writes clearly, gracefully, and with the fervor of a man who is so deeply versed in his subject that his enthusiasm is carried along to the reader. 'The Magic of the Book' is itself an example of fine modern book making. It has been made after the author's own design, under his personal supervision. It is composed in the beautiful Baskerville type, imported especially for this edition, and the design of the cover is a fine adaptation of the work of Roger Payne, the famous old bookbinder. It is a book which will give pleasure alike to the general lover of books and the specialist."

+ Boston Transcript p1 O 25 '30 1250w

Reviewed by G. H. Doane
Library Q 1:112 Ja '31 860w

Springf'd Republican p12 O 23 '30 280w

O'REILEY, MRS MARGARET A. Travel talk. 413p il $3.50 Meador

914 Europe—Description and travel. Italy—Description and travel 30-1945

This volume of travel impressions based on letters which the author wrote to friends at home while she was on a four years' tour of western Europe provides the historical background of the places visited. More than half the book is given over to Italy.

"This is no ordinary volume, and while it is really a detailed description of many places the writer has visited in five countries of Europe, it is also a highly interesting history placed before the reader in interesting form. Anyone who approaches the book as a student of history is sure to find it fascinating. . . Mrs O'Reiley has a rare gift for description, and she sees many things with the eye of a real artist." J. H. W.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 29 '30 400w

"An excellent book for anyone, especially a Catholic, to read before starting on a tour in Europe."

+ Cath World 131:510 Jl '30 100w

"The traveler who wants to inform himself on the historical background of the places included will find it a useful and handy historical guide and reference book."

+ N Y Times p12 My 4 '30 300w

ORLIAC, JEHANNE D'. Moon mistress, Diane
2 de Poitiers, grant' sénéchalle de Normandy; tr. by F. M. Atkinson. 318p il $3.50 Lippincott

B or 92 Poitiers, Diane dc, duchess of Valentinois 30-31226

A somewhat rhapsodized biography of Diane de Poitiers, mistress of Henri II, king of France. Mlle d'Orliac portrays her as a great and beautiful and noble lady, who won and held the love of a man nineteen years younger than herself. Diane, according to this biographer, is not to be reckoned among the courtesans of history, since she loved faithfully and but once.

"The great Diane, mistress of Henri II of France, has found another champion. Mlle. D'Orliac for the most part avoids the sentimentality and luridness that mark so many books of this type, but her infatuation is complete. Barring those passages of extolling rhetoric, the book is a straightforward story of a fascinating woman and the events she influenced so strongly."

+ — Bookm 72:vi N '30 50w

"Diane lived during the dramatic days of Rabelais and Calvin, Cellini and Brantôme, Ronsard and Marot, but neither the strong elan of that generation, nor the Diane-Catherine nuanceful hatred, nor the political violence of the age has been grasped by Mlle d'Orliac. Mr. Atkinson's version is very good, but there is no excuse for leaving so many poems in the original French." Angel Flores

— Books p5 D 21 '30 480w

"Although Mlle. d'Orliac is not lacking in vigor and a certain eloquence, her style, perhaps by fault of the translator, is often turgid and clumsy."

— + N Y Times p37 N 16 '30 200w

ORMSBEE, THOMAS HAMILTON. Early American furniture makers; a social and biographical study. 183p il $3.50 Crowell

749 Furniture. Cabinet-makers 30-24153

This volume is concerned not so much with furniture types as with the history of early American furniture and the men who made it. Two chapters are given to Duncan Phyfe and his contemporaries, a chapter to Yankee clockmakers, and one to the two politicians who likewise served their apprenticeship to the bench—Stephen A. Douglas and Boss Tweed. There are 67 full-page plates and chronological lists of American furniture makers and clock makers.

Booklist 27:147 D '30

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton
Books p20 N 2 '30 480w

J Home Econ 22:1016 D '30 100w

N Y Times p18 Ja 4 '31 230w

"Neither a collectors' manual nor an art commentary, strictly speaking, yet it gives valuable information to collectors and its illustrations clear up many points relating to the artistic elements in the American. furniture products of the 18th and 19th centuries." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 82:16 D '30 120w

"A study of the sixty or more half-tone plates will be an inspiration to any teacher who is longing for examples of design—antique as well as beautiful. And the end papers, which so often sell a book—upon these end papers is printed a chart in which, in parallel columns, are given events in American history from 1600 to 1860; Period Furniture in England; Chief Known American Cabinet Makers and the Years they Worked. A good book."

+ School Arts M 30:xii N '30 250w

ORPEN, SIR WILLIAM, ed. Outline of art. 1v ed 677p il $4.50 Putnam [8s 6d Newnes]

759 Painting—History

Presents the history of European painting from the thirteenth century to the present day, largely by means of the biographies of the painters and the three hundred photographic reproductions of famous works of art. The book was formerly available in two volumes only. There are no colored illustrations in this edition.

Booklist 27:117 N '30

"The text and the notes beneath the illustrations are too biographical, gossipy and emotional to justify the title, but the book is valuable and full of information for those who will never be called upon to handle a brush."

+ — Bookm 71:xxiii Ag '30 50w

"It bears the stamp on every page of the academic mind, with its reverence for popular, accepted art in the present and the traditional critical judgments of the past. There is, thus, a lack of originality, both in choosing the subjects and in what is said about them, but in a work which is meant to be elementary and encyclopedic this is the safest approach. The material is interestingly handled and accurate enough for its purposes. The judgments of posterity are in every case taken at their face value, and thus we find nearly every picture labeled as 'most famous,' 'most wonderful,' 'most beautiful,' and the like."

N Y Times p10 Ag 10 '30 200w

"The book makes no pretence of completeness or authority, and cannot be seriously considered as a history of painting; but in spirited popular style it entertainingly sets forth the more interesting facts of the painters' lives and indicates the character of their work. The analysis of particular canvases, in connection with the illustrations, is often done so as to make the reader aware of the formal scheme of a picture as well as its more obvious qualities. In some of the chapters, especially those on recent painting, the comment has critical value, but the approach everywhere is elementary. And the work is very British."

ORPEN, WILLIAM, ed.—Continued
+ Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 15 '30 250w

ORTON, MRS HELEN (FULLER). Queenie; the story of a cow. 119p $1.25 Stokes
29-15567

"Queenie was the pet of Ted and his cousin Nancy, and she received her name because she was queen of the farm. When she was separated from her calf, the Princess, Queenie walked six miles to find her, and when the Princess caught her foot in the railroad tracks, Queenie helped to save her."—Springf'd Republican

Cleveland Open Shelf p160 D '29

"'Queenie,' being realistic, and not at all quaint, is a good oatmeal tale, and the episode of the calf stuck on the railroad track is like something real set down, not something written up." Ernestine Evans
+ N Y Times p37 O 27 '29 50w

"Mrs. Orton has the child's point of view, and the story of Queenie the supercow will interest little children who enjoy being read to or who are beginning to read to themselves. It is a pleasant, simple tale, and will bring to urban children some glimpse of the charm of life on a farm."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:431 N 16 '29 160w
Springf'd Republican p7e D 15 '29 80w
Wis Lib Bul 25:325 O '29

OSBORNE, CLIFFORD HAZELDINE. Religion of John Burroughs. 105p $1.25 Houghton

B or 92 Burroughs, John 30-20488

A study of the evolution of John Burroughs's stand on religion, showing the changes in his attitude from youth and early manhood to later years. The author illustrates his conclusions with copious quotations from the published works of Burroughs.

"This book performs a real service in analyzing the religious experience of a great mind and a great soul, and it materially helps us to understand the great naturalist." R. K. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 27 '30 650w
Reviewed by M. H. Moore
Int J Ethics 41:278 Ja '31 180w
N Y Times p19 Ag 17 '30 380w
St Louis 28:273 N '30

OSBURN, ARTHUR CARR. Must England lose India? the nemesis of empire. 287p $2.75 (7s 6d) Knopf

915.4 India—Politics and government. Great Britain—Colonies. India—Social conditions [30-29433]

"Lieut.-Colonel Osburn asserts or implies that Britain need not lose India, but will almost certainly do so if the English public schools are not speedily abolished and so prevented from sending their products out to the East. This is the simple thesis of a volume that is little more than a railing accusation against the system which, according to the author, is destroying the British name and power by applying the school-prefect mind to the governing of India. . . He is not greatly concerned with the larger matters of reconstruction in India, although he would like to see taxation revised, the money-lender put in his proper place, and birth control encouraged. He offers a list of minor reforms, with the purpose of staving off the Indian demand for independence."—New Statesman

"This book, although heatedly argued and poorly written, presents an important side of the present situation, which cannot be grasped by the fast-traveling tourist who has never seen the way of an Englishman with an Indian, as Colonel Osburn describes it." W. N. Brown
— + Books p4 Ag 10 '30 1200w
Boston Transcript p3 S 10 '30 900w

"This is a terrible book—terrible in its description of conditions in India, more terrible still in its indictment of England. Writing, it would seem, in hot haste under the urge of righteous wrath, with little attention to style, not much to order, and with a good deal of repetition, Colonel Osburn literally flays alive the typical Englishman who represents British rule in India, and tears in shreds most of the alleged benefits which that rule has conferred. . . His revolt against English rule in India, however, is so outstanding and his condemnation of the system and of those who administer it so severe as to make his book a challenge that will have to be met." William MacDonald
Nation 131:128 Jl 30 '30 1100w
Reviewed by G. T. Garratt
Nation and Ath 47:626 Ag 16 '30 650w
Reviewed by R. M. Lovett
New Repub 65:106 D 10 '30 280w

"The book is one of the loosest and wildest of its kind. It is written with evident earnestness, but its ten chapters are thrown together with a staggering discontinuity and the most tiresome repetition. What it has to say could have been said much more effectively in one-third of the space. . . His stories are vague, they are largely hearsay, and they are undated. Colonel Osburn, however, had a case; it is a pity that he should have thrown it away by reckless statement and foolish reiteration."
— New Statesman 35:446 Jl 12 '30 900w

"Depicting the gross defects which he ascribes to Englishmen 'of the better sort' in graphic and even lurid colors, Colonel Osburn goes on to counsel remedies, many of which are dictated by sovereign good sense, and would apply equally to any governing class in any land. These practical recommendations are the heart of his book, much of what precedes them being of questionable value." Charles Johnston
N Y Times p1 Ag 3 '30 650w

"Its power—like all power—lies in its calm reasonableness. . . . No native Communist writes this book, but an English officer, brought up in the English public school system. Even Americans may find in it something applicable to their own attitude toward foreigners." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p11 Jl 25 '30 1000w
Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 155:631 Ag 20 '30 300w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:91 D '30
St Louis 28:271 N '30

"The present flow of books about India is all to the good, but moderation and good temper are strongly to be desired in the writers. This book, while much of it deserves close study, is an example of the absence of both these virtues. . . One reads this book with a feeling that throughout its pages there is exaggeration that is unpardonable. When the author says that he himself 'does not remember ever treating any "native" half as well as he treats his dog,' that it is natural that 'the average Englishman . . . should give vent to his . . . inclination . . . to kick an Indian whenever he sees one,' and so on, can one regard him as competent to tell what he has seen or to philosophize about existing conditions?"
— Sat R 149:694 My 31 '30 800w

"His view of the facts is too partial and passionate for his book to bring much illumination for the problems before us. . . The distortion of its picture will make those whom it is most important to impress repudiate it altogether: carefully qualified and temperate statement is in this case far more powerful than violent statement. On the other hand, it is desirable that Indian readers should have their attention drawn to other things than the unhappy incidents which, as it is, probably occupy too large a part of their consciousness. If the book has an effect at all, it can hardly be any other than that of further envenoming a controversy already sufficiently inflamed."

— Spec 144:1063 Je 28 '30 770w
World Tomorrow 13:472 N '30 180w

O'SHEA, MICHAEL VINCENT. Newer ways ^{2} with children. 419p $3.50 Greenberg
136.7 Children—Management. Child study
29-20224

"Brief talks on problems of child management and training under the changed conditions of today, many of them suggested by parents' questions."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 26:144 Ja '30

"Mr. O'Shea, professor of education at Wisconsin, has written much on this his special field. His latest book is his clearest. The book is a significant and usable volume."
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 30 '29 250w
Cleveland Open Shelf p71 My '30

"The teacher or the parent who has had any training in psychology will not find much in the book that is either new or of value. On the other hand, for one who knows little or nothing of the findings of modern psychology the book might have some value. There is danger, however, that, in attempting to popularize the subject, the author has disregarded some of the real contributions of psychology." Ruth Cope
— + El School J 30:713 My '30 330w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:22 Mr '30
Pratt p7 summer '30
St Louis 28:3 Ja '30

OSSORGIN, MICHAEL, pseud. (MIKHAIL ANDREEVICH IL'IN). Quiet street; [tr. from the Russian by Nadia Helstein]. 344p $2.50 Dial press [7s 6d Secker]
30-25618

In contrast to the gentle beauty of the declining years of Ivan Alexandrovitch, aged ornithologist, are the kaleidoscopic pictures of the Russian revolution with its needless cruelties and horrors. The old professor's granddaughter, Tanyusha, is the heroine of the story, and two students, Vassya and Stolnikov, among the book's memorably drawn characters. These people, fine and charming, are in a sense innocent victims of the new régime, a régime from which the author himself, being a noble and out of sympathy with communism, was banished.

Booklist 27:208 Ja '31

"He has maintained throughout the book a humorous and delightful detachment which is quite un-Russian. Like Gogol and Lermontov, he does not take advantage of the frailties of his weaker and more despicable characters; rather does he draw from them a mild amusement." Paul Gaunt
+ Bookm 72:309 N '30 400w
Reviewed by Joseph Freeman
Books p3 O 5 '30 650w

"The story is soberly told, there is no sensationalism for its own sake, the characters are treated with pitying realization of the way the bestial passions sometimes gain supremacy in human beings. The wonder is that the author is left, as he undoubtedly is, with a philosophy of home and fulfilment." K. C. Tomlinson
+ Nation and Ath 47:416 Je 28 '30 200w

"For one who was actually banished by the Soviet in 1922 Ossorgin writes with an extraordinary lack of bitterness. But as the story proceeds the mannerisms almost drop away, and one is left with a series of perfectly-drawn characters and perfectly-felt situations which combine into a picture at once poignant, clear and deep."
+ New Statesman 35:308 Je 14 '30 380w

" 'Quiet Street' is an essentially pleasant, one is tempted to say caressing book. This does not mean that Michael Ossorgin, the author, who is a Russian living in Paris, presents a sugar-coated version of the Russian catastrophe. Nothing of the kind. There are horrors in this book—executions, deaths, famine. Yet they in no way destroy the life-asserting, lyrical, almost joyous effect of the novel." Alexander Nazaroff
+ N Y Times p8 O 19 '30 550w

"In it we have for the first time, we believe, a novel written originally in Russian, by a fair-minded Russian of literary repute which gives a convincing picture of the revolution of 1917. We realize the men and women in the story as persons and not merely as puppets in the political drama. The author has a love of nature and his descriptive power is notable. Horrors there are in his book. But there are also fine, unselfish, devoted people, trying to live in a chaotic world. The tone of the book is not bitter. Its object is not to infuriate. As the publisher justly claims, Ossorgin does not write a tract but a transcript of life, and this he does with quiet philosophy and even a touch of humor." R. D. T.
+ Outlook 156:230 O 8 '30 230w

"If 'Quiet Street' is not 'great,' it has fine quality, nevertheless, unusual detachment from passing fashions and preoccupations, a very rare warmth, human understanding, and continuing charm." Arthur Ruhl
+ Sat R of Lit 7:204 O 11 '30 1300w

"There is plenty of stark realism in this amazingly full and varied work by a writer who, of noble birth, was banished by the Bolsheviks. . . The author, while no lover of the new Russian régime, is no apologist for the old. He credits both sides with redeeming human traits, but exposes the sordidness of the lust for power whenever it manifests itself. His little interpolated studies of birds and animals —carrying on their normal lives while men are frenzied with hate and stupidity—are a whimsical and attractive feature of a story which is ruthlessly, though never crudely, grim in places, and which elsewhere plumbs depths of exquisite tenderness. 'Great' novels are too glibly proclaimed in these days; but there is certainly an element of genius here." Gilbert Thomas
+ Spec 145:228 Ag 16 '30 380w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 4 '31 380w

"It is much the best novel written by an exiled Russian during the last few years, original in execution, powerful and eloquent in its retrospective analysis of the old order of society, the cultural influence of the finer elements in it and the disintegrating processes of the fateful years of revolution and political dictatorship. Best of all, the novel treats of human beings of a recognizable humanity, and of interesting and delicately interpreted personal relationships."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p640 Ag 7 '30 700w

OSTENSO, MARTHA. Waters under the earth. 319p $2.50 Dodd
30-29827

Dominated by the pernicious tyranny of an introverted puritanic father, the Welland children grow to young manhood and womanhood. One by one we see Tom, Ruth, Sophie and Jenny defeated by life and cheated of love because of their fear of and love for Matt Welland. Only the youngest of them, Carlotta, escapes the family blight, carving her own life-path with a free and happy spirit.

Booklist 27:208 Ja '31

"It would seem that Miss Ostenso, in recording the slow triumph of her paragon over such an unpopular figure as a puritanical

OSTENSO, MARTHA—Continued
father, and in championing the cause of rebellious youth, has found the formula for another success with her large public, which is doubtless composed for the most part of heroine-worshipping young women." Gerald Sykes
Bookm 72:422 D '30 220w

"Obviously Miss Ostenso had more to say on the subject of tyranny than she recorded in her former book, 'Wild Geese.' And she had the ability to say it better. Both novels are studies in fear: the first was harder, cruder and more elemental; the latest, 'The Waters under the Earth,' is subtler, more intricate, and more skillfully written." Garreta Busey
+ Books p7 N 2 '30 600w

"There is no doubt about it—Martha Ostenso can create, establish and perpetuate a mood. More than in any of the others, she has done it in this, her fifth novel. It is a mood of depression. But it has its fine and cheerful note at the end." J. W. Maury
+ Boston Transcript p1 N 19 '30 1450w

"Along conventional lines it is an effective story—well written, honest, plausible. We get a good idea of what happened to these people, we know why it happened, we feel that it should have happened. But we do not see it happen. The impression we carry away is not very different from that one obtains through hearing some one lucidly outline, in conversation, a novel he has written. We grasp, in other words, the intellectual and thematic values of the book. But we do not live in its pages."
+ — N Y Times p6 N 23 '30 650w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p14 O 24 '30 220w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins
Outlook 156:388 N 5 '30 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:88 D '30

"Now and then Miss Ostenso asks us to believe a reaction, a complication, or an influence without showing us the why of it. She is sometimes inclined simply to state the fact rather than to make the fact happen before one's eyes, and that is no light defect in a novelist. Nevertheless 'The Waters under the Earth' is an absorbing book. It is among the fine things that have been written during the present decade." Louis Bromfield
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:284 N 1 '30 550w

OSTROLENK, BERNHARD. Economics of branch banking. 209p $3.50 Harper

332.1 Banks and banking—Branch banks. Banks and banking—United States

30-10403

"The reasons for the growing importance of the subject, as well as the economic fundamentals involved, are treated in a comprehensive and readable fashion in the present volume. While the book is primarily concerned with the American problem, illustrative and case material are drawn from the experience of the United Kingdom and Canada. After a survey of the subject, Mr. Ostrolenk comes to the conclusion that group banking is inevitable; that the controversy is no longer between the merits of a unit type of banking system and a branch banking system, but between the desirability of chain banking as contrasted with branch banking."—Current Hist

"Mr. Ostrolenk has made a good case for branch banking, and his study merits the careful attention of those who are interested in this important phase of American banking development." F. A. Bradford
+ Am Econ R 20:319 Je '30 2100w

Booklist 27:140 D '30

Reviewed by B. H. Beckhart
Current Hist 32:612 Je '30 1100w

Reviewed by George Soule
N Y Times p12 Jl 27 '30 200w

St Louis 28:206 S '30

Special Libraries 21:346 N '30

OTEYZA, LUIS DE. White devil; tr. from the Spanish by Frederic Taber Cooper. 310p $2 Stokes

Pedro Gomez, clerk, is sent to China by his manufacturing firm in Barcelona, to look up a missing Chinese buyer, Li-Hong. Learning that the Chinaman has been kidnapped and held for ransom, Pedro sets out to rescue him. He immediately gets entangled with civil wars, bandits and villains of all variety, including a passionate and vicious Chinese woman. But Pedro triumphs by becoming even more treacherous and bloodthirsty, and earns the title of White devil. He rescues Li-Hong, and returns home to become once more a prosaic bookkeeper in Barcelona.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p18 O 5 '30 150w

"It is strong meat even for the younger generation. Still it is splendid literary entertainment."
+ Boston Transcript p2 N 15 '30 450w

"Its macabre episodes will partially turn the reader's stomach, raise the hair on his head, satisfy his latent sadistic instincts and influence him to carry a Colt .45 in his side pocket when he next delivers his soiled collars to the Chinese laundry."
+ N Y World p3e O 5 '30 200w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:69 S 10 '30 80w

OURSLER, FULTON. Great Jasper. 296p $2 Covici

30-24236

"The hero of Fulton Oursler's sixth novel is Jasper Horn, street-car motorman and hedonist, who 'took his pleasures in barrooms, gambling establishments, race tracks and other husbands' bedrooms'. Through a chain of loosely connected adventures, the jaunty Jasper comes into the possession of an Atlantic City astrology establishment. Replacing his motorman's cap with a velvet fez, the Great Jasper proceeds to follow out his hitherto restricted amorous inclinations to the satisfaction of everyone save his puritanic and unforgiving wife."—Bookm

"The Great Jasper is a tepidly interesting novel, exhibiting facility in conception and workmanship."
— + Bookm 72:xiii O '30 150w

"The rise of Jasper Horn makes an entertaining narrative. Why it isn't more than that, one finds it difficult to say. Mr. Oursler's frame of judgment is civilized, his knowledge of his characters seems excellent, and his style is competent. Moreover, the book is in no sense a hack job, but a sincere and carefully wrought production, full of engaging incident and color."
+ — Books p22 S 28 '30 120w

"Jasper's story is decidedly readable. What Oursler fails to do is to bring out completely the moving or dramatic elements inherent in the central characters and to knit scenes and events tightly enough together. Because of these inadequacies, 'The Great Jasper' sprawls amusingly, it is true, but without the hilarious gaiety or force that it should have."
+ — New Repub 65:26 N 19 '30 200w

"Fulton Oursler seems to be one of those writers who can write to suit themselves and make readers like it. It is safe to assume that he wrote his 'The Great Jasper' without bothering himself about any technic except his own, and that readers will nevertheless take to it because it gives them the real thing in human nature and behavior in about the same chance and inevitable fashion as life hands out destiny."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e O 12 '30 220w

OURSLER, FULTON. True story of Bernarr Macfadden. 281p il $2.50 Copeland

B or 92 Macfadden, Bernarr Adolphus

Written in the personal narrative style of True Story Magazine, one of the Macfadden publications, this account of the publisher's life follows his career from early manhood to the present. The author tells how Macfadden developed his ideas on physical culture, which were later incorporated in the Physical Culture Magazine; of his battles with medical men and with the champions of prudery, led by Comstock; the establishment of True Story Magazine and others of its type; and Macfadden's début into American journalism with the Evening Graphic.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 My 17 '30

Reviewed by Lisle Bell
Books p21 F 16 '30 160w
Christian Century 47:309 Mr 5 '30 50w
Reviewed by C. H. Grattan
New Repub 62:78 Mr 5 '30 450w
N Y Times p20 Mr 9 '30 100w

OVERTON, GRANT MARTIN. Hour of the American novel. (One hour ser.) 155p $1 (4s 6d) Lippincott

813.09 American fiction—History and criticism 29-27522

A brief review of the development of the American novel from Charles Brockden Brown to Ernest Hemingway.

Booklist 26:111 D '29

"Among commentators on American fiction, Grant Overton yields to none in total output. He may not be among the most profound critics, but he is indisputably one of the most prolific. Consequently, for him to be chosen to contribute a story of 'The American Novel' to the One-Hour series is no cause for surprise. He takes it in his stride. . . Mr. Overton devotes himself mainly to a summary of facts, with names and dates and bits of biography. His occasional dictums are somewhat open to challenge."
+ — Books p22 N 10 '29 180w
Nation 130:105 Ja 22 '30 70w

"It is a competent little book and quite adequately reviews the American novel." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p6m S 21 '29 80w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:33 Ap '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p614 Jl 24 '30 200w

OWEN, CAROLINE DALE, pseud. See Snedeker, C. D.

OWEN, JOHN. Many captives. 315p $2.50 Lippincott [7s 6d Gollancz] 30-30776

Among the many captives in the book are a caged blackbird; Gil Southwaite, made captive by a physical condition—increasing deafness; Edward Crossford, an ex-convict, suffering spiritual confinement; and Tom Stone, held captive by his greed for money. The setting of the novel is a rural English community.

"It is told with that simplicity that comes of intelligence and imagination and painstaking and painful thought. A novel to be recommended."
+ Bookm 72:ix D '30 100w
Books p10 N 9 '30 180w

"Mr. Owen's admirers will be delighted with the child Faith." Herbert Kahan
+ Nation and Ath 47:446 Jl 5 '30 100w

"Mr. John Owen's book is a strange and attractive one, and consists of variations on the theme of captivity. . . What prevails in this story of gentry and villagers in a Suffolk countryside is its author's instinct not so much for words (for the slight dialogue is inclined to be uneasy and monotonous) as for a relationship of ideas by which the sensitive incidents are planned in the rightest possible way."
+ New Statesman 35:247 My 31 '30 180w

"There is great charm and distinction in such writing as this. Mr. Owen can afford not to be precious and can even allow himself to be solemn, because of the extreme simplicity of his manner and subtlety of his insight. Sometimes the reader may uneasily wonder whether there is not a little too much subtlety in Gil Southwaite, but Mr. Owen carries conviction. That is the best of him."
+ N Y Times p7 N 9 '30 450w
Sat R of Lit 7:460 D 13 '30 350w

"A quiet, subdued piece of work which many people will certainly find moving and perhaps beautiful. I felt a little distrustful of Mr. Owen's emotional background, though I admired the deft way in which he manipulated his plot so as to make the most of it. His descriptions of Suffolk country and Suffolk folk, moreover, are well done. The weakness of his book seems to me largely in its construction, which is broken-backed and rather clumsy, leading to the climax only by obscure and rather devious routes." I. M. Parsons
+ — Spec 144:913 My 31 '30 150w

"Mr. Owen treats this simple story of a few months of life in the Suffolk village without sentimentality and with no hint of didacticism. He sees his people very clearly and presents them directly, but with just such a touch of tenderness as permits us to realize their worth rather than their frailty. 'Many Captives' is a novel on a set theme, as the title something too clearly implies, but there is no twisting of the material to suit the needs of a forced development. The story is charmingly told, and full of living interest."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p432 My 22 '30 480w

OWEN, LOUISE. Virtuosa; a book of verse. (Yale ser. of younger poets) 35p $1.25 Yale univ. press [6s 6d Oxford]

811 30-13266

Lyrical poems, chiefly sonnets, on nature for the most part, with a New England background.

"In Miss Owen's lines color, motion, sharp depiction, if somewhat consciously handled, are synthesized under a promising artistic command. Her sonnets are especially well wrought."
+ — N Y Times p27 S 28 '30 100w

"Occasional slight originality. Some charm. Cultivated verse." W. R. Benét
Sat R of Lit 7:9 Jl 26 '30 10w

"In her lyrics the silver notes seldom ring a chord because they are too precisely clipped and too little infused with feeling. It is different with her sonnets. In these her sensibility is far less insulated and moves to a deeper rhythm."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p579 Jl 10 '30 200w

OWEN, NICHOLAS. Journal of a slave-dealer; a view of some remarkable axcedents in the life of [the author] on the coast of Africa and America from the year 1746 to the year 1757; ed. with an introd. by Eveline Martin. (Park st. lib. of diaries, memoirs and letters) 120p il $3 Houghton [7s 6d Routledge]

326.1 Slave trade 30-14823

Nicholas Owen, a young Irishman who lived in the eighteenth century, set out to be a slave dealer in order to retrieve the squandered fortunes of his family. This book contains the manuscript record of his voyages to various points in England, the United States, the West Indies, Portugal, the coast of Africa, etc. It contains for the most part the observations of a quaint and pious young man upon the peoples and places he encounters.

"If he tells us little or nothing of the horrors of the sea traffic in which he was engaged he gives us a shrewd account of the native peoples of the coast, among whom his lot was cast. Debauched no doubt to a great extent by contact with the white trader and his rum, the people were still living under strict tribal law, and Owen made intimate contact with them. Owen was not a bad artist and his illustrations add to the book's interest and value."

OWEN, NICHOLAS—Continued

+ New Statesman 34:546 F 1 '30 300w

N Y Times p24 Ap 6 '30 450w

St Louis 28:205 S '30

"As a record of the slave trade this journal is a disappointment. In other respects, however, the diary is of unusual interest. Owen's reflections upon life in general, and upon the too frequent necessity of earning one's living in obscure foreign parts, are expressed with an artless directness which is all his own; and his spelling is equally peculiar to himself, and equally amusing. . . Historically his book is of real value as showing the kind of life led by European traders on the West Coast in the middle of the eighteenth century."

+ — Sat R 149:201 F 15 '30 700w

OXENHAM, JOHN, pseud. (WILLIAM ARTHUR DUNKERLEY). Splendour of the dawn. 232p $2 Longmans
30-25626

As in a former novel, The Hidden Years, the author presents a novelized version of New Testament material. Splendor of the Dawn has for its plot the story of Cornelius Flaccus, a young Roman, who wants to learn all he can about Jesus the Nazarene. How he meets Christ and his followers of the "new way," Cornelius tells in letters to his friend Sergius.

"This devout novelization of material taken largely from the Four Gospels suffers somewhat from an inadequate prose integument and, at least for one reader, fails upon occasion to evoke a decorous mood. . . One hardly knows whether or not it is unjust to Mr. Oxenham or to the dubious source to regard the intrusion of little Tobias as a touch of almost stupefying sentimentality."

— Books p16 O 5 '30 180w

Boston Transcript p6 D 10 '30 300w

N Y Times p22 O 5 '30 250w

"This novelized version of the early years of Christianity follows the New Testament story so closely and uncritically that one can only suppose it was intended to spread the gospel to persons constitutionally predisposed against Bible reading. Suspense and drama are naturally lessened, for those who have read the Bible, by the fact that all the big climaxes are foreseen, and Mr. Oxenham's professional dexterity has not improved on the New Testament writers who were concerned simply with setting forth what they had to say."

— Sat R of Lit 7:166 S 27 '30 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p784 O 2 '30 250w

P

PACH, WALTER. An hour of art. (One hour ^{2} ser.) 158p $1 (4s 6d) Lippincott
709 Art—History 30-26091

Mr Pach discusses the underlying principles of art from its earliest historical forms down to the work of the modern cubists and neo-impressionists.

Reviewed by Leslie Ault

Bookm 72:327 N '30 220w

"Drawing on the riches of his experience and his reading, Mr. Pach, himself an artist, escorts the reader through an imaginary museum which contains all the exhibits required for his purpose. That purpose is 'to consider art as a record of the human race,' and in the limited time at his command he succeeds remarkably well in conveying a lively and sustained impression of the unity in variety of the artistic effort and achievement of man, from the earliest known cave paintings to the art of the Matisse and Picasso."

+ New Repub 65:173 D 24 '30 100w

"This small volume, of quiet absorbing interest, demands, and rewards, a reader's close attention. It cannot advantageously be dipped into or skimmed through, for the simple reason that wisdom, taste and long, keen observation have been packed with the skill of a mosaicist into the slender block of text. Behind the innocent title resides a very complex, passionate, discerning, densely concentrated substance. The reader who digests this material in the allotted hour must be a very remarkable reader indeed. . . One is grateful, besides, for Mr. Pach's beautiful style, whose rhythm is a fitting accompaniment to the high yet never pedantic seriousness of his theme." E. A. Jewell

+ N Y Times p24 D 14 '30 230w

PACK, CHARLES LATHROP, and GILL, TOM. Forests and mankind. 250p il $3 (12s 6d) Macmillan
634.9 Forests and forestry 29-28833

"Forests and Mankind is a book that links the life of man with the forest and shows how dependent man is on the forest. Charles Lathrop Pack and Tom Gill, authors, are men who have a personal, intimate contact with their subject. . . The main object of the book is to teach conservation. Insects, disease and fire are three great enemies; and fire, generally man-made, is the greatest menace."—Books

Booklist 26:226 Mr '30

"I am amused that the authors of this book, who are preaching conservation, permit their publisher to issue a book with so much fat—expensive, wide margins, heavy paper and many blank pages. However, the volume is attractive to a book-lover and carries a number of enticing illustrations." C. L. Gold

+ — Books p21 Ja 19 '30 500w

"It is not a book for the professional forester, but any layman, old or young, with the slightest interest in the subject, will find that interest deepened by even the most casual perusal of these pages."

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 1 '30 250w

"The book may be said to be, if anything, a bit too popular. But it is clear, complete, and, by the public's pet test, readable." M. E. M.

+ Boston Transcript p1 F 21 '30 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p89 Je '30

N Y Times p44 D 8 '29 520w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:32 Ap '30

St Louis 28:70 Mr '30

Wis Lib Bul 26:39 Ja '30

PACKARD, FRANK LUCIUS. Jimmie Dale and the blue envelope murder. 289p $1 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder]
30-22898

Jimmy Dale, gentleman adventurer and philanthropic crook, once more masquerades as the Gray Seal, alias Larry the Bat, and avenges the death of his good friend, Ray Thorne.

"If you crave real excitement, follow the latest adventure of the ingenious and resourceful Jimmy Dale."

+ Bookm 72:xxii S '30 60w

"Mr. Packard's immense and rather special following will not be disappointed in this curdler." Will Cuppy

+ Books p10 Ag 31 '30 130w

"After setting his stage, developing his characters and opening up his string of murders, Mr. Packard loses not a minute. Speed, intensity, thrill after thrill, and suspense. They are offered for no other object than to hold the reader's attention and it is exactly what the cover promises it to be—a good mystery story."

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 15 '30 380w

Reviewed by Bruce Rae

N Y Times p36 N 16 '30 150w

PAGE, ELIZABETH. Wagons west; a story of the Oregon trail. 361p $5 Farrar

917.8 Oregon trail. Overland journeys to the Pacific. California—Gold discoveries 30-25829

Based on a collection of family letters, Wagons West, in historic-biographical method, records the story of Henry Page's journey to California over the Oregon trail. The account of the journey is told thru Henry's letters to his wife, Mary, who waited back home for his return.

"There is nothing exceptional in the character, motives, or fortunes of Henry Page. In the main, he followed where others led, one of the great middle class of Western pioneers, and his path was unmarked by great daring, or by great rewards. For this reason, if for no other, his story is eminently worthy of preservation. The hardihood, the simplicity, the unconsciously epic quality of his adventures, are representative rather than individual, and the color of a whole generation is contained in his unimaginative correspondence." Margaret Wallace

+ Bookm 72:200 O '30 500w

"From a collection of letters written by her great-uncle, Henry Page, and his wife, Mary, she has drawn her picture of a commonplace family swept into the gold rush to California. A more careful, upright and tedious mind than Henry's has rarely come to the printed page. Mary's letters indicate the perfect mate for him. With these family documents as her basis the author has compiled a volume of important information, which should go at once into the Americana room of all large libraries." C. L. Skinner

+ Books p3 S 28 '30 550w

"Wagons West is not a great book but it is a distinctive contribution to the literature which is growing up about the 'frontier in American history.' " E. F. Brown

+ — Current Hist 33:iv N '30 160w

"Miss Page's 'Wagons West,' though it is based on source material, does not catch the adventurous spirit of the great migration as much as does Mr. Branch's book. This may be partly because the author or editor has endeavored to fictionalize the gaps in the story. The result is that the fiction is a little unconvincing and the actual first-hand narrative a little dry." R. L. Duffus

N Y Times p14 O 19 '30 260w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y World p3e O 26 '30 100w

"If the letters are commonplace, the editing is not. Miss Page, a grandniece of the 'forty-niner, has made her task a labor of love. Her narrative is full and careful, and is decidedly more entertaining than the epistolary matter. It is enriched by some dozens of photographs which she took on her uncle's trail."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:398 N 29 '30 450w

PAGE, EVELYN. See Scarlett, R., pseud.

PAGE, HARRY S. Between the flags; the recollections of a gentleman rider. ltd ed 313p il $10 Derrydale press

798.4 Horse racing 30-2473

"Harry Page was a notable and persistent gentleman rider for a couple of decades at least, and knew all the horses in double that span and all the men of two generations who are most simply grouped by their association in the United Hunts meets when the United Hunts meets were in the days of their brighter glory and the horses ran over the fields and through the woods in front of the little stand that stood just across the Long Island Railway tracks from big Belmont Park."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 23 '30 380w

"To all who have known the horsey side of Long Island any time for thirty years back this book of Harry Page's will be especially full of interest. For others it is a mine of curious information—odds and ends and little bits here and there—the sum of which is a sort of picture of a simple and easy-going sportsman's life spread out over the Hempstead Plains and parts adjacent. Among the colored prints in the book—very handsomely reproduced water-colors by Mr. Voss—is a view of the little old wooden stand at Belmont, burned down years ago, and the parade of the horses from the paddock against the background of the woods. There are, likewise, many photographs of famous horsemen and horses and famous jumps." H. I. Brock

+ N Y Times p6 Ja 19 '30 700w

PAGE, KIRBY. Jesus or Christianity; a study ^{2} in contrasts. 326p $2 Baptist S. S. bd.; Doubleday, Doran

232 Christianity. Jesus Christ 29-22406

The author states his purpose to be "to emphasize the fact that, in spite of the immeasurable good accomplished by Christianity, it has accumulated so many alien and hostile elements as to make it a different religion from the simple faith of its founder."

Am J Soc 35:1119 My '30 100w

"The last part of Mr. Page's book is, in my judgment, one of the most illuminating attempts yet made to interpret the religion of Jesus as opposed to that religion about Jesus which historic Christianity has so disappointingly embodied. . . This trenchant and effective book has been written by one who is himself a churchman. Always the church has stoned its prophets, and always has it produced prophets!" E. F. Tittle

+ Christian Century 47:434 Ap 2 '30 1000w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:6 Ja '30

"Jesus or Christianity is a profoundly disturbing book. Without producing evidence unknown before, it fixes as a mordant a mass of facts which almost raises the question whether there is anything in the scheme of organized Christianity worth saving. But only 'almost.' That it could be written at all, and by a Christian minister, makes the book more than disturbing. It becomes one of those necessary books which thoughtful Christians must heed, lest they should be refusing to hear a desperately needed warning." D. B. Brummitt

+ World Tomorrow 12:422 O '29 850w

PAGE, KIRBY, ed. New economic order. 387p $3 Harcourt

330.4 Economics—Addresses, essays, lectures. Capitalism. Fascism. Communism. Socialism 30-8480

Part one of this symposium is devoted to discussions pro and con of the rival world movements, capitalism, fascism, communism and socialism; part two to ways of transforming the present competitive system into a cooperative order.

Am Econ R 20:353 Je '30 80w

Reviewed by F. N. House

Am J Soc 36:504 N '30 280w

Am Pol Sci R 24:797 Ag '30 150w

"This collection of papers is suggestive, embraces a wide sweep of ideas and theories, describes many roads which may lead toward a better economic order, but presents no definite picture of the order itself." J. A. Ryan

Ann Am Acad 151:290 S '30 450w

PAGE, KIRBY, ed.—Continued

Booklist 26:382 Jl '30

"The natural place for these brief articles is in the magazines. In a book we have a right to expect more substance than is possible when a great deal of matter is spread out so very thinly. Occasionally symposia are satisfactory, but far more often, as in the case of this one, it is difficult to understand the value of their publication." F. R. Dulles

— Bookm 71:564 Ag '30 280w

"The four debates are a failure just because they are such a success. They draw the mind of the reader far afield from the rather academic items of reform policy discussed in the main body of the work. Furthermore, since they are so excellently done in the spirit of high controversy, these debates absorb all the interest, and thus leave the rest of the book as dull seeming as any classic treatise on 'the dismal science.' This is a pity, for the separate contributions are of a high order of excellence." J. H. Holmes

+ — Books p13 Ap 27 '30 380w

"The tone throughout is one of moderation without indefiniteness, of reliance upon practical results to demonstrate the soundness of the theory, and of hopefulness." William MacDonald

+ Current Hist 32:222 My '30 850w

Foreign Affairs 8:682 Jl '30 20w

"Considered individually, practically every one of the essays in the book commends itself to the reader as a valuable study of some social problem carefully analyzed and ably presented. Many contain statistical data of the highest interest. At least two deserve to be singled out for the quality of their thoughts and the force of their implications. One is the paper by J. B. S. Hardman defining labor's goal and the means of reaching it. The other is Professor Ward's reasoned and calm acceptance of the inevitable change in the present economic order." Louis Rich

+ N Y Times p5 My 4 '30 850w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 155:108 My 21 '30 90w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:69 O '30

Springf'd Republican p6 My 19 '30 460w

Survey 64:521 S 15 '30 100w

Reviewed by Edward Berman

World Tomorrow 13:227 My '30 950w

Reviewed by E. S. Furniss

Yale R n s 19:847 summer '30 500w

PAGET, SIR RICHARD ARTHUR SURTEES, 2d bart. Human speech; some observations, experiments, and conclusions as to the nature, origin, purpose and possible improvements of human speech. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 360p il $6 Harcourt [12s 6d Routledge]

534.7 Speech [30-12680]

The book is an explanation for the ordinary reader of the acoustics, mechanism, and origin and development of speech, with an account of experiments in reproducing the sounds of speech by mechanical means.

Boston Transcript p4 My 17 '30 440w

Nation and Ath 46:897 Mr 29 '30 380w

Nature 125:966 Je 28 '30 1150w

New Statesman 35:506 Jl 26 '30 800w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:709 Ap 30 '30 120w

St Louis 28:234 O '30

"The extraordinary interest of this book, the most stimulating work on speech that has appeared in a very long time, lies in its combination of technical exactness with speculative boldness. Sir Richard Paget is an experimentalist of remarkable native skill and patience, and above all, a disinterested scientist. A technical discussion of the physics of speech, such as is contained in the early chapters of this book, is naturally not always easy to follow. But Sir Richard leads his readers so gently by the hand that before they know it, they will find themselves swimming confidently in waters they would never have thought of entering of their own will." G. P. Krapp

+ Sat R of Lit 6:983 Ap 26 '30 1650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p545 Jl 3 '30 1700w

PAINE, ALBERT BIGELOW. Jan the romantic; a story of France. 351p il $2.50 Harper

30-448

Jan's mother was English, his father French. Following his father's death, Jan and his mother lived at Le Havre, where Jan cared for her till her death. A few years later he joined the Cirque Rassuli, and fell in love with Zilda Vallon. Meanwhile Jan was making good use of his knowledge of both French and English, and of the literature of both countries. He became an author, and he survived the war to marry Zilda.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 My 25 '29

"The pages are interrupted by French words in italics with the English translation following parenthetically, which makes for tedious reading. Too nearly a guide book, yet threaded together by the rather sentimental, fictionary figure of the lame boy, 'Jan the Romantic' leaves one with a cloudy, vaporous impression."

— Books p16 O 27 '29 280w

Cleveland Open Shelf p158 D '29

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:51 Je '30

"We can recommend this book to all those who know the fascination of leisurely travel on the roads of France."

+ Sat R 149:398 Mr 29 '30 180w

"This is quite an enjoyable story and the local colour is always pleasant."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p30 Ja 9 '30 200w

Wis Lib Bul 26:106 Mr '30

PAINTER, FLOY RUTH. That man Debs and his life work. 209p $2.19; pa $1.49 The author, Ball state teachers college, Muncie, Ind.

B or 92 Debs, Eugene Victor Socialist party (United States) 30-6981

A biographical study of Eugene V. Debs, his career and personality, and his political opinions as shown by his speeches and activities.

Booklist 27:102 N '30

"The book shows evidence of painstaking and discriminative research and contains a wealth of interesting material and an elaborate bibliography." Morris Hillquit

+ Current Hist 32:844 Ag '30 100w

"Dr. Painter's book is unusually awful, even for a doctor's thesis. It contains a good deal of information about Debs and a bibliography." H. R. Mussey

— Nation 131:206 Ag 20 '30 30w

"'That Man Debs' contributes nothing. Its detail is occasionally a little inaccurate, never important. The style is a homely and moderate ecstasy." M. P. Levy

— New Repub 63:352 Ag 6 '30 30w

"That she has the greatest admiration for the man is clear but she manages to give her book an atmosphere of cool, critical judgment." R. C. Feld

+ N Y Times p6 My 25 '30 80w

"The bibliography closing the volume covers eleven pages. This list of books, pamphlets, and newspaper and magazine articles, is in itself a good contribution and has value for all interested in the Debs tradition."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:87 Ag 30 '30 100w

PAKENHAM, THOMAS COMPTON. Rearguard. 394p $2.50 Knopf

30-27754

"The tale of the family of an English remittance man in the Far East and of the ironically corroding influence of great expectations upon a group of colonial snobs."—N Y Times

"With the instinct of a newspaper man Mr. Pakenham allows his people to make fools of themselves without his intervention. But the story rambles through four hundred closely printed pages when it could be told with advantage in half that space."
— Books p20 N 30 '30 250w

"Mr. Pakenham tells his story lightly and swiftly. He is ruthlessly honest, and if his situations are so often humorous where a Russian or a Scandinavian would have presented them in far gloomier colors, they are none the less real for being peculiarly English." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 200w

"Although the action, when briefly set down, appears disjointed, the book is held together by a remarkably diverting group of characters, pleasant and unpleasant. . . The author's real achievement is, therefore, in the realm of characterization and in those incidents which flow out of character rather than of impersonal forces. The author of 'Rearguard' has produced a diverting and substantial novel about a group of interesting people."
+ N Y Times p6 O 26 '30 700w

"On putting down the story, the reader has the feeling that these Langdales, impossible as they are, must have lived in some Chinese treaty port. Individually and collectively they are as unrestrained, headstrong, and ill-mannered a group as may be found in current fiction. Yet they linger in the mind with an authentic charm and reality. A hint is given that another book may carry on with the younger Geoffrey. It will be worth waiting for. Compton Pakenham deserves watching."
+ Sat R of Lit 7:313 N 8 '30 380w

PALACHE, JOHN GARBER. Marie Antoinette, the player queen. 322p il $5 Longmans

B or 92 Marie Antoinette, queen consort of Louis XVI, king of France [29-22816]

The story of a queen who was superficially French by reason of environment, but at heart German by reason of birth and allegiance. The biographer makes clear Marie Antoinette's temperamental unfitness for the court life at Versailles, and her position as a pawn in the political game in which her mother, Marie Theresa, played a leading hand. Altho he points out the weaknesses of his subject, Mr Palache shows that nothing became the queen in her life so much as the leaving of it, for she went to the guillotine with admirable dignity and courage in the face of forces which she could neither understand nor control.

Reviewed by Norah Meade
Bookm 70:680 F '30 500w

"This is an appealing book and a profitable one, even though it is not quite all that it purports to be. . . Mr. Palache has done little more than tell [the Queen's] sad story once more, movingly, sympathetically, fairly." R. T. House
+ — Books p21 N 3 '29 600w

"Mr. Palache has presented his material, much of it new, in its natural dramatic setting, without strain. Altogether it is a swiftly moving, brilliant and plausible study."
+ Churchman p16 D 28 '29 120w

"By making intelligent use of a great mass of surviving memoirs Mr. Palache has built up a biography that takes account of phases of the Queen's life and character not so much emphasized by earlier writers." W. B. Shaw
+ R of Rs 80:26 O '29 130w
St Louis 27:342 D '29
Springf'd Republican p6 S 8 '30 600w
Wis Lib Bul 25:372 N '29

PALEN, LEWIS STANTON. Water and gold, by Lewis Stanton Palen, as told to him by Charles G. Hedlund. 268p $3 Dutton

B or 92 Hedlund, Charles G. 30-20991

The life story of Charlie Hedlund, a Swedish-American, who began his career as a chimney-sweep, became a deep-sea sailor, and then a gold-hunter in Africa, as told in his own words to Lewis Palen. Mr Hedlund is now a master machinist in a little New Jersey town.

"We have not in Hedlund the picturesque character that we have in 'Trader Horn,' but when it comes to adventure and dramatic action the two-fisted Swede leaves the old trader with his gridiron far behind. Hedlund is a doer instead of a garrulous philosopher, and the account of his wanderings given by Mr. Palen in this book is a notable contribution to the literature of action and adventure." Bellamy Partridge
+ Books p5 Ag 17 '30 600w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 Ag 5 '30 950w

"It is as good a sea yarn as Duttons have published since the death of Ibanez, and as telling a comment on the Boer War as has been released since that flashy day the ex-Kaiser sent his congratulatory telegram down there . . If only a few more Palens would go digging for a few more Hedlunds!" A. W. P.
+ Outlook 156:28 S 3 '30 280w

PALM, AMY. Wanda and Greta at Broby farm; tr. from the Swedish by Siri Andrews. 198p il $2 Longmans

30-20455

A charming account of the adventures of two little Swedish girls, Greta and Wanda, who lived on a farm not so far from Stockholm.

Booklist 27:68 O '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p134 N '30

"A thoroughly likable story, for children eight to ten. Illustrations more child-like and realistic and less fantastic than those made by Mr. McIntosh for this book would have better suited the text." A. T. Eaton
+ — N Y Times p15 Jl 6 '30 200w
St Louis 28:248 O '30
Sat R of Lit 7:333 N 15 '30 100w

PALMER, FREDERICK. Look to the East. 332p il $3 Dodd

915 East (Far East). Eastern question (Far East) 30-12061

After an interval of twenty five years, the author revisits the Far East and records his re-impressions of those countries. He discusses conditions and customs in Japan, Korea, China, Manchuria and the Philippines.

Booklist 26:391 Jl '30
Bookm 71:xxiii Je '30 80w
Books p31 O 26 '30 500w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 9 '30 300w
Christian Century 47:563 Ap 30 '30 50w
Cleveland Open Shelf p104 Jl '30
St Louis 28:216 S '30

"Rarely is so much accurate and reliable information packed into such small compass. He has a keen insight into the fundamental causes which are so rapidly transforming the Orient, a sympathetic understanding of the difficulties which the leaders must overcome, and the ability to present a clear picture of confused situations. The style is fascinating and the material so entertaining that one hesitates to lay the volume down until it is finished."

PALMER, FREDERICK—Continued

+ Sat R of Lit 7:91 Ag 30 '30 250w

PALMER, GRETTA. Shopping guide to New York. 253p $2.50 McBride

917.471 Shopping. New York (city)—Description 30-21534

"A guide to shopping in New York that is written for every purse, and for every need." —Publishers' Weekly

"The whole book keeps a high level of efficiency. It is so organized that you can look up your particular appetite quickly and easily, through an accurate index. . . There is nothing amateurish about Mrs. Palmer's book. It has the absolute conviction of authority in its tone. It seems to document the entire field of human caprice, to the very number of buttons on a footman's evening livery." V. P. Ross

+ Books p13 Ag 10 '30 450w

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 30 '30 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p156 D '30

"She has the shopping world of New York 'down cold!' Her discoveries range from: The Ultra-Ultra Places to Foibles in Furniture, The Homing Pigeonhole, Gifts and Gadgets, and one chapter entitled Miscellaneous, that covers employment agencies, doctors and dentists, photographers, repair experts, and how to find any street number in New York. Any New York guide will give you reliable information—but this one goes over the top in individual style."

+ N Y Times p18 Jl 6 '30 180w

Reviewed by Bernice Whittemore

Outlook 155:389 Jl 9 '30 200w

St Louis 28:271 N '30

"In the field of women's wear this book shows knowledge and perception. Outside that, it is sketchy. America, particularly New York, already has more shopping culture than real culture. Doubtless this book will help to increase the number of those who desire more of the former."

— + Springf'd Republican p5e Je 29 '30 250w

PALMER, JOHN LESLIE. Molière. 494p il $5 Brewer [16s Bell, G.]

B or 92 Molière, Jean Baptiste Poquelin 30-25192

A searching biographical study of the great French dramatist, Jean Baptiste Poquelin, known to the world as Molière. The study places him squarely in his period and environment, shows him at work and deals thoroly with the problems of his marriage and family relations.

"Much of Mr. Palmer's weighty volume is devoted to clearing away historical and biographical rubbish in search of a not inconsiderable kernel of truth. He has dealt carefully and conscientiously with the controversial issues of Molière's life; and he has brought to his essentially scholarly labor a fine quality of imagination which enables him brilliantly to reconstruct its social background."

+ Bookm 72:180 O '30 500w

"There are a number of admirable books on the world's greatest comedy writer, but few or none are either more readable or potentially more useful than this sympathetic, bright, thoroughly competent study by the erstwhile dramatic critic of 'The London Saturday Review.' If he had given it an index, a detailed bibliography, and perhaps some other scholarly helps, it would be one of the best of Molière reference books. These omissions must by all means be remedied in the next edition." R. T. House

+ Books p28 S 28 '30 800w

Reviewed by P. M. Jack

New Repub 64:327 N 5 '30 1150w

"The merit of Mr. Palmer's account lies appropriately in the sphere of perfect reason; he has his indignations, but he can control them, can see the age as Molière saw it, with a smile and a sigh. . . I am grateful for a book which has taught me more than I had ever hoped to know about the man in that delightful portrait." E. C. Mayne

+ New Statesman 36:272 D 6 '30 1050w

"So far as the purely biographical side of Mr. Palmer's job is concerned, he has performed two services that so far few Frenchmen have even tried: first, he has given us the known facts, and, second, he has told us clearly and interestingly what the chief historians have made of them. . . Without in any way seeking sensational discoveries, and basing his portrait of the man almost entirely on the best evidence, Mr. Palmer has succeeded remarkably well in handling some of the hardest problems that any literary biographer is called upon to face." B. H. Clark

+ N Y Evening Post p12 S 20 '30 650w

Reviewed by H. I. Brock

N Y Times p9 S 21 '30 2000w

Reviewed by A. W. Porterfield

Outlook 156:106 S 17 '30 1300w

"Though Mr Palmer makes some concessions to current fashions in biography, his book can be commended as a readable, thoughtful and thoroughgoing attempt to extricate the probable facts of Moliere's career from the accumulated mass of legends, canards and published errors. The connection between Moliere's plays and the contemporary subjects which inspired the most famous of them is traced with clarity and reasonable fulness."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 7 '30 1150w

PALMER, JOHN LESLIE, and SAUNDERS, HILARY AIDAN ST GEORGE. See Beeding, F., pseud.

PALMER, JOHN MCAULEY. Washington, Lincoln, Wilson; three war statesmen; with an introd. by John J. Pershing. 417p $5 Doubleday, Doran

973 United States—History, Military. United States—Army. Washington, George. Lincoln, Abraham. Wilson, Woodrow 30-6279

The author, who was General Pershing's assistant chief of staff, makes a comparative study of the general military policy of the United States in the Revolutionary, Civil and World wars. His study leads to a defense of the militia system and a recommendation that it be made in the future our chief weapon of national defense.

Reviewed by T. H. Thomas

Am Hist R 35:894 Jl '30 1200w

Booklist 27:94 N '30

"An interesting, instructive, and well argued tract in favor of preparedness along the lines of Washington's citizen army. It is based upon the soundest historical research. But the implications of its title are in no way fulfilled and the three war statesmen are but symbols in the history of military policy."

+ Bookm 71:562 Ag '30 350w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 19 '30 850w

"The value, and to most readers, the interest of this book lie not in its author's hypothesis, but in the light which the re-discovered Washington document throws upon the genius of the 'Father of His Country.' General Palmer is to be congratulated for finding the long forgotten 'Sentiments,' but it is to be hoped that no regulated militia of the proportions which it would assume at the present time, will be thrust upon the United States."

Christian Science Monitor p13 Jl 26 '30 800w

Reviewed by Francis Snow

Current Hist 32:210 My '30 300w

N Y Evening Post p7s Mr 1 '30 170w

"The General writes with grace and spirit and his treatise is intrinsically interesting." A. S. Will

+ N Y Times p5 Jl 6 '30 1450w

"A stimulating book. It is likely to cause the revision of more than one historical judgment, and it will repay careful reading on the part of those who are interested in the present-day problems of peace, war and national defense." P. M. Angle

+ N Y World p10m F 23 '30 900w

PALMER, ROGER LIDDESDALE. English monasteries in the middle ages. 233p il $8 Smith, R.R. [24s Constable]

726.7 Monasteries. Monasticism and religious orders [31-2875]

An outline of English monastic architecture of the middle ages which gives some account of the lives of the men and women who lived in the monasteries, and of the purposes of the founders of the great orders.

"Mr. Palmer writes clearly, and is well-informed, though it is a pity that he quotes from a fellow-archæologist a judgment on the Carthusian order that perpetuates the common error that monks were originally priests. The book is well illustrated with reproductions of photographs and admirable architectural plans."

+ — New Statesman 35:802 O 4 '30 80w

"The book makes no pretence to be a work of pioneer research; it is a compilation of existing information, and as such is well done. A purist, reading the list of illustrations, might cavil at three successive plates of Wells and Salisbury Cathedrals and Ludlow Castle chapel, none of which are monastic; but the views themselves are delightful, and if Mr. Palmer does refer frequently to collegiate churches, he is careful to point out that they are not monastic. It is odd, however, that he should completely ignore the friaries, which have many points of contact with his subject, and to which the general reader will probably expect to find some enlightening reference. The illustrations are well chosen and well produced; and though the book cannot be said to increase knowledge, it should at least help to spread it among those, a large and growing circle, who are already interested but have not the time to study the subject in a multiplicity of more profound monographs."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p693 S 4 '30 1000w

PANCOAST, CHARLES EDWARD. Quaker forty-niner; ed. by Anna Paschall Hannum; with a foreword by John Bach McMaster. 402p il $3.50 Press of the Univ. of Pa.

917.8 Overland journeys to the Pacific. West Description and travel. California—Gold discoveries 30-10948

"The author, who was a drug clerk in Philadelphia, traveled across America, became a steamboat pilot on the Missouri and arrived in California in the days of gold. This account of his travels and adventures has just been brought to light after 40 years."—Publishers' Weekly

Booklist 26:391 Jl '30

"His viewpoint is ever interesting and his Quaker background will not entirely down even under the blows of the mining frontier. He missed few of the normal experiences of the time and his memoirs deserve a permanent place in Western history." Avery Craven

+ Books p12 Jl 27 '30 300w

"Though Mr. Pancoast perhaps has nothing new in the way of adventure, the story, like those of all the others who made the trip overland, will always have its appeal. . . It is not in any particular experience that this volume has interest to the general reader. What value it possesses is due to the picture presented of the manners, customs, usages, way of living, behavior of the people on the frontier."

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 28 '30 250w

"The very plainness and quaintness of Mr. Pancoast's style gives his story a vivid and contemporary quality which no amount of literary skill could successfully imitate." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p4 My 11 '30 1250w

"Nothing could better illustrate the odd jumble of humanity that took part in the California gold scramble than this journal of a Philadelphia Quaker who began as a drug clerk and wound up as a gold prospector, with riches and poverty alternating for his portion. . . The things that Friend Pancoast saw and had a part in seem hardly less strange to us of today than they must have seemed to the young diarist himself." W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:14 My '30 230w

St Louis 28:217 S '30

"His book has the double interest and value of an original document and a vivid tale."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:11 Jl 26 '30 400w

"The material of this book is interesting, but Mr Pancoast's keen appreciation of odd personages encountered on his wanderings, of unusual situations and his apparent realization, although unexpressed, that he had some valuable information to record, give the narrative delightful flavor."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Je 2 '30 680w

Times [London] Lit Sup p614 Jl 24 '30 320w

Reviewed by M. M. Quaife

Yale R n s 20:400 winter '31 150w

PANFEROV, F. Brusski; tr. from the Russian by Z. Mitrov and J. Tabrisky. 300p $2.50; pop ed $1.50 Int. pub. [7s 6d Lawrence]

Peasant life in contemporary Soviet Russia is the theme of the novel. Brusski is a village on the lower Volga in which a group of peasants start to build a communal farm, in spite of the opposition of the kulak, Yegor Stepanovitch, who belongs to the old régime.

Boston Transcript p3 O 18 '30 1050w

"Besides being valuable, especially at the present time, as what must be an authentic picture of a Soviet village, the novel is a work of art. It is distinguished by a certain simplicity and courage without sentimentality or heroics in the face of terrible realities." Herbert Kahn

+ Nation and Ath 47:118 Ap 26 '30 100w

"[This book] has a story, of sorts, but it is too spatulate. It spreads and spreads until the stage becomes so stuffed with actors that some push others into the orchestra and interrupt the music. . . Though the book continually loses dramatic force by insisting on sprawling, the pieces of beautiful reality that one finds, or, rather, that rise up and hit one in the face, make it well worth the trouble of reading."

+ — New Statesman 35:84 Ap 26 '30 450w

" 'Brusski' is filled with pages of boresome and unnecessary details; it develops with exasperating slowness; except for certain passages, it is dull." Alexander Nazaroff

— N Y Times p23 S 14 '30 180w

"As a piece of clever propaganda the story probably proved a great success in Soviet Russia. From a literary point of view it is open to criticism. . . The lengthy novel, divided into 'links' and subdivided into numerous paragraphs, lacks a continuous well developed plot of rising interest. Instead, we have a jumble of unimportant episodes and happenings, in which secondary characters, all more or less alike, talk as average, middle-class people of any country might, but in a way which Russian peasants never use." Nicholas Sergievsky

— Sat R of Lit 7:156 S 27 '30 950w

"Those who can bear the horrors will find many passages of beauty to reward them in this book, which is written in staccato style, and tells of the struggle of peasants to work and possess the land." B. E. Todd

Spec 144:675 Ap 19 '30 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p338 Ap 17 '30 270w

PANTER-DOWNES, MOLLIE (MRS CLARE ROBINSON). Storm bird. 364p $2.50 Putnam [7s 6d Murray]
30-5170

After the death of Florence, who for twenty-five years had been his faithful but unromantic wife, Martin Thorpe was rather dreary until he met Sara Garnet, a beautiful artist's model. Passionately in love Martin married Sara, altho he was twice her age. Sara, who had hoped for peace in the home of her wealthy husband, was happy until she met Chris, the husband of Martin's only daughter. The two young people fell recklessly in love, and only a stern decision on the part of Sara saved the situation.

"'Storm Bird' is choked in metaphor. But, amid the current flood of tricky writing, it is a real joy to come on a novel that is in essence poetic. . . If Miss Panter-Downes can curb her exuberance of metaphor and can straighten out a few clumsy tricks of style, her next novel will be of great importance."

+ — Books p23 Mr 30 '30 250w

"If the solution does not prove entirely satisfactory to all readers, it does prove the author's artistry—so like life is it, in its drastic simplicity." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 8 '30 600w

"'Storm Bird' is not a poor novel. It is so good that it ought to have been better."

+ — N Y Times p24 Mr 23 '30 350w

"Here is a story which captures the interest quickly, and is as quickly forgotten. It is a rather cheap story of sex urges and frustrations. The plot is too patterned and the details too selected, to give the illusion of reality. Yet it remains light entertainment."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:1075 My 24 '30 220w

"The story is told with competence and evident sincerity, but the author does little more than indicate—she certainly does not satisfactorily encompass—the tragic heights and depths the climax of her tale approaches."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1004 N 28 '29 200w

PAPINI, GIOVANNI. Laborers in the vineyard; tr. by Alice Curtayne. 262p $2 Longmans [7s 6d Sheed]
920 Italy—Biography 30-25444

In Signor Papini's world the only people worthy of admiration are saints and artists: those who imitate God, and those who imitate the works of God. So in this volume he speaks only of saints, or men who sought sanctity, and artists. Contents: Petrarch; Michelangelo Buonarroti; Giovanni Fattori; Oscar Ghiglia; Romano Romanelli; The evangelists; Saint Francis of Assisi; Jacopone da Todi; Saint Ignatius of Loyola; Joseph de Maistre; Alessandro Manzoni; Pius XI; Domenico Giuliotti; Cæsar and Virgil.

"These original sketches, brilliant as they are, suffer somewhat by being presented to us while our eyes are still dazzled by the magnificent fresco he painted in his Saint Augustine, for they are primarily significant, especially to those unfamiliar with many of the faces in this gallery of portraits, as an illustration of a stage in their author's spiritual evolution and as an introduction to his new literary method." Justin O'Brien

+ Bookm 72:201 O '30 320w

"There is a rumor that Papini has been growing fat about the waist. A few more labors in this vineyard and one will begin to fear that that is not the whole story." Arthur Livingston

— Books p25 O 26 '30 380w

Boston Transcript p4 N 26 '30 230w

"The unwarped reader will find in this book a new and pleasing Papini, more normal and balanced though no less original, widely informed on the world's best literature, an intelligent, outspoken, orthodox Catholic." J. McS.

+ Cath World 132:499 Ja '31 220w

N Y Evening Post p4d O 25 '30 100w

"If in 'Laborers in the Vineyard' we sometimes object to Papini's brazen audacity, we should remember that Shaw's is not a whit less caustic; and that if Papini has an axe to grind, the steel is worth the grinding." Dino Ferrari

+ N Y Times p5 S 21 '30 1600w

Reviewed by A. W. Porterfield

Outlook 156:144 S 24 '30 800w

St Louis 28:269 N '30

PAPINI, GIOVANNI. Saint Augustine; tr. by Mary Prichard Agnetti. 336p il $3 Harcourt
B or 92 Augustine, Saint, bp. of Hippo
30-17004

Papini, the convert-author of the life of Christ, writes the life story of another convert, Augustine, with whose desires as a man and ambitions as a theologian and mystic he can so thoroly sympathize. It is the story of how Augustine banished the evil of the body by the power of the soul. The biography is written in commemoration of the fifteenth centenary of the death of St Augustine.

Booklist 27:63 O '30

Bookm 71:446 Jl '30 550w

"In Papini's sesquimillennial biography of Saint Augustine the protagonists are two. One, Saint Augustine, the other Papini. Without any intent of sacrilege I am obliged to conclude that the one who turns out the more interesting, in the perspective of this volume, I mean, is Papini. As new light on the latest of Papini's spiritual and intellectual experiments it is very interesting. So far as this life of Saint Augustine is concerned, the occasional brilliant paragraph bears witness that, despite Papini's contempt for thought, he has not yet attained that utter stolidness which betokens sanctity. He has still some distance to go. Will he go it in the 'Life of the Virgin'?" Arthur Livingston

— + Books p3 Je 22 '30 1500w

"From an artistic standpoint the work is well done, and like Augustine, Papini is a rhetorician of no mean ability. He can paint with words, phrases and similes that even in translation show power." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Jl 5 '30 700w

"The most sympathetic reviewer might be hard put to it to determine the specific value of such a volume aside from its importance as an addition to the literature of apologetics. Since Signor Papini has no additional light to shed on Augustine the man, on the fond woman, his mother, who doted on him, on the irascible father who birched and cuffed him, and on the various teachers who misled him on the whole no more flagrantly than youth is misled today, we are further put to it to share in Signor Papini's rather introverted agitation. There is not the slightest doubt after reading the 'Confessions' that Augustine of Tagaste was a good deal of a prig. But Signor Papini's apologetic leaves us in some confusion as to why he was a saint." Eugene Löhrke

— Nation 131:158 Ag 6 '30 650w

Nation and Ath 48:21 O 4 '30 420w

Reviewed by Cuthbert Wright

New Repub 64:26 Ag 20 '30 280w

"Papini in this book has been able to correct some of the most evident defects of his style—that is, the superabundance and the tendency to eloquence—and has written a book for the most part simple and clear, in which he has traced with great ability and truth, although at times roughly, the life of a great passionale. He has considered himself bound not to hide any of Saint Augustine's faults or errors; indeed, one might say he had taken pains to accentuate his sensual and spiritual deviations to make the miracle of his conversion seem greater and more imposing." Giuseppe Prezzolini

+ N Y Evening Post p6m Ja 18 '30 1400w

"'St Augustine' is the first work from Papini's hand that we have seen since the popular life of Christ. If, as it has been suggested, he hopes to capture with this book a more intellectual audience than formerly, I am afraid he will be disappointed. This will appeal to those who wish to honor the approaching fifteenth centenary of St. Augustine's death, to those who are making their first acquaintance with the incidents of the great Doctor's life, and to those orthodox partisans who enjoy a fierce reiteration of the opinions they already hold; but I do not believe that it will appeal to the discriminating even among the devout." Gerald Sykes

— N Y Evening Post p8m Je 21 '30 900w

"Recommended to all who wish to study the exemplary life of a great churchman. . . What startles me is that Papini's story is so well balanced. It is sympathetic, of course, for Augustine 'steals affection.'" Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 Je 24 '30 550w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 Jl 2 '30 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:66 O '30

"The Papini treatment of Augustine's sexual experience is technically unsound. . . This book is in no sense a treatise in theological or philosophical history; in meaner hands it might easily have tried to be both. It is the story of a soul, as the preface tells us. But one is left wondering whether it is in all things the story of Augustine's soul or rather another chapter in the Christian sequel to that story of the soul that Papini told in 'Un Uomo Finito' nearly twenty years ago." C. F. Romayne

Sat R of Lit 6:1172 Jl 5 '30 1100w

" 'Saint Augustine' is more quietly and lucidly written than Papini's 'Life of Christ.' It lacks the fire and beauty of the earlier book but at times it shows brilliancy of style and a firm grasp of material, which makes for even and sane writing. He speaks often of Augustine's mysticism, yet the subject eludes him. One doubts whether Papini knows mystic experience himself or he would dwell more fully on it. His treatment of Augustine's literary output is excellent, especially his criticism of 'The City of God.' That chapter is thrilling and a nice piece of critical art. Also, his last chapter on the greatness of St Augustine is both suggestive and inspiring. Altogether the book is worth reading, and is perhaps the more interesting because the life and mind of Papini are so inextricably mingled with his story of the saint." E. M. J.

+ — Springf'd Republican p5e Jl 20 '30 900w

Times [London] Lit Sup p730 S 18 '30 350w

PARK, NO YONG. Making a new China; with an introd. by Henrik Shipstead. 308p $2.50 Stratford

951 China—History—Republic, 1912-. China —Politics and government. China—Foreign relations 29-25758

The first part of this book on the present day problems of China contains an exposition of the political, intellectual and industrial revolutions: the Nationalist movement, the student movement, and the labor movement. The second part contains a discussion of the international relations of China and the struggle for independence from foreign exploitation.

"His is hardly a book for scholars—though much in it is more accurate than the type of 'scholarship' which passes current in the foreign treaty-port newspapers—but it will be valuable for those who want to understand sympathetically the spirit of young China today."

+ Books p16 F 23 '30 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p74 My '30

"Mr. Park knows West and East. His information is comprehensive and ready. And he brings a fine realism to his task. He is no mere apologist. He gives a rapid, beautifully simple account of the violent career of the Chinese Republic, the social and industrial revolutions, and the fall into, and the difficult emergence out of, Western imperialism. The most persuasive quality of Mr. Park's book is its candor." Isidor Schneider

+ New Repub 61:116 D 18 '29 200w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 80:16 D '29 40w

Sat R of Lit 6:858 Mr 22 '30 450w

Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 30 '30 280w

PARKER, MRS CORNELIA (STRATTON). Watching Europe grow. 489p il $4 Liveright

914 Europe—Description and travel 30-13512

"This book represents the latest attempt to popularize European history for young readers. An historically-minded uncle takes his young nephew and niece on a three months' tour of Europe by aeroplane. Their itinerary is planned to include a number of historic places and to visit them in the order of their chronological importance, starting at the year One. In each place they imagine themselves to be living through the years which made it famous, and in this way they 'watch Europe grow' for twenty centuries."—Sat R of Lit

Cleveland Open Shelf p91 Je '30

"With its lively story, its wealth of historical background and its many aptly chosen illustrations this book should be as welcome to harassed parents as to imaginative youngsters in their early teens for whom it is written."

+ Current Hist 32:614 Je '30 80w

"The confusion which [the] combination of flippant modernity with the attempt to retell historic facts is likely to cause is appalling. . . The illustrations are numerous and well selected, but badly reproduced in many cases. The 12 to 16 year old girl for whom this book is planned will get far more from Anne Merriman Peck's 'Story Book Europe.'" A. T. Eaton

— N Y Times p17 Je 8 '30 220w

"One of the most entertainingly written travel books recently offered for popular consumption . . .The only fly in the whole delightful ointment is a certain laborious humor injected into the conversation of the three principals. This is tiresome, but an evil prevalent in many postwar travelogues. Here it is not excessively virulent."

+ — R of Rs 81:14 Je '30 150w

St Louis 28:216 S '30

"The importance of the goal which the author has set for herself cannot be denied, the general scheme of the book she has written is a fascinating one, but the result leaves much to be desired. . . The main criticism of the book is that it is too old for the young and too young for the old. To boys and girls who are young enough not to object to the childish and artificial style which Mrs. Parker uses, the vague chronology and sudden changes of locale will be almost meaningless. Those who are old enough to have acquired a knowledge of medieval and modern European history necessary to an appreciation of Uncle Mat's peripatetic comments will be irritated by the facetious conversations he carries on with his nephew and niece." Edward Pulling

— Sat R of Lit 6:1146 Je 21 '30 650w

World Tomorrow 13:277 Je '30 50w

PARKER, MRS DOROTHY (ROTHSCHILD). Laments for the living. 237p $2.50 Viking press [6s Longmans]

30-17714

Thirteen short stories and sketches, which originally appeared in the New Yorker, Vanity Fair and other publications. Contents: The sexes; Mr. Durant; Just a little one; New York to Detroit; The wonderful old gentleman; The mantle of Whistler; A telephone call: You were perfectly fine; Little Curtis; The last tea; Big blonde; Arrangement in black and white; Dialogue at three in the morning.

PARKER, DOROTHY—Continued
Reviewed by Edward Parker
Atlantic Bookshelf p52 D '30 50w
Booklist 27:65 O '30

"These stories—a few worked out in the round, more merely suggested by highlights and a few adroit strokes—have many of the qualities of the drink for which Manhattan is celebrated. A dash of sweetness, of bitters, of clear exhilaration; for a moment heat and cold and clarity, then a little vague sadness and the thought that all may not be well. Hence, I suppose, 'Laments for the Living.'" Mary Ross
Books p7 Je 15 '30 600w
Boston Transcript p2 Jl 12 '30 380w

"They are authentic satires, coated with laughter, with a tear slipping off the old heart as they are read. There is nothing false about any of their heart breaks. . . 'Laments for the Living' are brilliant prose. They seem even more important, more impressive in a book than they did in the various magazines in which they appeared, and that is certainly the acid test for short stories." Fanny Butcher
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p6 Je 21 '30 630w

"All are in her well-known vein whether the intent be humor or tragedy, constituting with the rest of her works a biting, satiric, and witty philosophy of despair. But the stories are too few and too slight to be seriously considered as more than a beginning which looks interesting."
Nation 131:75 Jl 16 '30 150w

"No one could write with such unhappy wit, no one could manage such a savage humor, who did not feel herself a blood sister to her victims, who did not also regard them as a pernicious race or odious little vermin. Dorothy Parker is very much of our day: the thrust of her wit is apt to tickle as it wounds; her most sympathetic gesture always has some horror in it." T. S. Matthews
+ New Repub 64:133 S 17 '30 500w
New Statesman 36:218 N 22 '30 180w

"O. Henry did not have all keys to the city—he had but one, the key of romance. And Dorothy Parker has but one key. As a guide, therefore, each has limitations. 'Laments for the Living' is sharply keen in so far as it goes. But unless Miss Parker can go beyond it, not necessarily in method, but at least in range, the end of the course is already visible. One volume of 'Laments' is admirable. Several would be insufferable."
+ — N Y Times p7 Je 15 '30 600w
Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p13 Je 13 '30 950w

"Of their kind, these sketches and stories are perfect. They are ephemeral in value, journalistic in style and strictly dated. . . Dorothy Parker's work is based on very sharp observation and is direct, unvarnished reporting. An obvious, somewhat superficial irony plays over it. It is more like the comment upon life as she sees it of a young person in a tight place than the urgent, impersonal satire or the pitying mockery of maturity." F. L. R.
+ Outlook 155:269 Je 18 '30 150w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30
Sat R 150:527 O 25 '30 150w
Reviewed by Gladys Graham
Sat R of Lit 6:1172 Jl 5 '30 600w
Springf'd Republican p7e S 21 '30 380w
Times [London] Lit Sup p860 O 23 '30 450w

PARKER, ERIC, and others. Fine angling for coarse fish. (Lonsdale lib. of sports, games and pastimes) 352p il $7 Lippincott [12s 6d Seeley]
799.1 Fishing

Following an introduction on the literature of coarse fishing, the authors take up, successively, the roach, dace, perch, rudd, tench, bream, gudgeon, carp, barbel, chug, pike, and eel, describing each and the methods of fishing them. The remaining chapters are devoted to fishing equipment, broadland fishing, match-fishing, a study of fish scales, fishery management, etc.

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 2 '30 200w
New Statesman 35:194 My 17 '30 120w
Times [London] Lit Sup p449 My 29 '30 1680w

PARKER, MAUDE. Secret envoy. 302p $2 Bobbs
30-8790

"The secret intrigues that go on behind closed doors in Washington, the wires pulled by Wall Street, the millions made by advance information: these form the thread of Miss Parker's novel of diplomatic life. The great New York concerns, according to her, have spies about the city, who go to parties, entertain lavishly, and find out what is happening. Of course the most useful of these are lovely ladies, and when Diane More, that very beautiful and talented society girl, found herself penniless, and responsible for an invalid brother, she easily allowed herself to be persuaded to undertake such a career."—Boston Transcript

"The author of 'Secret Envoy' writes with smoothness and assurance which testify to a sound knowledge of Washington life and of the wheels within wheels which make up its fascinating mechanism. She handles the story with fairness and an authentic touch; it is diverting and dramatic."
+ Books p10 Ap 20 '30 220w

"It is extremely amusing, and very interesting."
+ Boston Transcript p8 My 3 '30 380w

"'Secret Envoy' is light and amusing and, if not taken too seriously, may be useful in acquainting people more generally of the real importance of politics to the business world which affects to despise governments and attempts to use them."
+ N Y Times p8 My 4 '30 500w

PARKER, SETH, pseud. See Lord, P. H.

PARKES, HENRY BAMFORD. Jonathan Edwards; the fiery Puritan. 271p il $3.50 Minton
B or 92 Edwards, Jonathan 30-25511

This biography of the fiery Puritan who set his mark upon New England, transforming half its people from "healthy human beings to would-be saints", gives a striking picture of the society with whose sins Jonathan Edwards dealt and the controversies which he aroused.

Booklist 27:157 D '30

"Mr. Parkes's interpretation of his material is not always the inevitable, unquestionable one, but his opinion is always lively and interesting. He has been careful, too, to present the great Puritan in relation to his time. . . Mr. Parkes has written his biography for the general reader, not for the historian or the theologian; as a consequence, it is much too general, and much too dogmatic in some of its generalities for complete acceptance. One wishes that the author had been more generous in quotation from sources, had respected scholarship somewhat more and the 'new biography' somewhat less."
+ — Bookm 72:181 O '30 380w

"The new life of Edwards by Henry Parkes is sympathetic and enlightened. It does not go too intricately into the doctrinal points involved. It does as much as could well be done to bring the man out of his cloud of thought and to make him appear an actual person. It gives a lively account of the social, moral and intellectual condition of New England in Edwards's time. It is a good story well told." Carl Van Doren
+ Books p7 S 21 '30 850w
Reviewed by T. C. Richards
Boston Transcript p2 O 11 '30 1500w

Reviewed by E. F. Brown
Current Hist 33:vi N '30 280w

"Mr. Parkes has triumphed over no small difficulties in portraying the society in which Edwards lived without allowing him to dominate the scene. Except for one or two dramatic incidents Jonathan Edwards remains in the background: his career serves as a simple plot into which are woven various intimate and highly entertaining scenes of Puritan society. The theological and political histories of New England have created a largely mythical notion of how the Puritans behaved. Mr. Parkes has made an extensive study of their misbehaviors and in the light of his discoveries Jonathan Edwards and his contemporaries assume a decidedly fresh appearance." H. W. Schneider
+ Nation 131:584 N 26 '30 1400w

Reviewed by John Chamberlain
N Y Times p4 S 28 '30 1550w

"Mr. Parkes throws radiant light on all of Edwards's leading contemporaries, with especial reference to such men as Backus the Baptist, Hawley and Breck of general fame, the flexible Jeremiah Dummer, the eloquent but somewhat unpsychoanalyzed Whitefield, and the very Reverend Joseph Bellamy." A. W. Porterfield."
+ — Outlook 156:228 O 8 '30 550w
St Louis 28:302 D '30

PARKHURST, HELEN HUSS. Beauty; an interpretation of art and the imaginative life. 336p il $4.50 Harcourt

701 Esthetics. Art 30-13659

An interpretation of the allied arts and their mainspring, imagination, is carried forth in these chapters on the sources of art, esthetic substance and form, painting and sculpture, prose and poetry, architecture and music esthetic appreciation, etc. With many illustrations embodying specific esthetic principles.

Booklist 27:57 O '30

"In her rich and absorbing book Miss Parkhurst gives us not only an original simplification of esthetic theory but a piece of writing that is in itself a work of art, admirable in total structure and delightful in each detail. . . Though not bedizened, the style is jewelled, yet it moves steadily and easily onward in every sentence. Language can be put to few more difficult tasks than this of discriminating precisely between effects of beauty and tracing them toward their source. On page after page of this book that task is performed triumphantly." Odell Sheppard
+ Bookm 71:458 Jl '30 550w

Reviewed by H. M. Kallen
Books p6 Je 1 '30 830w
Boston Transcript p3 Ag 23 '30 600w

"This volume meets the major requirement of a work on aesthetics, being a thing of beauty itself. And more, for while there is no metaphysics in it, and although its psychology is not the doctrinaire sort, the author manages to leave the impression that by the mere analysis of the act of appreciation she has solved one of the perennially troublesome problems of philosophy." D. D. Zuver
+ Churchman p4 Ag 30 '30 200w

"For the presentation of a specific view of the nature of esthetic experience, one could hardly find a more smoothly readable book. . . The liveliness of her style occasionally lapses into the florid or the trite; the esthetic taste displayed sometimes becomes academic or a trifle too soft; the répertoire of traditional references is not sufficiently balanced by a thorough orientation in the work of the moderns. . . Nevertheless, the volume stands as a fine example of the speculative and allusive method of esthetics." Axton Clark
+ — N Y Times p12 Jl 6 '30 1600w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:66 O '30
St Louis 28:237 O '30

"Miss Parkhurst's book deals tangibly with the realities of esthetic experience, and the reader who desires to become more self-conscious in his reactions to the phenomena of art, and thus to understand art better, will find in it much that is instructive as a contribution to criticism or esthetic theory. It is not particularly cogent in phrase and it attains no new significance in generalization."
+ — Springf'd Republican p12 Je 26 '30 450w

PARKHURST, WINTHROP. Anatomy of music; a complete popular outline of musical theory. 200p $2.50 (8s 6d) Knopf

781 Music—Theory. Music—Manuals, textbooks, etc. 30-7204

"An amplification of a series of radio talks, the product constituting 'a complete popular outline of musical theory.' What is harmony, counter point, a fugue, a canon? What is the actual constitution of music? are the five questions answered. Generously interspersed with musical illustrations. Brief reading list."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Cleveland Open Shelf p53 Ap '30

"When the layman seeks knowledge about musical structure he is usually rebuffed by technicalities and baffled by explanations that he does not understand. Harmony and counterpoint seem to be recondite matters intelligible only through an innate musical sense. By such a seeker Mr. Parkhurst's book will be blessed. It removes the veils of pedantry, and shows that the arcana of tonal combinations are actually quite simple. Amateur listeners will be benefited by reading it, and prospective students of harmony will find it a lucid introduction."
+ Nation 131:160 Ag 6 '30 100w

"The book is not written down; yet it presents the material with an essential simplicity which puts it among the valid popularizations as against the trumpery specimens of which one finds so many. The stylistic treatment sustains interest, though some of its devices are a bit labored and the humor occasionally seems unnecessary. But there is a more serious flaw than this. Mr. Parkhurst's historical interpretations are often entirely too shaky." Axton Clark
+ — N Y Times p21 Mr 23 '30 800w

PARMENTER, CHRISTINE (WHITING) (MRS KENNETH R. PARMENTER). Dusty highway. 306p $2.50 Hale

29-25608

A pleasant, unsophisticated tale of young romance. It is about Nick and Gay Hastings, who, having fallen in love and married, are finding life quite a struggle with its days of dull routine, babies, and bills. In spite of the dustiness of their highway of romance, however, Nick and Gay find certain high points of compensating happiness.

"An engaging story with a completely satisfactory ending."
+ Bookm 71:xxvi Mr '30 70w

"This is one of those pleasantly inconsequential tales about a boy who is very young and a girl of about the same age. . . Mrs. Parmenter has done her work well. She knows just how much sentiment to put into things, but her manner of telling a story is terribly artless and obvious."
+ Boston Transcript p4 O 19 '29 350w
Cath World 131:636 Ag '30 50w

"A simple and well worn story, with melodramatic and shoddy situations. Mrs. Parmenter writes in regimented patterns, which possess neither the charm which might have alleviated the dull spots, nor the sense of humor which might have mitigated the melodramatic ones."
— N Y Times p7 D 29 '29 200w

PARRINGTON, VERNON LOUIS. Main currents in American thought. 3v v 3, Beginnings of critical realism in America, 1860-1920, completed to 1900 only. 429p $4 Harcourt

810.9 American literature—History and criticism. United States—Civilization. United States—Intellectual life (27-8440)

"The two volumes which brought Professor Parrington the Pulitzer Prize for History in 1928 carried his interpretation down from the Puritan heritage to the close of what he called 'the romantic revolution in America,' at the beginning of the Civil War period. . . The present volume is concerned with the triumphal emergence of a society based on material values. Like its predecessors, this volume considers the literature of the period covered in its relation to the ideas at war within the period. Though not completely elaborated (the individual estimates of numerous writers and other figures important to an understanding of the time had not been written), the outlines of Professor Parrington's thought are sufficiently clear, with the help of the memoranda included, to put the reader in possession of all its implications." —N Y Times

---

Booklist 27:198 Ja '31

"The volume as it stands is a superb fragment, to which is added a syllabus which must long tantalize the scholars who use the book, as all scholars concerned with American history and civilization must. In a sense the syllabus is quite as important as the completed sections of the book. Those cover ground which has already been studied by other historians, though by none with Parrington's searching use of all the documents. The syllabus is a map of regions which have heretofore been foggily examined. . . If he had lived to finish this third volume it would have been the best treatment of these matters ever written. Even as a fragment it is still the best." Carl Van Doren

+ Books p4 N 30 '30 750w

Christian Science Monitor p9 N 15 '30 480w

"One may well regret that the author did not live to complete his great study of American thought, but even in its present form it is a stimulating and valuable contribution towards an evaluation of American intellectual history." E. F. Brown

+ Current Hist 33:iv D '30 320w

"Professor Parrington's work will stand unquestionably as a vital and original contribution to our cultural history. No critic, it may be ventured, can henceforth work in the same field without debt to the author." J. D. A.

+ N Y Times p1 N 9 '30 1300w

"Unfortunately it is fragmentary, and even the completed essays lack the convincing character of those in the first volume. But while not the capstone to his life work, this book again reveals how much American criticism lost by Parrington's early death." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p14 O 23 '30 550w

Outlook 156:468 N 19 '30 80w

"Parrington in these three volumes offers the largest view of American culture we possess. His criticism is informed and in perspective. He is no respecter of persons, old or new. The view he urges is perhaps too predominantly economic; he was alien in thought to our modern psychology of individuals. But he had scope—and we need scope!" Leon Whipple

+ Survey 65:396 Ja 1 '31 450w

PARRISH, ANNE (MRS CHARLES ALBERT CORLISS). Floating Island. 265p il $3 Harper 30-28183

Once there was a doll house, complete with the following family: Mr and Mrs Doll, William Doll, Annabel Doll, Baby Doll, Dinah the cook, and Lobby, Chicky, Finny, and Pudding, the last four being plaster foodstuffs entirely. The doll house was sent to Elizabeth, who lived in the tropics, and the house and its inmates suffered a disastrous shipwreck on Floating Island, where most of the interesting events of the story took place.

Booklist 27:214 Ja '31

"It is far and away the most spontaneous, childlike tale of the year. Any little girl who likes dolls will make Floating Island her own." K. G. Landon

+ Bookm 72:244 N '30 300w

"It is not only an irresistibly funny book, but one, as we might have anticipated, filled with beauty, for, while books are seldom both funny and beautiful, that is not too much to expect of the writing of Anne Parrish. Children will surely claim this book, text and pictures, as their own. The big pictures are drawn by Anne Parrish, the little ones, she tells us, by Mr. Doll. Both artists have an inimitable humor." D. P. Lathrop

+ Books p8 O 26 '30 750w

Boston Transcript p5 N 12 '30 300w

"Anne Parrish has already given ample evidence of her power to visualize inanimate objects, but the way in which she here galvanizes into life black china moustaches, jointed arms and legs, a piano with four white keys and two black ones, among a variety of other objects, is nothing short of extraordinary. If at times one is a little too conscious of the author at the expense of the characters, as in some of the footnotes, some new irresistible quirk always brings Mr. or Mrs. Doll, William, Annabel, or Dinah again to the foreground. Their adventures are narrated with plausibility and humor, and it is at all times difficult to say who is having the most fun—author, illustrator, characters, or reader."

+ Nation 131:556 N 19 '30 150w

Reviewed by Nancy Evans

N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 200w

"The book is not only amusing but beautifully written; the descriptions of the various forms of tropical life glow with light and color. In her unique use of frequent footnotes in which she puts things she wants her readers to know, but which do not belong in the Doll's story and in Mr. Doll's headings for his drawings, with postscripts by Mrs. Doll, the author has found a way of seeming to talk directly to her child audience. A book for which one is tempted to prophesy a permanent place with best imaginative literature for children 8 to 12 and older readers as well." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p11 N 9 '30 400w

"The narrative has spontaneity and gaiety, and the kind of high spirits that is likely to communicate itself to the youthful reader. We doubt, however, whether it will be the child who will be Miss Parrish's most appreciative critic, for though he will enjoy he will less fully recognize than will his elders the occasional satirical turn of Miss Parrish's humor, the faithfulness of her depiction, and the fertility of her fancy."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:490 D 27 '30 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1043 D 4 '30 150w

PARRISH, ANNE (MRS CHARLES ALBERT CORLISS). Methodist faun. 334p $2.50 Harper 29-20108

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Cleveland Open Shelf p30 F '30

Nation and Ath 46:682 F 15 '30 160w

"Miss Parrish may do very well if she ever discovers a theme large enough to subdue her ingenuity and to compel her both to think and to feel herself into it." E. S.

— + New Statesman 34:444 Ja 11 '30 600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:86 D '29

Pratt p41 summer '30

"From one point of view 'The Methodist Faun' is not a success. The 'faun' never comes to life. But as a study in a hopeless and desperate passion it takes a high place among contemporary novels; while as an account of society in a small American town it is uniformly diverting." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 149:54 Ja 11 '30 750w

"Miss Parrish begins well, and her comedy is bright and malicious, but gradually the blight of her pitying approbation grows upon Clifford Hunter, and he becomes less and less interesting. She takes him to her bosom to spite the small town; whereas a satirist ought to put his claws into everyone. However, swallow her sentimentality, recognize her snobbery, and The Methodist Faun is an entertaining book, a considerable advance on All Kneeling, her previous novel." V. S. Pritchett
+ — Spec 144:64 Ja 11 '30 400w

"Miss Parrish is an eminently competent reporter, but this time what she has to report is scarcely worth while."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p80 Ja 30 '30 250w
Wis Lib Bul 25:413 D '29

PARROTT, MRS KATHERINE URSULA. Strangers may kiss. 373p $2 Cape [7s 6d Shaylor]
30-20356

"Not even marriage nor lovers could make Lisbeth forget the man she began to care for at seventeen. Written by the author of 'Ex-Wife.' "—Publishers' Weekly

For biographical sketch of the author see N Y World p5m Ag 17 '30

Reviewed by E. R. Richardson
Bookm 72:74 S '30 320w

" 'Strangers May Kiss' has a bareness, a restrained simplicity of style which make it more upright than 'Ex-Wife.' It has its kernel of truth, a reality into which you can bite. . . But the tragic implications of the book are not justified. It has too rich a mixture of sorrow. You cannot swallow it. Your deep instinct tells you that such immaturity, such inability to compromise with life, such willful wallowing in despair can never attain the dignity of human tragedy." V. P. Ross
— + Books p3 Ag 3 '30 750w
Boston Transcript p5 N 22 '30 150w

"The book is honest and sincere. Her people are real. One meets them in New York—restless, distorted, shoddy. But just as one avoids them in real life, one's instinct is also to keep clear of them in fiction."
Nation 131:228 Ag 27 '30 100w

Reviewed by K. C. Tomlinson
Nation and Ath 48:334 D 6 '30 100w

"The perfect sentimental defense of the Woman Who Pays." T. S. Matthews
— New Repub 64:213 O 8 '30 150w

" 'Strangers May Kiss' is a crisp and vital story, told swiftly and with neatness. But the tragedy of the conclusion is heaped up rather too conscientiously. Lisbeth's misfortunes are entirely fortuitous and hence meaningless. But the story, while it is thus rendered artistically ineffective, is none the less entertaining and readable."
+ — N Y Times p7 Ag 24 '30 550w

"The plot and incident are obviously machine-made, but Miss Parrott has managed to infuse the story with telling action and reaction, frustration and fulfillment." Tom Davin
— + N Y World p4m Ag 31 '30 350w

"The old-fashioned kind of sentimental rubbish that used to be known as 'servant girl literature' has not, as some assert, disappeared from the literary scene. It has merely changed its form to meet modern conditions. An excellent example of it is Ursula Parrott's Strangers May Kiss. The sentimentality is so thick you have to scrape it off your fingers before you turn the pages. We predict large sales for this book, which is nothing less than Laura Jean Libbey, The Duchess and Florence Barclay brought up to date."
— Outlook 155:548 Ag 6 '30 170w

"It is rare to read a novel which reveals so faithfully a woman's thoughts and feelings about the love of her life. . . Miss Parrott's method is in some ways similar to that of Colette. Her books are perhaps more true to life, but they are for this reason not such good art."
+ — Spec 145:859 N 29 '30 120w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1062 D 11 '30 400w

PARRY, SIR CHARLES HUBERT HASTINGS,
[2] bart. Evolution of the art of music; ed. with add. chapters, by H. C. Colles. 483p il $3.50 Appleton
780.9 Music—History and criticism 30-11149

"H. C. Colles, who will be remembered as editor of the latest issue of 'Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians' has prepared Sir Hubert Parry's already classical 'Evolution of the Art of Music' for republication. He has not touched the original text; he has not attempted to bring it up to date by writing a kind of twentieth century sequel, but by prefacing the volume with a brief 'Survey: 1893-1929,' and by supplementing the whole with two chapters of moderate and salutary observations on recent musical developments."—N Y Times

Booklist 26:409 Jl '30

"In its own field Dr. Parry's 'Evolution of the Art of Music' has been as much of a classic as Darwin's 'Origin of the Species,' which was, indeed, indirectly its inspiration. Published in 1893, the publication was preceded by nine years of research, of collecting and sorting out folk tunes, melodies from the Orient, from savage tribes, tracing 'the evolution of music from the chromatic cries of the Australian aborigines to the finale of 'Die Walkuere.' "
+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 4 '30 210w

"Though almost forty years have passed since its first issue, and a dozen since the death of the author, Parry's work retains its value and interest. His serious musicianship and broad erudition enabled him to write a book in which correlations and developments are skillfully traced. The result is a kind of history of music not in externals but in essence—a quite fascinating affair. As the editor says, it remains 'one of the foundations of English musical literature.' " Axton Clark
+ N Y Times p19 O 12 '30 800w

Reviewed by Grace Overmyer
N Y World p5m Ag 17 '30 650w

"An excellent and scholarly study, containing much valuable critical comment." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:668 Ap 23 '30 50w

PARRY, SIR EDWARD ABBOTT. Queen Caroline. 353p il $6 Scribner [21s Benn]
B or 92 Caroline Amelia Elizabeth, queen consort of George IV 30-25150

A biography of Caroline, consort of George IV, king of England, written by an English lawyer in an attempt to prove that she was innocent of the charges brought against her by the king. "There is already a small but satisfactory body of literature about her, showing either that she was entirely blameless or, at any rate, far less guilty than her husband. Sir Edward Parry has added to it the best case that has yet been made for her defense, but he has still left a shred or two of doubt and some grounds for a reasonable incredulity." (Books)

"Sir Edward Parry has written a biography in which are all the facts. It is not written with charm, and in it there is a good deal of unnecessary repetition, but all is there for anyone who wants to know the essential points of this cause célèbre. There is also much interesting comment on the great political figures of the time, but it is odd that a member of the English bench should not have been able to marshal his material more dramatically than has Sir Edward Parry. He misses again and again perfectly legitimate effects, effects which would have greatly clarified the narrative and given greater life to the chief protagonists." Grenville Vernon

PARRY, E. A.—Continued

+ — Bookm 72:185 O '30 400w

"The book is not loaded down with documents and is always interesting, and it is a humorous, kindly and learned statement of Caroline's case, with some facts added from documents not used before." F. K. Brown

+ Books p22 N 23 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p5 D 6 '30 1200w

"The Queen's gaiety and courage have always commanded admiration; they have completely captivated Sir Edward. The reader of his excellently told narrative will scarcely miss the infection." Kingsley Martin

+ Nation and Ath 47:446 Jl 5 '30 550w

"Caroline's story is told by a distinguished writer in a distinguished manner. Sir Edward's style is direct, brilliant and forceful. His material is perfectly selected and overflows with a sympathy that is the outcome of serious thought and balanced judgment. Sir Edward pleads his lady's cause gallantly." Rosalind Ivan

+ N Y Times p14 D 28 '30 1100w

St Louis 28:273 N '30

Reviewed by Shane Leslie

Sat R 149:692 My 31 '30 750w

"Judge Parry who has made up a very readable and diverting book about the lady, takes a favourable view [of her]. Certainly Judge Parry pleads capably; as a trained lawyer he sets out the points in his client's favour with adroit skill. If at the end one is left just a little in doubt, why, that makes the case more intriguing."

+ Spec 145:288 Ag 30 '30 300w

"Sir Edward Parry is by no means pedantically legal, rigorously judicial in his manner of writing; but he is learned in the law and he is shrewd."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p493 Je 12 '30 750w

PARRY, EDWIN SATTERTHWAITE. Betsy [2] Ross, Quaker rebel. 252p il $2 Winston

B or 92 Claypoole, Mrs Elizabeth (Griscom) Ross Ashburn 30-32617

An account of the life of Betsy Ross, maker of the first American flag. The book is based on original documents, one of them a diary written by a Revolutionary soldier while in prison. The author of the book is a great-great-grandson of Betsy Ross.

"Mr. Parry tells Betsy Ross's story with a full setting of the stirring times in which she lived. His pages are full of the events and the personalities of the Revolutionary War as his heroine knew about them, so that her figure stands out clearly against the background of the period."

+ N Y Times p18 D 28 '30 320w

"A book which, though not written for young people, is so direct, simple and story-like that it will please young lovers of biography." F. L. R.

+ Outlook 156:667 D 24 '30 170w

PARSONS, MRS ALICE (BEAL). John Merrill's pleasant life. 268p $2.50 Dutton

30-5338

The story of John Merrill's life and the psychological phases thru which he traveled from the time when the great man Castle first took an interest in him, to the day of his patron's death.

Booklist 26:314 My '30

"A sensitiveness to the beauties of nature and the intricacies of the human mind, combined with a style that is rapidly maturing, make Mrs. Parson's second novel a book to be read with real pleasure."

+ Bookm 71:215 Ap '30 150w

"Although 'John Merrill's Pleasant Life' will not cause much excitement, it must be appraised as fine distinguished work." Thayer Hobson

+ Books p5 F 16 '30 1000w

Cleveland Open Shelf p126 S '30

"Mrs. Parsons has told it with irony, with clarity—and without pity. The result may be a book that moves the mind more than the heart, but it is a book worth reading in spite of that." Dorothy Van Doren

Nation 130:368 Mr 26 '30 550w

"The author's predilection for flying to deep talk on every occasion reduces [her hero] and all her characters to the measure of her own particular ability in that deep-conversational direction. Their talk covers all the ground all the time and could not bear to do less."

— New Statesman 35:413 Jl 5 '30 180w

"In her second novel Mrs. Parsons has taken tremendous strides forward, and has achieved [the] unity, coherence and emphasis lacking in her first. There she was feeling out her capabilities; here she has found them. . . She is penetrating and deft in her characterizations. She has a feeling for people and places that communicates itself to the reader as his own. In addition, she has acquired the ability to focus. The result is true craftsmanship."

+ N Y Times p6 F 23 '30 620w

Reviewed by Margery Latimer

N Y World p11m Mr 9 '30 750w

"The story seems to us ragged and inconclusive." W. R. Brooks

— Outlook 154:269 F 12 '30 100w

"What tale there is, is awkwardly presented. Past action is arbitrarily introduced at queer and unexpected moments according to the whim of the author; events of importance are confined to interludes to make room for long passages of description and revery; characters are inexplicably dropped. The scale of the book is bad, with details of intimate scenes reading much the same as the narrative that covers long periods of time and experience."

— Sat R of Lit 6:124 Jl 19 '30 230w

Reviewed by B. E. Todd

Spec 145:106 Jl 19 '30 200w

"The story, true to its title, is pleasant enough. But Miss Parsons fails to give substance to her characters. . . Again and again the characters seem to be invented, not created, or even artfully contrived, as in a fantasy or satire. The dialog is literary and abstract."

— Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 2 '30 150w

"The story is without overtones; it is inconclusive and never completely clear, like life itself. But even when it is beautifully written—and Alice Beal Parsons often writes with skill and beauty—the book lacks life's vigor and depth. To this reader, at least, it was disappointing, after the sharp and eager questing of Woman's Dilemma, and the richness and vitality of The Insider. It is not a poor novel, of course, either in structure or in writing. But from Alice Beal Parsons one does not expect 'just a book.' " Beulah Amidon

— + Survey 64:50 Ap 1 '30 250w

PARSONS, THOMAS RICHARD. Materials of life; a general presentation of biochemistry. 288p $3 Norton

612.015 Physiological chemistry. Biological chemistry 30-13990

A popular presentation of bio-chemistry—the chemistry of the human body.

Booklist 27:54 O '30

Bookm 71:vi Ag '30 100w

"Professor Parsons writes in the quiet style of an old-fashioned teacher, much absorbed in his specialty. There is no philosophy, no broad outlook, no enthusiasm for research, and no romancing. . . But an hour a day devoted to this book for a fortnight should keep the doctor away and free many a family from food fads and much plausible quackery." Gerald Wendt

+ Books p29 S 28 '30 550w

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 19 '30 550w

"Through oversimplification the book has become somewhat thin; the many descriptions of experiments possible to amateurs do not compensate for the lack of reports of experimental findings. The net effect of the book is to give one a series of bits of information but no sense of unity of viewpoint or direction in the science of biochemistry." Ida Craven

— N Y Evening Post p8m Je 14 '30 100w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:32 Jl '30

"After reading this well-printed book with genuine interest, we are in the position of knowing much more exactly a good many things about our bodies and their constituents, which we knew in a vague, general way before. Mr. Parsons brings our information to a sharp focus." Charles Johnston

+ N Y Times p31 S 28 '30 750w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 155:148 My 28 '30 50w

St Louis 28:210 S '30

"This work may be classed among the successful attempts to interpret a modern science in terms which any reader can understand. There is no attempt to dress up a scientific subject in incongruous borrowed finery. The author succeeds because he knows the essentials of his subject and presents them simply and clearly."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 My 26 '30 600w

Survey 64:448 Ag 15 '30 20w

PARTRIDGE, BELLAMY. Pretty pickle. 364p $2 Brewer

30-21768

A novel in a decidedly light vein which attempts to explain in detail what happened when George Harrington, son of the great pickle manufacturer, tried to sidestep his responsibilities in the matter of the pickle industry.

"'A Pretty Pickle' is brightly written and amusing. But the characters are only figures dancing on a string."

— Books p10 Ag 3 '30 250w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 S 7 '30 120w

Boston Transcript p3 S 20 '30 500w

"Mr. Partridge writes brightly and entertainingly, but too often allows the element of humor to lapse into knockabout clowning." E. C. B.

+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 16 '30 100w

Reviewed by Tom Davin

N Y World p5m Ag 24 '30 160w

"Pleasantly written foolery." W. R. Brooks

Outlook 155:630 Ag 20 '30 120w

"Mr. Partridge's facility suggests that he might write a good light novel, but his present offering sounds like a movie scenario novelized after it was rejected in Hollywood. Some of the sequences—e. g., the bottle of nitroglycerine overlooked in the sweater pocket—might be effective on the screen; but as fiction there is not enough in it to be worth the time it takes to read it."

— Sat R of Lit 7:59 Ag 16 '30 100w

PASCAL, ERNEST. Age for love. 291p $2.50 Harcourt

30-8163

Jean Hurd, who had a job with a New York literary agency, grew bored with authors and editors, and fell in love with Dudley Crome, young business man. After two months of married life she discovered that his interests and friends were not hers. A baby did little to bring the young couple together. Jean hired nurses for it and went back to work. She still had an ideal of love—and when she met Justin Marsh that ideal seemed fulfilled. She went to live with Justin, and Dudley refused to let her have custody of the baby. The story, which ends on a note of compromise in Justin's death, is an indictment of the marriage based solely on physical attraction.

"Mr. Pascal is only a craftsman. He knows how to turn out a book which prickles your nerves without stirring the substratum of your emotion."

— Books p10 Ap 6 '30 350w

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 23 '30 280w

"Mr. Pascal has written an honest and thought-provoking book."

+ Nation 130:605 My 21 '30 180w

"Mr. Pascal has an undoubted gift for characterization. His ability to infuse his characters with reality is revealed not only in the creation of Jean and Dudley, but in every one of the numerous individuals who enter, no matter how casually, their lives."

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 20 '30 450w

"Ernest Pascal is a fine craftsman. He has a fine style, with a change of pace well suited to the movement of the piece he is playing." Bellamy Partridge

+ N Y World p11m Mr 30 '30 260w

"Pascal seems at times a very interesting writer. He catches some of the frustration that is inherent in his characters, and epitomizes it in brief bits of writing of considerable brilliance and emotional power. But he can also be sentimental, and the book as a whole gives the impression of thinness of material."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:970 Ap 19 '30 460w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 27 '30 320w

PASLEY, FRED D. Al Capone; the biography of a self-made man. 355p $2.50 Washburn

B or 92 Capone, Alphonse. Crime and criminals—Chicago. Chicago—Social conditions

30-29453

A newspaper man tells the life story of the big man of the Chicago underworld, including much material that has never been published before.

Bookm 72:iv O '30 200w

"This is far and away the best picture of the Big Shot that ever has been put between covers. Mr. Pasley, a Chicago newspaper man who has been around a long time, gives us a vast wealth of names, dates, measurements, quotations, descriptions, documents and an occasional pertinent opinion. . . He hasn't written a great book; in it appear stretches of writing that could be improved; it is far from orderly in arrangement, a fault which is probably inherent in the material; it limps in spots, and yet it has the stuff." Stanley Walker

+ — Books p2 S 28 '30 550w

"'Al Capone' is the best book, either fiction or fact, that this reader has ever read about the gangster business in Chicago. It is meticulously complete with details, with casual but pertinent facts that give it an authenticity that makes the reader tingle with excitement." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p11 S 27 '30 320w

"There is no slightest detail of Capone's public career that has escaped his memory and recording. But Mr. Pasley has really written a book that is far more than a history of Capone or even of the Chicago gang killings. He has put together here the best textbook on conditions in the modern American city and the causes of bad government and lawlessness that has ever appeared. The book is the work of a daily journalist, and it reads that way. It is scrappy; it is jazzy; it jumps about, back, forward and sideways, in a fashion to drive a professor of prose composition to distraction. But it tells its story. And it will scare the daylights out of any reader who has sense enough to perceive the relation of this story to the future of democratic government in our cities." Paul Hutchinson

+ Christian Century 47:1348 N 5 '30 1750w

PASLEY, F. D.—Continued

"It is, properly, not a biography at all. Rather it is a colorful, dramatic, kaleidoscopic super feature story, written in a facile and free journalese, by an expert rewrite man. All of the facts are here—and many, many things that are not facts—but no man. Its merits are those of the front page. It is timely, it is interesting, and it is certainly exciting, but it is all on the surface." Roy Chanslor

+ — N Y Evening Post p12 S 27 '30 500w

"[The story] is told dramatically and unreservedly but not indignantly. Perhaps the Chicago situation has passed beyond so ingenuous an emotion as indignation." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p10 O 26 '30 550w

"Now comes a disturbing and terrifying book to blast our smug complacency. It is not especially original or even very new; it is a compilation of facts and of very recent events. It contains little that you have not read before in yesterday's newspaper. But the logical presentation of these facts, the suggestions between the lines, are enough to freeze the marrow in one's bones. It is called Al Capone. Actually it is the story of our personal, civic and national shame." Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 S 17 '30 950w

"This is one of the most amazing books ever written. All Americans at all interested in their own country should read it and ponder. It is choice Americana: an astonishing carnival of rapacity, greed, corruption, and hypocrisy. There is a good account of the Lingle affair, and there are many other stories which have never before appeared in print or have had new light thrown on them by Mr. Pasley. But there is too much. Many of the stories Mr. Pasley tells have been told by Edward Sullivan, James O'Donnell Bennett, and also by John Bright in his excellent life of Big Bill Thompson." W. R. Burnett

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:240 O 18 '30 850w

PASMA, HENRY KAY. Close-hauled. 312p $2.50 Stokes

B or 92 Seafaring life 30-9098

The autobiography of a man born in the Dutch province of Friesland, who as a boy went to sea in a Dutch sailing vessel trading to the North Sea ports, and later came to America with his family, went thru college and theological school and entered the ministry. The major part of the book is concerned with memories of his boyhood and his experiences on the sea.

Booklist 27:65 O '30

"The book is naive rather than rugged, and had its author continued to follow the sea he might have written it with a less 'literary' romanticism. But the picture of his childhood in Frisia has a moving reality, and the story of his first voyage to the Baltic ports, which alone consumes more than a third of the whole book, is a fine picture of life in the North Sea coasting trade of a generation ago."

+ — Books p18 Ap 27 '30 250w

"No part of the story is more intensely interesting than are those chapters describing his life after he came to America, revealing how the United States appeared to this Frisian boy who had sailed the seas, and how he managed to secure a college education in America."

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 17 '30 320w

"The story of his adventures is told with a fine flavor of salt, and a real gift for language." M. S. Ernst

+ Churchman p28 Ag 2 '30 80w

"The book is admirably planned and most excellently written, and even if it is consciously literary it is very delightful and one can readily understand why it delighted the late Edward Bok, another Americanized Dutchman, who contributed an introduction." Rosalind Ivan

+ N Y Times p11 Jl 20 '30 500w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 250w

PATCH, EDITH MARION. Holiday meadow. 165p il $2 Macmillan

590 Natural history 30-26565

A collection of nature stories for children about Holiday meadow and the birds, animals, insects and flowers that flourished there.

Booklist 26:361 Je '30

"In story form simple enough for quite young readers it contains sufficient information to create new interest in country rambles and to rouse desire for further exploration and discovery. The photographic illustrations add much to the reality of the tales." M. W. Bianco

+ Books p8 My 18 '30 130w

Reviewed by A. L. Shea

Chicago Daily Tribune p12 Ap 5 '30 50w

Cleveland Open Shelf p136 N '30

" 'Holiday Meadow' will be one of the most popular of Edith M. Patch's excellent nature books for the younger children. . . Children from 8 to 10 will enjoy the book. The illustrations are excellent in themselves, but suffer from poor reproduction." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p19 Mr 30 '30 180w

Outlook 155:345 Jl 2 '30 20w

"Few children could read this book without hearing some answering echo in their hearts, especially if they have fortunately met with such scenes in their own experiences." Townsend Scudder III

+ Sat R of Lit 6:906 Ap 5 '30 150w

PATERSON, MRS ISABEL. Road of the gods. 264p $2.50 Liveright

30-8168

"The setting is Thuringia in the first century B.C., the years immediately preceding the arrival in the German forests of Rome's conquering legions. The young lovers are Hoath and Greda, priest son of the tribal High Priest and granddaughter of the 'strange woman,' the tribe's Washer of the Dead, a Mediterranean courtesan who has been the High Priest's mistress. The children's graceful, touching story is played against the more lurid one of their parents."—Outlook

Booklist 26:314 My '30

Bookm 71:217 Ap '30 280w

"Although there is never a static moment in the story, there is a lack of fire in the telling. One is interested by the action, but not aroused emotionally to the point of forgetting everything else. Even the most dramatic incidents are read intellectually. It is a book for either the very naive or the very sophisticated. The former will enjoy it and not know why; the latter will be grateful for an author too civilized to use either incense to deaden or sounding brasses to excite the senses away from an appreciation of the richness of life and reality." Thayer Hobson

Books p5 Mr 16 '30 1100w

" 'The Road of the Gods' is outside the strictly historical field and deals with primitive peoples. But through her ability in realistic writing and the vivid, lovable characters she creates, Mrs. Paterson will give many readers their first realization of a kinship with the more primitive and half mythical peoples . . . I believe modern young people will like these stories. They cannot fail to find reflected in the courageous self-reliant lovers their own zest for the great adventures of life." Mabel Williams

+ Books p8 Jl 6 '30 550w

"Now there is what I call a piece of absolutely pure literature, perfect belles lettres—if the old fashioned term can be revived for a work that really deserves it. It has the simplicity and sincerity, the art without artifice, of an archaic Greek statue. Its tones are as cool and green as the great forest where its scene is laid. Its language is so completely without stylistic self-consciousness that only on second thought does it occur to one that this crystalline medium is something worth looking at as well as something to look through."

+ Christian Century 47:499 Ap 16 '30 200w

N Y Times p7 Mr 16 '30 650w

"There is a subtle power here, a power to evoke the past in terms of the present without the slightest clashing of gears. This is my idea of the way historical romance should be written." Bellamy Partridge

+ N Y World p11m Mr 16 '30 400w

"Isabel Paterson's new novel is a good story and a charming piece of writing, but it is not a rich, stirring novel like her Singing Season. . . Miss Paterson writes delightfully, and her books are lodestones capable of drawing this reviewer any day into Mediæval Spain or Tudor England. But not into barbarian Germany."

+ — Outlook 154:466 Mr 19 '30 200w

"It is a lively story, bright with young love. . . Isabel Paterson unlike Gertrude Atherton in her Greek historical novels, indicates no 'sources.' This seems as much due to unconcern as to the ingenuity of art in concealing learning. She is content to let her pleasant brook dash on regardless of where it rose." A. C. E. Allinson

Sat R of Lit 6:917 Ap 12 '30 600w

"A picturesque romance, not entirely persuasive, but made vigorous in the telling."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 13 '30 280w

PATRICK, DIANA, pseud. (MRS DESEMEA [NEWMAN] WILSON). Gather the stars! 288p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Hutchinson]

30-1704

"Miss Patrick delicately traces the emotional excursion of a charming English wife, Laurel Guest, who sows one last delightful and moderately wild oat near the Lakes of Killarney. In a few breathless months, in fact, this remarkably lucky and gifted lady finds the lover of her dreams, the wealth of her desires, the divorce she has craved, and even great expectations of the child who will bless her mellow and declining years."—N Y Times

Bookm 71:xxvi Ap '30 80w

"'Gather the Stars' sees rather deeply into the feminine heart, and probes the inner springs of human emotion. It is modern in mood, without the excessive glitter which so many novelists deem inseparable from that mood. It tells its story competently, and with discernment."

+ Books p14 Mr 16 '30 200w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p7m Ja 18 '30 80w

"'Gather the Stars!' is smoothly and cleverly written to a sure formula. . . It is a perennial type of romantic novel, which in matters of style, phrasing and technique, bears evidence of the marked improvements in this type of fiction during the past decade."

+ — N Y Times p25 F 9 '30 250w

N Y World p11m Ja 26 '30 330w

"The very familiarity of this theme will give it intensity or triteness according to treatment. Here Miss Patrick has attempted the fashionable stream of consciousness method without being able to sustain it through complicated action. It yields only a piecing together of details of post-war society which do not contribute any illusion of life to the narrative. The composition of the whole remains melodrama."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:971 Ap 19 '30 280w

Times [London] Lit Sup p824 O 17 '29 280w

PATRICK, DIANA, pseud. (MRS DESEMEA [NEWMAN] WILSON). Outpost of Arden. 352p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Hutchinson]

30-22753

Tells the story of the love of Geoffrey Checyl for a pretty housemaid employed at his ancestral home, Checyl Court, and the outcome of that love in the next generation.

Books p12 D 21 '30 180w

N Y Times p36 D 7 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p436 My 22 '30 350w

PATRICK, GEORGE ZINOVEI JULES. Popular poetry in soviet Russia. 289p $2.50 Univ. of Cal.

891.7 Russian poetry 29-27393

A history and anthology of the work of poets from the Russian peasantry and the city proletariat since the Revolution. Most of the poets represented are not products of a formal education; hence their work may be taken as an expression of the thoughts and ideals of the Russian masses, rather than as significant works of art. Professor Patrick discusses the origin, development and spirit of contemporary Russian poetry, giving examples from the writings of the poets, together with brief biographical sketches.

Boston Transcript p4 D 14 '29 150w

"The expression of a people will surely be revealed in poetry, but the artistic impulse may be swamped in the heat of instigating fires. So, in the case of these examples, one finds culture lacking and sweetness and haunting rhythms replaced by something of a wild, pagan energy. The treatise on Russian poetry explains in full and traces minutely the progress of the whole subject—indicating the response of the worker to his craft, its resulting verse, and so forth. George Z. Patrick shows himself to be a serious scholar, and there is no reason why this should not be ranked a valuable standard work."

+ Christian Science Monitor p7 Ja 25 '30 170w

"How hopelessly far from real poetry, all this official propaganda stuff is! Indeed, closing Mr. Patrick's book, one feels that if this Soviet attempt to create a State-controlled class literature has so far proved anything, it is that State control is an all-killing curse in art."

— N Y Times p7 Je 1 '30 660w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:34 Ap '30

St Louis 28:49 F '30

"Mr. Patrick's versions are not remarkable for a high degree of poetic skill—all things considered, it would be unfair to look for that—but his range is a wide one and he has included a number of expressive and interesting poems to illustrate his remarks."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p96 F 6 '30 600w

PATTEE, FRED LEWIS. New American literature, 1890-1930. 507p $3.50 Century

810.9 American literature—History and criticism 30-29135

The period from 1890 to 1930 in American literature is covered by Professor Pattee in this critical survey. The book has among its contents significant chapters on the decade of the strenuous life, 1901-1909; the muck-rake school; Theodore Dreiser; the transition poets; the feminine novel; the prairie poets; the short story; Mencken; and the new biography.

Booklist 27:198 Ja '31

"A commendable feature of the book is its good temper. Mr. Pattee is singularly free from prejudices, though from his statement the chapter on Henry Mencken should perhaps be expected. Mr. Mencken, however, is not one to protest against other people's prejudices. On the whole, this historian is very fair-minded. He is not at his best in dealing with the major figures of the period; a more profound method than his is perhaps required. But he is excellent reading when he touches on the 'lower levels' of literature; his account of Harold Bell Wright is masterly; and he appears to have read the lucubrations of all the columnists." S. C. C.

+ Christian Science Monitor p11 N 8 '30 500w

PATTEE, F. L.—Continued

N Y Times p11 N 30 '30 380w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 O 28 '30 80w

"Prof Pattee's book may be characterized as academic in conception and journalistic in execution. The style is lively and personal—at times almost too personal and bordering on modernistic jazz. But the material is well assimilated, well arranged, and in the main reflected through judicious comment."

+ — Springf'd Republican p8 O 18 '30 750w

PATTERSON, ERNEST MINOR. World's economic dilemma. 323p il $3.50 McGraw

330.9 Economic conditions. Economic policy 30-25474

"Increasing economic interdependence of all countries—not merely of a few—is the big fact that has emerged since 1914. Professor Patterson calmly surveys the economic position of England, France, Italy, Japan and the United States, setting forth the peculiar difficulties that confront each country in the attempt to adjust itself to a world plan of economic relations. Each one of these nations has its own 'dilemma' beyond a doubt. Professor Patterson does not try to minimize the obstacles to a solution, but he resolutely maintains that political divisions do not necessarily prevent economic union."—R of Rs

Booklist 27:189 Ja '31

Reviewed by Donald McConnell

Books p5 O 19 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p4 D 10 '30 180w

Chicago Daily Tribune p13 N 29 '30 80w

Reviewed by A. J. Levine

Current Hist 33:xiv Ja '31 750w

Foreign Affairs 9:358 Ja '31 220w

Reviewed by H. R. Mussey

Nation 131:586 N 26 '30 300w

"While there is much valuable material in this book, in certain respects it is disappointing. The author knows much more of international economics than politics, and when he encroaches upon this latter subject he sometimes falls into error. . . Structural unity seems to be lacking. Nevertheless, for reference purposes, the book may fill a need." R. L. Buell

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d O 25 '30 650w

"Dr. Patterson's former students will recognize their teacher in the cautious, hesitant and qualifying statements, the objective position, the forceful marshaling of facts, the sustained interest and the summaries which buttress the position he takes. It is a clarifying contribution to the intricate subject of international economics." Bernard Ostrolenk

+ N Y Times p28 N 16 '30 1100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:87 D '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:19 N '30 200w

St Louis 28:289 D '30

World Tomorrow 14:29 Ja '31 80w

PATTERSON, INNIS. Eppworth case. 316p $1 ^{2} Farrar 30-27759

Sebald Craft, detective from the ranks of New York's smartest set, solves a double murder in Westchester in this first detective tale by a new writer who took her Master of Arts degree with a thesis entitled Developments in the Detective Story.

Bookm 72:xxvi N '30 50w

"This better than average volume contains a few faults not unusual with novices—there's a slightly huddled foreground and bookish, though brightly bookish, dialogue." Will Cuppy

+ — Books p14 O 13 '30 220w

"The lover of mystery stories has a genuine treat in store in solving 'The Eppworth Case' with 'Sebald Craft, the Great Detective.' Here is a story that is easy to read, clever, witty and sophisticated. Miss Patterson has built up a new character in the fictitious world of detectives and has named him Sebald Craft . . It will be interesting to watch and see if Miss Patterson will continue Sebald Craft on his well-started career."

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '30 300w

PATTERSON, NORMA. Gay procession. 309p $1 Farrar 30-20074

Drew January grows up in a poverty-stricken but loyal family. She falls in love with Chan, a young and struggling architect, but is forced to forego her marriage because a tyrannical aunt will furnish the money to cure her little sister, ill of tuberculosis, only if Drew gives up Chan to marry the rich young man favored by the aunt. Drew makes the sacrifice, and Chan goes to war. After a long and troublesome period, Drew reaps the rewards of her sacrifice.

Booklist 27:165 D '30

"It would be difficult to say why Miss Patterson has called this tale 'The Gay Procession,' unless she accidentally hit upon an irony. All the young people, after the first flush of infancy, have an unconscionably bad time. Their intentions, however, are of the best and life straightens out their kinks in the end."

Books p10 Ag 17 '30 450w

"There is nothing small and mean to this tale of young love and heartache and everyday sorrows and joys. It moves as swiftly and lightly as the wind upon the hilltop where Chan and Drew meant some day to build their nest. We rather like it."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 27 '30 300w

Reviewed by G. T. Hellman

New Repub 64:81 S 3 '30 60w

"Miss Patterson has discovered a technique more dependable than mere originality. Her characters and episodes, in the words of a popular advertising slogan, have been certified by centuries of service." M. W.

— N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 30 '30 230w

"Notwithstanding the hackneyed and faintly improbable character of her plot, Norma Patterson writes with a certain enthusiasm and conviction. Her tenderly sentimental saga of love and sacrifice can hardly fail to attain popularity."

+ N Y Times p7 Ag 10 '30 500w

PATTERSON, NORMA. Jenny. 271p $2 Farrar 30-6439

The romance of a trained nurse in an army hospital after the war. Jenny was not a good nurse, but she was human and kind and cheered more than one dying human wreck with her presence and understanding. And finally she married an ex-patient.

"The story is too sweet for the normal appetite."

— Books p24 Ap 13 '30 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p62 Ap '30

" 'Jenny' has little of humor and none of the stark realism of recent books on the war. But if the sketches of the men, loosely held together by the story of Jenny, are written in a sentimental vein, they nevertheless come to life as the real tragedies of real people, and present a side of the war too often ignored in time of peace."

+ N Y Times p24 Ap 27 '30 160w

PATTERSON, SAMUEL HOWARD. Social ^{2} aspects of industry; a survey of labor problems and causes of industrial unrest. 539p $3 McGraw

331 Labor and laboring classes—United States. United States—Industries. United States—Social conditions. United States—Economic conditions 29-1677

"Modern industrialism brings a large flow of commodities and a rapid accumulation of wealth. It also brings in its wake irksome and oppressive social problems. This volume is an introductory survey of such problems largely from the social point of view. It includes a description of the industrial revolution, which had its origin in the textile industry in England in the last half of the eighteenth century; the far-reaching effect of the machines invented in that industry and the new motive power brought into being with the invention of the steam engine."—Books

"Professor Patterson has the knack of catching our attention at the opening of a chapter with an arresting statement of the problem. The greater is our disappointment when he drops into a marshalling of pros and cons, as if each problem in turn could be solved by piling up arguments on each side of the balance and then reading the scale. But the book fills a gap. It is the only volume known to the reviewer which presents the subject simply (no previous knowledge of economics is assumed), moderately and at the same time comprehensively. It ranges afield into the outlying territories of private property, immigration, and social reconstruction; and the treatment commands respect where it does not compel agreement. Each chapter has a list of references and supplementary readings." H. B. Davis

+ — Am Econ R 20:758 D '30 550w

"It is an elementary textbook, disclaiming any originality, simply written, profusely illustrated with charts and graphs. . . This should prove to be an excellent text for economics students as its scholarship is accurate and its tone healthy, liberal and humane. An excellent index, good lists of collateral reading and questions for discussion add to the value of the book."

+ Am J Soc 35:517 N '29 250w

Reviewed by John Brophy

Books p31 N 24 '29 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:88 D '29

" 'Social Aspects of Industry' meets the need of a post-war survey that shall take account of the immense amount of research that has been devoted to labor problems during the past twenty years. The 'collateral readings' and 'references' appended to each chapter reveal the wide scope from which the author has derived his materials. These and the 'questions for discussion' and the 'topics for investigation', together with the admirable analysis in the text, make the book an introduction to modern research methods of class instruction." J. R. Commons

+ Pol Sci Q 47:479 S '30 500w

PAUL, ELLIOT HAROLD. The amazon. 339p $2.50 Liveright

30-5337

"A war story about a Signal Corps of American girls who fought with the men in the trenches."—Publishers' Weekly

"One chuckles enormously as Elliot Paul maneuvers his women to the front. He knows his A. E. F. and his France, and he knows the grotesqueries of the uniformed women who yearned to sacrifice themselves on the altar of patriotism and the army. But I suspect he would have done better to have made two novels of 'The Amazon'—one the rollicking tale of the girls at the front, the other the study of a girl who, despising her father, thought she hated all men and of her painful evolution into normalcy. He has the talent, as story teller and psychologist, for both." Lewis Gannett

+ Books p4 Mr 2 '30 750w

Cleveland Open Shelf p78 My '30

"It is quite entertaining reading. There are passages of some beauty and distinction. And as 'just suppose' stories go, it is nicely done throughout." Eugene Lohrke

+ N Y Evening Post p8s F 22 '30 600w

"In 'The Amazon,' Elliot Paul has succeeded in telling a strange and perhaps a thoroughly incredible story, with a great deal of tact and a rather complete appearance of credibility. He has steered a very neat course among the several temptations provided by his highly colored plot."

N Y Times p6 F 23 '30 650w

"Mr Paul has written a thoroughly interesting novel, mature and civilized."

+ Outlook 154:349 F 26 '30 320w

"That Mr. Paul has been able to make his story credible is much to say; that he has entirely avoided all temptations to sensationalism in working out his plot, is more; but perhaps it is most to his credit that he has been able, even with so remarkable an initial situation, to center the interest chiefly in character."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1147 Je 21 '30 420w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 18 '30 350w

PAUL, ELLIOT HAROLD. Governor of Massachusetts. 330p $2 Liveright

30-23893

Frank, a young lawyer in the office of Asa Perkins, is the raconteur of this political satire. He tells how Elijah Griffin (to whom he later became secretary), a good-natured New England manufacturer, is forced into the office of lieutenant governor of Massachusetts, and, upon the death of the governor in office, finds himself the head of the state. Unqualified as he is, and honest by nature, Mr Griffin falls a victim to graft and political scheming. Moreover, his children quarrel over the disposition of his estate; and he who thought to spend his last years peacefully ends a defeated wreck of a man.

Booklist 27:162 D '30

"In most respects this is the most satisfactory political novel that has been written in this country in a great many years and for that reason alone deserves all the encouragement belonging to a type on its way to becoming entirely obsolete. Another reason is that it possesses a natural distinction of style and treatment which sets it apart from the majority of novels belonging to any type at the present moment." William Troy

+ Bookm 72:79 S '30 400w

"Elliot Paul is evidently very much at home in his Boston environment. He has supplemented the sketch of the Boston underworld vividly outlined in his earlier novel, 'Impromptu,' with this brilliant survey of Boston political misadventures. His urbanity and charm in disclosing the weaknesses of his fellow citizens are irresistible. He is having a genuinely good time at the expense of his contemporaries. Perhaps he is a bit too mild, a shade too self-possessed in his ability to handle social satire without the slightest cause for offense. In any case, he has given us an amusing and intelligent study in social pathology." Horace Gregory

+ Books p2 Ag 24 '30 850w

Boston Transcript p2 S 10 '30 600w

Reviewed by C. P. Fadiman

Nation 131:326 S 24 '30 350w

"The comedy Elliot Paul produces round Griffin represents one of the most skillful handlings of the American scene that has been written. It is curious how little Paul has to exaggerate the manners of the times or of the people. None of the characters is, in any sense of the word, an exaggeration; none of them is, even, a composition of certain American traits. They are first and last individual persons who sleep with each other, at discrete or indiscrete intervals, eat with one another, and move about the city of Boston in perfect keeping with the customs of the realistic novel. . . Elliot Paul has shown, completely, that a novel can have complexity and solidity without its comic intent being blunted: and while the ordinary person may admire Paul's narrative powers as they should be admired, I imagine that a politician of the stature of Hanna would pay considerable respect to Paul's shrewdness." Kenneth White

+ New Repub 64:185 O 1 '30 600w

PAUL, E. H.—Continued
N Y Evening Post p8s S 13 '30 200w
N Y Times p6 Ag 31 '30 650w
Reviewed by Harry Salpeter
N Y World p9 Ag 26 '30 900w

"Mr. Paul gives you a full length portrait of the American gentleman, as he conceives him, and puts him at the mercy of the current materialism. Then, with neat irony and with a fastidious flair, he proceeds to uphold the breeding in which he believes. The form of the book is elastic enough to make room for what might otherwise seem like editorial intrusions of opinion. Its substance is the stuff of our life in this country, crude, adventurous and lusty." V. P. R.
+ Outlook 156:29 S 3 '30 450w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:88 D '30

"Mr. Elliot Paul has put a good deal of excellent work into this novel, without producing the results which the effort ought to have effected. . . He has put his experience as a Boston reporter to good use, and done some devastating pictures of politicians that look to the outlander as if they were drawn as nearly from life as the libel laws permit."
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:92 Ag 30 '30 380w

PAVRY, BAPSY. Heroines of ancient Persia; stories retold from the Shāhnāma of Firdausi. 111p il $5 Macmillan [15s Cambridge univ. press]
891.51 Firdausī [30-29141]

"From the great epic of Persia, Firdausi's Shahnama, Miss Pavry has selected the most noteworthy female characters, to give us, in a few words, the substance of their stories. The most interesting of them, in her account, are Gurdafrid, a kind of beauteous Amazon, who fought with the all-too-perfect Suhrab when he came to beseige her father's castle, won his love and then lightly left him, and the celebrated Queen Shirin; for adulterous love of whom Farhad sculptured the great rock of Behistun at King Darius's wish."—Books

"Pale as is Miss Pavry's version, there still lingers in all her summaries something of the native distinction to remind us that even in epic times the Persian ideal of woman differed from that of the Odyssey or the Beowulf. The fourteen reproductions in black and white, from miniature paintings in a manuscript of the Shahnama belonging to the Metropolitan Museum in New York give more feeling of Persia than does her text." W. N. Brown
+ — Books p10 N 2 '30 250w

"Miss Pavry's enthusiastic but quite soberly written little sketches are good as far as they go, which is not very far. But that may not be her fault. For with every reason to believe that she has included all the facts, we imagine that the Shahnama is not as rich in feminine psychology (at least as we understand it) as she would have us think. At any rate, she has not been able to substantiate her claim that Firdausi's women are distinct characters. Only one or two show anything but a passing gleam of individuality. . . At the same time, it is a merit in Miss Pavry to have retold the stories in a simple, straightforward manner, without dramatic or descriptive embroidery." Herbert Kahan
+ — Nation and Ath 47:418 Je 28 '30 180w

"It is a pity this book is priced so high. Fifteen shillings is a great deal to pay for a hundred pages (a page has about three hundred words) and fourteen process reproductions from manuscripts; yet the quiet charm of Miss Pavry's narrative makes the book delightful."
+ New Statesman 35:196 My 17 '30 100w

"The peculiar beauty and charm of this volume are immensely enhanced by the Oriental quaintness and stiffness of its numerous illustrations, fine reproductions of Persian miniature paintings. Through them as well as through the stately naïveté of the script the reader draws much closer to an understanding of those feminine creatures now dust and memories for so many thousands of years. The author's solace is the fittingness of his work. Words, phrases, and the ancient background have been preserved intact: each story is an Eastern poem."
+ N Y Times p8 Je 29 '30 550w

"As an introduction to medieval Persian literature the book is to be commended, but as history or sociology these fragments of thrice contaminated legends are simply negligible."
Sat R 149:597 My 10 '30 150w

"No doubt these stories will charm a chosen few; for the many we fear the mind of Firdausi is too distant from this restless age."
Spec 145:362 S 13 '30 180w

PAXSON, FREDERIC LOGAN. When the West is gone. (Brown univ. Colver lectures, 1929) 137p $2 Holt
978 West—History. United States Territorial expansion 30-9514

The passing of the last frontiers of American civilization, and the effect of this vanished West upon the future history of the United States, is the subject of Professor Paxson's 1929 Colver lectures, delivered at Brown university. The author sketches the history of the development of each successive "new West" in this country, the first great generation of the West appearing around 1763, the second in 1824, and the third about 1896.

Booklist 26:352 Je '30
Reviewed by F. R. Dulles
Bookm 71:468 Jl '30 500w

"This is a stimulating, suggestive and thoughtful book. It deserves a wide reading from those capable of thinking in terms of the past at the same time they grasp the meanings of the present." Avery Craven
+ Books p9 Ap 13 '30 1250w
Boston Transcript p3 Mr 29 '30 550w
Nation 130:739 Je 25 '30 200w

"Professor Paxson has accomplished a remarkable feat of summarization. Far from being superficial, the survey is scholarly, balanced and broad in its grasp, and the comments thoughtful and in the best sense suggestive." William MacDonald
+ N Y Times p1 Mr 23 '30 1200w
Pratt p35 summer '30
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:17 My '30 100w

PAYNE, ANNE BLACKWELL. Released; a book of verse. 63p $1.50 Univ. of N.C. press
811 30-12637

A book of lyrical poems by a young Southern poet.

"This collection is a first book of poems. It is a dignified beginning. The author, when she has gathered strength and uncompromising purpose, should be one of the best of the women poets. . . The lyricism is sure, the phraseology is often the surprisingly efficient language of complete poetry and only infrequently slips over triteness. It is toward her themes that Miss Payne needs to be critical." Lawrence Lee
+ — Books p12 Jl 6 '30 250w

"Miss Payne is a careful workman. Too often is it thought that the spirit of lyricism is so self-sufficient it may wander about, if not exactly unclothed, at least without form. The sonnet, 'To a Young Priest,' should be liked for its grave reverence, its understanding, and, at the same time, its independence."
+ N Y Times p19 Je 22 '30 400w
Reviewed by W. R. Benét
Sat R of Lit 7:9 Jl 26 '30 30w

PAYNE, JESSIE. Black sheep. 318p $2 Macrae Smith co.
30-10467

The young men and women of Manhattan, many of them engaged in the publicity racket, are the characters in this novel. Marne Lewis, left an orphan at sixteen, in her attempt to make a living meets Larry Underhill, a brilliant but unstable young publicity agent. They fall in love, altho Larry is still undivorced. Marne's attempt to work out her own salvation when Larry fails her ends finally in a happy marriage with another man.

"'Black Sheep' is a first novel that is lively, intelligent and graced by a pretty wit. . . Its pace is swift, its theme one of great interest to readers today, and its dialogue at all times credible and amusing." Marion Sturges-Jones
+ Books p2 Ap 13 '30 650w

"The novelist has shown considerable cleverness in the way in which she has settled Marne's problems for her and done it without a betrayal of either Marne or the period in which she lives." D. L. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 12 '30 550w
N Y Times p14 Ag 17 '30 220w

PEABODY, FRANCIS WELD. Doctor and patient; papers on the relationship of the physician to men and institutions. 95p $1.50 Macmillan

610.4 Physicians. Medicine—Practice. Medicine—Addresses, essays, lectures 30-17056

"One [of the papers] is concerned with the relations between the public and the general practitioner and with his ideals and his influence. Another considers the personal relationship between physician and patient, especially the patient in a hospital, and its vital importance for successful treatment, while a third deals with the physician and his use of the laboratory and the important part the latter has come to play in modern medical science. The fourth paper is a letter written by Dr. Peabody a few days before his death to another physician discussing the problems of clinical medicine, its teaching and its practice."—N Y Times

Booklist 27:96 N '30
N Y Times p18 Ag 10 '30 200w
St Louis 28:263 N '30

"While Peabody was alive he was acknowledged as the standard-bearer of the new medicine. These papers, which have been printed a number of times before, illustrate why that opinion was expressed about him so many times by his contemporaries. No book published in recent years is more important than this one for its value in showing to the public the position of medicine today." H. R. Viets, M.D.
+ Sat R of Lit 7:422 D 6 '30 380w

PEACH, BENJAMIN NEEVE, and HORNE, JOHN. Chapters on the geology of Scotland. 232p il $3.50 (10s 6d) Oxford

554.1 Geology—Scotland 30-17504

This collaborative work by Drs Peach and Horne, formerly of the Geological survey, is incomplete because of the death of Peach in 1926, and, two years later, of Horne. The volume, as it stands, deals chiefly with the geology of Scotland north of the Great Glen. The five main chapters deal with the physical features of Scotland in relation to geological structure, pre-Cambrian rocks: Lewisian gneiss and torridon sandstone, Cambrian system and later intrusions and earth-movements, and Highland metamorphic rocks.

"This definite statement of the opinions which Peach advocated so persuasively renders the volume of historic importance, though the sections which explain his views will probably be regarded ultimately as one of the curiosities of Scottish geology." J. W. G.
+ Nature 126:234 Ag 16 '30 550w

"As presenting not only the views of its distinguished authors but also those of all who have written on the subject, the volume is, so far as it goes, an invaluable compendium of fact and hypothesis. A word of praise should be given to the photographs and line-drawings, which are real illustrations, and particular note should be taken of the coloured sections that elucidate the views of Peach."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p226 Mr 20 '30 2000w

PEAKE, HAROLD JOHN EDWARD. Flood; new light on an old story. 124p $1.75 McBride [5s Routledge]

222.11 Deluge 30-21846

"By examining the results of archaeological investigations in Mesopotamia, studying the various legends of the flood and interpreting and comparing the evidence found by the two methods Mr. Peake endeavors to show whether or not there ever was a universal flood and, if the event described in the Bible was merely a local phenomenon, to discover how extensive it was and where and when it happened. He reviews briefly the changes that have taken place in both popular and learned attitudes toward the biblical story, and in one chapter gathers together the flood legends in the literature and folktales of many peoples all over the world."—N Y Times

Books p11 Ag 24 '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 Jl 2 '30 200w
Nation and Ath 47:627 Ag 16 '30 230w

"Although Mr. Peake's book is primarily intended to be of popular interest, scholars cannot afford to neglect it, for his account of the pre- and post-diluvian culture of Mesopotamia is suggestive in its interpretation of the difficulties which at present offer puzzles for the archæologist. Most ingenious of all, perhaps, and indeed a vera causa, is his suggestion that the discrepancies between the records and the archæological evidence relating to the early dynasties of Ur may have arisen from a misplacement of the tablets when the lists of the kings were copied."
+ Nature 125:923 Je 21 '30 250w

"Mr. Peake gives a very clear and interesting account of these discoveries."
+ New Statesman 35:164 My 10 '30 120w

"Mr. Peake's zeal has led him into lengthy account of archaeological discoveries whose detail will prove wearying and confusing to the unlearned reader, and when he tries to write in popular style he is merely elemental. Nevertheless, his book brings together in simple form and so makes accessible to the general reader a survey of the evidence on which are based modern conclusions concerning the flood."
+ — N Y Times p27 My 4 '30 480w
Sat R 149:662 My 24 '30 500w

"His argument is interesting if it does not convince. In any case, the Biblical story of the Deluge is now seen in a new light. It is not myth, but history."
+ Spec 144:532 Mr 29 '30 140w

"The book is a compact and temperate account for the general reader."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p299 Ap 3 '30 250w

PEAKE, HAROLD JOHN EDWARD, and FLEURE, HERBERT JOHN. Way of the sea. (Corridors of time) 168p il $2 Yale univ. press [5s Oxford]

909 Civilization, Ancient. Archeology. Migrations of nations 30-26048

This, the sixth volume in the Corridors of Time series, deals with the five hundred years from 2600 to 2100 B.C., during which period increased intercourse by sea and land, marked by numerous exchanges of culture, took place. The authors, who are noted British anthropologists, describe the awakening of the west and activities in the east at this important period in the history of civilization.

Am J Soc 36:509 N '30 100w

PEAKE, H. J. E., and FLEURE, H. J. —Continued

Booklist 26:198 F '30

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 22 '30 220w

N Y Times p14 Ja 12 '30 250w

St Louis 28:98 Ap '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p1059 D 12 '29 100w

PEARSON, D. A. G. Golden stone. 244p $2 Dutton [3s 6d Methuen]

30-4858

Following a number of jewel thefts at a Swiss winter-sports hotel, a trophy known as the golden stone disappears from its display case. Herr Stephan, the benevolent hotel host, engages a private detective, Frederick Falcon, to study the problem of the stolen articles. After a good many false clews have been cleared away, the investigator employs a different method of tracking his suspects, and gets the thief.

Bookm 70:xxvii F '30 70w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p18 Ja 26 '30 120w

"The author of this amateurishly constructed thriller seems to have mistaken his enthusiastic acquaintance with Swiss winter-sports resorts for the ability to concoct a mystery novel. In so far as mere writing is concerned, the book is smooth and agreeable."

— + N Y World p10m F 2 '30 170w

"Altogether a pleasant, if attenuated, story, guaranteed not to cause mental fatigue. It should be attractive to enthusiasts of winter sports."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:742 F 15 '30 150w

Springf'd Republican p7e F 2 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p706 S 12 '29 220w

PEARSON, EDMUND LESTER. Dime novels; or, Following an old trail in popular literature. 280p il $3 Little

813 Dime novels. American fiction 29-23770

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"Mr. Pearson's work is written lightly and carries abundant abstracts from specimen dime novels. Unfortunately, he has made little endeavor to construe the dime-novel movement in terms of its social setting or terms of its effect. His work opens the door to fuller and more balanced studies."

+ — Am J Soc 35:866 Mr '30 160w

Booklist 26:152 Ja '30

"A work of rare charm, intelligence and tact. . . Mr. Pearson's book is not 'exhaustive'—not superciliously tempered to divert the self-righteous or esthetic. Here, rather are fine temperance and all the air of unobtrusive authority." Raymond Weaver

+ Books p14 F 16 '30 650w

"I can imagine no one better fitted than Mr. Pearson to write the stirring story of the rise and decline of the dime novel and its little brother, the nickel library. Nor can I imagine a better job than he has done. . . Instead of a formal literary history, Mr. Pearson has written a delightfully informal book packed with amusing quotations, with reproductions of the amazing works of art which illustrated the stories, and with comment upon the authors and publishers which answers innumerable questions that perplexed the boys of another century." Herbert Asbury

+ Nation 130:127 Ja 29 '30 800w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:5 Ja '30

St Louis 28:13 Ja '30

"An entertaining if somewhat hastily assembled book."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:877 Mr 29 '30 230w

Wis Lib Bul 26:102 Mr '30

PEARSON, EDMUND LESTER. Instigation of the devil. 357p il $2 Scribner

364 Murder. Crime and criminals. Trials (murder) 30-24433

A collection of some interesting old cases of murder and other crimes, gleaned from contemporary records and reports. Among these stories of real crimes are accounts of the murder, nearly sixty years ago, at Mrs Wharton's house-party; the Colt-Adams affair; the Tichborne case; the case of the Broadway butterfly; the mysterious murder of Cécile Combettes; and the crime in the Sunday-school. There are also some brief and witty essays, on such topics as rules for murderesses, accomplished female liars, etc.

Bookm 72:xxiv S '30 80w

Books p27 N 23 '30 200w

" 'Instigation of the Devil' is a necessary acquisition to the library of everybody who is interested in the subject. Pearson has a flair for research, a nose for curious departures in malfeasance and is indefatigable withal. . . If he tries to comprehend something of psychology instead of sneering at it he may be able to make his characters live more distinctly than he does at present." Louis Sherwin

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 650w

"There is not Mr. Pearson's equal anywhere in knowledge both wide and profound of murders and murderers, nor in interest in them, nor in ability to write about them with urbanity, judicial poise and ironic humor."

+ N Y Times p18 O 5 '30 350w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter
N Y World p12 S 5 '30 600w

St Louis 28:290 D '30

Springf'd Republican p10 S 25 '30 550w

"He writes in a style that is in keeping with sophisticated aloofness—an arch style which enables him to extract so much quiet fun out of murder that it would be ungrateful to complain when the ironical occasionally degenerates into the facetious."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p829 O 16 '30 700w

PEARSON, HESKETH. Ventilations; being biographical asides. 256p il $2.50 Lippincott

920 Biography 30-10020

A book on biographers and biography writing. The author reports conversations between Shaw and Chesterton, Galsworthy and Frank Harris; discusses the methods of modern biographers such as Strachey, Maurois, and Emil Ludwig; and analyzes various types of biographical writing: imaginative, didactic, religious, personal, panoramic, etc.

"In these gossipy chapters on aspects of biography Mr. Pearson is clearly of the 'hit-and-run' school, though whether as batter or motorist one is not sure, since he sometimes makes a score, sometimes leaves behind broken bones and a smell of gas. In either capacity he travels light, unembarrassed by any weight of knowledge." Douglas Bush

— Bookm 71:118 Mr '30 250w

Books p19 Ag 3 '30 200w

"Nearly all the modern biographers have a lance shaken at them in this amusing book. In addition, men like Shaw and Chesterton come in for some humorous gymnastics. Mr. Pearson knows how to make his specimens work for him, bear upon his theme. And wisely he chooses to throw contrasting light upon his subject by demonstrating his theories with references to Emil Ludwig and Boswell with equal felicity. A book of this type is indeed a healthy sign of the times."

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 7 '30 200w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 154:388 Mr 5 '30 160w

PEARY, MARIE AHNIGHITO. See Stafford, M. A.

PEASE, HOWARD. Gypsy caravan; being the merry tale of the travels of Betty and Joe with the gypsies. 254p il $2 Doubleday, Doran
30-21863

Joe and Betty, dressed up as gypsies, were on their way to a masquerade party when their taxi broke down. They started out to walk the rest of the way, and that is how they met Stanko and the green van, and encountered Robin Hood, Richard Coeur de Lion, the Forty Thieves and many other celebrated characters out of old stories.

Cleveland Open Shelf p134 N '30

"As we close the book we find ourselves hoping that the author will make good Stanko's promise in another volume of tales as full of zest and spontaneity as these. When there is joy in the writing, there is also joy in the reading." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p26 O 26 '30 180w

"Howard Pease combines a simple narrative style, so necessary for holding the attention of ten-year-olds, with a decided gift of description. His scenes at the country fair in Nottingham and in the market place of Bagdad are good. His appreciation of the countryside has freshness. Mr. Pease also succeeds in avoiding the fatal, unforgivable mistake of 'writing down' to his young readers, by telling a straightforward tale simply, without condescending. Harrie Wood, who contributes the illustrations in black and white, has again shown his faculty for catching the spirit of children's books. His work adds much to 'The Gypsy Caravan.' " F. B. Bird
+ Sat R of Lit 7:191 O 4 '30 400w

PEDLER, MARGARET (BASS) (MRS W. G. Q. PEDLER). Fire of youth. 298p $1 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder]
30-17703

A story of love and loyalties, set in an English country house near the sea, in which a particularly generous man gives up the girl he loves and makes possible her marriage with the man of her choice.

Booklist 27:65 O '30
Books p10 S 14 '30 150w

"Miss Pedler's facile ability enables her to keep up suspense until the end of the final chapter. She likewise insists on retaining the same delicate vein of sentimentality which is both the charm and the weakness of the novel. If you like the kind of work Miss Pedler does, 'Fire of Youth' will satisfy you completely." D. F. Gilman
+ — Boston Transcript p3 Je 28 '30 1880w

"The stock characters are hardly memorable and the plot is trite, but Miss Pedler writes with more distinction than do many romanticists of her type."
— + N Y Times p7 Je 29 '30 250w

PEDRICK, HOWARD A. Jungle gold [as told to William S. de Grouchy and William L. Magee]. 295p il $3.50 Bobbs
918.8 Dutch Guiana—Description and travel. Gold mines and mining—Dutch Guiana
30-28494

"Comedy and tragedy rub elbows in this engrossing record of a gold mining expedition in the jungle of Dutch Guiana, narrated in the first person by Howard A. Pedrick and put into script by Will de Grouchy and William L. Magee. The fight with the jungle cost two and a half million dollars and the lives of twenty white men and several hundred Negro laborers—and the jungle won."—N Y Evening Post

"The merit of Dad Pedrick's story lies in its blunt truth, for there is no particular enlargement of horizon for the student or the tropic traveler. He does not draw on his imagination, does not exaggerate, does not indulge in entertaining myths." C. J. Finger
+ Books p18 N 30 '30 250w

"Mr. Pedrick's story, told without artifice, is as fascinating as any fanciful tale of adventure. His is the talk of a natural raconteur, and the vividness of his pictures is in direct ration to his sincerity. Horrors and humors alternate; if there's a shudder on one page, there's a laugh on the next." R. C. B. B.
+ N Y Evening Post p4d N 29 '30 100w
Sat R of Lit 7:314 N 8 '30 320w

PEEL, DORIS NANNETTE. Five on parade 369p $2 Houghton
30-29244

About the five orphaned Kipling children, Robin, Mimsy, Ricky, Poppett and Boots, and how they grew up—quite unconventionally to be sure—but courageously none the less, and with the spirit that assures success.

"Insofar as any of us can know how the minds of children work Miss Peel knows. She shows them in all their earnestness, their courage, their surprising variations of cynicism and young sentimentality. If she annoys the reader on occasion by regarding her Kiplings with a slight sense of wonder and pride in their cleverness it is a fault that one can detect in the authors of those other books about children, like and unlike Miss Peel's, which her book is entitled to join 'The Constant Nymph,' 'Enfants Terribles' and the hardly-to-be-equaled 'Innocent Voyage.' " Josiah Titzell
+ Books p21 N 23 '30 550w

"It is a fine story, admirably conceived, admirably told, its characters so cleverly drawn that one will not soon forget them." Gertrude Bayley
+ Boston Transcript p2 N 22 '30 1550w
N Y Evening Post p4d D 20 '30 200w

"They are all likable, Robin especially, and, though the story is too long and at times a little too resolutely sweet and fairytaleish in its atmosphere, it is spirited and full of a kind of gallant gayety that is appealing. Not one of the Kiplings ever whines, and in this day and generation fictional characters who do not whine, but meet life bravely, are a refreshing diversion from the average."
+ N Y Times p8 D 21 '30 350w

"Probably the unevenness is to be explained by the boast of the jacket that 'Five on Parade' was finished before its author was twenty. . . The book suffers badly from want of design, and the author from want of self-criticism, but it shows a vigor and zest which promise much better things from Miss Peel's twenties."
— + Sat R of Lit 7:373 N 22 '30 380w
Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 80w

PEERS, EDGAR ALLISON. Ramon Lull. 454p $7.50 Macmillan [18s S.P.C.K.]
B or 92 Lull, Ramón [29-18759]

Biography of the great Mallorcan mystic and missionary to the Mohammedans, Ramon Lull, 1232?-1315.

"The author has succeeded admirably in combining sound scholarship with human interest. The figure of Lull, intensely alive and vivid, enthusiastic, incredibly laborious, at times bizarre, stands out convincingly in these pages. At the same time we are given an account of his writings and his teachings that will be of permanent value to the student of Spanish mysticism and literature." G. D. M.
+ Cath World 130:500 Ja '30 460w

"Professor Allison Peers has given us a biography of Ramon Lull, which is worthy of its subject. His knowledge of Lull's voluminous works and of the vast Lullian literature far exceeds that of any other Englishman and is equalled by few foreign scholars. The book is full of learning and yet readable and not too long. The historical and political background is sketched in sufficiently to put Lull in his proper setting." A. G. Little
+ Eng Hist R 45:119 Ja '30 1000w

PEERS, E. A.—Continued

"Professor Peers has written a most useful and interesting book." C. D. B.
+ Int J Ethics 40:284 Ja '30 130w

"Ramon Lull has been the victim of exaggerated eulogy, malicious calumny, and careless derision; it is the merit of this meticulously documented biography that it gives us the man as he was, the seer as he is; whose innermost thought, stripped of its mediæval encumbrance, is as fresh to-day as when it first found expression."
+ Nation and Ath 45:118 Ap 27 '29 500w

"Professor Peers, to whom we are already indebted for some excellent translations from Lull's works, and who now makes a further demand upon our gratitude by this full and fascinating biography, has no English rivals in the field of Lullian studies."
+ Spec 142:710 My 4 '29 1200w

"A well-proportioned and fascinating work of reasonable length and excellent scholarship. The difficulties have been unravelled with great skill."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p328 Ap 25 '29 1000w

PEERS, EDGAR ALLISON. Spain; a companion to Spanish travel. 318p il $3 Farrar [7s 6d Harrap]

914.6 Spain—Description and travel 30-12626

An introduction to Spain "written to be a companion to the tourist in Spain whose aim is to take an intelligent . . . interest in what he sees and hears there, and who has no previous knowledge of the country beyond a few reminiscences of his schooldays." (Pref.) The author is professor of Spanish in the University of Liverpool and spends approximately one-third of every year in the Peninsula.

Boston Transcript p1 My 10 '30 700w
Cleveland Open Shelf p104 Jl '30

"Mr. Allison Peers' latest book on Spain is packed with information of great value to those who are crossing the Pyrenees for the first time. He is a dullish and faintly patronising writer, but he knows his facts and can whet the appetite. His general survey at the beginning of the book, with its encouragements and warnings, is the simplest and most up-to-date thing of its kind. He does not allow the tourist to miss anything important. He knows the best seasons for the different regions, what you ought to wear, how you ought to travel, how long you ought to stay and what itineraries you ought to choose. His historical and antiquarian facts are nicely selected; and when his pen halts before some striking scene he quotes briefly from suitable authors."
+ New Statesman 34:852 Ap 5 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p387 My 8 '30 500w

PEERS, EDGAR ALLISON, ed. Spain; a companion to Spanish studies. 302p $4 Dodd [12s 6d Methuen]

946 Spain—History. Spanish literature 30-7080

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"The name of Professor Peers as editor of the volume is a sufficient guaranty of its excellent qualities and of its sympathetic attitude toward Spain, as those who have read his small but delightful books on Santander and Granada know." Herschel Brickell
+ — Books p15 Ja 12 '30 650w

"Professor Peers is an authority on the language, literature, history and country of Spain. He has used his knowledge admirably here, and the traveller could not use a better handbook."
+ Nation and Ath 46:744 Mr 1 '30 100w

"The reader interested in Spain, whether studying its history and culture at home or while traveling in that country, will have in this book a compact 'companion to studies' which will give background to reading and will be useful as a reference book."
+ N Y Times p18 My 11 '30 180w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:20 F '30 100w

"The historical chapters are the least valuable for the mere fact that the history of Spain from 1492 to 1898, for example, is condensed into less than thirty pages, means that little but facts and dates are left. More useful are the chapters on literature which give good indications of what there is to read, and the best chapter in the book is the one on music. Here we have something worthy of the book's title, a companion or handbook in miniature, giving us information on where to buy music, on pianola records, on foreign influences, on Spanish influences on foreign music, in sufficient detail to be of real use."
+ — Spec 144:98 Ja 18 '30 720w

PEFFER, NATHANIEL. China: the collapse of a civilization. 306p $3.50 Day

915.1 China. China—Civilization 30-31476

Taking his stand neither for nor against China, the author of this book has sought to present the effects of a conflict of civilizations in that country—the influence, in other words, of the "impact of western military power, economic invasion, industrialism and ideas."

Booklist 27:202 Ja '31

"During a four months' visit to this country I have been asked constantly for a single book that will make China clear to the Western reader, and I have always been forced to reply that I could not recommend any one volume for that purpose. That is no longer true. Mr. Peffer has produced the best book on China written during the last decade." G. E. Sokolsky
+ Books p5 O 26 '30 800w
Christian Century 47:1387 N 12 '30 550w
Churchman p4 N 1 '30 200w

"Mr. Peffer has written a stimulating and a provocative book. It will be read with profit by all." C. H. Peake
+ Current Hist 33:xix Ja '31 420w

" 'Wise' is the word that comes to mind as one reads the first half of Mr. Peffer's book. He sees things in disillusioned perspective, mellowly, without angry moralizing. He actually understands the inevitability of history. He admits ghastly realities, sees responsibilities, yet scolds neither Chinese nor foreigners—which makes his book unique among books about China. Then, in the last half, he loses the thread. One does, attempting to sketch the future of China. . . He peers in various directions. It would be easy to show that he sometimes contradicts himself. But that merely proves that he is neither superman nor fool. At least he is never dogmatic; he has a historical sense. And that is high praise anywhere, but particularly in China." L. S. Gannett
+ Nation 131:554 N 19 '30 700w

"It is the value of Mr. Peffer's book, and we consider it one of the best informed and most thoroughly sound studies of China which have appeared in recent years, that it restores our perspective. Mr. Peffer gives a brilliant analysis of the China that was and with both penetration and understanding examines the process through which it has succumbed to Western influences." F. R. Dulles
+ N Y Evening Post p5d O 25 '30 700w

"Setting polemics aside—for they are always debatable, and Mr. Peffer is certainly well entitled to his opinions—the book is so well and interestingly written that one need have no reservations about recommending it to any one seeking knowledge of China." H. L. Matthews
+ N Y Times p13 D 21 '30 1200w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p16 O 30 '30 250w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 83:12 Ja '31 120w

Reviewed by H. K. Norton
Sat R of Lit 7:390 N 29 '30 500w

PELL, JOHN. Ethan Allen. 331p il $5 Houghton [21s Constable]
B or 92 Allen, Ethan 29-23480

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by G. H. Doane
Am Hist R 35:635 Ap '30 750w

"Mr. Pell, who knows Vermont intimately, draws the portrait full length, sympathetically, but without prejudice or overemphasis. He pares away tradition to its core of fact. He refuses to blind himself to the faults of this backwoods land owner and soldier." D. L. Hunt
+ Ann Am Acad 148:307 Mr '30 100w

Booklist 26:202 F '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p44 Mr '30

"Scholarly, but suffering from lack of imagination, is John Pell's study. Ethan Allen was an interesting figure of our earlier American history, but one would scarcely realize it from this homespun, purely factual chronicle of his amazing career. No brooding and genial spirit flutters over the waters of the waste." Francis Snow
— + Current Hist 31:836 F '30 130w

"Mr. Pell, whose narrative proceeds in the bright, chatty, objective American manner, is hardly equal to the task of shaping his voluminous material into a really effective portrait. Ethan Allen was a remarkably rough diamond; Mr. Pell leaves him a little too much in the rough." Barrington Gates
— Nation and Ath 47:22 Ap 5 '30 130w

"John Pell has written a superb life of New England's Incorrigible Boy. One wishes that he had gone more deeply into Allen's influence upon his times, or examined more closely the fantastic ego of the man; but upon a canvas necessarily limited in scope his picture is without flaws." J. H. Preston
+ New Repub 63:26 My 21 '30 400w

"This is a very lively and vigorous account of an adventurous life. If the style is a little colloquial, it suits its subject."
+ New Statesman 34:848 Ap 5 '30 420w

Pratt p34 autumn '30

St Louis 28:82 Mr '30

"Mr. Pell has written what is doubtless the best life of Ethan Allen that we have, and in so doing has made a contribution of importance to the history of Vermont and the American Revolution. . . A lively style, reinforced by occasional appeals to the imagination, makes the book very easy reading." William MacDonald
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1190 Jl 12 '30 770w

"An admirable presentation both of a character who fully deserves the biography he had so far been denied, and of an almost forgotten chapter in the history of the American Revolution."
+ Spec 144:646 Ap 12 '30 300w

"Mr. Pell has told this story with skill and humour."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p217 Mr 13 '30 250w

Wis Lib Bul 26:105 Mr '30

Reviewed by R. H. Gabriel
Yale R n s 19:595 spring '30 130w

PELTON, CHARLES, pseud. See Jacobs, C. P.

PENNELL, ELIZABETH (ROBINS) (MRS JOSEPH PENNELL). Whistler, the friend. 183p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Lippincott
B or 92 Whistler, James Abbott McNeill 31-26071

A portrait of a kindly and friendly Whistler whom most people never saw, by the wife of the artist, Joseph Pennell. Mrs Pennell bases her study upon a group of letters written by Whistler to the French painter, Fantin-Latour, when they were both young men studying in London and Paris. They reveal the joyous association of the "society of three"—Whistler, Fantin-Latour, and Alphonse Legros.

Booklist 27:205 Ja '31

"To a public sated with accounts of the artist's caustic and imperial scorn of the commonplace, these recollections will come as a pleasant diversion indeed." Betty Drury
+ Bookm 72:428 D '30 220w

"This is a gracious, delicately wrought book, sympathetic where it peculiarly needed to be, the kind of book that only a sensitive, high-minded critic could have written. When a man does as Whistler did, envelops himself in an atmosphere of cynical and even maligant wit, it takes more than ordinary penetration to get at his likable traits, it takes a magnanimous sense of moral values. Mrs. Pennell has that sense. . . In all the mass of Whistleriana which she and Joseph Pennell have gathered together there is nothing to match this book in the illumination of a great artist's private character." Royal Cortissoz
+ Books p3 D 7 '30 600w

Reviewed by Kate Brewster
Chicago Daily Tribune p15 D 13 '30 420w

"Mrs. Pennell's attitude is not even partisanry. It is plain idolatry. In her idol there is no kind of fault or flaw. He was the Master, echoing his own language in later years. His enemies are her enemies and for anybody who holds him less than a demigod her scorn is plain." Louis Sherwin
N Y Evening Post p4d N 8 '30 300w

"Of Whistler the friend, the counselor, the nurse of talents other than his own, virtually nothing has been written. In this book 'Whistler: The Friend,' Mrs. Pennell seeks to rectify matters. If she does it with a little of the air of one who protests too much, if she is occasionally sentimental, one can easily forgive her. For it is a very personal book that she is writing, one that she has felt very strongly, and objectivity could hardly be maintained in such a work."
+ N Y Times p3 D 14 '30 700w

Outlook 156:508 N 26 '30 200w

Reviewed by Theodore Sizer
Yale R n s 20:427 winter '31 120w

PEPPER, GEORGE WHARTON. In the Senate.
2 148p $2 Press of the Univ. of Pa. [8s 6d Oxford]
328.73 United States. Congress. Senate. United States—Politics and government 30-28947

In these chapters the senator from Pennsylvania describes the Senate at work, the technique of the senator's job, the committee system and the filibuster. A discussion of the World court is included and the question of principles in politics.

Boston Transcript p3 N 1 '30 320w

Reviewed by E. F. Brown
Current Hist 33:iv D '30 70w

"A fine sense of appreciation for the author himself is engendered by the wholesome appreciation he felt for his colleagues in the national government, by the objectivity he achieves in judging his opponents and enemies, and by the uniform poise with which he accepted both fortune and misfortune in politics. . . On a different level, however, must one judge the chapter on 'International Conferences' and particularly the one on 'The World Court.' Here the author passes from urbane description to advocacy, still urbane but boldly polemical. The closer inspection which the changed tone invites is not fully rewarded. Attorney Pepper here argues so completely like the lawyer that a non-legal critic is set to wondering what the effect on government is of its disproportionate manipulation by lawyers." T. V. Smith
+ Int J Ethics 41:268 Ja '31 720w

St Louis 28:289 D '30

PERELMAN, S. J., and REYNOLDS, QUENTIN J. Parlor, bedlam and bath. 240p $2 Liveright

30-16240

The author of Dawn Ginsbergh's Revenge is at large again in a bathetic, or ginthetic, celebration of the exploits of Chester Tattersall and his pals. Most of the humor, while born of the prohibition age, is typically Perelman: especially the tale of Chester's encounter with a Fuller brush man, the story of the raffled Ferris wheel, and the yarn about Nancy, the pet rattlesnake.

Books p13 Ag 3 '30 120w

Chicago Daily Tribune p4 Ag 16 '30 80w

"The bad pun of the novel's title is no index to the nonsense in the bulk of the written matter. With a shaky skeleton of a narrative, the authors have dedicated themselves to the sole purpose of being entertaining and they have succeeded brilliantly."

+ N Y Times p9 N 30 '30 300w

"The book is good, though it falls occasionally into a bog. Essentially it is like nothing else that we know, in spite of passages and attitudes that remind us of McEvoy, Sullivan, Stewart, Lardner, Benchley, Groucho Marx, and Joe Cook. Anyone to whom this list is a roll-call of the well-beloved will be thoroughly delighted with Perelman. His humor is completely up-to-the-minute: allusive, intelligent, urban—and above all, mad. But that is the way we take it these days, and like it. A generation from now it will be largely indecipherable and thoroughly inane, but here and now it's grand good stuff."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1195 Jl 12 '30 380w

PERINE, EDWARD TEN BROECK. Here's to Broadway! 321p il $4.50 (18s) Putnam

974.71 New York (city)—Streets. New York (city)—History 30-9122

A history of New York City as symbolized by the growth of Broadway, with its progress and parades, from 1764 to the present. Broadway in the days of Washington and Lafayette; Barnum's reception of Jenny Lind; Broadway during the Civil war and at the death of Lincoln; the establishment and growth of Columbia university; the Equitable building fire; Broadway during the War and the Armistice day celebration; and Broadway's reception of a national hero, Lindbergh, are among the chapters of chief interest.

Bookm 71:xxii Je '30 50w

"It would be impossible to write a dull history of its eventful past, and Mr. Perine has turned out a book which is far from that. Mr. Perine's style does not rise above journalese, but one forgives his manner for the sake of his material."

+ — Books p10 Ag 3 '30 180w

Hist Outlook 21:242 My '30 100w

"To any one who is willing, occasionally, to provide his own imagination to a story simply and ramblingly told the book presents an interesting, if fragmentary, picture." Russell Crouse

+ — N Y Evening Post p8s F 22 '30 520w

"Mr. Perine has evidently read widely, for the preparation of each of his narratives for his text is always full of colorful backgrounding information and interesting detail."

+ N Y Times p32 F 16 '30 430w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p10m F 2 '30 700w

Times [London] Lit Sup p375 My 1 '30 120w

PERKINS, GRACE (MRS FULTON OURSLER). Chats with the Macfadden family. 228p il $2.50 Copeland

B or 92 Macfadden, Bernarr Adolphus

Bernarr Macfadden's marriage, his home life, the birth and care of his children, his ideas on physical education, diet, etc., his estate at Englewood, and his habits and hobbies are written of informally by the author, a friend of the family. The book is illustrated with various photographs of Mr and Mrs Macfadden and the children.

Reviewed by Lisle Bell

Books p21 F 16 '30 160w

Christian Century 47:309 Mr 5 '30 50w

Reviewed by C. H. Grattan

New Repub 62:78 Mr 5 '30 450w

N Y Times p20 Mr 9 '30 400w

PERRY, TYLINE. The owner lies dead. 324p $2 Covici [7s 6d Gollancz]

30-16604

"The story opens with a mine disaster. After several attempts have been made to rescue those who are imprisoned in the mine, Tony Sheridan, the owner's nephew, insists upon trying just once more. He goes down alone and does not return. Five weeks later, when the fire has died out, his body is found. But it turns out that his death was due not to fire or suffocating gases, but to a bullet through the head. After this introduction the author goes back and relates certain significant events preceding the tragedy, at the same time introducing us to the various characters concerned in it."—N Y Times

Bookm 71:xviii Ag '30 80w

Reviewd by Will Cuppy

Books p10 Jl 6 '30 130w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 30 '30 300w

"An involved, somewhat muddled and repetitious story." Dashiell Hammett

— N Y Evening Post p8m Je 21 '30 50w

N Y Times p15 Je 29 '30 250w

Reviewed by Bernice Whittemore

Outlook 155:350 Jl 2 '30 100w

"Toward the end the involutions become very involved indeed; but it all stays plausible, as mystery stories go. Miss Perry has managed to work out a solution wherein the righteous get their due and only the wicked get their come-uppance, though you can read pretty close to the end before you see how she can ever do it."

Sat R of Lit 6:1195 Jl 12 '30 250w

"We have here that very rare thing—a first-class thriller which is also a novel full of human interest and sound psychology. . . Mr. Perry's story will tax the ingenuity of the most cunning readers and his book deserves more than one reading in order that his brilliant manner of hiding clues may be appreciated."

+ Spec 145:229 Ag 16 '30 200w

PERTWEE, ROLAND. Pursuit. 296p $2 Houghton

30-25304

The war sees two men, Harley Trevelyan and Major Fawlk, in love with the same girl, Joan Miller. Following adventures in the front line trenches of France, the scene shifts to Africa, whither Harley heroically pursues the villainous Major and exacts a just revenge.

Bookm 72:vi N '30 50w

Books p27 N 2 '30 150w

"Roland Pertwee has created something blazingly definite. On this account, and also because his people are so well worth knowing, 'Pursuit' seems the most distinctive of any of his stories." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p1 N 19 '30 1350w

"If you make up your mind not to take 'Pursuit' seriously, but to believe every word of it, you will find it exciting entertainment. It is not a war book; the war is merely scenery and ends midway in the story."

+ N Y Times p20 O 19 '30 230w

"Heavily charged thriller, employing numerous variations on sure-fire devices of successful melodrama, the story is just about the best of it kind we have seen of late." E. C. Beckwith

+ N Y World p3e N 2 '30 80w

"The final test of a good thriller is whether or not it really catches you up into the action, makes you abandon the critical attitude in which you say to yourself: 'He wouldn't have done that. That couldn't have happened.' Roland Pertwee's adventure stories do this a good share of the time. His latest, 'Pursuit,' is a splendid story, amusing and exciting." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 156:231 O 8 '30 120w

PERUTZ, LEO. Master of the day of judgment; tr. from the German by Hedwig Singer. (Bonibooks) 195p pa 50c Boni [6s Mathews]

30-9247

"Eugene Bischoff, an old actor, is leading a Brahms trio in his drawing-room; his young wife and her former lover, Baron Von Yosch, are quietly at enmity; and Sogrub, a queer but amiable Russian, completes the Chekhov scene. Bischoff leaves the room, and a moment later is found shot. In following the clues, we trace the mental and nervous repercussions of the tragedy, as it impinges on other lives. Traditional stuff of black magic and a drug discovered by an early Florentine painter is introduced, but the psychological raison d'être for this conventional picturesqueness lies in the ultimate surprise."—Nation and Ath

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p16 Ap 13 '30 350w

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 16 '30 550w

"To find a murder story which happens to be a work of art and not a fine piece of mechanism is rare. But 'The Master of the Day of Judgment' is a further example of what can be done on the Continent. Here is murder, uncanny and epidemic suicide, mystery, detection: and at the same time a wonderful exploration of mind and personality."

+ Nation and Ath 46:sup226 N 9 '29 400w

"He has written not only a good mystery story, but an ingenious and interesting book." H. C. C.

+ New Repub 62:308 Ap 30 '30 200w

"Perutz tells his tale in a flowing, worldly manner that gives the very flavor of life in Vienna in the old days, cultured, mocking, gay. The book makes interesting reading both for its story and the fine technique of its telling." R. C. Feld

+ N Y Times p7 Ap 20 '30 550w

"The novelist's talent is fully evident in this book, and there are great delicacy and verisimilitude in the character of the drawing, which lift it out of the class of mere thriller." Pierre Loving

+ N Y World p11m My 4 '30 360w

"We can say without hesitation that it is a magnificently eerie mystery story." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:590 Ap 9 '30 40w

"This is an excellent novel of its kind, backed up by psychological analysis of gruesome ingenuity and by a nice sense of metaphysical horrors."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p72 Ja 30 '30 150w

PETAIN, HENRI PHILIPPE BENONI OMER. Verdun; auth. tr. by Margaret MacVeagh. 235p il $4 Dial press

940.4273 Verdun, Battle of, 1916 30-15422

A reconstruction of the battle of Verdun by the general who conducted the defense. Gen. Petain, marshal of France and member of the French academy, tells his story, from a lucid and unbiased viewpoint, of the preparations for the battle, the organization of the defense, the attack, the final attempts of the enemy, and the French counter-thrust.

Booklist 27:99 N '30

"Marshal Pétain, with no appreciable literary affectation, has made his account of the defence of Verdun almost fascinating. It is such a calm and clearsighted book that one forgets the carnage in the intellectual enjoyment of the strategy."

+ Bookm 72:vi O '30 100w

"This book is written with a soldierly directness, a classic simplicity, an imperial brevity, not unworthy of Caesar. The epic grandeur of the contest is indicated in plain concrete terms without any rhetoric." Albert Guerard

+ Books p7 Jl 27 '30 500w

"Made Marshal of France after his triumphal entry into Metz in 1918, the author of this book now describes all that happened in and around Verdun with a vividness and literary skill that could not well be excelled." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 5 '30 750w

"Marshal Petain has written almost the ideal war book in this brief and moving story of the great Battle of Verdun which he directed on the French side." L. V. Updegraff

+ N Y Times p3 Je 15 '30 1350w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:8 S '30 280w

St Louis 28:219 S '30

"His narrative, which one first read serially in L'Illustration has a poise, lucidity, and absence of pedantry in its military reasoning, which in no way disillusion us to his capacity. It is, of course, marked by his habitual restraint. He avoids dwelling on the preliminary phase before he took over command, and so avoids criticizing the blindness of the higher command. Yet his restraint lends force." B. Liddell Hart

+ Spec 145:637 N 1 '30 650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p902 N 6 '30 1050w

Reviewed by Charles Seymour

Yale R n s 20:389 winter '31 80w

PETERS, CHARLES CLINTON. Objectives and procedures in civic education; an intensive study in curriculum construction. (Longmans' educ. ser.) 302p $2 Longmans

320.7 Citizenship. Sociology 30-15922

Under problems of citizenship the author discusses such topics as secular interest in public affairs, development of patriotism and initiative, the combatting of provincialism, etc. Several chapters take up the contributions to civic education thru history and social sciences, the teaching of English, geography and other high school studies. Concluding chapters contain material dealing with the civic education of adults, and education for industrial and social democracy.

"The picture portrayed in the book as a whole is one with five of six parts missing. The missing five parts are the areas of education that Professor Peters makes no attempt to treat. If these areas are as prolific in producing educational objectives as the area treated in this book, the curriculum-maker will have at his disposal twenty-four hundred specific objectives when all the areas have been thoroughly cultivated." R. M. Tryon

— El School J 31:70 S '30 950w

St Louis 28:204 S '30

PETERS, MRS IDA (DONNALLY). Girls of long ago. 324p il $2.50 Crowell

920.7 Girls—Biography. Woman—Biography. Biography—Juvenile literature 30-24146

Stories of nineteen American girls, some of whom later lived in the White House. Contents: Martha Dandridge Custis; Abigail Adams; Martha Jefferson; Dolly Madison; Patricia Covell; Mrs James Monroe; Mrs John Quincy Adams; Mrs Andrew Jackson; Emily Donelson; Mrs Martin Van Buren; Mrs Abram Van Buren; Mrs William Henry Harrison; Mrs John Tyler; Mrs James Polk; Mrs Zachary Taylor; Mrs Millard Fillmore; Mrs Franklin Pierce; Mrs Henry Elliott Johnson; Mary Todd Lincoln.

Bookm 72:xxviii O '30 30w

PETERS, IDA—Continued

"The amount of information collected by Mrs. Peters set my mind to whirling, but failed to arouse my interest. Of plot there is little. Instead, there is a laborious complication of statistics, vital and otherwise. Occasionally the author recognizes the possibilities of her material and tells a good yarn about Daniel Boone, for example, or includes an anecdote with a touch of reality. More often dramatic episodes are passed over lightly." Barbara Nolen

— Books p8 N 9 '30 350w

J Home Econ 22:1018 D '30 30w

PETERSHAM, MAUD (FULLER) (MRS MISKA PETERSHAM), and PETERSHAM, MISKA. Ark of Father Noah and Mother Noah, as seen by [the authors]. unp il $2 Doubleday, Doran

30-29907

A humorous account of Noah's ark and what happened there during the forty days and forty nights. Told for children.

"According to Maud and Miska Petersham, the Family Noah was a jolly one, and their adventure a splendid lark. It is a point of view the children will relish. The drawings bubble with good humor, and their brilliant colors, so right for a picture-book, have been excellently reproduced." K. G. Landon

+ Bookm 72:245 N '30 80w

"This flat, square, highly colored volume is certain to delight any infant beyond the age of four. No children who have suffered the mingled joys and deprivations of rainy days have ever in my experience failed to respond to any tolerably exciting account of the great rain, with Noah and his family and all the animals, two by two, tucked snugly away in that incredible ark." F. H. Britten

+ Books p8 N 30 '30 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p134 N '30

"A book that has gaiety and charm. A little streamlet of text goes along with the pictures." Padraic Colum

+ New Repub 65:24 N 19 '30 180w

Reviewed by Nancy Evans

N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 80w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker

Outlook 156:586 D 10 '30 80w

PETROVA, NATALIA, pseud. Twice born in Russia; my life before and in the revolution; tr. by Baroness Mary Budberg; introd. by Dorothy Thompson. 194p $2 Morrow

B or 92 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917- Bolshevism—Russia. Russia—Social life and customs 30-22367

A daughter of the old Russian nobility writes this autobiographical account of her experiences during the Revolution. She contrasts the sheltered life of her girlhood, the country after her marriage, and the happy relationship between the peasants and landowners with the terrible years of increasing poverty, suffering, and degradation during the height of the revolution. Isolated from her family and friends, she fought to keep starvation from herself and small son. The book ends on a note of recovery and stability under the new Communist régime.

Booklist 27:157 D '30

"The author writes with graceful simplicity, and wins the reader with a few pages. She does not exclaim against the horrors she was made to endure; she matched privation with patience, and accepted the fate of her class, one feels, with a deep realization of ineluctable tragedy. Nor does she defend the old régime, or assail the new."

+ Bookm 72:xxii O '30 150w

"In an introduction Dorothy Thompson vouches for the authenticity of the story, though its own evidence of honor and magnanimity makes that assurance unnecessary. It is a story to be cherished by those who have been remote from the maelstrom in Russia." Mary Ross

+ Books p2 Ag 31 '30 900w

"Her story of her life in Russia before and in the Russian revolution is one of the most moving and harrowing narratives yet published. More than that, it is distinguished by a generosity and an absence of bitterness and hate which stamp the writer as a woman of true spiritual greatness. . . As a human document Natalia Petrova's narrative is beyond question valuable. The book is not very well done into English; any new edition ought to receive careful revision." O. G. Villard

+ Nation 131:328 S 24 '30 420w

N Y Times p16 D 21 '30 320w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:83 N '30

St Louis 28:273 N '30

Reviewed by L. D. Lasker

Survey 65:285 D 1 '30 400w

PETTIT, CHARLES. Petal-of-the-Rose; tr. by Una, lady Troubridge. 249p $2.50 Liveright

30-11378

"A sophisticated novel about the Oriental indiscretions of Petal-of-the-Rose, and her Mandarin father, Ou Tsong Ling."—Publishers' Weekly

"Mr. Pettit, as in his previous books, The Son of the Grand Eunuch and The Woman Who Commanded 500,000,000 Men has borrowed a set of characters out of The Mikado, called them Chinese, and written an extended satire around them in the manner of the Voltaire of Candide. The result is a book that says nothing very original but is often quite amusing."

— + Bookm 71:x Jl '30 50w

"Charles Pettit has a large time with religion. He has also a large time with education, medicine, marriage, virtue and practically everything else. No one who likes a wicked wit and a naughty humor will care to miss 'Petal-of-the-Rose.'" R. B. Sanborn

Books p5 My 25 '30 670w

Boston Transcript p2 S 17 '30 300w

"'Petal-of-the-Rose' is one of those gay, malicious books which compel the tribute of a complete reading at one sitting. Ironic wit is the keynote, not as Swift employed it to mask profound feeling, but the jovial cynic wit of a man who asks no more than a box seat at the play where once he strutted with the best of them."

N Y Times p18 My 18 '30 520w

PHELPS, CHRISTINA. Anglo-American peace movement in the mid-nineteenth century. (Studies in hist., economics and public law) 230p $3.50 Columbia univ. press [14s King]

341.6 Peace. International law and relations. International cooperation 30-27823

"This study deals with the organized work for international peace which was carried on by societies and individuals in England and America between the years 1835 and 1854. Although the peace crusade was checked in England by the Crimean War and in the United States by the Civil War, the aims and proposals of these early friends of peace foreshadowed the work of modern internationalists from 1867 to 1930, and their achievements in the line of international cooperation."—D. S. Muzzey

"Dr. Phelps gives a very interesting and valuable account of this pioneer attempt to bring order out of the international anarchy under which unhappily we still exist." F. J. S.

+ Nation and Ath 47:802 S 27 '30 350w

"Miss Phelps's book is well written, and will appeal to all those interested in the development of the idea of organized peace. Within these limits it gives evidence of wide and patient research; but the writer occasionally goes astray when she ventures beyond the borders of her immediate theme."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p768 O 2 '30 1200w

PHELPS, EDITH M., ed. University debaters' annual; constructive and rebuttal speeches delivered in debates of American colleges and universities during the college year, 1928-1929. 464p $2.25 Wilson, H.W.

374 Debates and debating (16-1455)

The subjects covered in debate are: The pact of Paris; British criminal procedure; Women in industry; Installment buying; Freedom of speech; Insanity as a defense in crime; The jury system; National advertising; Government ownership and operation of power sites.

Booklist 26:196 F '30
Wis Lib Bul 26:64 F '30

PHELPS, GEORGE HARRISON. Tomorrow's advertisers and their advertising agencies. 256p il $3.50 Harper

659 Advertising 29-29372

"A glowing account of what may be done by advertising in the future, especially through the use of the radio and television. Special attention is given to the extension of advertising to reach a world-wide constituency. Emphasis is placed upon the need of exciting the reader and listener in order to secure responsive action."—Am Econ R

Am Econ R 20:117 Mr '30 100w
Booklist 26:267 Ap '30

"Mr. Phelps writes in an easy, readable style and quotes many incidents and examples of current interest from his rich store of practical experience. It does not appear that he has made a contribution of lasting significance to the bibliography of advertising, but his work has value to the merchant or manufacturer who would have a clear picture of the practical operation of a modern advertising agency." R. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 22 '30 380w
Cleveland Open Shelf p68 My '30
J Home Econ 22:319 Ap '30 80w

PHELPS, WILLIAM LYON. Essays on things. 290p $2 Macmillan

814 30-24460

Short essays on general topics as various as sunrise, ancient football, rivers, city and country, political history, tea, war, and church unity.

Booklist 27:149 D '30

"If one is not wholly disarmed by the beauty of Professor Phelps's gospel and still hunts the worm at the root, it will probably be found to consist in the disease of Wilcoxism which Clive Bell once deduced from reading Ella Wheeler Wilcox's memoirs, and from the poetess's rapturous enthusiasm for every phenomenon or person that happened to achieve greatness by entering the foggy orbit of her own experience. Plainly this is Professor Phelp's affliction." M. D. Zabel

— Nation 131:473 O 29 '30 450w
N Y Times p7 D 21 '30 280w

"The author is always companionable and pleasant; but he does not cultivate the essay as an art."

+ — Springf'd Republican p8 S 27 '30 150w

PHELPS, WILLIAM LYON. Memory. 50p $1 Dutton

154 Memory 29-21379

A short, inspirational essay treating memory from a philosophical viewpoint. Memory is considered as an instrument of pain and a giver of joy, as well as a mechanical aid to proper living.

"His points are well made; his quiet humor enlivens his more serious meditations, and his illustrations are both apt and illuminating."

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 28 '29 220w
+ Boston Transcript p2 F 21 '30 450w
Cleveland Open Shelf p156 D '29
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:14 F '30
Pratt p8 spring '30
St Louis 28:3 Ja '30
Springf'd Republican p10 D 10 '29 180w

PHILLIPS, CHARLES STANLEY. Church in France, 1789-1848; a study in revival. 315p $6 Morehouse [15s Mowbray]

282 Roman Catholic church in France. Church and state in France 30-11934

An account of the Catholic church prior to and during the French revolution, and its subsequent revival, heralded by Chateaubriand's "Le génie du Christianisme." The latter part of the book contains the story of religious revival under the July monarchy and the fight for religious education.

"This book is a careful and impartial study of six decades of unrest." E. L. Pennington

+ Living Church 82:376 Jl 12 '30 650w

"Dr. Phillips wields an agile and well-pointed pen, and gives vividness to a story which—especially in its earlier phases—is largely one of difficult and often hostile relations between Church and State." Evelyn Underhill

+ Spec 143:912 D 14 '29 600w

"Excellent and well-written book. . . Dr. Phillips's attitude is studiously moderate."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1043 D 12 '29 1700w

PHILLIPS, HENRY ALBERT. Meet the Germans; in which an American sees the new Germany through its people. 346p il $3 (15s) Lippincott

914.3 Germany—Description and travel. Germany—Social life and customs 29-29237

Mr Phillips, an American, writes from a human-interest viewpoint of German family life in his descriptions of contemporary social conditions in the various German towns. German hospitality, thrift, industry and love of gaiety and festivals are sympathetically viewed by the author.

"The enthusiasm with which Henry Albert Phillips meets the Germans justifies itself by the degree in which he communicates his zeal. . . He has absorbed a great deal and had a good time. He sees the human side of contemporary German life, and although he gives due space to the walled castles and the centers of history and culture, he does not permit them to crowd out the beer gardens, the music and the everyday life of the people."

+ Books p24 N 17 '29 140w
Cleveland Open Shelf p151 D '29

"Mr. Phillips writes unostentatiously, with apparent ease, and with the ability to provide a colorful chromo of the scenes and people whom he visited after an absence of ten years."

+ N Y Times p32 N 24 '29 220w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:7 Ja '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 80:26 N '29 50w
St Louis 28:15 Ja '30

" 'Meet the Germans' makes a vivid medium for seeing present-day Germany from the library. . . The author, though hardly weighty, makes his travels highly readable and reasonably instructive."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 N 26 '29 350w

Reviewed by J. P. Gavit

Survey 64:324 Jl 1 '30 180w
Times [London] Lit Sup p815 O 9 '30 380w

PHILLPOTTS, EDEN. Three maidens. 348p $2.50 Smith, R.R. [7s 6d Hutchinson]

30-11380

Three English girls, rare friends, were Marion, Freda, and Lily. Lily, the beauty of the trio, did not want to marry Marion's hand-

PHILLPOTTS, EDEN—Continued
some brother, did not want to marry anyone, she insisted. Marion was about to break her engagement. Freda, supposedly the best balanced of the girls, was trying to decide which of two suitors she would marry. But the end of the story finds Lily and Marion, each having changed her mind, about to marry, while Freda is just where she was in the beginning.

Booklist 27:65 O '30

"The story is slight and charming and ends happily. Mr. Phillpotts has a way with simple characters. They are all thoroughly human. And old Madge, the poacher, is one of those likable originals who have always played a delightful part in the traditional English novel of plot and humor."
+ Books p10 Je 8 '30 250w
Boston Transcript p1 Je 14 '30 1400w
Cleveland Open Shelf p111 Jl '30
N Y Times p16 S 7 '30 220w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
Sat R of Lit 7:23 Ag 2 '30 650w

"In The Three Maidens Mr. Eden Phillpotts is at something like his best, and Mr. Phillpotts at his best can create character in the round and give to rustic philosophy an element of poetry that exorcises the sham and the sentimental."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p334 Ap 17 '30 350w

PIAGET, JEAN. Child's conception of physical causality; tr. by Marjorie Gabain. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 309p $4 Harcourt [12s 6d Routledge]
136.72 Child study [30-17187]

A record of conversations with children between the ages of three and twelve concerning certain physical phenomena like the nature of air, the movement of clouds, the currents of water and the operation of machines such as bicycles and steam engines. Piaget, from these studies, contends that there are seventeen types of causal relation in child thought.

"This extensive examination of children's thought processes has its value. It is worth the while of any child psychologist who has not yet discovered that the views of children about the origin of things are 'entirely mythological' and 'animistic.'" Stanley Rypins
+ Books p14 S 21 '30 550w

"His method is admirable; it is no arbitrary book of ideas and theories, quoting the practical work of others here and there at his convenience, but conclusions and a system built up with strict logic from the experimental results of himself and his students."
+ Sat R 150:182 Ag 9 '30 220w

PICARD, MAX. Human face; tr. from the German by Guy Endore. 221p il $4 Farrar
138 Physiognomy 30-28065

Picard, a German physician and philosopher, maintains in this mystical essay that the human face is (or should be) the image of God. It is his belief that faces have degenerated during the last fifty years. He takes up various aspects of the face, such as the front face and profile, the relation of faces to each other, time and space in the human face, age and sex, good and evil, animal form and human form.

"This book is at once beautiful and wise; so beautiful and so wise that it may appear disorderly and foolish. . . It has the intuitive wisdom and the verbal beauty of poetry; it is by no means perfect, since the dissimilarity of form and method on the one hand and content on the other sometimes results in a childish image, or a foolish and disorderly contradiction. It will not please everyone, yet one needs no special taste to be pleased with it. Above all, it has the power to be alone with its subject. In another sense, as a piece of literature in this century and this generation, it is quite alone." George Dangerfield
+ — Bookm 72:440 D '30 550w

"Enigmatical, cryptic, mystical, every page leaves you wondering just what it means, and yet with a sense that something beautiful is being said, and that this beauty is a symbol of truth—if you could only find just what it is. But to find that out, the reader must first learn Picard's language."
Christian Century 47:1453 N 26 '30 180w
N Y Times p40 N 30 '30 350w

PIERCE, BESSIE LOUISE. Civic attitudes in ² American school textbooks. (Studies in the making of citizens) 297p $3 Univ. of Chicago press [13s 6d Cambridge univ. press]
371.32 Textbooks. Citizenship. Social sciences—Study and teaching 30-29000

Dr Pierce has studied over four hundred textbooks commonly used in American public schools, covering the subjects of history, civics, economics, geography, literature, music and foreign languages, to ascertain, from their content, the attitudes or impressions which the children who are taught from them might obtain concerning their own country and other countries.

St Louis 28:291 D '30

"Her book, which is one in a significant series of studies of civic education in many countries, is, if anything, too exhaustive. The wealth of examples are sometimes insufficiently evaluated, certain conclusions insufficiently sharpened. One could wish, too, for comment on some books as a whole, and for figures showing the exact extent to which the most frequently quoted books are used in the schools. None the less, from her careful array of 'only the facts,' and from those general statements that she does permit herself to make, many conclusions, once only uneasily suspected, are startlingly proved." E. G. Black
+ — Survey 65:343 D 15 '30 650w

"The technique by which blind and bigoted nationalists are manufactured is herein set forth. Rapid progress is now being made in changing the attitudes of textbooks but the evidence here assembled shows how far we have yet to travel."
World Tomorrow 13:525 D '30 70w

PIERCE, LORNE ALBERT. William Kirby, the portrait of a Tory loyalist. 477p $7.50 Macmillan (Toronto) [31s 6d Macmillan]
B or 92 Kirby, William. Canada—Politics and government 30-10571

"William Kirby was novelist, poet, historian, police magistrate and collector of customs in the now almost forgotten capital of Upper Canada, Newark, in the Niagara District. Upper Canada is the country between the lakes, through which the Welland Canal joins Lakes Ontario and Erie. Here, in the old days of the last century, this stubborn, handsome, vital, likable person lived, knowing most of the important people of his time, and leaving behind him letters and documents revealing intimately a half a century of life in that district. Into these Mr. Pierce has delved."—Boston Transcript

"It is evident that the Kirby Papers contain materials that throw light upon the conditions, social, political, and religious, in Upper Canada in the middle years of the nineteenth century, and some of this material is produced by Dr. Pierce. But he is too eager to place William Kirby in a setting of national and international movements, thereby doing him an injustice. An interesting and even attractive frontier anomaly seems Lilliputian in such a frame. The book is marred by numerous digressions, and while some valuable letters are produced, many of those printed are either mere autographs or else have no logical connection with the book itself." Paul Knaplund
— + Am Hist R 35:927 Jl '30 480w

Boston Transcript p1 Ap 5 '30 270w

"It is so padded out with reprints of the full text of correspondence, with extracts from Kirby's note books, and with historical disquisitions not particularly relevant to its subject, that few persons not already interested in Kirby will have the patience to read more than a few pages of it."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p717 S 11 '30 180w

PIERON, HENRI. Principles of experimental psychology; tr. by J. B. Miner. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 190p $3.75 Harcourt [7s 6d Routledge]

150 Psychology, Physiological [29-23817]

"Prof. Piéron is known to psychologists as carrying on the work of Binet at the laboratory of the Sorbonne, and as the author of numerous monographs, as well as a treatise on thought and the brain, already translated into English. He defines psychology as 'a science of behaviour, of activity, of the co-ordinated responses of organisms, considered in their totality'. With his modified form of behaviourism as his guiding principle, Prof. Piéron summarises the work of psychological science as he understands it. He first discusses reaction processes, affective, perceptive, and intellectual, and then gives valuable sections on levels of activity, and mental stages and types."—Nature

Boston Transcript p4 N 23 '29 500w

"Every page of the book shows that it was well worth translating. Only a master could have said so much in so few pages, and said it with such perfect clarity."

+ Nature 125:268 F 22 '30 220w

Reviewed by Leonard Carmichael

New Repub 64:331 N 5 '30 120w

St Louis 28:257 N '30

"We do not know of any general work on the subject which is so completely and naturally modern in its outlook. Professor Piéron gives one the impression of having learned something from every school without committing himself to any of their extravagances. As an introduction to the whole subject his book appears to us very valuable, and we can only regret that he gives hardly any references in the text and only a brief and somewhat capricious bibliography."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p22 Ja 9 '30 1000w

PINCHBECK, IVY. Women workers and the industrial revolution, 1750-1850. (Univ. of London. London school of economics and political science. Studies in economic and social history) 342p $5 Crofts [15s Routledge]

331.4 Woman—Employment [30-23813]

An economic study of conditions governing the lives of working women during the period 1750-1850. In part one the author takes up the employment of women in agriculture in the eighteenth century, during the agrarian revolution, and following agricultural depression and the Poor law. Part two discusses women in industry and trade: the textile industries; the smaller domestic industries; mines and metals trade; and craftswomen and business women.

Reviewed by H. S. Woodbury

Am Econ R 20:721 D '30 550w

"Miss Pinchbeck takes her place at once as one of the most industrious and intelligent researchers in the school of history to which she belongs. It would be impossible to find a more persistent or successful hunter of facts than she is, or a book of three hundred pages which contains a larger number of facts than the one she now gives us. Industriousness can do no more; her intelligence is shown in the selection and arrangement of her facts. Such books do not make light or very agreeable reading; they are intended for the expert and the intensive rather than the general reader, and for them they are, when as good as Miss Pinchbeck's, invaluable."

+ Nation and Ath 47:116 Ap 26 '30 750w

New Statesman 35:414 Jl 5 '30 800w

"The extent and amount of the investigation she has done in collecting her material would seem staggering to the ordinary reader, but she has carried it all off successfully and has woven her findings into a big, well organized, logically presented volume that for a long time to come will be a valuable source book for students of sociology and political economy who are concerned with that period in England."

+ N Y Times p27 Je 8 '30 250w

St Louis 28:260 N '30

"We have here a volume of singular merit, whose value is that the author has succeeded in producing not only a lively human historical document under a title inevitably suggestive of literary indigestion, but in offering to readers at this crucial period of combined industrial home and foreign policy of the British Empire a seasonal bird's-eye view of the cycles of industrial development."

+ Sat R 149:333 Mr 15 '30 850w

"Miss Pinchbeck, who is lecturer in Economic History at Bedford College, deserves special praise for her sane and comprehensive account of women workers in Great Britain during the Industrial Revolution."

+ Spec 144:338 Mr 1 '30 400w

"Miss Pinchbeck's book is a careful study of this subject; it is full of information, for the most part well arranged, and all students of history will be grateful for the new light she throws on this question. The best part of the book is concerned with agricultural and village life. . . She has rendered a notable service to the study of history by the care and skill with which she has investigated the less familiar industries."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p227 Mr 20 '30 1350w

PINCHOT, GIFFORD. To the South Seas; the cruise of the schooner Mary Pinchot to the Galapagos, the Marquesas, and the Tuamotu Islands, and Tahiti. 500p il $3.50 Winston

919.6 Polynesia—Description and travel. Mary Pinchot (schooner). Voyages and travels 30-13747

An absorbing travel-narrative of adventure and scientific discovery by Gifford Pinchot, governor of Pennsylvania 1923-27; and member of the American museum of natural history. The cruise of the schooner Mary Pinchot to the South Seas was undertaken in cooperation with the United States national museum, and the party, besides members of Mr Pinchot's family, included several naturalists and a photographer. The author gives an account of the ship's adventures, and its visits, to the Galapagos, the Marquesas, the Tuamotu Islands and Tahiti.

Booklist 27:23 S '30

Books p13 Jl 20 '30 250w

Boston Transcript p1 Je 7 '30 450w

"The recording of it is obviously almost as thrilling a matter to the adventurer as the actual trip. Mr. Pinchot had a gorgeous trip and so much of his enthusiasm has got into the setting down of the events of the trip that the reader has a grand time, too. Salted with humor as well as sea air."

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p12 Je 28 '30 130w

Christian Century 47:969 Ag 6 '30 300w

"Mr. Pinchot has written his book simply, in conversational style, with a gusto that bespeaks his own enjoyment of every slight detail and with a sense of humor that makes reading the 490-odd pages easy. The book is most generously illustrated with 250 photographs, as well as with several maps and woodcuts—only a small part of the total collection of 2000 still pictures and seven miles of film."

+ Christian Science Monitor p4 Jl 5 '30 400w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p11m My 3 '30 130w

PINCHOT, GIFFORD—Continued

"'To the South Seas' is a narrative presented in a straightaway, easy-flowing, ingratiating manner, without the pretentious flourishes and pseudoromantic exaggerations of some who travel to the South Seas. The author's amiability is quite as much in evidence in every chapter as his scientific zeal, and his remarks are flavored with a pleasant humor that should help make the reader feel at home with the ship's crew and its cheerful commandant."

+ N Y Times p48 D 7 '30 650w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:75 O '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:11 Jl '30 180w

St Louis 28:217 S '30

"It is a travel book in the fine sense, the best that I have read in recent years. Mr. Pinchot's intimate, straightforward, narrative style suits the subject well. . . It is a book to read, and to keep to read again. More valuable than the story itself is the manifestation throughout it of the spirit of the man who first lived it and now tells it. Mr. Pinchot's senses are as keen as those of a boy. He has a boy's vivid sense of the wonder and beauty of the external world and the same tireless curiosity about it, which is as rare as it is precious." J. N. Hall

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1187 Jl 12 '30 1400w

PINKEVITCH, ALBERT PETROVICH. New education in the Soviet republic; tr. under the auspices of the International inst., Teachers College, Columbia univ., by Nucia Perlmutter; ed. by George S. Counts. 403p $4 Day

370.947 Education—Russia 30-26173

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:223 Mr '30

Bookm 70:vi F '30 200w

"This book, written for Soviet university students by one of Russia's foremost educational authorities and translated in this country under the auspices of Columbia University, is the first really authentic exposition in English of the theory and practice, the aims, methods and achievements of the new education in the Soviet Republic." Joshua Kunitz

+ Books p21 F 16 '30 900w

Boston Transcript p8 Ja 11 '30 600w

Christian Century 47:310 Mr 5 '30 120w

"This work by one of the leading educators of Soviet Russia has a twofold interest. For educators it contains much that is novel in theory and practice, although, strangely enough, America has been drawn upon for not a little inspiration in the building up of the new Soviet school system. But the book will be no less valuable to students of politics and social science for its very thorough exposition of how the whole system of Soviet education is being made to serve the purposes of the new economic and social order which the Communists are trying to establish and make permanent."

+ Current Hist 31:1068 Mr '30 120w

Reviewed by William MacDonald
N Y Times p11 Jl 6 '30 700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:31 Ap '30

Pratt p12 autumn '30

St Louis 28:67 Mr '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p705 S 11 '30 1450w

Wis Lib Bul 26:64 F '30

PINTNER, RUDOLF. Educational psychology; an introd. text. 378p $2.50 Holt

150 Psychology, Educational. Mental tests 29-13609

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by R. P. Carroll
Am J Psychol 42:669 O '30 600w

"This is an American book, but if it smacks too much of behaviourism for some English readers, the fact remains that there are few methods outside those put forward in this book which enable the teacher to know what a child is capable of doing as an individual. The conventional examination system only estimates a child's capacity in his relation to other children." James Thornton

+ Nation and Ath 47:414 Je 28 '30 180w

St Louis 28:208 S '30

PIPER, RAYMOND FRANK, and WARD, PAUL WILLIAM. Fields and methods of knowledge. 398p $4.25 (16s) Crofts (corr pub)

112 Classification of sciences. Methodology 30-1409

"This book is a survey of the sciences and an analysis of scientific method, and includes a comprehensive review of knowledge and a humanized logic. Parts I and III consist of an introduction to the major branches of Science and Philosophy; Part II is devoted to a critical and systematic statement of the anatomy of scientific procedure. As an aid to an appreciation of the extent and relative importance of various aspects of civilization, the authors review the major divisions of human culture and the methods which they employ, and analyze carefully the results so far achieved by their use. Numerous illustrations and diagrams illuminate the text, and at the end of each chapter there is a carefully selected bibliography." —Publisher's note

"This volume has notable merit as a general survey of the field of science and scientific method."

+ Am J Soc 35:863 Mr '30 200w

"The book suffers somewhat from its authors' attempt to crowd in a little of everything, and from its rather professional language. Nevertheless, it is to be recommended."

Bookm 71:vi Ag '30 80w

"This is no ordinary textbook, but a book deserving of a respected place in one's own library shelves. It is a book which many students will wish to keep." N. M. Grier

+ Christian Century 47:758 Je 11 '30 300w

Reviewed by C. M. Perry
Int J Ethics 41:133 O '30 100w

"While the syllabus contains much of value to all who are interested in the growing literature on the logic of reflective thinking, its main appeal is to those who desire a textbook that is favorable to positive religious faith in the Liberal Protestant sense. The physical appearance of the book is of the first order, as is the material presented in this introductory text, when judged in the light of its purpose." Richard Hope

+ J Philos 26:714 D 19 '29 800w

PIPER, WARRENE. Son of John Winteringham. 317p $2.50 Houghton

30-6153

When John Winteringham dies in Paris leaving five motherless boys, uncle John Darcy transports three of them to Caldersham. Darcy, the eldest, a boy of fifteen, with his youngest brother in his keeping, gets a job in London; but a bad injury received in an accident makes it necessary for him to join the other Winteringhams with uncle John at Caldersham. The novelist is chiefly concerned with a study of the characters in their relations to each other—especially with the contrast between young Darcy and the uncle for whom he was named.

Booklist 26:358 Je '30

"I cannot help thinking Miss Piper has let antipathy for the much berated whimsical school drive her into something nearly as painful. It is not so much that an overripe wisdom comes from the mouths of her babes as that they all have a fully developed understanding of the most tenuous emotions, a sort of ability to play up to any situation from its central core, to grasp the implications of its farthest fringe. In abandoning the conventional absurdities she has overlept everything that distinguishes these ages from maturity, and has insisted upon a sensibility besides which the men and women of James or Meredith seem positively coarse." M. C. Dawson

+ — Books p3 Mr 16 '30 750w

"It is an unusual novel because of the interest drawn out of what are seemingly the most simple of incidents." M. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 29 '30 450w

Christian Science Monitor p7 S 13 '30 500w

"In spite of defects, there is real substance in the literary and educational discussions between Darcy, the oldest brother, and the uncle. Moreover, the relationships between the boys are handled with a sureness and delicacy that indicate an understanding of the interaction of character on character. If Miss Piper would write of adults rather than children and subdue her style to the average capacity of eye and intelligence, she could undoubtedly produce a character study of unusual brilliance." Persis Lane

+ — New Repub 63:241 Jl 16 '30 280w

"This novel must stand or fall by the accuracy and validity of its characterization. For the plot is almost negligible, and the persons of the tale exist in a kind of subjective vacuum, into which the wider implications of the world outside never obtrude. Notwithstanding its obvious limitations, 'Son of John Winteringham' is not a limited book. It is graceful and penetrating, tender and unsentimental, and it moves with the utmost freedom inside its narrow, self-imposed boundaries."

+ N Y Times p7 Mr 16 '30 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:51 Je '30

"The story of Darcy's struggles to adjust himself to a vicarious existence in the lives of his brothers and cousins is profound and moving. He is an anachronism—a throw-back if you will—but interesting in these days, if but for his studied reserve, his impassioned but coolly directed intelligence. Our sympathies may be broad, but his technique of living is better. Miss Piper has indeed an eye for character, and we must await further acquaintance with her work before deciding to just what extent it may be valuable."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:879 Mr 29 '30 400w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 18 '30 350w

Wis Lib Bul 26:106 Mr '30

PITKIN, WALTER BOUGHTON. Art of rapid reading; a book for people who want to read faster and more accurately. 233p il $2.50 McGraw

374.1 Reading, Psychology of 29-20045

"A book, with exercises, for people who want to read faster and more accurately. Chapters deal with action habits, perception, fatigue, interests and maladjustments and the like, in Professor Pitkin's familiar crisp English."—Survey

"The book is for study and would probably profit the conscientious student. The least valuable feature of the book is that it makes excellent dinner-table conversation. Mr. Pitkin's examples of light, average, solid and heavy reading are not always apt. They would be more valuable if they were of more general interest. It is to be remembered, however, that the book is written for the busy business man who wishes to increase his capacity for informing himself." W. M. Rayne

+ — Am J Pub Health 20:564 My '30 280w

Booklist 26:146 Ja '30

"The reader who follows the exercises over a period of several months, will doubtless find an improvement in his reading ability. Professor Pitkin has provided a worth while book for any library."

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 16 '29 250w

Reviewed by Marjorie Davey

Chem & Met Eng 36:746 D '29 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:85 D '29

Pratt p12 summer '30

Special Libraries 21:267 S '30

Survey 63:732 Mr 15 '30 50w

PITKIN, WALTER BOUGHTON. Psychology of achievement. 502p $3.50 Simon & Schuster

174 Success. Psychology, Applied 30-28306

In this study of the relationship between initial endowment and achievement, Mr Pitkin analyzes a number of successful careers and draws his conclusions therefrom.

"It is thoroughly journalistic. Charts, statistics, citations, case histories and all the forms of scientific psychology are employed, but to no real purpose. The thinking is incomplete, loosely organized and superficial." L. T. Hurwitz

— Bookm 72:333 N '30 280w

"'The Psychology of Achievement' is, like all books in vocational psychology, more vocational than psychological and more common sense than either. It contains passages of genuine insight, but more that are merely smart." Lorine Pruette

+ — Books p15 N 9 '30 850w

N Y Times p30 N 9 '30 500w

Reviewed by F. G. Seabury

Outlook 156:313 O 22 '30 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:87 D '30

"Mr. Pitkin with an original approach makes a distinct contribution to clarification, explodes enough popular errors to produce a welcome bombardment, and is both provocative and provoking. . . There are 500 pages of it, meaty, suggestive, seasoned; yet the reader when he is through may not be sure whether he has had a course meal or a set of sample diets or recipes. No one capable of reading the book can escape knowing a whole lot more about achievement than he knew before; and, still better, he will discard a generous collection of erroneous beliefs that he formerly held. Yet somehow it isn't all as convincing as one expects it to be who agrees with the most of it." Joseph Jastrow

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:239 O 18 '30 1350w

"There is a new technic, and a new phraseology, but there is little that is new and much that is trivial and tiresome."

— Springf'd Republican p10 O 17 '30 500w

PITKIN, WALTER BOUGHTON, and MARSTON, WILLIAM MOULTON. Art of sound pictures; with an introd. by Jesse L. Lasky. 287p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Appleton

791.4 Moving pictures, Talking. Moving picture plays. Color photography 30-3778

A book on how to write for the talkies, by two psychologists who are now connected with the Equitable pictures corporation. The first few chapters are intended to familiarize the prospective writer with what the producers and the audience want, including an analytical discussion of feelings and emotions. Part two outlines the mechanics of scene, sound and color technique.

Booklist 26:304 My '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p55 Ap '30

"Besides chapters dealing with the structure of the story, sound recording and sound effects, there is a good outline of colour processes and an amusing summary of the censorship regulations in the various American territories. The longest section discusses the physiology and psychology of feelings and emotions. This book is scarcely inspiring, but it contains a good deal of information of interest to the student of films." Mark Segal

Nation and Ath 47:652 Ag 23 '30 1150w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:269 F 12 '30 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:53 Je '30

St Louis 28:142 My '30

PITKIN, W. B., and MARSTON, W. M.—Cont.

"The note of ecstasy is maintained from beginning to end. The authors are both engaged in the American film industry, and they betray no self-consciousness in their use of the language of Hollywood. There is shrewdness of a sort in their analysis of the film story, but it has a distinctly depressing effect."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p353 Ap 24 '30 220w

PLACE, FRANCIS. Illustrations and proofs of the principle of population; critical and textual notes by N. E. Himes. 354p $4.50 Houghton [12s 6d Allen, G.]

312 Population. Birth control

Francis Place (1771-1854) is considered to be the first economist to advocate birth control as a means of regulating population. This volume contains the full text of his work entitled Illustrations and Proofs of the Principle of Population (including Place's replies to the proposals of Malthus and Godwin) together with his unpublished letters on birth control. Critical and textual notes by Norman E. Himes, associate professor of economics at Clark university, are provided.

"Francis Place's book on the population problem, like all his writings, was very dull and long-winded. Very few people read it when it first appeared; and it is hardly likely that many will plough their way right through this reprint. Mr. Himes has included certain letters of Place bearing upon the subject; but he has regrettably left out Place's correspondence with Mill and Carlile. Nor has he reprinted the famous birth-control handbills, which Place and others were active in distributing among their fellow-Radicals and Trade Unionists. All these are apparently to be reserved for future works which Mr. Himes has in contemplation; and their absence leaves the reader with an unsatisfied feeling, which is not removed by the flatness of Mr. Himes' introduction."

— New Statesman 35:602 Ag 16 '30 320w

Sat R 150:351 S 20 '30 450w

Spec 145:200 Ag 9 '30 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p659 Ag 21 '30 1050w

PLATNER, SAMUEL BALL. Topographical dictionary of ancient Rome; completed and rev. by Thomas Ashby. 608p il $11.75 (35s) Oxford

913.37 Rome (city)—Antiquities. Rome (city)—Description [30-10804]

"Professor Platner made the study of the ancient city of Rome his life work. His Topography and Monuments of Ancient Rome was published in 1904, and revised in 1911 to include rewritings made necessary by fresh discovery. The Topographical Dictionary may be described as Topography and Monuments in another form, though it is in reality both less and more than that. It presents in alphabetical arrangement all buildings and places of the ancient city known either from existing remains or from literary, epigraphical, or numismatic sources, with condensed critical account of location, measurements, identification, history, associations, sources, and bibliography. It is less than Topography and Monuments because it lacks in part the general information so conveniently given in its first chapters, and it is more because it brings the archaeology of the city of Rome up to date by incorporating the contributions of excavation and study for the eighteen years that have passed since the revision of the earlier work."—Am Hist R

Reviewed by Grant Showerman
Am Hist R 35:319 Ja '30 650w

"The most useful contribution to the study of Roman topography that has appeared in the present generation. Both author and editor have had special training for the task represented by this volume, and they have done the work well. While the book furnishes us with all the material now available, it will serve a still more important purpose as a basis for the Roman topography of the future. It has been compiled with so comprehensive a method, with such full recognition of the various theories advanced in regard to this or that monument, and with so little bias that topographers will find it an admirable starting-point for further investigations. . . The volume will be of the utmost service not only to archaeologists but to professors and students in courses in Roman history, Roman private life, Roman public life, and in reading courses in all those authors in whose writings the topographical background stands out in sharp relief." G. J. Laing

+ Class Philol 25:387 O '30 1250w

PLATT, RUTHERFORD HAYES, and MCMILLIN, HELEN F. You can't fail; a quick, sure way to find the best job for every man and woman. 150p $1.50 Putnam

374.1 Profession, Choice of 29-21571

In this book on choosing a career the reader is given the opportunity of analyzing himself, his temperament and abilities, by answering five sets of fifteen questions each, which gives him a five-digit job nature index number. Under each job index number is listed a number of occupations which fit the particular temperament the analysis indicates.

Boston Transcript p7 N 20 '29 180w

"For a young man to let his answers to five sets of fifteen questions, which can be answered in a quarter hour, decide what his life work shall be seems a little hazardous. Yet in essence that is the purpose of You Can't Fail. The questions asked and interpreted in the book give a surprisingly accurate idea of temperamental fitness for work."

+ R of Rs 81:10 Ja '30 100w

St Louis 28:36 F '30

PLEKHANOV, GEORGII VALENTINOVICH. Fundamental problems of Marxism; ed. by D. Ryazanov [tr. from the 2d Russian ed. by Eden and Cedar Paul]. (Marxist lib.) 145p $2; pop ed $1.50 Int. pub. [5s Lawrence]

335.4 Marx, Karl. Communism 30-22567

This book, which first appeared in Russia in 1908, concerns itself with the philosophical foundations of Marxism, as interpreted by the man who is called the father of Russian Marxism.

"The tone of the book is fervent and intolerant but distinctly intellectual. Indeed, one could wish that intellectuality might defer somewhat to palatability, the style in general being rather heavy. The content material represents a field much worn by battles of logic; and, while Mr. Plekhanov may not have been able to introduce much that is new or decisive, he has furnished an excellent example of the way in which a scholarly socialist marshals his forces." W. A. McConagha

+ — Am Econ R 20:786 D '30 480w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 9 '30 420w

Reviewed by W. J. Shepard
Current Hist 32:1050 S '30 500w

"The general reader will make little of it; but for those who want to go deeply into the Marxian system it is indispensable."

+ New Statesman 34:18 O 12 '29 100w

"Plekhanov's book is a learned disquisition on the philosophical basis of historical materialism, with observations on the theory of evolution and on the institutions of certain primitive peoples. He concludes by examining the ideas of some modern critics of Marx. He simply denies that they understand him. For himself there is no fault to be found in the perfect system."

Times [London] Lit Sup p152 F 27 '30 1050w

PLUM, MARY. Killing of Judge MacFarlane. 292p $2 Harper [5s Eyre]
30-2367

Gerald Gillespie, a young Englishman and a Chicago bank employee, yearned for adventure. That night he came home to his flat to find the murdered body of Carrio, a gangster, in his living-room, and, lettered in blood by the dead man, the unfinished message, INCH. Inspector Smith takes up the case, but not soon enough to prevent the murder of Judge MacFarlane, who had been courageously working to clean Chicago of crime. Another death occurs before Smith and his assistant, Gillespie, catch the malicious and clever criminal.

"A cleverly and ingeniously worked-out mystery with a startling surprise at the finish."
+ Bookm 71:xxviii Mr '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p15 F 2 '30 80w
N Y Times p24 F 9 '30 120w
Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 30 '30 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p670 Ag 21 '30 230w

POCOCK, GUY NOEL. Mrs. Clutterbuck laughs. 320p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Dent]

Life in an English village, as seen thru the eyes of jolly Mrs Clutterbuck, a widow who always looks on the brighter side of things, and Dr Rally, who sees below the surface and finds a good deal of somber tragedy going on.

"This is a delightful comedy of a little English town, told with deep sympathy and understanding." W. H. M.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 26 '30 380w

"When at last Mrs. Clutterbuck departs on a long visit to her son in the West Indies the vicar's wife for one has reason to sigh with relief—and that relief is likely to be shared by any reader who has persevered to the end of the book in the hope of a moment of real humour."
— New Statesman 34:614 F 15 '30 100w
Spec 144:582 Ap 5 '30 150w
Times [London] Lit Sup p162 F 27 '30 400w

POINDEXTER, MILES. Ayar-Incas; v 1, Monuments, culture, and American relationships; v 2, Asiatic origins. 274;359p il $10 Liveright
913.85 Incas. Indians—Origin. Aryans. Indians of South America—Peru. Man, Prehistoric—South America 30-17288

A history of the customs, industries and arts of an ancient Peruvian civilization, with especial attention given to the origins and relations of the Incas.

" 'The Ayar-Incas' is not only unscholarly, it is also disjointed and dull and the chapters are thrown together without sequence." Ruth Benedict
— Books p12 Ag 17 '30 400w
Boston Transcript p2 Jl 16 '30 800w

"The volumes are learned, elaborately annotated, indexed and beautifully illustrated. There are careful descriptions of such remains as have been discovered, and there is a great deal of convincing guess-work about the Aryan Asiatic origins of the Ayar-Incas, and about the extent of the diffusion of their culture in the Americas. The material in the books is fascinating. Unfortunately it must be added that the books read like a congressional report, and, while extremely valuable to students, it is unlikely that they can interest the general reader as much as the material would warrant." F. L. Robbins
+ — Outlook 155:287 Jl 9 '30 120w
St Louis 28:271 N '30
Sat R of Lit 7:296 N 1 '30 200w

POLLARD, ALBERT FREDERICK. Wolsey. 393p $5 (21s) Longmans
B or 92 Wolsey, Thomas [29-10691]
For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:158 Ja '30

"This book gives us at last an authoritative life of Wolsey. The career of the great cardinal has only once before been described with complete inside knowledge of the period, and Brewer's account dealt almost exclusively with the political side of it. Dr. Pollard sets out with the avowed intention of correcting Brewer's narrative and of extending it so as to cover the whole field of Wolsey's activities." G. Baskerville
+ Eng Hist R 45:304 Ap '30 1500w
Pratt p39 winter '30
St Louis 28:18 Ja '30

"This is a book for the reader who knows enough history to enjoy the interpretation of it. Full of comment about men and institutions and especially their interrelation, it is packed with generalizations that set the mind jumping. There are only a few lines about Wolsey's amours, but pages about his manipulation of the government, pages that are never dull." Wallace Notestein
+ Sat R of Lit 6:819 Mr 15 '30 1200w

"This is a work of high scholarship and of permanent value. Professor Pollard writes with a knowledge of Tudor England hardly to be equalled in his own country or in any other. And he adds the gift of swift and happy generalization, always stimulating and for the most part accurate." D. H. Willson
Yale R n s 19:620 spring '30 750w

POLLITT, JOSEPHINE (MRS FREDERICK J. POHL). Emily Dickinson; the human background of her poetry. 350p il $4 Harper
B or 92 30-6105

A biographical interpretation of Emily Dickinson, the poet and recluse, which stresses the importance of her New England background. From new material the author has thrown a different light on the love story which for so many years was successfully kept in the background. Her evidence points to Major Hunt, first husband of Emily's life-long friend Helen Hunt Jackson, as the one to whom Emily gave her devotion.

Booklist 26:311 My '30

"She has paraphrased valiantly, she has studied lovingly and she has written pleasantly, but the odds are too great. Her entire book does not evoke the living Emily as vividly as Higginson's brief objective account of their interview in the darkened parlor of Amherst." R. N. Linscott
+ Bookm 71:228 Ap '30 550w

"Any one who has tried to cope with the lamentable confusion and evasion that has in recent years accompanied the disclosure of Emily Dickinson's life story must be grateful for a contribution both sympathetic and lucid. Miss Pollitt's achievement is the more remarkable in that through some incredible stupidity she was not permitted to quote from the standard editions of either the poems or the letters. Her gallant persistence in the face of this discouragement has been crowned by the production of a thoroughly charming and honest book." G. F. Whicher
+ Books p2 Mr 2 '30 1100w

"Admirably cogent critical study of Emily Dickinson and the lives which influenced hers. Mrs. Pollitt's provocative study is a notable addition to American letters." Frances Bartlett
+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 29 '30 1500w

"Because of this deep sympathy with Emily the free spirit, Josephine Pollitt enters Emily's soul and speaks from the center: the book is not psychoanalysis, it is psychosynthesis. Jo-

POLLITT, JOSEPHINE—Continued
sephine Pollitt seems Emily reincarnated to tell her own story. She has caught the tempo of the heart, the ecstasy of the breath; she speaks with the very idiom of Emily's own prose, with quaint and lovely lightning flashes of divination in poignant and often perfect speech, in Emily's own distilled dialect." E. M. Root
+ Christian Century 47:436 Ap 2 '30 1000w
Cleveland Open Shelf p77 My '30

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
Nation 130:329 Mr 19 '30 470w

Reviewed by Edmund Blunden
Nation and Ath 46:863 Mr 22 '30 420w

"Miss Pollitt's study, for want of all the evidence, cannot be conclusive, but it is extremely plausible. Unfortunately, it is rather awkwardly presented. It lacks the coherence and the thorough integration that its subject matter requires. The author hesitates between an affectation of Emily's own lightning flashes and a rather barren narrative style, with unhappy results. Her book is less a tribute to, or an analysis of, the poet than a broad beam of light thrown upon the dismal obscurity in which her life has been shrouded." Babette Deutsch
+ — New Repub 62:332 My 7 '30 700w

"There is regrettably little, in this biography of the fine, glowing personality of Emily Dickinson, regrettably little of the strange, native color of her life. But for this Josephine Pollitt is not entirely to blame. Her subject was limited, in the first place, to an academic discussion of the hidden factors in Emily Dickinson's life which affected her poetry. In the second place the copyright holders refused her permission to quote from Emily Dickinson's poems and letters. If Miss Pollitt's work is not wholly convincing, it is certainly interesting and worthy of careful consideration." Margaret Wallace
+ — N Y Evening Post p7s Mr 1 '30 950w

"There is nothing gossipy about Miss Pollitt's book. On the contrary, it is a serious-minded study. And if it fails to make the illuminating link between Emily Dickinson's love and work it is perhaps due to the fact Miss Pollitt may be more interested in biography than in psychology. But her hypothesis as to the identity of the man who had such a determining effect on Emily's future is interesting. There is plausibility to much of Miss Pollitt's reasoning, but there is not a little that is contradictory. Miss Pollitt has something like solid ground under her feet at the start, or, since this is something in the nature of detective work that is now being embarked upon, perhaps it would be better to say that she has a strong lead." Percy Hutchison
+ N Y Times p5 F 23 '30 1600w

Reviewed by C. H. Grattan
N Y World p5m Ag 10 '30 220w

"Miss Pollitt's theory of Emily's love story is credible, and heavily supported by the evidence of letters and poems. The love story was the innermost chamber of Emily's enclosed and secret house and the mystery with which it has been invested by the Dickinson relatives has been responsible for popular exaggeration of the eccentricities of Emily's middle-age and for the silly charges of perversion which Miss Pollitt so ably refutes. A valuable book in itself, Miss Pollitt's has the added value of enticing its readers into their own speculations on the well springs of Emily's poetry."
+ Outlook 154:309 F 19 '30 500w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:37 My '30
Pratt p36 summer '30
St Louis 28:148 My '30

"No more valuable contribution to the history of a world-celebrity has been made for years than that given by Josephine Pollitt's compilation of information and her character-drawing of Emily Dickinson. Skilfully, but indirectly, attention is drawn to art; direct and acute interest is focused on the artist."
+ Sat R 149:391 Mr 29 '30 800w

Reviewed by Louis Untermeyer
Sat R of Lit 6:1170 Jl 5 '30 80w

Reviewed by Richard Church
Spec 145:316 S 6 '30 400w

"Miss Pollitt has done her work with a conscientiousness which no one will dispute. At the same time, her story never comes convincingly; and indeed we shall never now be convinced we have the truth about Emily Dickinson till her remains are published in their entirety or her life is written by someone who has access to them and really understands her."
Times [London] Lit Sup p293 Ap 3 '30 900w

Reviewed by Conrad Aiken
Yale R n s 20:393 winter '31 650w

POMERAI, RALPH DE. Marriage, past, present and future; an outline of the history and development of human sexual relationships. 370p $4 Smith, R.R. [15s Constable]
392 Marriage. Sex [30-25814]

A history of sex relationships, marriage and divorce from primitive times to the present occupies the first part of Professor De Pomerai's book. He brings discussions of the development of polygamy, polyandry, monogamy, marriage as a religious institution, ideas concerning celibacy, adultery and divorce to a point in his survey of the complexity of modern matrimony, the necessity of marriage and divorce law reform, and practical suggestions thereto. A final chapter presents certain theories concerning the family, marriage and sexual relationships of the future.

Reviewed by Lorine Pruette
Books p10 Ag 17 '30 1050w
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 9 '30 500w

"His book is extremely useful, the work, not of an extremist, but of a sober and scientific student of the history of marriage. This lends all the more weight to his analysis of existing conditions, his indictment of our monstrous divorce law, and his speculations on the future of marriage and the family." Leonard Woolf
+ Nation and Ath 47:412 Je 28 '30 650w

"Mr. de Pomerai's book is a welcome and opportune addition to the literature on marriage."
+ Nature 126:163 Ag 2 '30 250w
N Y Evening Post p5s Ag 2 '30 180w
N Y Times p10 O 5 '30 200w

Reviewed by F. G. Seabury
Outlook 156:471 N 19 '30 200w

"We welcome an interesting book. Its orientation is fundamentally right, and we are glad that the author has joined those who in the last decade have rallied round the idea that the old moral code based on inherently false ideas of sex union is being replaced by a better. This book is so admirable in many ways that it should be just a little better than it is. For instance, though the author gives a great many references to volumes written by others, he does not give the dates of the volumes, which very much reduces the value of his citations to a fellow worker; and where he mentions the transactions of a society he does not use the internationally accepted nomenclature." M. C. Stopes
+ — Sat R 150:53 Jl 12 '30 900w

"The subject is treated throughout with an unusual and comforting objectiveness. . . Mr. de Pomerai's book opens up fields of thought which cannot but be interesting in these days when marriage and divorce are being discussed on every hand. It is provocative, certainly, but never cynical or irreverent; and is encouraging in showing that human sexual relationships cannot be crystallized into hard and fast custom, but must always develop and emerge as humanity itself develops."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p470 Je 5 '30 1650w

PONSONBY, SIR FREDERICK EDWARD GREY. Side lights on Queen Victoria. 400p pl $5 Sears [21s Macmillan]

B or 92 Victoria, queen of Great Britain. Great Britain—Politics and government 30-25258

"A book of gossip relating to singular incidents in the long reign of the famous Queen. The first two hundred pages deal with completely trivial incidents, a long quarrel about the use of royal ponies for guests, a complicated misunderstanding over the firing of the royal salute during the maneuvers of the Channel Fleet, the fantastic ceremonial procedure in receiving the Shah of Persia and the Grand Duke of Russia. In the latter half of the volume the chief interest lies in the new documentary assurance which it brings of the deep-rooted hostility between the Queen and Gladstone. The letters which are here reproduced, written to and by the author's father, who served as the Queen's private secretary, form a natural sequel to the recently published letters of the Queen."—Books

"Here is a volume of amusing reading for those who are intrigued by the vagaries of royal life. Of no first-rate importance, it adds a charming and interesting chapter to a rapidly growing Victoriana." A. L. Sachar

+ Books p6 S 28 '30 850w

Boston Transcript p2 O 15 '30 850w

Reviewed by D. E. Wolf

Current Hist 33:xxii D '30 420w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p3 S 21 '30 1300w

St Louis 28:302 D '30

"The urbanity of this record of events at Court under the Great Queen will delight many. . . A very human book, and human nature takes on a glamour when it is exhibited in exalted quarters, so it is assured of a wide body of readers." Francis Heathcote

+ Sat R 150:458 O 11 '30 650w

Spec 145:416 S 27 '30 1200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p845 O 23 '30 2050w

POOL, RAYMOND JOHN. Flowers and flowering plants; an introduction to the nature and work of flowers and the classification of flowering plants. (McGraw-Hill publications in agricultural and botanical sciences) 378p il $3.50 McGraw

580 Flowers 30-949

"A textbook on the nature and work of flowers and classification of flowering plants, for college students who have had an introduction to general botany. The system of classification followed is that proposed by the late C. E. Bessey."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Booklist 26:226 Mr '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p58 Ap '30

St Louis 28:99 Ap '30

POOLE, ERNEST. Car of Croesus. 230p $2 Macmillan
30-8602

An exiled Russian prince and a clever young buyer of gowns buy a sumptuous car, on the installment plan, embellish it with every luxury and rent it at $100 an hour to New Yorkers who want to be multimillionaires by the hour. The prince as chauffeur and the buyer as ladies' maid ride on the front seat, and by a clever system of mirrors and a dictaphone, learn about those who ride with them.

Booklist 26:358 Je '30

Bookm 72:viii S '30 80w

— New Repub 62:308 Ap 20 '30 180w

New Statesman 35:309 Je 14 '30 30w

"Starting with an idea that is not itself unbelievable and that might have yielded some legitimate human interest stories had it been pursued more seriously, Mr. Poole has allowed his imagination to run riot. The result is an extravaganza that is often amusing but more often annoying, the latter because it too frequently approaches the borderline of truth and shows what might be done in bona fide romance."

— + N Y Times p9 Mr 30 '30 420w

"The book is delightfully done, with a very light touch." M. R. Lewis

+ N Y World p11m Ap 6 '30 350w

Outlook 155:26 My 7 '30 20w

"The initial situation is not badly conceived. But the possibilities are not well realized. The episodes are conscientiously varied, giving melodrama, farce, and human interest, but the scenes are all unaccountably flat and thin. One cannot say certainly what it is the writing lacks, but one suspects that it is the author's interest."

— Sat R of Lit 6:973 Ap 19 '30 180w

"Ernest Poole provides some excellent diversions of humour and sentiment cleverly blended."

+ Spec 145:24 Jl 5 '30 130w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 27 '30 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p536 Je 26 '30 150w

POORE, HENRY RANKIN. Art principles in practice; for the student and layman in art. 242p il $4 (10s) Putnam

701 Art. Composition (art) 30-15706

Explanation and illustrations of the principles underlying graphic art. This is essentially a book of composition with chapters on balance, proportion, sequence, equivalence or isolated composition, recurrence, congruity, rhythm, etc.

Booklist 27:57 O '30

Boston Transcript p8 Ag 30 '30 600w

"Mr. Poore has robbed his book of its utility by attempting too many things at the same time. It might have done fairly well as a manual on pictorial composition for art-school classes. But it tries simultaneously to instruct the budding sculptor and photographer, besides providing the layman with the bases of æsthetic appreciation. The intrusion of the latter leads the author to confuse the means by which an artist constructs his work with the elements of the spectator's enjoyment of it. A large number of quotations, wise-cracks and allusions not easily to be understood outside America, serve to obscure rather than elucidate the argument."

— New Statesman 35:484 Jl 19 '30 180w

Reviewed by E. A. Jewell

N Y Times p24 D 14 '30 380w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:85 D '30

St Louis 28:237 O '30

"At a time when the medium of paint is exploited in the manner and ways of its application on canvas to the extent of giving esthetic pleasure as painting itself, without too much fidelity to subject matter, it does not seem pretentious to say that we have advanced considerably in this art since the days of Gerome and the rest of Mr. Poore's affinities. Yet he makes no allusion in his book to painting as an art, or for that matter to the principles of paintings which would obviously clarify the principles of art. The author merely gives a minute account of the principles understood by academicians. The book has its merits and if the reader does not mind paraphrasing he can make some use of material in it."

— + Sat R of Lit 7:220 O 11 '30 550w

POORTEN-SCHWARTZ, JOZUA MARIUS WILLEM VANDER. See Maartens, M., pseud.

PORTER, KATHERINE ANNE. Flowering Judas. ltd ed 145p $2.50 Harcourt
30-25819

Six short stories originally published in the Century, transition, the Second American Caravan, the New Masses and The Hound and Horn. Two, the title piece and one called Maria Concepción, deal with Mexican characters. The others have American settings. Contents: Maria Concepción; Magic; Rope; He; The jilting of Granny Weatherall; Flowering Judas.

"All are exquisitely done, with feeling for dramatic values, with clarity, with delicate delineation of characters, and in language transcendently beautiful. The stories differ so widely in setting and theme as to constitute convincing evidence of Katherine Anne Porter's versatility. Several of Miss Porter's characters are simply unforgettable." E. R. Richardson
+ Bookm 72:172 O '30 400w

"Miss Porter uses her imagination as scientists use a microscope to discover the nature of our subcutaneous sensations, but she writes her reports as an artist, and their clarity is not marred by her sense of beauty or her compassion." M. C. Dawson
+ Books p3 S 14 '30 550w

"Her style is beyond doubt the most economical and at the same time the richest in American fiction. Only in the first story, Maria Concepcion, is there any uncertainty of purpose. In the five others there is not a word gone to waste—and there is no under-writing. There is none of that alternation of natural description and character exposition which is the hallmark of formula-made fiction. There is much sensuous detail, but no decoration. For Miss Porter has a direct and powerful grasp of her material as a whole; this makes every sentence, whether of description, narration, or dialogue, create not only an inevitable and beautiful local effect, but contribute directly to the final tone and climax of the story. . . 'Flowering Judas' is not a promising book; it promises nothing. It is a fully matured art. We may only hope to have more of it." Allen Tate
+ Nation 131:352 O 1 '30 950w

"It is to Miss Porter's high credit that, having fixed upon the exceptional background and event, she has not yielded, in her treatment of them, to queerness and forced originality of form. . . She rejects the exclamatory tricks that wind up style to a spurious intensity, and trusts, for the most part, to straightforward writing, to patience in detail and to a thorough imaginative grasp on cause and character. . . Miss Porter should demand much work of her talent. There is nothing quite like it, and very little that approaches its strength in contemporary writing." Louise Bogan
+ New Repub 64:277 O 22 '30 550w
N Y Times p6 S 28 '30 600w

PORTIGLIOTTI, GIUSEPPE. Some fascinating women of the renaissance; tr. by Bernard Miall. 285p il $4 Brentano's [12s 6d Allen, G.]
920.7 Woman—Biography [30-13671]

Sketches of some little-known women of the renaissance. "Bianco Capello, who won a Grand Duke of Tuscany for her own, and Tullia d'Aragona, who surprisingly escaped the yellow veil, are perhaps the most familiar of the author's subjects; others include Botticelli's Simonetta, Fra Filippo Lippi's beloved Lucrezia, Isotta da Rimini, who inspired a noble church, and the beautiful Cecilia Gonzaga, the model for Pisanello's medal, who became the Blessed Cecilia. There are many well chosen illustrations." (Books)

"The whole gallery merits the title and one can detect a gracious erudition behind the book."
+ Bookm 71:vi Mr '30 80w
Books p10 My 4 '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 F 5 '30 480w

"This book is just what its title would lead one to expect; it is doubtless readable enough for those who like this kind of thing. Let no one expect to learn much from it, either about humanity or the Renaissance. Here is the usual procession of glamorous ladies, some learned, some loving, some pious, some gay: all very romantic and at times a trifle wearisome. Signor Portigliotti knows a great deal about the Renaissance. If he would acquire a more critical attitude to details and a less romantic attitude to personalities, he could write a very informative book."
— + New Statesman 34:sup xviii N 9 '29 200w

"Signor Portigliotti is not an author recommended for those who desire that the crudities of life should be veiled in aphorism or allusion. The Renaissance was a passionate and cruel age. Still, the author's vivid power of characterization and his keen historical sense are undeniable."
+ — Spec 143:695 N 9 '29 80w

"Equipped with a large knowledge of contemporary documents and literature, Signor Portigliotti writes learnedly, but lightly. Nor is he content merely to retell an oft-told tale. He has not spared pains in the endeavour to add to the documentary history of his subjects."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p859 O 31 '29 550w

POST, CHANDLER RATHFON. History of ² Spanish painting. 3v il $25 Harvard univ. press [£5 10s Oxford]
759.6 Painting, Spanish—History (30-7776)

"In these three well-printed volumes Professor Post carries the history of Christian painting from the earliest times till about 1450 and the beginning of Flemish influence. The subject cuts up nicely into volumes, the first devoted to Romanesque painting; the second to early Gothic painting under French leading; the third to the international style under influences chiefly of Italian schools."—Yale R n s

Booklist 26:385 Jl '30

"Readers will find, in addition to the learnedly, yet always freshly and sympathetically handled text and the copious illustrations, an extensive, fully tabulated bibliography." E. A. Jewell
+ N Y Times p29 N 9 '30 200w

"It is impossible to check Professor Post in attributions or suggested relationships between one picture and another; but if he is as sound in such matters—and reference to his illustrations persuades us that he is—as he is in general observations, his book should be the standard history of Spanish painting as a whole. His style, though rather monotonous, is sound and clear."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p569 Jl 10 '30 1700w

"It is about eighty years since George Ticknor's pioneer 'History of Spanish Literature' appeared, and it is pleasant now to hail a similar pioneer work on a Spanish matter from Harvard—a work sealed of that tradition of thoroughness and urbanity which Ticknor so admirably inaugurated. The later volumes with a more tractable and aesthetically valuable subject matter will more fully enlist Professor Post's literary gifts, and will be eagerly awaited." F. J. Mather, Jr.
+ Yale R n s 20:191 autumn '30 800w

POST, EMILY (PRICE) (MRS PRICE POST). Personality of a house; the blue book of home design and decoration. 521p il $4 (17s 6d) Funk
747 House decoration 30-11363

This book on home building and furnishing presents practical suggestions to the person who seeks charm and individuality for the home. The author outlines the fundamental principles of architectural beauty, together with a history of house building in America. Several chapters are devoted to studies of color harmony. The types of period houses are taken up successively, possibilities for each room in the house discussed, and general principles of interior furnishing. The book concludes with a chapter on the garden as a decorative note, and one on the style known as modern.

Booklist 26:385 Jl '30

Books p17 Je 8 '30 200w

J Home Econ 22:596 Jl '30 50w

"To read it is hardly like reading a book seriously concerned with an important subject and very much like sitting tête-à-tête with a gracious woman whose mind and heart are full of knowledge and wisdom and happy experience in the making of beautiful homes while she talks about the means and methods and materials by which the home can be rendered beautiful and livable and welcoming. . . The zest, the vigor and the individuality with which the author invests each theme and makes it warmly and appealingly expressive give the volume a distinction and an interest unusual in books of this class."

+ N Y Times p10 Ap 27 '30 350w

"This is a well-balanced book which does not go to extremes. She has an eye for what is appropriate to the American landscape, and if this book gets half the circulation of her writing on etiquette it will do Americans a world of good." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p9 My 31 '30 700w

Pratt p19 autumn '30

"The subject matter has been presented by dozens of authors, but never quite so entertainingly. . . The book has provocative, stimulating charm—for women." A. S. Richardson

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1175 Jl 5 '30 830w

"Mrs Post's chapters are sensible and practical. The field has been covered in many books, but Mrs Post assembles and presents her information in a manner both readable and workmanlike, considering the broadly popular appeal that she desires to make."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 Ap 30 '30 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p459 My 29 '30 150w

POSTGATE, RAYMOND WILLIAM. That devil Wilkes. 275p $4 Vanguard press

B or 92 Wilkes, John. Great Britain—Politics and government 29-28532

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"The volume is written with admirable finesse. A biography of a rascal like Wilkes could lend itself to much of the current salacious frippery. To be sure, Mr. Postgate is no prude, and Wilkes is set forth for all that he was. Yet the author does not descend into bad taste and his restraint is artistic and admirable." A. L. Sachar

+ Books p12 Mr 23 '30 520w

Cleveland Open Shelf p59 Ap '30

"All of Wilkes's former biographers from Fitzgerald to Bleackley have approached him with a good deal of Victorian distaste and condescension. There was thus every need for a new life of Wilkes that should be more palatable to the modern. This Postgate biography is a highly amusing and rollicking account. The manner of its telling is the simple and straightforward one of the raconteur, and on the whole I doubt if the failure to employ Freudian technique upon so obvious a subject is to be deplored. For the first time Wilkes emerges entirely as a hero." William Seagle

+ Nation 130:299 Mr 12 '30 400w

"Mr. Postgate writes with knowledge, intelligence, and ability, but the adjective he evokes is 'workmanlike,' rather than 'distinguished.'" Geoffrey West

+ — Nation and Ath 47:176 My 10 '30 200w

New Statesman 35:224 My 24 '30 480w

St Louis 28:112 Ap '30

Reviewed by A. P. Nicholson

Sat R 149:456 Ap 12 '30 850w

"Mr. Postgate is the right kind of author for Wilkes, and Wilkes fits Mr. Postgate's vivid and picturesque style." J. W. S. Allison

+ Sat R of Lit 6:734 F 15 '30 220w

"The descriptive bibliography included is a model for all scholars, and the book is made the more valuable to students of eighteenth century history by the full references given to sources. . . Mr. Postgate has presented us with a well-documented narrative from which arises a clear picture of John Wilkes, 'Friend to Liberty,' but his book is by no means an artistic whole." F. W. Hilles

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:384 N 29 '30 580w

Spec 144:614 Ap 12 '30 300w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 14 '30 380w

Times [London] Lit Sup p401 My 15 '30 2050w

World Tomorrow 13:475 N '30 30w

POTTER, BEATRIX. Tale of little pig Robinson. 141p il $2 McKay [3s 6d Warne]

30-31040

Little Pig Robinson was sent to market to sell eggs and cauliflower, by his aunts, Miss Dorcas and Miss Porcas, who were too stout to get thru the stiles. All went very well until Robinson lost his way and was taken care of by a ship's cook. After a nearly-disastrous trip on shipboard, Pig Robinson escaped in a little boat, and lived happily ever afterward on Robinson Crusoe's island.

"Miss Potter's unfailing gentleness of humor and imagination play in and about her new story and in the drawings and water-colors." K. G. Landon

+ Bookm 72:243 N '30 150w

"Beatrix Potter has a rare imagination. With one hand she endows her animal characters with human speech, habits and clothes, and with the other she intermingles them with a Devonshire village full of old ladies, fishermen and sailors. Yet there is no magic in this book except the magic of the author's creative touch." John Tyler

+ Books p10 N 16 '30 550w

Times [London] Lit Sup p986 N 20 '30 80w

POTTER, CHARLES FRANCIS. Humanism, a new religion. 132p $1.50 Simon & Schuster

211 Humanism 30-11928

The author defines humanism as "faith in the supreme value and self-perfectibility of human personality." The humanist, in religion, rejects God to accept self-hood and self-improvement. Religious humanism is scientific in its attitude as opposed to the supernatural in the established Christian religion.

Booklist 27:138 D '30

"Mr. Potter's little text-book has value if only because it offers a clear and cogent definition of what humanism means today in the religious world. . . It is a simple, frank, straightforward essay in definition, intended for quick popular consumption." J. H. Holmes

+ Books p14 My 18 '30 550w

Reviewed by W. M. Horton

J Religion 10:617 O '30 1150w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p12 My 18 '30 900w

St Louis 28:202 S '30

Reviewed by Leon Whipple

Survey 64:404 Ag 1 '30 280w

POTTER, EDNA, comp. This way and that; a book of singing games. 24p il $3 Oxford

784.62 Children's songs. Games 30-14504

"Twenty-four familiar singing games including The farmer in the dell, King William, The mulberry bush, and others, with a full page il-

POTTER, EDNA, comp.—Continued
lustration in flat color accompanying each song."—St Louis

Cleveland Open Shelf p128 S '30

"This attractive volume serves a double purpose. It will familiarize boys and girls with the traditional games which, as a heritage from the past, should be a part of every child's experience, and at the same time it will serve as a delightful picture book. Miss Potter has provided a childlike and imaginative illustration in the spirit of every game included." A. T. Eaton

+ N Y Times p22 Je 8 '30 100w

"The most charming book of song-games I have seen in a long while."

+ Outlook 155:347 Jl 2 '30 50w

St Louis 28:248 O '30

POTTER, PITMAN BENJAMIN. This world of nations; foundations, institutions, practices. 366p il $4 (17s) Macmillan

341 International law and relations. International cooperation. League of nations
29-24883

An exposition of international relations by a professor of political science in the University of Wisconsin. The book opens with a survey of the beginnings of the interwoven life of nations and the methods by which that life is governed. The chapters following are devoted to such topics as international law, arbitration and negotiation, consular and diplomatic service, war and peace. There are also three chapters on the League of Nations.

Reviewed by J. C. Meyer
Am Hist R 35:687 Ap '30 550w

Reviewed by H. D. Lasswell
Am J Soc 36:506 N '30 50w

Reviewed by W. L. Godshall
Am Pol Sci R 24:509 My '30 150w

"This book is a most entertainingly written introduction to the study of international affairs. Mr. Potter has hardly solved the difficult problem of interesting the layman in the politics of nations, but he has made an important contribution to the solution. . . His whole volume, indeed, is made up of suggestions and summaries of the enormous amount of factual material in many fields which must be mastered before anything like 'understanding' is possible." H. K. Norton

+ Ann Am Acad 148:292 Mr '30 400w

Booklist 27:52 O '30

Books p16 F 16 '30 160w

Hist Outlook 21:92 F '30 220w

"It is a book of the arresting, illuminating, beckoning sort that instigates and develops the reader's intellectual curiosity. . . The author is a middle-of-the-roader upon all the mooted questions of international affairs, and so his treatment of them is notably dispassionate and objective."

+ N Y Times p13 N 24 '29 370w

Reviewed by John Carter
Outlook 154:72 Ja 8 '30 150w

"Dr. Potter adopts a very practical attitude of mind in his approach to international affairs. His book is clarifying and concrete. It looks to the future and begins with the world as it is." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 80:14 D '29 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p218 Mr 13 '30 180w

Wis Lib Bul 26:38 Ja '30

Reviewed by C. B. La Monte
World Tomorrow 13:231 My '30 700w

POTTER, STEPHEN. D. H. Lawrence. 159p il $2.50 (5s) Cape

B or 92 Lawrence, David Herbert [30-15575]

A critical study of the personality and work of D. H. Lawrence, English poet and novelist who died March 3, 1930. Part one deals with Lawrence's reputation and his philosophy; part two takes up the obviously autobiographical passages from his writings; part three discusses the quality of his work; and in part four are considered the anti-and pro-Lawrence criteria. An appendix lists the principal publications of D. H. Lawrence.

Booklist 27:102 N '30

"Mr. Potter has produced a psychological study happily lacking in the jargon of psychoanalysis. He has not attempted a biography of the man but a biography of a mind; he has slighted the impressions of friends for the revelations made in Lawrence's own writings. One tends to regret the unpretentiousness of this first study, wishes it had been three times as long, that more biographical material had been used and the evidences of the novels and poems had been drawn upon in far greater detail." Lorine Pruette

+ — Books p5 Jl 13 '30 750w

"The value of this first study of D. H. Lawrence is very slight; for it is neither biography nor criticism. . . Of the man himself Rebecca West has told more in a brief sketch than Potter has by extended quotation from the novels . . . Potter's book may be excused on the ground that it was in preparation when Lawrence died; the excuse must be small. Even while a writer is yet alive it should be possible to keep clear for oneself the interest he has as a figure and the worth his work has apart from its autobiographical content."

— Nation 131:531 N 12 '30 220w

"Mr. Stephen Potter's essay is all the more remarkable because the author of it never knew the man he describes, except through his work. The book is written, as he says, without the help—'or would it be the hindrance?'—of personal knowledge. . . Perhaps the greatest defect of the book is that it makes so little of the poetry, for Lawrence is always, and above all, a poet. . . But for that large class of ignorant or prejudiced people, who either know nothing of Lawrence's genius or are too blind to appreciate it, this 'first study,' by its clearness and vigour, should prove, if they will but read it, a very stimulating introduction to his work." P. M.

+ — Nation and Ath 47:148 My 3 '30 600w

New Repub 64:134 S 17 '30 230w

"Mr. Potter gives the impression of an enthusiastic and intelligent man who has got lost in the jungle; his book is worth reading, but it adds little to one's understanding of Lawrence."

— + New Statesman 34:850 Ap 5 '30 170w

Sat R 149:458 Ap 12 '30 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p315 Ap 10 '30 500w

POUND, ARTHUR, and DAY, RICHARD EDWIN. Johnson of the Mohawks; a biography of Sir William Johnson, Irish immigrant, Mohawk war chief, American soldier, empire builder. 556p il $5 (21s) Macmillan

B or 92 Johnson, Sir William, bart.
30-11368

A biography of Sir William Johnson, one of the first of famous New Yorkers, who came to the Mohawk Valley from Ireland in the early eighteenth century, acquired an enormous estate there, and ruled it with almost feudal overlordship. He became a Mohawk war chief and an English baronet.

"Arthur Pound deserves our warmest thanks for accomplishing what one had thought well-nigh impossible. Even at this late date he has added a great organic figure to American history, one who stands out not only as a most notable American, but also as a noble, courageous, and highly successful man, a genuine addition to the gallery of the world's worthies. . . In recommending this fine book with enthusiastic conviction, one should add wellmerited praise of ten years of patient work by which Richard E. Day has accurately and lucidly arranged the immense mass of records that make this admirable history so real." Charles Johnston

+ Atlantic Bookshelf p34 Ap '30 380w

Booklist 26:394 Jl '30

"The general reader, usually so baffled by the pedantry of authoritative books, will find this one written with clarity and enthusiasm."

+ Bookm 71:viii Jl '30 80w

"Holding a nice balance between scholarship and popularization, with the scales somewhat weighted on the side of popularization, he traces in discriminating detail the romantic life of his hero. More than most historical figures Johnson lends himself to colorful portraiture, and Mr. Pound makes the best of his opportunities. . . But Mr. Pound shows nowhere any evidence of understanding the Western problem as a whole or its far-reaching implications in general British policy and in the American Revolution. Though a chapter is devoted to a circumstantial account of the relations of Johnson to Katherine, the Treaty of Fort Standix is summarily disposed of in a paragraph!" H. S. Commager

+ — Books p6 My 4 '30 1150w

Reviewed by S. L. Cook

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 18 '30 1850w

Reviewed by A. H. Young

Canadian Hist R 11:350 D '30 1650w

"His historical significance has never been so properly evaluated, his fascinating character and achievements never so interestingly and authoritatively described as in this book. The book supplies one of the missing pieces that are being fitted into the mosaic of American history." T. R. Hay

+ Current Hist 32:632 Jl '30 450w

Reviewed by Janet Lewis

New Repub 63:160 Je 25 '30 1000w

"Mr. Pound writes this story with a certain brilliancy and cleverness that one does not often find, and he seems to make this rigid Irishman stand out as hardly any biographer has been able to make the frontiersman of those days stand out. If there is any complaint to be made, it can only be based on his hurried imagination. That appears especially in regard to Johnson's sexual affairs. Johnson had many matrimonial relations, and Mr. Pound exhausts his fancy in imagining marriage ceremonies and even dating them." C. W. Thompson

+ — N Y Times p6 My 4 '30 1150w

"Pound has ploughed through a welter of documents and turned up a mass of facts. He convinces us that if William Johnson were alive to-day he would again be a power to reckon with in Albany." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p15 Ap 16 '30 900w

"This is a book that needed to be written and which up-staters, particularly, should welcome, but we could wish that somebody else had written it. It is fascinating in material and unquestionably accurate and complete; but woefully damaged, in this reviewer's opinion, by the trifling familiarity of the style, and the unwieldy topical allusions, dragged in, presumably, with an eye to popular appeal."

— Outlook 154:667 Ap 23 '30 250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:67 O '30

Pratt p37 summer '30

"A racy account of a picturesque figure in our colonial annals." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 81:10 Je '30 120w

"This volume represents a union of Mr. Pound's literary skill with Dr. Day's exhaustive knowledge of the Johnson materials, a knowledge built up through nearly thirty years of labor." Allan Nevins

+ Sat R of Lit 7:83 Ag 30 '30 1350w

Spec 145:316 S 6 '30 800w

"'Johnson of the Mohawks' can be enthusiastically recommended not only as history and biography but also as an uncommonly entertaining narrative. Apparently the authors thoroughly enjoyed their work and they succeeded in making their enthusiasm contagious." J. L. C.

+ Springf'd Republican p7e My 11 '30 1620w

Times [London] Lit Sup p637 Ag 7 '30 280w

POUND, ROSCOE. Criminal justice in America. 226p $2 Holt

343.73 Criminal procedure. Justice, Administration of 30-22093

In a series of five lectures delivered at Brown university in 1923 on the Colver foundation, and now for the first time published, the dean of the Harvard Law school discusses the difficulties of criminal justice today, our inheritance from England, and American criminal justice of the early nineteenth century as the background of the legal order of today.

Booklist 27:94 N '30

"This book is good reading—nicely worked out and felicitously written. Yet great names carry liabilities. From high authorities no doubt one always expects more than one should. Certainly one seldom derives all that one hopes for. Near his outset Dean Pound, referring to modern complaints of want of respect for law, remarks that 'There is nothing new in this.' That expression recurred to me as I closed his book, having nevertheless thoroughly enjoyed its reading." H. L. McBain

+ — Books p4 Ag 17 '30 1050w

"Comprehensive, liberal, sincere and delightfully readable, 'Criminal Justice in America' is exactly the kind of a work that the legal and literary world would expect from the pen of the head of the Harvard School of Law." W. H. McMasters

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 23 '30 1350w

New Repub 65:120 D 10 '30 80w

"Dean Pound's approach to his topic is scientific. He will irritate some liberals because he accepts a degree of social control which they by no means consider inevitable. He has a faith in legalistic machinery which is not always easy to accept. But he thinks and writes with extraordinary clarity and behind the legalism is a humanitarian spirit." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p1 Ag 24 '30 1150w

Reviewed by Nels Anderson

Outlook 156:551 D 3 '30 320w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:80 N '30

St Louis 28:290 D '30

Reviewed by Hastings Lyon

Survey 65:170 N 1 '30 480w

Reviewed by W. H. Holly

World Tomorrow 14:25 Ja '31 380w

POWEL, HARFORD WILLING HARE. Invincible Jew. 275p $2.50 Bobbs

225.92 Paul, Saint. Jews in the United States 30-12039

"Harford Powel, Jr., novelist and advertising expert, undertakes to depict the personality of Paul the apostle. 'The Invincible Jew' is a compound of fiction and character study, not without an argumentative supplement. . . The final chapters of the volume deal with anti-Semitism in America."—Springf'd Republican

Booklist 27:49 O '30

"It is a reverent and enthusiastic book which, in spite of its startling modernity, carries the message of Saint Augustine rather than that of Bruce Barton. Mr. Powel is an excellent example of the author who, with culture and tradition behind him, can speak to his own generation in their own terms about the eternal verities without shaming himself or them."

+ Bookm 71:xxii Ag '30 200w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 14 '30 900w

St Louis 28:203 S '30

Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 25 '30 400w

POWELL, DAWN. Dance night. 298p $2 Farrar
30-27768

Morry and Jen lived in Lamptown, Ohio, which boasted a chop house, a casino, a saloon and billiard parlor. Most important of all, however, to the town's social life, was Harry Fischer's academy of ballroom dancing, which gave weekly dances to which "everybody" went. As in Miss Powell's former novels, the typical characters of a small town reappear, and their drab sentiments, small ardors, miseries, and shabby sense of values govern the mood of the story.

Bookm 72:viii N '30 50w

"It is difficult to define the quality of this novel, of the same piece as Miss Powell's earlier work, but here both richer and deeper, I believe, in its development. It is unusually direct and unassuming work, clear and sturdy in its grasp of homely, even hateful things. But in this sturdiness there is a kind of joy in living, in feeling experience whole, that gives illuminating delicacy to its handling of emotion. It has that fundamental respect for human nature which is the essence of sympathy.", Mary Ross

+ Books p2 O 12 '30 700w

Boston Transcript p2 N 5 '30 220w

"Lamptown, Ohio is a dirty and dreary little place, filled with unprepossessing people about whom the author has little to say; moreover, she has said it in a dull and undistinguished manner."

— New Repub 65:173 D 24 '30 80w

" 'Dance Night' is fiction, unobscured by moralizing or by any psychological or sociological analysis of the people and the town, and hence takes on an atmosphere of realism seldom achieved in a novel of its setting. Miss Powell has painted in sure, even strokes the dreary boarding houses, the roisterous saloons and poolrooms, the cheap factory girls, and the gaudy dance hall which make Lamptown. And against the background of its dirt, its cheapness, its simplicity and its easy morality she has told the charming love story of Jen and Morry."

+ N Y Times p9 N 16 '30 600w

POWELL, HICKMAN. Last paradise. 292p il $3.50 (18s) Cape

919.22 Bali island 30-15833

Bali, a small volcanic island near Java, is described by the author as the last paradise because it is one of the few spots on earth still untouched by modern civilization. He describes the beauty of the natives and the simplicity of native life, where each trade is practised as a fine art. He supplies intimate glimpses of native dances, dramatics, etc; and much that Mr Powell has written of so enthusiastically is illustrated in the volume by the drawings of Alexander King, and the photographs by André Roosevelt, who has lived at Bali for some time.

Booklist 27:23 S '30

"The picture is all the more fascinating because of the artful manner in which the author depicts himself as always just outside the serene inner circle of island existence. . . Mr. Powell has rendered its flavor in his prose, and André Roosevelt in his photographs, and Alexander King in his precise yet flowing illustrations. Their joint efforts have preserved its essence against the time when it will have evaporated into the past." Lisle Bell

+ Books p7 Je 8 '30 650w

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 12 '30 1200w

"The writing is an almost continuous purple patch. It is precisely the sort of writing that has produced the recent revolt against style and made a great deal of plain and dreary writing popular." Isidor Schneider

— Nation 131:129 Jl 30 '30 300w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Tandy

Nation and Ath 47:682 Ag 30 '30 700w

N Y Times p4 Je 8 '30 1600w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p9 Je 9 '30 900w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins

Outlook 155:224 Je 11 '30 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:83 N '30

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 82:11 Jl '30 80w

St Louis 28:271 N '30

"He has woven into his finely written tale a tonal pattern as rich and beautiful as one of their festal kains. I wish that I might have written that book. . . At no time does the writer project his own personality into the picture, but rather, like the dalangs in the wayang wayang or shadow show, manipulates his characters with such marvelous dexterity, that they dramatize their own story. So well is this done that when the last page is read, Kumis, in whose house Mr. Powell lived, Madé and Réntung, the two wives of his host, Renang, the Legong dancer, Ida Baggus Gidéh, the young Brahmana, and the dozen or more who come and go through the balé, or open living room, seem old and familiar friends." Lucile Douglas

+ Sat R of Lit 7:197 O 11 '30 1000w

"He belongs to the school of American traveller-journalists who are more concerned with personal encounters and impressions than with facts and more interested in decorative writing than in plain English. These remarks are not made to disparage Mr. Powell's book, which within its own limits is an excellent piece of work, but merely to indicate what readers may expect to find in its pages. If taken as a record of the author's personal experiences and reactions while on the island, his book has considerable charm and definite value, for he does succeed in bringing the everyday lives of the Balinese very vividly before the reader."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p503 Je 19 '30 1050w

POWELL, JOHN WALKER. In search of God; an appreciation of the ancient Hebrew literature. 159p $1.50 Macmillan

221 Bible. Old Testament—Criticism, interpretation, etc. 29-18640

The author, who is special lecturer in English literature at the University of Minnesota, interprets the Old Testament as a great human document recording man's heroic adventure in search of light and truth.

Booklist 26:222 Mr '30

"Dr. Powell takes the standpoint of modern scholarship, but he is constructive and never controversial. The Old Testament becomes a new and living book and a vital force under his leadership." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 15 '30 320w

"Dr. Powell is an eager Christian, always insistent on spiritual values. Conscious of the inner fires of personal experience, he interprets the religious struggles of the past in terms of the present and in terms of God. Yet there is nothing throughout the discussion that is pietistic or unhealthy. . . It is with pleasure that we say that in general here is one of the clearest and best small volumes dealing with the Old Testament." I. G. Matthews

+ Christian Century 46:1376 N 6 '29 550w

"When we learn from the title-page that the author is special lecturer in English literature in the University of Minnesota, we expect the not too common gift, the use of good English. We are not disappointed. The English is easy, vivid, and often arresting. A few illustrations from the field of literature and an occasional comparison with modern religious struggles prevent us from feeling that he is interpreting experiences of a people who lived and suffered two thousand years ago. . . Mr. Powell's arrangement of material and perspective are excellent. His religious enthusiasm is always ready to flame out, and the result is a healthy, stimulating introduction to a great theme." I. G. Matthews

+ — Crozer Q 7:137 Ja '30 450w

Wis Lib Bul 26:37 Ja '30

POWELL, LYMAN PIERSON. Mary Baker Eddy; a life size portrait. 364p il $5 [20s Nisbet] Macmillan

B or 92 Eddy, Mrs Mary (Baker). Christian science 30-31398

In contrast to the Dakin and Springer critical biographies, this portrait study of Mary Baker Eddy reflects the author's sympathy and admiration for his subject's life and work. The biography is based upon original sources, a careful reading of letters and other unpublished writings, and a twenty-five years' study of the doctrines of Christian science.

Reviewed by Gerald Sykes

Bookm 72:423 D '30 420w

"The fundamental strength of Christian Science and, I think, its prestige among those who are not believers, were both increased by the publication of the Dakin and Springer biographies. Dr. Powell's book is the answer to them, and it is a shockingly disappointing one. Writing in the style of an evangelical sermon with interlardings of the metaphors and rhythms of second-rate hymns, he betrays himself into adulation and into lack of critical judgment which makes the reader feel that there must be a profound weakness in the argument itself." Gilbert Seldes

— Books p3 O 26 '30 1900w

"The non-existence of evil is a principle apparently as basic to Dr. Powell's estimate of Mrs. Eddy as it is to the Christian Science view of the world.. Instead of a scientific method which takes all facts as it finds them and attempts without prejudice or predilection to find what those facts mean, he employs the much simpler system of ignoring all facts which do not fit into the picture of perfection which he was commissioned to paint. The only real facts are favorable facts. . . It is, to all intents and purposes, a portrait of her as she wished to appear after she had become the head of a great movement, and as her followers wish her to appear for purposes of propaganda. Can't somebody write a life of the woman?" W. E. Garrison

— Christian Century 47:1529 D 10 '30 1250w

"Dr. Powell has included not only a comprehensive description of the Christian Science organization but a careful appraisal of Christian Science itself. But it is not, primarily, because of these things that his book is important. It is, rather, because, after years of intensive study, he has given what he calls and what proves, actually, to be 'A Life Size Portrait' of the Founder of Christian Science." Stanley High

+ Christian Science Monitor p9 O 25 '30 900w

"It is the most skilful piece of propaganda that has ever been devised to forward that movement, though that is saying much. The joke is that the book professes not to be propaganda, but an unbiased study of a life and character. And the cream of the joke is that the author is not a Christian Scientist, but an Episcopal clergyman, of excellent standing in his Church. If he had been a professed follower of Mrs. Eddy his impartiality would have been under suspicion from the first page to the last." H. C. Vedder

— Crozer Q 8:114 Ja '31 750w

Reviewed by F. T. Marsh

Nation 131:683 D 17 '30 700w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p5 N 9 '30 850w

"Other authors may have cast aspersions at Mrs. Eddy's sincerity, but at least they left a picture of a woman of flesh and blood, who had unbounded personal ambition, courage and will power. The Rev. Mr. Powell, an Episcopalian clergyman of New York, in his zeal to vindicate her—and it might be stated that among the authors to whom he is vindicating Mrs Eddy he is one—has presented a picture of Mrs. Eddy so spiritual and so virtuous that she ceases to be human." Ann Cutler

— N Y World p3e N 2 '30 420w

Outlook 156:468 N 19 '30 80w

"The public will find in his book not merely a 'life-size portrait' of an American woman whose achievements in the face of overwhelming odds are universally recognized, but along with this an intelligent and sympathetic statement of the aims pursued by her followers in this and other lands." W. B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 82:10 N '30 180w

"The author sees blessing for the whole race in Christian Science, and he desires that neither prejudice nor misrepresentation shall hinder men from finding it. A final word of praise must be given to the admirable way in which the book has been printed, to the number of interesting photographs, and to the valuable notes."

+ Sat R 150:565 N 1 '30 580w

"It turns out that the much touted 'Life Size Portrait' is only a thumbnail sketch on a heroic sized canvas. To put it forward as a serious biography is a piece of amazing effrontery." E. S. Bates

— Sat R of Lit 7:268 O 25 '30 700w

"It has not much value from any point of view. Dr. Powell, in fact, gives all too much space to unilluminating matter which is in effect little better than padding; he lacks as much a sense of proportion as he does dramatic or pictorial powers. The main effect of this curious volume is to impress the reader not only with the merit but with the practical value —the necessity even—of Mr. Dakin's authoritative work, which must still stand unshaken as the standard book upon its subject."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p1054 D 11 '30 1350w

POWERS, HARRY HUNTINGTON. Venice and its art. 382p il $4 (17s) Macmillan

709.45 Art—Venice. Painting, Venetian. Venice—History 30-22035

In part one, a history of the city of Venice, the author provides an interpretative background for his discussion of Venetian art itself contained in part two. The latter contains special studies of the painters Bellini, Mantegna, Crivelli, Carpaccio, Giorgione, Titian, and Tintoretto.

Booklist 27:196 Ja '31

Boston Transcript p2 O 8 '30 230w

"We suggest to those about to travel in Italy that they read this book from cover to cover before setting out on their journey. With purpose we say 'before setting out' because it is a ponderous tome, too heavy to be read with comfort in the reader's hands. The highly glossed surface of the paper, too, is dazzling to the eyes. . . Dr. Powers has an engaging way of expressing in a few words apt remarks that can almost pass as aphorisms, which artists and others would do well to read and inwardly digest." E. M. W.

+ — Cath World 132:498 Ja '31 250w

"The volume deals admirably with the life and artistic growth of one of the major Renaissance cities. Venice becomes convincingly real as the study unfolds. The art of Venice, so peculiarly a product of environment, is never divorced from its nourishing background." E. A. Jewell

+ N Y Times p29 N 9 '30 200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:85 D '30

St Louis 28:265 N '30

"About a third of this book is devoted to a historical survey of Venice, and this is the best written and most instructive part of the work. In approaching the art, the author seems to bring a disqualifying disapproval of the sensuousness and sumptuousness of Venetian ideals. This covert lack of sympathy comes to light too often in perfunctory and careless writing. . . In short, this book by no means measures up to the standard of the same author's 'The Art of Florence'—a theme which enlisted a complete sympathy and naturally a fuller understanding."

POWERS, H. H.—Continued

— + Sat R of Lit 7:313 N 8 '30 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p971 N 20 '30 30w

POWYS, ALBERT REGINALD. English parish [2] church [with an introd. by the Earl Ferrers]. (English heritage ser.) 165p il $1.40 (3s 6d) Longmans

726.5 Churches—England. Church architecture 30-30341

A study of the origins, history and architecture of the English parish church. The author is the secretary of the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings.

"This little volume will be read with very real pleasure by all those—and they are legion—who are interested in tracing the origin, history and architecture of the English parish churches and their influence on the English people. . . We very cordially commend Mr. Powys's book."

+ Sat R 150:804 D 13 '30 350w

"As Lord Ferrers points out in an introduction, few men know as much about the fabric of the old churches of England as does Mr. Powys. He knows how they came into existence, and he is a master of the styles through which they developed. If there be a complaint it would be that the section on the architectural problems is packed too tight, though it must be said that the drawings that illustrate the development of styles are most illuminating. It is a very human treatment that is found here."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p900 N 6 '30 400w

POWYS, JOHN COWPER. In defense of sensuality. 313p $3 Simon & Schuster

171 Conduct of life. Happiness 30-28331

By "sensuality" Mr Powys means life-sensation. He defends that feeling for the living things of the universe which is an essential to the development of happiness-power. Mr Powys philosophizes upon the status of the lonely soul, or ichthyosaurus ego, so-called from the vegetable-reptile-saurian background of human life. His defense of sensuality is in reality a defense of loneliness, and therefore happiness, as opposed to the unhappiness we suffer because of crowd-gregariousness.

" 'Defense of Sensuality' is one man's philosophy, flavored by a unique personality. It will ring true to some and mean nothing to others, one of those things that you take or leave. But it will be your misfortune if you cannot take it." Lorine Pruette

+ Books p4 S 28 '30 1250w

"It is the feeling of the present writer that the strength of Mr. Powys's book is less in what he has to say than in the way he says it. There is a quiet fervidness, a subdued poetic exaltation, which, for all the wistfulness of the utterance, carries the reader to a higher altitude. This writer, for one, would not choose to tear apart the delicate web of Mr. Powys's subtle weaving. As there was to William James so there is to John Powys more of the seer than of the philosopher. One perceives that there is a flaw in the thought. Yet the work as a whole triumphs over that flaw." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p2 O 5 '30 900w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:87 D '30

Sat R 150:758 D 6 '30 180w

"Whether what Mr. Powys has to say is new or true, it is indubitably said with a sustained nobility, some vivid flashes of insight, and a gay enthusiasm which warms the reader's heart, although the enthusiasm leads to a certain amount of reiteration."

+ — Spec 145:603 O 25 '30 350w

"Mr. Powys's philosophy has many fine elements. It intensifies individual relationships: it renews man's contact with the earth his mother: it rejects utterly the puritan teaching of the sinfulness of the flesh and its natural desires: it makes for frankness, for freedom, for joy. He is not, however, an easy writer. . . He himself confesses his 'serpentine approach' to his subject: and if this sinuous unwinding of his mind is unavoidable when a philosophy is truly organic, and not to be expressed in the cut-and-dried terms of the logician, still it does not make for easy grasping. He repeats himself, too, we think, to an unwarrantable degree."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p906 N 6 '30 800w

POWYS, JOHN COWPER. Meaning of culture. 275p $3 Norton

824 Culture 29-20875

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:147 Ja '30

"Here is manner as well as matter. There is no striving for consistency, no hesitation over small issues; but every part of life and reality that is lifted up for inspection seems to implicate all the rest in itself. The book is ponderous and poetic, full of pathos and calm. One quickly senses here the fact that a great personality is speaking much less and much more than it knows, that a soul is simply spilling over the narrow rim of utterance the boiling unutterable. Strangely moving things are said and more moving things are sensed while the author goes on talking never tritely about that tritest subject, 'culture.' Natural piety paraded as alteration between gratitude and defiance marks every page of his man masquerading here as a book." T. V. S.

+ Int J Ethics 40:566 Jl '30 180w

"Mr. Powys has evidently deep feelings about books and nature, but he has spent a long while in America, and is infected with the disease he sets out to cure. He boosts culture in terms which remind me of the advertisements for deodorants in fashionable papers." Raymond Mortimer

— Nation and Ath 46:895 Mr 29 '30 150w

Reviewed by R. A. Scott-James

New Statesman 34:841 Ap 5 '30 1750w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:6 Ja '30

Pratt p14 spring '30

St Louis 28:6 Ja '30

Reviewed by Arthur Colton

Sat R of Lit 6:1021 My 10 '30 2000w

Spec 145:388 S 20 '30 650w

"Mr. Powys is helpful, where, with the precision of a mind unusually sensitive to the distinctions implied, he separates the purposes and attainments of the merely educated man from those of the cultured. . . What he has to say remains a major contribution to that quest for new standards of value which silently and with accumulating force breathes through our civilization at the very moment when, to an outside observer, it may seem most decrepit." Bruno Lasker

+ Survey 63:551 F 1 '30 600w

"Mr. Powys has written a book which itself enhances one's apprehension of the happiness simply of being alive, and which as one reads evokes new beauty in all one's surroundings. No one in reading it can doubt that Mr. Powys himself has lived his creed."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p293 Ap 3 '30 850w

Wis Lib Bul 26:102 Mr '30

POWYS, LLEWELYN. Apples be ripe. 304p $2.50 Harcourt

30-14008

Chris Holbech, a young schoolmaster, had married the daughter of a clergyman, and soon discovered that her conventional upbringing and interests were alien to his own contemplative, individual and rather pagan outlook upon life. Unable longer to bear the household atmosphere of smug morality, Chris leaves, feeling free again, and becomes a farm laborer. He meets women who are willing to love and enjoy the beauty of living, and knows ultimate content before his death from exposure to the cold of a winter night.

Reviewed by Leo Kennedy
Bookm 71:546 Ag '30 280w

"In a style as smooth and luscious as cream, Mr. Powys has written as his first novel an idyl of a young man in modern England. Mr. Powys has told his tale with sympathy, tolerance and acuity." Mary Ross
+ Books p4 My 25 '30 650w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 11 '30 250w

Reviewed by Dorothy Van Doren
Nation 130:707 Je 18 '30 420w

Reviewed by Raymond Mortimer
Nation and Ath 47:796 S 27 '30 220w

Reviewed by Arthur Colton
New Repub 63:322 Jl 30 '30 400w

"There is a smugness about all the lust in this book which surpasses that which is usually attributed to conventional virtue. Absurdities, in fact, follow quick upon one another in this atmosphere of smugness that excludes from enlightenment all but the offender, and so smoothes the path of illicit loves that jealousy and recriminations are unheard of. It is doubtful if the important cause of the exposure of bigotry and humbug is served by this kind of book."
— New Statesman 35:680 S 6 '30 1000w

"The wife, Adela, does not become a real flesh-and-blood creature under Powys's hand; nor does Chris acquire more than partial corporeality. The other persons in the book are mere shadows. All of which strengthens this writer's contention that the book is primarily a fable. . . The book is humorous—for those who can perceive its humor. It is richly English in its background and its people. There is more than a touch of Fielding. And for some it will be a rare literary fragment. Others are likely to pass it by." Percy Hutchison
N Y Times p9 Je 1 '30 1000w

"There is a rare charm about the book, an art of which the artistry is never apparent. It is a novel of charm and distinction, and without doubt is the best first novel of the year." Bellamy Partridge
+ N Y World p7m Je 22 '30 250w

"Powys and his book are simple and lusty and fertile and sleepily sensuous, and full of delicate fancies and broad jokes, and ingenuous and crafty, and egocentric and humane, and completely romantic." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 155:187 Je 4 '30 260w

Sat R 150:409 O 4 '30 180w

" 'Apples Be Ripe' is not a great book, but it is readable, especially if one does not take it too seriously. It is very frank, sometimes broad, and its sexual interests sometimes approach, without actually reaching, the morbid. It has a good deal of fresh, vigorous writing, and a keen sense of the poignant limitations of earthly beauty and human desire."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e O 19 '30 500w

POWYS, LLEWELYN. Hour on Christianity. (One hour ser.) 157p $1 Lippincott
211 Christianity 30-26624

In this brief essay the author of The Cradle of God describes the magnetic personality of Jesus that inspired Saint Paul, but repudiates the organized religion of Christianity, which he believes interferes with "a clear and enlightened vision of life."

"In essence it is an outline story of Christianity, told with marvelous concision in little more than 30,000 words. But its primary importance is as a work of literature. Here are all the eloquence of style, beauty of word and cadence, sheer mastery of narrative and descriptive form which have made Mr. Powys one of the outstanding authors of our time. Quite apart from its subject matter, this book will live, or at least deserves to live, as an exquisite and often powerful piece of writing in the English tongue. In reading it today one is so dazzled by its literary brilliancy as to be almost blind to its utterly devastating treatment of the Christian faith." J. H. Holmes
Books p14 Je 15 '30 650w

"The publishers of his 'One Hour Series' say 'Each author has been selected because of his thorough knowledge of his subject and his peculiar ability to present it in a masterful manner.' We wonder if they all measure up to their subject as Llewelyn Powys does to Christianity!"
— Boston Transcript p3 Je 28 '30 220w

"Mr. Powys believes that Christianity has not been of much use in the world, and that it is destined to be still less in the future. Nevertheless, his book, beautifully and poetically written, is an eloquent testimony of appreciation of the personality of Jesus and the things which modern religious people have come to understand that he was supremely interested in, even on the part of one who does not think that he is religious."
Christian Century 47:942 Jl 30 '30 250w

"Though marred by repeated evidences of an unpleasant coarseness of mind, his work is always interesting, and a good exhibition of a kind of stuff which is popular in the twentieth century." Leonard Hodgson
Living Church 83:671 S 13 '30 350w

Reviewed by Arthur Colton
New Repub 63:322 Jl 30 '30 400w

Reviewed by Gerald Sykes
N Y Evening Post p9m Je 14 '30 400w

"Except in its language, Mr. Powys's book is no contribution; rather a work of supererogation. Why is it necessary to reiterate that humanity, like the beasts, returns only to its dust? Does not he show the inherent weakness of his position, his blatant statements of fact, fact and fact only? His one paramount idea of man's inconsequent perishing envelops and blinds him like a thickly heavy mantle that he has willfully drawn over his eyes."
— N Y Times p19 Je 15 '30 280w

"Beautiful prose and plain-spoken prejudices do not make fair history. Mr. Powys is the observant novelist in a difficult rôle of historian. But he does not have the historian's sympathy with variant positions. For one who knows his 'church history' this book should prove irritating and therefore stimulating. For any others, as an introduction to the subject, it is misleading."
Sat R of Lit 7:14 Jl 26 '30 150w

"As a one-man pronouncement, which evidently aims to substitute some very vague paganism for Christianity, the book has liveliness and even a touch of eloquence. With much of its negative criticism a considerable number, perhaps a majority, of Protestant clergymen would undoubtedly find themselves in agreement. But Mr Powys is somewhat too free with his deductions to be accepted as a historian or a philosopher."
+ — Springf'd Republican p10 My 13 '30 400w

Survey 65:240 N 15 '30 20w

POWYS, PHILIPPA. Blackthorn winter. 223p $2 Smith, R.R. [6s Constable]

A Dorset tale of a farmer's daughter who forsakes her sturdy blacksmith lover to follow a gipsy lad and the life of the road.

"Miss Powys keeps to the matter-of-fact vocabulary of folklore. She injects no poetic spurts. Her style is unselfconscious. Like the song of the raggle-taggle gypsies itself, the book beats pleasantly across the surface of your mind."
+ Books p18 S 28 '30 350w

"A story that bears a very amateurish stamp, both in its style and content. The quaint dialect both of the gypsies and the villagers in this rural English story rings truer than the far-fetched love scenes in which the author indulges her rather over-passionate imagination."
— + Boston Transcript p2 O 29 '30 250w

POWYS, PHILIPPA—Continued

"The story is told in simple, direct narrative that moves steadily from opening to close. It is a stark, poignant tale, clearly founded either upon observed fact or on a tradition of a region in which the gypsies have formed (if they do not still form) a more constant and integrated part of the population than would commonly be the case in this country."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 31 '30 550w

"It is a simple story simply told. It might have been written ten years ago, or twenty years ago, or fifty. It is told as stories have been told since the beginning without recourse to any fictional device. Without implying any comparison between the work of Miss Powys and that of Thomas Hardy and Emily Brontë, which would be as ridiculous as ill-advised upon present evidence, one may say that few readers will follow the fortunes of the driven ones of 'The Blackthorn Winter' without being reminded of Tess of the D'Urbervilles and her country, of Wuthering Heights and its people."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:222 O 11 '30 300w

"There is nothing particularly striking either about the plot, which is as natural as life, or about the characters. . . The charm of the book lies in its atmosphere—a heavy, slow, earthy atmosphere—and in the power of the author to conjure up country sounds and scents and scenes to such an extent that we almost cease to be readers and become participants in the story."

+ Spec 145:259 Ag 23 '30 280w

"Integrity of purpose is perhaps the most commendable feature in a novel which, so far as the actual writing is concerned, is uneasy in its straining after effect. Miss Powys understands the countryman and the countryside, but, while she is content to present the one as she knows him, she is inclined to show the other in phrases that do not properly belong to it."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p613 Jl 24 '30 150w

POWYS, THEODORE FRANCIS. Fables. 286p il $2.50 Viking press

828 29-24039

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:196 F '30

" 'Mr. Weston's Good Wine' was a remarkable book: 'The House with the Echo' was not, and these 'Fables' bear still more obviously the mark of a talent that should not expend itself so prolifically. One tires a bit of Mr. Powys's peculiar, morbid pessimism which was so fascinating in his earlier books."

— Nation 130:686 Je 11 '30 200w

"Mr. Powys's style, like his spirits, is flagging. The Dorset dialect, which he was so skilful in rendering both imbecile and evil, is here used seldom, and the archaic formalism of his English, so insinuating once, stiffens too often into 'poetic prose.' It should be said, finally, that the morals in the book are all either trite or unintelligible, and the tales, when they exist, dull."

— Nation and Ath 46:516 Ja 11 '30 500w

"To the readers who are accustomed to his men, women and children, Mr. Powys' talking crumbs and chattering glowworms, clocks in ratiocination and seaweed in homiletics can rouse only a pleased credulity. They are all so much more lifelike than his human anatomies. The intense seriousness of Mr. Powys' intention is as patent as ever in this book; and his extravaganza in the realms of fact seem more pardonable, even if we must still deplore a vision that is so obstinately astigmatic."

+ — New Statesman 34:537 F 1 '30 180w

N Y World p11m Mr 9 '30 160w

Sat R 149:143 F 1 '30 520w

"Mr. T. F. Powys has given us another example of his strange and indelicate talent. These fables are really all fantastic short stories of village life, as Mr. Powys sees it. They have the same overpowering sense of mud, squalor and barbarity as had his other books; and the fact that these are fables and not stories, that they contain an element of the fantastic, does little to mitigate their all too intense realism. . . The ordinary reader will find this book extremely unpleasant and distasteful, but its prose style is exquisite."

— + Spec 143:894 D 28 '29 650w

POWYS, THEODORE FRANCIS. Kindness in a corner. 293p $2.50 Viking press [7s 6d Chatto]

30-12526

The scene of this novel is the Dorsetshire countryside. The story is a study of a village group, with the interest centering about the Reverend Silas Dottery of Tadnol parish, and Lottie, his serving maid. The sly humor of the book develops out of poor Dottery's struggle between the spirit and the flesh.

Booklist 27:65 O '30

"Kindness in a Corner is in substance little more than a fable, but it contains Mr. Powys's easy, ironic, pleasantly mocking style; and although that style is not in itself enough, it does compensate somewhat for the general ineffectuality of a brief tale made into a novel." A. B. Clarke

+ Bookm 71:323 Je '30 250w

"There ought to be a law to keep authors from getting 'mellow' just as there ought to be a law to keep any author from being 'whimsical.' Whatever has come over the village where Mr. Powys presided with so demoniacal a genius? It is the same village, even if in this book it goes under a different name. Apparently everyone has decided to reform; and the least interesting person in the world is a reformed demon. Nevertheless it should be immediately added that 'Kindness in a Corner' is a quite gorgeous book, especially if you have not read the earlier ones." Donald Douglas

+ — Books p5 Mr 30 '30 500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p111 Jl '30

Reviewed by Dorothy Van Doren

Nation 130:708 Je 18 '30 80w

"Whether you call it a comedy, an allegory, or a fable, 'Kindness in a Corner' is in poor taste." L. L. Irvine

— Nation and Ath 46:866 Mr 22 '30 80w

New Statesman 34:782 Mr 22 '30 60w

Reviewed by Horace Gregory

N Y Evening Post p8m My 24 '30 450w

"Theodore Powys is a master of English, and for this, for the exquisite texture of expression, he should be read, if for nothing else. But the reading will disclose much else, and especially a genius so rare it seems not of this earth, a humaneness of spirit not frequently to be encountered, and a wit so exotic it will seem at times little other than perverse. And 'Kindness in a Corner' displays all the Powys characteristics in their fullness and at their best." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p4 Mr 23 '30 750w

N Y World p5m Ag 10 '30 320w

"If you have a suitable sense of humor, an amiable tolerance for human frailty and a love of fine prose you will most certainly enjoy Kindness in a Corner."

+ Outlook 154:508 Mr 26 '30 80w

Sat R 149:299 Mr 8 '30 150w

"The rich flavor of this fourteenth century 'conte' in modern dress can only be suggested. There were times in the past when the still, small voice of James Branch Cabell seemed barely audible amid the uproar of Main Street. It is gratifying now to hear the clear-toned antistrophe of Powys coming to us from across the ocean." Stanley Went

+ Sat R of Lit 6:987 Ap 26 '30 700w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett

Spec 144:399 Mr 8 '30 350w

"In spite of a certain tendency to sly suggestiveness which does not really befit so idyllic a spot as Tadnol, this mellifluous and humorous fable is charming enough. Altogether, it is a pretty conceit, written with all the old-worldly grace that Mr. Powys commands."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p210 Mr 13 '30 500w

PRATT, EDWIN JOHN. The Roosevelt and the Antinoe. 44p $1.50 Macmillan

811 Antinoe (freighter). Roosevelt (steamship) 30-7018

A long narrative poem which has for its theme the rescue of the crew of the Antinoe thru the seamanship of Captain Fried and his men on the Roosevelt.

"The theme is essentially stirring, and in spite of unassimilated factual detail and a lack of high poetic imagination the book renders well the greatness of certain human virtues—patient ingenuity, determination, courage, self-effacing coöperation."
+ — Bookm 72:ix O '30 100w
Books p12 Je 8 '30 230w

"Mr. Pratt has felt passionately the real significance of the event, passionately but too excitedly. His poem runs away with him and overthrows him again and again, as if he were one of those unfortunate lifeboats launched from the rescuing ship to the freighter and crushed by the furious sea as soon as launched. His cadences limp, crawl and suddenly find themselves winded; there are too many technical terms, too much downright prose." Edwin Seaver
— + N Y Evening Post p7s Mr 1 '30 300w
N Y Times p11 Je 1 '30 170w

"It isn't poetry, but it's good hard-working verse which rhymes in quatrains all the way through and keeps to its five-stress lines, unmetric though they be." L. T. Nicholl
+ — Outlook 154:549 Ap 2 '30 80w
Times [London] Lit Sup p499 Je 12 '30 380w

PRAZ, MARIO. Unromantic Spain. 350p il $4 (10s 6d) Knopf

914.6 Spain—Description and travel 30-9297

"Mr. Praz is obsessed with that view of Spain which is known as 'the black legend'. . . For him 'the essence of Spain lies in the very antithesis of picturesqueness—namely, in a grandiose, overwhelming monotony'; the romantic legend of modern Spain is a fake, perpetuated for the benefit of tourists."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"A controversial and quarrelsome book meant to be read by people who know a good deal about Spain and know the books that have been written about it. It has little value to the casual visitor who wishes to see what is to be seen rather than to be set right about inner essences." Herschel Brickell
Books p18 Mr 16 '30 700w

"When he keeps to the more serious aspect of his theme, Mr. Praz succeeds in getting some good, malicious amusement out of it. . . The trouble with the author is that in attacking the exaggerations of foreign writers who have found their inspiration in Spain, he tends himself to commit the exaggeration of assuming the truth is banal. He loses no opportunity in his descriptions of Holy Week in Seville, of bull fights, the Alhambra, in his chapters on architecture, of pointing out the banality, boredom and deadness of the scene. He has no genuine sympathy for the country. There is little attempt to understand the nature of the Spanish genius."
— + New Statesman 34:132 N 2 '29 720w

"Mr. Praz is an Italian who teaches his native language at the University of Liverpool. He has too keen a sense of humor and is too genial a scholar to be described as having a chip on his shoulder, yet his book, originally published in Italian, has a distinctly Italian bias. . . It should be noted that Signor Praz does not deny the charm or even the picturesqueness of Spain. He has no apparent and sinister connection with the Italian travel bureaus. But he does not wish us to go to Spain with a baggage of untenable illusions. . . If Signor Praz proves anything it is not that there is no romance in Spain but that, intrinsically, there is no romance anywhere."
N Y Times p2 F 16 '30 1000w

"The time has come, Mr. Mario Praz says in effect, to show that picturesque, tragic and voluptuous Spain is a myth created by a few foreign writers, mainly French; and that the real Spain is monotonous in spirit and aspect, its mysticism a void, its Cervantes a comparative bore, its architecture a mere confectionery, its life listless and banal. In other words, Mr. Mario Praz's book, for all its cleverness, humour and sound knowledge, must be taken as a healthy purgative but by no means as a food. Better the myth than a vacuum."
— + Sat R 148:515 N 2 '29 230w

Reviewed by R. S. Rose
Sat R of Lit 6:945 Ap 19 '30 650w

"Mr. Mario Praz's Unromantic Spain is as entertaining as most exercises in destructive criticism are. As a help to understanding the special genius of the country, it is almost worthless. . . It is a pity that Mr. Praz has not put his knowledge and literary skill at the disposal of a less perverse attitude."
— Spec 144:23 Ja 4 '30 220w

"Within the limits he has chosen Mr. Praz has written about Spain better than any modern writer; and though he will undoubtedly offend the susceptibilities of many Spanish people, he may do much to discredit those things against which the reformers strive. No one interested in the country should fail to read him."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p810 O 17 '29 900w

PREEDY, GEORGE, pseud. Prince's darling (Eng title: Rocklitz). 362p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

30-5169

Court life of the seventeenth century in Germany is the background for this romance of political intrigue and tragedy. Beautiful Madelon von Neitschütz, the heroine of the story, is brought up by her father to marry Crown Prince Johann Georg, the young elector of Saxony. But Madelon loves the poor but handsome Delphicus de Haverbeck, whom, thruout her powerful rôle as "the prince's darling," she can never forget.

"For many years the historical novel has lacked both dignity and truth. Here, in heavy but fine serious prose and manner, is not a puppet show but an aristocratic theater." Donald Douglas
+ Books p14 Mr 9 '30 300w

"Mr. Preedy has worked hard to create his atmosphere of evil in an evil and superstitious day. That he is able, in spite of a thin plot, to stimulate in his reader the desire to go on and 'see what happens,' probably stamps him as a prospective successful novelist." I. C. C.
+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ja 18 '30 500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p79 My '30

Reviewed by Herbert Kahn
Nation and Ath 47:118 Ap 26 '30 20w

"Though drawn on a smaller canvas than 'General Crack,' this second novel is no less interesting, a closely woven tale of intrigue and ambition, love, superstition and power used without restraint of either conscience or convention."
+ N Y Times p9 Ja 12 '30 700w

"Mr. Preedy paints a large canvas, abundant with detail, and though politics and political intrigue are handled with a historian's care, the story itself has always the center of interest. We liked it better than this author's previous book, General Crack." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:188 Ja 29 '30 100w

PREEDY, GEORGE, pseud.—Continued
"Though the invention of incident and detail is unflagging, and the historical background is handled with freshness and precision, the readers' interest is not caught quite so closely as it was by the romantic adventurousness of Mr. Preedy's earlier novel."
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:11 Jl 26 '30 300w

"Mr. Preedy has thoroughly absorbed his period, which is the seventeenth century in Saxony. But we are conscious to some extent of his stage mechanism, and the scenery, if essentially convincing, is sometimes overlighted. At any rate, there is some admirable writing in his pages, and the story itself moves dramatically, through love and intrigue, to its tragic climax." Gilbert Thomas
+ — Spec 144:342 Mr 1 '30 150w

"The attention is never distracted from the individuals out of whose adventures the plot is woven. Mr. Preedy has withstood the temptation to overload his description of seventeenth-century Saxony with details. Indeed he has drawn a clear outline of Saxon society at the time instead of painting, as is too common with historical novelists, an immense and overweighted canvas."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p316 Ap 10 '30 500w

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN THE U. S. A. ³ GENERAL ASSEMBLY. Twenty-four views of marriage; ed. by Clarence A. Spaulding. 452p $2.50 Macmillan
173.1 Marriage 30-32279

This symposium represents the widely differing views of twenty-four men and women on marriage and divorce and sexual relations in modern life. Among the authors from whose works the extracts have been taken for this symposium are Bertrand Russell, Count Keyserling, Walter Lippmann, Ellen Key, Maude Royden, Sherwood Eddy, Wilfred Lay, Toyohiko Kagawa, Herbert S. Jennings and Thomas W. Galloway.

"Twenty-four views of marriage are enough to give varying opinions, some of them repugnant to Christian feeling and thought and practise. But an honest commission has to face the facts, and deliberately both liberal and even radical views are included. Accordingly, the subject of marriage is here presented comprehensively and exhaustively. No angle of approach has been overlooked. Christian doctrine, sociological investigation, psychoanalysis, legal practise and theory, are all represented." M. G. Evans
+ Crozer Q 8:108 Ja '31 450w
N Y Times p44 D 7 '30 270w

PRESCOTT, DANIEL ALFRED. Education and international relations; a study of the social forces that determine the influence of education. (Harvard studies in education) 168p $2.50 Harvard univ. press [10s 6d Oxford]
370.94 Education—Europe. Europe—Social conditions. International cooperation 30-26527

Mr Prescott's survey of the social forces that determine the quality of educational influence is based upon data gathered in several European countries. The investigator aimed also to discover what the teachers and pupils thought about international affairs. The most important of the social forces which he discusses are tradition, national consciousness, class consciousness, the organized opinion of teachers, and organizations external to official education.

"The book is a notable contribution to its field. Educators will find especially the chapters on the organized opinion of teachers, new psychological and pedagogical principles and educational implications. There is also consideration of the League of Nations and organizations outside of official education."
+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 21 '30 380w

Reviewed by W. P. Lemon
Christian Century 47:1040 Ag 27 '30 400w
St Louis 28:208 S '30

"Anyone interested in education as an aid to the solution of international difficulties will find valuable information in Mr. Prescott's study, which deserves a wide reading both in Europe and in the United States." R. M. Tryon
+ School R 38:550 S '30 420w

"As an antidote for pessimism engendered by dire prophecies of another world war in 1935, Education and International Relations is worthy of strong recommendation. This important volume is the result of two years' study in Europe under a fellowship from the Bureau of International Research at Harvard. The writer traveled in England and on the continent and made intensive investigations in many educational institutions. . . Read this illuminating volume and watch your spirits rise!" K. P.
+ World Tomorrow 13:426 O '30 850w

PRESLAND, JOHN, pseud. See Skelton, G.

PRESTON, JOHN HYDE. Gentleman rebel; the exploits of Anthony Wayne. 370p il $5 Farrar
B or 92 Wayne, Anthony 30-8773

A biography of the American general of Revolutionary war fame known as "Mad Anthony Wayne," hero of many daring exploits, among which was the storming of Stony Point.

Booklist 27:25 S '30

"Mr. Preston approaches his subject with a youthful, ardent gusto that is most attractive. He sails his biographical brig through the stormy waters of the Revolution with a fine disdain of the squalls and tempests of historical controversy, and his seamanship is characterized by reckless courage and abandon rather than by skill. His story of the Revolution and the Critical Period is admirably, incredibly simple, and his interpretation of the rôle of the Gentleman Rebel unclouded by uncertainties or complexities, except where the shadow of Freud flits fitfully across the sunny record." H. S. Commager
+ — Books p10 Je 1 '30 870w

Reviewed by S. L. Cook
Boston Transcript p3 Ap 5 '30 1750w

"It is written about as badly as Sandburg's 'Lincoln,' and is equally engrossing reading. It is full of subjects without predicates, predicates without subjects, words which do not exist—and which are perfectly clear to any American reader. . . If you want to be entertained or to receive a sugar-coated dose of American history, read this book. If you want analysis of the part played by General Wayne in the campaigns of the Revolution or profound criticism of his contribution to the founding of the United States, you had probably better wait." John Pell
— + Christian Science Monitor p15 My 10 '30 650w
Cleveland Open Shelf p100 Jl '30

Reviewed by Hazelton Spencer
New Repub 63:297 Jl 23 '30 280w

"Mr. Preston tries to expand the fighter into a man of variegated interests. In a pell-mell style that owes something, no doubt, to Carl Sandburg, something to Thomas Beer's more tricky moments, and something to writers of old-fashioned swashbuckling romance he proceeds to mix liberal daubs of political history, conjectural essays on Wayne's shortcomings as a husband, bits about Wayne as a flirt and a lover, some amusing and highly contradictory passages on what constitutes legality, and paragraphs full of furor that, in spite of their overplusage of words, do give the effect of battle, murder and sudden extinction." John Chamberlain
N Y Times p5 Mr 30 '30 950w

"A brisk, spirited narrative. Mr. Preston is definitely a partisan. He admires Mad Anthony, understands the reasons for his acts and respects his bravery. Consequently, he throws off any temptation to speak with the measured accents of the judicial bench. He calls scoundrels by their names, estimates liars and thieves as such." Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 Mr 22 '30 800w

"Full of meat, unashamedly enthusiastic, but somewhat marred by a smart-aleck style."

+ — Outlook 154:590 Ap 9 '30 80w

PRICE, GEORGE MCCREADY. History of some scientific blunders. 138p $1.25 Revell [4s Oliphants]

509 Science—History 30-10393

A survey of some of the scientific blunders which, in some cases, passed as proved science for several centuries before they were found to be fallacies.

"Apparently his fundamental purpose in writing the book was to endeavor to discredit the theory of organic evolution and its author and to garnish this with accounts of theories, some of them advanced centuries ago, which knowledge later proved untrue. . . The bibliography at the end of the book and the citations all through its text show that the author has read widely both in modern scientific exposition and discussion and in the historical developments of science. But he seems to have read also with a performed and unchangeable mental attitude and to have been especially impressed by such viewpoints as harmonized with his own ideas."

— N Y Times p24 Ap 6 '30 370w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:74 O '30

St Louis 28:209 S '30

Times [London] Lit Sup p579 Jl 10 '30 420w

PRICHARD, KATHARINE SUSANNAH (MRS HUGO VIVIAN HOPE THROSSEL). Coonardoo. 320p $2.50 Norton [7s 6d Cape, J.]

30-25910

The scene of the novel is northwestern Australia. It is the story of Hugh Watt, who lived with his mother, mistress of a cattle station at Wytaliba; of his companion, Coonardoo, a native girl; and of the results of his not too successful marriage with a wife from "outside."

Booklist 26:314 My '30

Reviewed by Esther Forbes

Bookm 71:212 Ap '30 280w

"To the superficial observer there are but two types of Australian life, the city life and the bush life. Miss Prichard has yet to touch the former, but in four novels she has exhibited four aspects of the latter—and through excellent stories. . . 'Coonardoo' is at once a remarkable story of station (not 'ranch', a term unknown to Australians in this connection) life, and a profound and searching study of the interracial relations of the whites and blacks." C. H. Grattan

+ Books p4 Mr 2 '30 750w

Cleveland Open Shelf p61 Ap '30

"It is impossible to deny that the book has power. While the story and the people are not particularly interesting to us, the novel, as a whole, is impressive."

+ — Nation and Ath 45:714 Ag 31,'29 230w

"A very fine and moving piece of work. With an almost casual pen she wraps us in the atmosphere of the dry, tropical country. . . With a delicate and understanding pen Miss Prichard has interpreted the mind and heart of Coonardoo and the other natives. There is no sentimentality. With a few deftly made pictures she has presented the various phases of the aboriginal approach to life and growth and the universal forces. We can think of no higher commendation to give to this aspect of her book than to state that the fascination that holds readers of 'The Golden Bough' has been bodily transposed to this novel." Lillian Rogers

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 22 '30 1100w

"So simple a story of docile beast-like devotion is of universal interest but is lacking in dramatic interest. The merit of Miss Prichard's novel lies less in the story or even in the characterization, which is regrettably uneven, than in the picture she gives of the sun-parched desolate plains of Australia's wild west. In structure, the story of 'Coonardoo' is a little incoherent. Time, in particular, flows at an uneven rate through its pages, and there is no especial point of reference which ties the tale to any era. The style, though congested with local idioms and unfamiliar locutions, is vigorous and straightforward." John Carter

+ — N Y Times p7 Mr 16 '30 950w

"Katharine Prichard does not write with as much restraint as Henry Handel Richardson. But she presents a dramatic, intense theme by means of a very competent and rich style—a style altogether suited to her subject matter. That 'Coonardoo' should be the Australian prize novel of the year is not surprising." Elizabeth Sanderson

+ N Y World p11m Mr 16 '30 420w

Pratt p41 summer '30

"Perhaps inevitably for the foreign reader the interest of the book rests even more in the general setting than in the individual characters. The Australian country, the cattle range itself, the aborigines who live so contentedly yet so entirely according to their own customs among the foreigners—these it is that supply freshness and novelty to the narrative. Miss Prichard's book presents not only an Australian writer but the Australians."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:798 Mr 8 '30 330w

"This very tragic novel has great worth, not only as a story but as a commentary on two opposed moralities: as either it is worth reading. Miss Prichard writes very directly and has no mannerisms: she has given us, too, the words of many very lovely native songs, which have not been translated before."

+ Spec 143:285 Ag 31 '29 200w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 25 '30 260w

"In spite of the preliminary help of a glossary, there are perhaps too many native words in Coonardoo for the ordinary reader's comfort. This novel, which took the prize offered by the Sydney Bulletin for the best book of the year 1928, is a record of the speech and peculiarities of a vanishing people, the Australian aborigines; and the student of folk-lore will delight in the songs which Mrs. Prichard has collected and her first-hand description of the native ceremonies. The story is a vivid and moving study of the blacks in relation to the whites, and in particular of the lovely and faithful Coonardoo."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p574 Jl 18 '29 400w

PRIESTLEY, JOHN BOYNTON. Angel Pavement. 494p $3 Harper [10s 6d Heinemann]

30-20867

From the Baltic to the Thames came Mr Golspie and invaded the shabby offices of Twigg and Dersingham in Angel Pavement, a dingy little London side street. His bluff and gusty presence animated the slumbering office, giving it for a brief spell an unwonted air of activity, and penetrated even the home lives and ties of its shabby clerks. Then as suddenly as he came, he disappeared, leaving havoc in his wake.

Booklist 27:105 N '30

"If we say that the novel is not wholly successful it is because it is not perfectly constructed. Some of the incidents are out of place, some over elaborate, and some improbable. Those who told Mr. Priestley that he was a great novelist will now have the pleasure of observing his attempt to become one. Possibly he has bitten off more than he can chew, but this is written with too much charm and vitality to be anything but a good book." George Dangerfield

+ — Bookm 72:168 O '30 700w

PRIESTLEY, J. B.—Continued

"The book gives you 'good, solid food.' It spreads its abundance before you, not clumsily, to rob you of appetite, but simply, with a certain seasoned dignity, with due thought for your digestion. . . Because of its amplitude, because of its blended irony with understanding, this book of Mr. Priestley's seems to marry the old, ample form of the novel with the passionate analysis of the new. The two trends restrain each other and fulfill each other. The marriage is a true one, elastic and dignified." V. P. Ross

+ Books p5 S 7 '30 750w

Cath World 132:374 D '30 250w

" 'Angel Pavement' is like an entertaining, buxom, gay and sometimes fascinating creature who makes an evening for a roomful of people, who is the life of the party, whose name nobody exactly caught. In other words, a grand book for smoothing down the barbs of boredom." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p9 S 6 '30 450w

"Mr. Priestley has very obligingly done it again. That is to say, he has produced another 600 pages of good companionableness, narrower and stricter in design than the earlier volume, less munificent in panorama, less varied in incident—but still 'a noble six hundred.' " V. S. P.

+ Christian Science Monitor p5 S 6 '30 500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p147 D '30

"It is difficult to say just why, with so much verbal dexterity, so much genuine knowledge of life, this book leaves one so completely unmoved. Perhaps it is that one requires in a major work of fiction either some character or characters in the story who can reflect with awareness and passion the fluctuating shades of the shifting situations, or one must be conscious in the author himself—the showman who has summoned us to his entertainment—of a powerful and discriminating mind controlling and manipulating with 'relevant intensity' the characters he presents." Alyse Gregory

+ — Nation 131:300 S 17 '30 550w

"I allow myself to entertain the thought that before we are very much older pilgrimages will be made to Angel Pavement much in the same way that they are to the Bull at Rochester or the Six Poor Travellers in the same city." J. B. S. Bennett

+ Nation and Ath 47:653 Ag 23 '30 320w

"In 'Angel Pavement' Mr. Priestley has written a better book than 'The Good Companions'—firmer, neater, harder. In theme and structure it is entirely modern. . . Without attributing too much symbolism to the story, it is enough to say that Mr. Priestley has used the old English manner, associated inseparably with what we call healthy fiction, to emphasize the decay of English life." R. M. L.

+ New Repub 64:241 O 15 '30 350w

"Mr. Priestley stands beside his panorama, the benevolent showman, confident in his power to entertain, and pleasing one by the very expectedness of his manipulation of the pointer. It is this charm of the easily expected, in incident and (for the most part) in character, that carries the reader on and on, on and on, right to the unexpectedly inconclusive end. . . Only in the matter of Angel Pavement's ending is the novel likely to be adversely criticised by its readers. Mr. Priestley makes a sorry compromise with the 'slice-of-life' school, and leaves all his personages standing on the brink of the really unpleasant and undeserved abyss to which he has led them, stirring not a finger to point out a bridge across or a path that may lead them back to security. So the whole elaborate tale breaks off."

+ — New Statesman 35:622 Ag 23 '30 950w

"For all its deft phrasing, its many touches of humor, 'Angel Pavement' is not an exhilarating book nor a cheerful book. Neither is it sordid, nor unduly dismal. What it shows is the truth of life as the great majority know it, a truth which has been starkly demonstrated in this period of financial depression and consequent unemployment. 'Angel Pavement' is a bigger book, a more important book than 'The Good Companions.' " L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p4 S 14 '30 1200w

"Mr. Priestley does not seem to revive the past from scorn for the present tempo of the novel. He stands apart from his own time in his capacity for patience, in his willingness to give full measure to his work. Yet he lives actually in the common, average world of his own day, through a deep, sane wonder at the flux of human life." V. P. Ross

+ Outlook 156:66 S 10 '30 600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:79 N '30

" 'Angel Pavement' is a big novel in both senses of the epithet. The writing, almost throughout, reveals an effortless quality which is a relief from the hectographic methods of much modern fiction."

+ Sat R 150:231 Ag 23 '30 1000w

"It is not for a reviewer to retell the story. It is enough for him to say that he has read few contemporary stories that seem to him better told—or better worth the telling and reading. 'And,' as Mr. Golspie remarked on leaving London and the wreck of many hopes behind him, 'that's that.' " L. W. Dodd

+ Sat R of Lit 7:137 S 20 '30 550w

"With remarkable industry, when one considers how short a time has passed since the publication of The Good Companions, Mr. Priestley has produced another long novel to the tune of six hundred pages. It is necessary to state the length because Mr. Priestley appears to be rationalizing his fiction-producing business and to be turning out the furniture of English comedy on mass-production principles; there is a standard kind of humorous or sentimental description of every character and every scene he draws. But his method is generous, his sentiment appropriate and his shrewdness highly entertaining." V. S. Pritchett

Spec 145:289 Ag 30 '30 750w

"Mr. Priestley's power of observing and depicting the multitudinous facets of every-day life or the humors and tragedies of undistinguished English souls is remarkable. Yet the essayist, the special reporter and the collector of faits divers still hamper the novelist. A collection of portraits, however masterly, does not make a picture: and what Mr. Priestley can do when the novelist prevails is to be seen in the pages where Turgis, mad with passion and disappointment, prowls and grows thin round Lena's flat in Maida Vale."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p666 Ag 21 '30 750w

PRIESTLEY, JOHN BOYNTON. English humor; [with an introd. by Stanley Baldwin]. (English heritage ser.) 180p $1.40 (3s 6d) Longmans

827 Humor [29-20682]

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:196 F '30

Reviewed by Lisle Bell

Books p23 Mr 2 '30 60w

Cleveland Open Shelf p26 F '30

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:108 Ja 15 '30 170w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:25 Mr '30

St Louis 28:108 Ap '30

"In this little volume Mr. Priestley has produced an excellent guide-book. From Chaucer to Chaplin he has omitted hardly any man of fun who is at all considerable. Low comedy actors, comedy painters, cartoonists, the writers and the illustrators for Punch—all are here in a regiment of smiles. . . The chapter on Dickens, striking at the core of that author's strength, is perhaps the ablest."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:846 Mr 22 '30 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1096 D 26 '29 700w

PRINCETON UNIVERSITY. Dept of economics and social institutions. Industrial relations section. Labor banking movement in the United States. 377p $2.50 Industrial relations section, Princeton univ., Princeton, N.J.

332.2 Banks and banking, Trade union. Banks and banking—United States 29-27589

A clear statement of facts concerning a movement which, during the last decade, has roused enthusiasm in labor circles but which now shows marks of decline. Historical chapters describing the growth of labor banks, their methods, policies, and problems, and the success of the movement are followed by a detailed account of thirty-nine banks which have been, at one time or another, operated under labor auspices.

"The present volume is an unusually competent piece of work in a field in which no central clearing house of information exists, and where material is gathered largely from fugitive sources of publication and interviews with individuals. The treatment is largely restricted to a statement of fact; and comment is missing except in the few cases where the facts scream." W. E. Atkins

+ Am Econ R 20:337 Je '30 550w

"As a clear exposition of facts carefully gathered and analyzed, the book sets a high standard in reporting an important piece of research." E. R. Burton

+ Ann Am Acad 149:203 My '30 780w

Booklist 26:189 F '30

Reviewed by J. A. Flexner
Books p15 Jl 13 '30 500w

Reviewed by P. H. Douglas
New Repub 62:25 F 19 '30 630w

Pratt p11 summer '30

St Louis 28:131 My '30

Special Libraries 21:265 S '30

PRIOLEAU, JOHN. Open road in England; an informal and intimate guide to the highways & by-ways of England; Wales and Ireland (Eng title: Car and country). rev and enl ed 227p il $2.50 Morrow [5s Dent]

914.2 England—Description and travel 30-20839

An informal guide for motorist or walker who is anxious to find the beauties of England and Wales which lie off the beaten track. The book is divided into sections: South of the Thames; West of the Solent; North of the Severn; By Mersey, Tweed and Humber; East of the Trent and Ouse; and North of the Thames. There are extremely clear directions and fifty small maps.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 71:xxii Mr '30 600w

Boston Transcript p3 D 31 '29 1050w

"Its format is excellent and its charming drawings are a decorative set-off to its severely practical maps. But it is not a substitute for travel. Books about places make some readers feel that there is no need for them to investigate the originals themselves; the job has been done for them. Not so with Mr. Prioleau. He is a vigorous uprooter from the fireside. All England and Wales are his province, and wherever you live he can take you into the heart of the country, and probably by ways you have never found."

+ New Statesman 33:sup xvi My 4 '29 600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:35 Ap '30

Spec 142:580 Ap 13 '29 130w

PRIVATE 19022, pseud. (FREDERIC MANNING). Her privates we. 334p $2.50 Putnam [7s 6d Davies]

30-15624

The story of Private Bourne's life in a British infantry battalion on the Somme and Ancre fronts in 1916, up to his death in action. It is an account of the war experiences of the ordinary soldier and his companions. The author, who writes under his regimental number, 19022, served in the battalion of which his hero is a member.

Booklist 27:28 S '30

Reviewed by George Dangerfield
Bookm 71:443 Jl '30 280w

"'Her Privates We' shares with 'Journey's End' and Mr. Mottram's 'Spanish Farm Trilogy' the distinction of focussing the vividly terrible flashlight of war on the inner state of men's minds, emotions and beings. It is safe to assume that it will continue to be read when much that is now discussed is laid in the literary dust bin." Eugene Lohrke

+ Books p6 Je 8 '30 780w

Cleveland Open Shelf p143 N '30

Reviewed by Horace Gregory
Nation 131:71 Jl 16 '30 280w

"'Her Privates We' is a naïf and well-meaning work. It reminds one of the Bairnsfather cartoons, of the entente cordiale type of stories that used to circulate about French peasants and French cats, and it also reminds one strongly of Marryat, Reade, and Ballantyne. Bourne, the private, is the modest, pleasant, resourceful hero of all boys' adventure stories, just as at home on the Somme as he used to be among the South Sea islands or on the Canadian prairies. Some chapters are capably written and interesting, others are poor. As a whole the book attempts very little and achieves rather less than it attempts." L. L. Irvine

+ — Nation and Ath 46:580 Ja 25 '30 200w

"It is a fine book and it is a pity that its restraint is too likely to hide its meaning." Lionel Trilling

+ New Repub 63:296 Jl 29 '30 480w

"Her Privates We has been hailed by some critics, presumably misled by the title and the author's pseudonym, as the account of the war as the ordinary ranker experienced it. It is nothing of the kind. It is about the ranker. Its hero, Bourne, refuses to take a commission —wherein alone, we fancy, he shows that he is not an ordinary ranker. The book is written carefully, at times beautifully, by a cultured, sophisticated, observant gentleman who watched his companions and himself with the same curious interest that he had previously expended on literature and the drama."

+ New Statesman 34:640 F 22 '30 330w

"An extraordinarily compelling document of the war. His is a dispassionate and fiercely honest account of the physical and spiritual crisis of a British infantry battalion at the height of the conflict. Out of his memories of years when men thought only of the necessities of life and the imminence of death, he has created a stark and arresting narrative." Howard Barnes

+ N Y Times p2 Je 22 '30 450w

"A well written and engrossing study of human beings in torment; not highly dramatic, not dealing with unusual beings. That is perhaps the secret of its appeal." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 Je 7 '30 380w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend
Outlook 155:268 Je 18 '30 80w

Pratt p39 autumn '30

Reviewed by L. P. Hartley
Sat R 149:172 F 8 '30 300w

"The author, already successful in other fields of literature, depicts scores of scenes on the Somme battlefield of 1916 with telling color and accurate, expressive line. Unafraid of dreadful physical detail, or of Tommy's habits and pungent army idiom, he writes nevertheless with restraint and searching phrase, with loving insight into the hearts of his characters, to accomplish descriptive values nothing short of brilliant." E. G. Taylor

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1123 Je 14 '30 550w

"It is, perhaps, the best portrayal of the English private soldier as he is and was that has yet been written. A year ago this book would have made a resounding sensation, and if now the public is satiated with the subject, excellence of this order will undoubtedly survive the moods of the moment. Her Privates We will become a classic: future ages will learn from it some true and splendid things about our soldiers."

PRIVATE 19022, pseud.—Continued
+ Spec 144:131 Ja 25 '30 170w

Springf'd Republican p5e Je 29 '30 950w

"So many books have been written about the Great War that it were rash to prophesy undying fame for this; we can at least say that any similar book on a former war would have taken its place as a classic of its kind. We all of us pray that there may never be a repetition of those years, but we may also venture to hope that we may never be without men of the greatness of heart of Shem and Martlow."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p40 Ja 16 '30 1000w

Reviewed by S. A. Coblentz
World Tomorrow 13:377 S '30 320w

PROCTER, ARTHUR WYMAN. Murder in Manhattan. 276p $2 Morrow
30-16003

Science versus the hunch or instinct, as a method of crime detection, is the idea underlying this murder mystery. The setting is New York City on the occasion of a banquet given in honor of the retiring chief of police, Dawson Deever. In the midst of the banquet a daring murder is committed: Garet Garmany, interested in police administration reforms, is shot. It is young Burroughs, of the force, who plays his hunch against the scientific methods of the District Attorney, Somerset—and gets his man.

Bookm 72:xxiv O '30 100w

"It's offered as a realistic detective story and is hereby recommended to all readers who like facts with their fiction." Will Cuppy
+ Books p14 Je 22 '30 200w

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 26 '30 250w

N Y Times p15 Je 29 '30 200w

Reviewed by Bernice Whittemore
Outlook 155:270 Je 18 '30 100w

PROCTOR, MARY. Romance of the planets. 272p il $2.50 Harper
523.4 Planets 29-25454

The fourth book in Miss Proctor's series popularizing astronomy for the general reader. The author outlines the main discoveries concerning our planetary system and describes the distinguishing features of each of the principal planets. The question of the possible or impossible habitability of the planets is discussed.

Booklist 26:192 F '30

Bookm 70:x F '30 80w

Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '29 280w

Cleveland Open Shelf p57 Ap '30

"Books of this kind will always have their use, and 'The Romance of the Planets' may be recommended as a very readable and accurate account of its subject, requiring the minimum of intellectual effort on the part of the reader. The question of the habitability of the planets is well to the fore, and is treated historically with numerous quotations."
+ Nature 126:644 O 25 '30 250w

"Miss Proctor has a gift of being popular without condescension, and she stresses just the points which appeal most to the layman. Her best chapters are those which deal with Saturn, in which the various theories with regard to the constitution of the rings are fully discussed, and with the asteroids, those fragments of a trans-Martian planet which at some time or another was shattered, possibly by a collision. With regard to the possibility and probability of such collisions, we are given a comfortable account of inter-stellar distances, and invited to hope for the best. The book is well illustrated."
+ New Statesman 34:450 Ja 11 '30 200w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:3 Ja '30

"Mary Proctor, capable daughter of her famous astronomer father, the late Richard A. Proctor, while she has added nothing to the astronomical knowledge of the time, has done a work of great usefulness in her interesting books for lay readers in which she breaks the solid loaf of science, which would be for them quite indigestible, into the appetizing fragments which they can understand and appreciate."
+ N Y Times p47 D 8 '29 100w

St Louis 28:68 Mr '30

"Miss Proctor has inherited her distinguished father's enthusiasm for astronomy and his skill in the collection of curious facts. She does not write so well or carefully as he did; there are too many slovenly sentences and unnecessary repetitions in her present volume, which seems indeed to have been printed without adequate revision. This is the more regrettable because Miss Proctor has a great deal to tell about the planets which is extremely interesting."
+ — Sat R 149:24 Ja 4 '30 160w

Spec 144:676 Ap 19 '30 200w

"Much fact and a good deal of fancy, largely of an obsolete nature, are jumbled together in the author's somewhat confused style in this book. And even if this is a book with 'no scientific pretensions,' as Miss Proctor is careful to point out in the preface, it would be none the worse for a little more careful proof reading."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p1087 D 19 '29 180w

Wis Lib Bul 26:101 Mr '30

PROPER, MRS IDA SEDGWICK. Monhegan, the cradle of New England. 275p il $4 Southworth press, 706 Middle st., Portland, Me.
974.15 Monhegan Island. America—Discovery and exploration. New England—History
30-20654

The history of Monhegan island, off the coast of Maine, in which the author goes back to earliest recorded history for some of her material. An appendix lists maps of "islands that might be Monhegan from the location." Index.

Booklist 27:200 Ja '31

"The volume is not well named. It is difficult to agree that the little fishing island of Monhegan is the cradle of New England, nor has Miss Proper made any attempt to indicate this connection. It is a pity, too, that the history of the island could not have received the same patient and detailed attention as its pre-history. Miss Proper's interests are not social or economic, though one might suppose that Monhegan would furnish excellent material for a study in social isloation. The volume is for the antiquarian rather than the historian."
Books p11 D 21 '30 450w

"It is an intensive and constructive piece of work which she has done for New England history which is of far more than local importance or influence. It is a monograph of real value on early New England."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 23 '30 450w

"This little historical monograph is written with charm and sincerity and has many quaint and interesting illustrations." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p12 S 27 '30 40w

"The author has been diligent and painstaking in her search for material, which she has gathered largely from original sources. Miss Proper has treated her great mass of material with scholarly discrimination and judgment."
+ N Y Times p28 N '30 230w

Sat R of Lit 7:443 D 6 '30 550w

"The volume is lavishly illustrated and is the result of much work and piety, though the second title is hard to justify, even if Monhegan were the oldest New England settlement."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p738 S 18 '30 180w

PROPPER, MILTON M. Ticker-tape murder. 332p $2 Harper
30-7097

Detective Sergeant Gilmore was asked to go to Cape May for a few days as a sort of body guard to Philip Nixon, financier. Then Nixon's murdered body was found on the tracks before the very train which was bearing Gilmore to his work. It took clever sleuthing to outwit the murderer.

Booklist 26:399 Jl '30
Bookm 71:xxviii Ap '30 100w

"Mr. Propper eliminates the main suspects with much skill and arrives at an exciting climax by means of last-minute evidence. An honestly posed puzzle." Will Cuppy
+ Books p13 Mr 23 '30 180w
N Y Times p20 Ap 6 '30 100w

"One of the main functions of a murder story is to mystify. This novel certainly does so and coupled with this is a very readable if plain prose. . . Mr. Propper has undoubtedly done a very good job. He has played the game with the reader according to all the unwritten rules."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:970 Ap 19 '30 300w

"Perhaps the only defect of the book is the stale trick by which a real criminal is only introduced at the last moment, but the clearing of one suspect after another is so ingeniously accomplished that the interest is maintained. Mr. Propper does not disdain to be thrilled by fast driving in motors, a running fight, or even the lack of sophistication of the heroine, and this makes him extremely good company."
+ Spec 145:554 O 18 '30 120w

"Detective stories may be roughly divided into thriller and problems. Mr. Propper's story is a specimen of the second class—and a good one, written with a sense of design and of responsibility towards the reader."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p785 O 2 '30 200w

PROROK, BYRON KHUN DE. See Khun de Prorok, B.

PROSPECT UNION ASSOCIATION, CAMBRIDGE, MASS., comp. Recreation in and about Boston; a handbook of opportunities. 220p $1.50 Houghton
917.446 Boston—Description. Boston—Recreation facilities 30-17292

"The book has been compiled to assist students or young workers in making good use of their leisure hours. It is, in part, a directory of opportunities and in part, a guide-book for the mind concerning the approach to private cultural studies. Twenty contributors present the following subjects: Walking for pleasure, bird and flower walks, geology, historical walks, architecture, outdoor sports (boating, canoeing, fishing, horseback riding, swimming, water excursions, skating, etc.), outdoor games, with a list of playing fields and golf courses, parks and gymnasiums; folk dancing, museums and lectures, music, art, dramatics and reading."—Springf'd Republican

Booklist 27:153 D '30
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 2 '30 250w

"This guidebook provides for every possible contingency of a traveler's chance vacation in Boston; but it provides even more carefully for the leisure hours of some man or woman who comes to the city a stranger to look for a job and, having found one, wastes many precious hours in groping after some suitable means for recreation. Illustrations lend instant familiarity to these chapters which are written with genuine enthusiasm as well as knowledge."
+ N Y Times p18 Je 29 '30 150w
Pratt p31 autumn '30

"The book is well planned for its purpose and carefully prepared."
+ Springf'd Republican p6 Je 23 '30 600w

PROUST, MARCEL. Sweet cheat gone; tr. by C. K. Scott-Moncrieff. (Remembrance of things past) new uniform ed 378p $3.50 Boni [10s 6d Knopf]
30-9311

"With the appearance of this volume almost all of Marcel Proust's 'A la recherche du temps perdu' becomes accessible to American readers. This volume forms the seventh and the penultimate part of the famous and many-thousand-pages-long novel. The central event of 'The Sweet Cheat Gone' is the flight from the hero, from the 'I' narrating the whole novel, of Albertine, his mistress. Exasperated by his constant suspicious jealousy which made of her literally a 'captive,' she left him; but separation was more than both of them could stand; and they were about to become united again when he received the telegram informing him that she was killed in an accident during a horse-back ride."—N Y Times

Booklist 26:358 Je '30

"Proust was not able to revise this volume, and naturally the attentive reader will run across more than one lapsus calami and inaccurate metaphor. But after all is said one is forced to utter the same comment: Proust is the greatest novelist of our age, and Scott Moncrieff the finest translator." Angel Flores
+ Books p3 Mr 16 '30 850w

"Proust has many remarkable excellences. In the whole of the present volume—devoted exclusively to the history of the gradual fading of the narrator's love for Albertine [he does not] once fail to maintain in the reader an interest, almost equal to his own, in the intricate involutions of a spirit which is nursing its sorrows in order that it may note and describe the effect of each fluctuation of pain." J. W. Krutch
+ Nation 130:519 Ap 30 '30 950w

Reviewed by K. C. Tomlinson
Nation and Ath 47:325 Je 7 '30 320w

"This next to the last volume shows in occasional places the fact that Proust had not finished revising it: there are places where it is a little fragmentary or slightly inconsistent, there is not so often as in the earlier volumes the brilliant and lovely illumination of those striking figures of speech which pierced such startling lights into the soul. But the architectural structure is strongly there, and the sadness of dissolution which is all the more sorrowful because grief also dies." Edgar Johnson
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 29 '30 1250w

Reviewed by Alexander Nazaroff
N Y Times p7 Mr 30 '30 750w

"When I had finished the book I was subdued by the author. I was recreated by him, all those thousands of people in me brought to life by a phrase. In the beginning I had said, 'I don't want to know about people like these.' My scorn had made a judgment for each line. At the close, without reason, you are unable to judge or feel scorn. There is not pity or compassion. You are related in an intangible way to the people through understanding them and knowing their intention without being told. After this you can never judge them." Margery Latimer
+ N Y World p11m Ap 13 '30 400w
Pratt p39 autumn '30

"With the passing of Albertine, the narrative grows cramped. There is no longer the sense of spacious and leisurely handling of material; the turning of each sensation over and over until the last of its innumerable facets has been displayed and examined." R. N. Linscott
Sat R of Lit 6:841 Mr 22 '30 1150w

"It strikes us as a work of art rather than an expression of human experience. The irrational convention of Proust is as far from the realism of Balzac or Flaubert, and as far removed from life, as was the rational convention of the eighteenth century. Proust is the last and most uncompromising of the Romantics but, in the sense in which extremes meet, he has travelled a long way back to meet the Classics."

PROUST, MARCEL—Continued
Spec 145:225 Ag 16 '30 250w
Springf'd Republican p7e My 4 '30 550w
Times [London] Lit Sup p451 My 29 '30 840w

PUCKETT, HUGH WILEY. Germany's women go forward. 329p $4.50 Columbia univ. press [22s 6d Oxford]

396 Women in Germany. Woman—History and condition of women 30-8154

A history of the feminist movement in Germany from its beginnings, thru the nineteenth century, during which period organization along the lines of education, work and legal rights took place, to the status of women since the war—economic, social and political.

Reviewed by A. G. Maher
Am Econ R 20:779 D '30 480w
Reviewed by Howard Becker
Am J Soc 36:330 S '30 320w
Booklist 27:140 D '30

"The bibliography is well chosen; the tables of percentual comparisons are well arranged, the reasoning is clear, there is no prejudice; the style is gallant and good, remarkably so in fact for a book that might easily have lent itself to uncouth candor or statistical aridity. The study should do much to clarify the woman question anywhere, and it is ubiquitous, while in Germany nothing else on the subject is imperative, until the next upheaval." A. W. Porterfield
+ Books p16 S 21 '30 400w
Boston Transcript p3 Je 14 '30 320w

"The book should prove of more than ordinary interest to the general reader, and should stimulate scholars to a more detailed study of the individual phases of this fascinating subject."
+ Hist Outlook 21:341 N '30 200w
Reviewed by Theresa Wolfson
Nation 131:73 Jl 16 '30 650w

"Offered as a study of one phase of the emergence of the new Germany. Mr. Puckett's book is a contribution also to the story of the world-wide development of the feminist movement done by thorough, scholarly methods and in a vigorous, interesting and often pungent style."
+ N Y Times p10 Ap 27 '30 400w
Times [London] Lit Sup p873 O 30 '30 4750w

PUGLISI PICO, MARIO. Prayer; tr. by Bernard M. Allen. 296p $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan

217 Prayer 29-22399

The author of this book on prayer is a well-known Italian religious philosopher. The first part of the book is given to a philosophical interpretation of prayer; the second to an historical survey of the variety of forms which prayer has assumed among different peoples at different periods; the third to a discussion of the meaning and value of prayer; and the fourth to a consideration of prayer in the religious life of today.

Boston Transcript p9 D 14 '29 520w

"This is not just another book on prayer. It is the book on prayer which every one should read. It is the fruit of many years of research and reflection of one of the most influential religious thinkers of Europe. It is no exaggeration to say that this study on prayer ranks Puglisi with men like Heiler, Otto, and Ménégoz." M. G. Evans
+ Crozer Q 7:118 Ja '30 750w

"A book which packs into two hundred and fifty pages enough material to supply an entire course of lectures in any college or seminary, and then adds nearly fifty pages of bibliography including books in a dozen languages and translations from twice that number, and one begins to realize that prayer is a larger subject than is ordinarily supposed. (Incidentally the bibliography alone is well worth the price of the book.)" W. F. Lewis
+ Living Church 83:840 O 18 '30 450w

"A thorough discussion of prayer by an Italian scholar of great erudition and deep piety. This book not only expounds a philosophy of prayer, but is replete with suggestions as to how prayer can nurture the life of the spirit." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 154:270 F 12 '30 80w

PULESTON, FRED. African drums. 318p il $4 Farrar [15s Gollancz]

916.7 Africa, Central—Description and travel. Kongo 30-10023

This book on equatorial Africa is the record of an English doctor's experiences in that country from 1882 to 1896. It is a grim, unromanticized account of the customs and life habits of natives and wild animals on the Dark Continent; and it reflects with impartial spirit the ways of the white men there. An African beauty contest, native marriage and birth customs, cannibalism, witch doctors, the phalanx dance, native diseases, a duel with a boa constrictor, and the crossing of a terrible swamp, are among the topics of which the doctor writes.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 71:xv Ag '30 230w

"It is a grand story, delightfully written, an honest narrative about bold, hard, adventurous men in a strange land." Oliver La Farge
+ Books p7 Ap 6 '30 750w

"There is not a dull moment in it, nor one when your heart really beats normally, nor is it a safe book to read at night."
Boston Transcript p2 My 10 '30 260w
Reviewed by Allan Macgregor
Nation and Ath 47:682 Ag 30 '30 200w
New Statesman 35:388 Je 28 '30 180w

"The subject of witch-doctors is one of the most important dealt with in the book. No other writer, so far as this commentator is acquainted with books on Africa, has made so clear as does Puleston the absolute power, and the extent of the power, exercised by these feared and awesome fakirs. . . More than ordinary interest attaches to a book so well authenticated as this by Dr. Puleston."
+ N Y Times p4 Ap 6 '30 1300w

"When Fred Puleston tells of the things he has seen, he is interesting. When he tells what he thinks about them he is not so good. Fortunately he has seen a good deal." W. R. Brooks
+ — Outlook 154:629 Ap 16 '30 120w
St Louis 28:216 S '30

"A forceful, interesting book; a book singularly free from cant and false sentiment about the black man and his way of living."
+ Sat R 150:352 S 20 '30 320w
Sat R of Lit 7:180 O 4 '30 250w
Spec 145:88 Jl 19 '30 250w

"Dr Puleston is infallibly readable and entertaining. He says that 'Trader Horn' inspired him to write an account of his own experiences. Andre Durenceau incorporates the weird and grotesque in fantastic black and white illustrations that somehow fail to match the cruelty and stark power portrayed by Dr Puleston as the essence of Africa."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 4 '30 650w
Times [London] Lit Sup p489 Je 12 '30 1050w

PUPIN, MICHAEL IDVORSKY. Romance of the machine. 111p $1 (4s 6d) Scribner

620 Machinery. Civilization 30-7277

Professor Pupin believes that the machine age, with its dominant materialistic outlook, is not to be viewed with despair but with rejoicing, since the machine is a romantic creation that should bring about great good to mankind. He lauds scientific progress, due largely to the advance of machinery, and discusses the individual romance of several of the latest inventions.

Booklist 26:343 Je '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p107 Jl '30

Nature 126:sup534 O 4 '30 250w

N Y New Tech Bks 15:22 Ap '30

"His purpose is, to phrase it in American slang, to show certain kinds of European critics of this country where they get off. He does it deftly, with good humor, with full knowledge, with scientific accuracy and preciseness of thought and expression and with the same kind of poetic imagination and idealistic vision in his manner of thinking words that characterized his previous books."

+ N Y Times p28 Mr 16 '30 450w

Pratt p32 summer '30

Spec 144:712 Ap 26 '30 150w

Springf'd Republican p10 Mr 14 '30 100w

PURDOM, CHARLES BENJAMIN. Producing plays; a handbook for producers and players. 231p il $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Dent]

792 Amateur theatricals. Theaters—Stage setting and scenery 30-8123

Written by one of the leading amateur play producers of Great Britain. The book deals with amateur play producing in a practical manner, giving special attention to choosing the play, rehearsing, the function of the producer, stage-management, scenery, costumes and make-up, lighting, and finance. There is a glossary of theatrical terms and a bibliography.

Booklist 26:385 Jl '30

"While taking the amateur theatre seriously, Mr. Purdom has written an unpretentious volume, in the simplest of terms, fortifying the reader against misunderstanding with an extended glossary of stage terms, and amplifying his advice with ten full-page illustrations. Compensation for an absence of anything like zest of style may be found in the information which the book contains."

+ Bookm 71:xvi Ap '30 180w

"The book should be very useful, particularly to amateurs starting a new society or faced with knotty problems. It contains plenty of illustrations, a glossary of stage terms, a bibliography, and a good index."

+ Nation and Ath 47:252 My 24 '30 120w

"Most producers will be glad of the assistance afforded by Mr. Purdom's books. It is full of shrewd sense, and Mr. Purdom's advice is based on his own considerable experience."

+ New Statesman 34:844 Ap 5 '30 170w

St Louis 28:214 S '30

"Mr. Purdom, a well-known amateur producer of plays, has written a straightforward and very helpful book on the methods and technique and machinery of the amateur theatre. He has omitted very little that ought to be known, and he has included a great deal that one might not expect to find. Here and there he has explained himself (the tone is a little self-important at times) rather more than was necessary; he is apt to say the obvious thing at some length and he is too devoted to making lists of rules and of things to avoid."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p300 Ap 3 '30 220w

PURDOM, CHARLES BENJAMIN, ed. Everyman at war; sixty personal narratives of the war. 425p $2.50 Dutton [6s Dent]

940.48 European war—Personal narratives 30-34397

Sixty personal narratives of the war by men of various ranks who served on the different fronts, most of them as privates in France and Flanders. A few are by sailors and by men in the Air force. The narratives are not the work of practised writers but plain straightforward accounts by soldiers of their personal experiences.

Bookm 72:vii O '30 30w

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 9 '30 120w

"The collection is admittedly an experiment in the use of social documentation, but it is neither extensive enough nor of sufficient unity of purpose to be of any permanent value." Horace Gregory

— Nation 131:71 Jl 16 '30 80w

"By collecting accounts of the war by ordinary men Mr. Purdom has got rid of almost all artificiality. There is no 'literary' distortion. There are no causes, no knives being ground—no pacificism or jingoism. There is simply truth. Truth, like the sound of the guns in the pages, direct, alone, unanswerable and terrible. As a result, it automatically becomes one of the most powerful pieces of anti-war propaganda that have been produced in our time."

+ New Statesman 35:194 My 17 '30 450w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p8m Je 21 '30 100w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith

N Y World p5m Je 29 '30 200w

"Most of the narratives are by men who have never written for publication. They are remarkable personal documents, and should be invaluable to future students of the War." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 155:307 Je 25 '30 50w

St Louis 28:245 O '30

Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 24 '30 800w

Times [London] Lit Sup p382 My 8 '30 600w

PUTNAM, ANNE. House on the hill. 316p $2 Dodd 30-8606

"Covering approximately thirty years (1900-30) in the life of its several principals, this novel deals with the disillusioned existence of a sensitive, unworldly woman as the wife of a self-centered, coarse-fibered man. In youth, at the time of their marriage, and later, they are both frustrated in their love for others, and the burden of these sorrows is never lightened even after they have entered middle-age."—Sat R of Lit

Books p12 Je 22 '30 150w

"Miss Putnam has introduced nothing very new or striking into her novel. Nevertheless, the plot is well conceived and put together. Her own sympathy for this sensitive and highly bred woman, married to an egotistical man, selfish and dull, is strong enough to convey a part of it, at least, to her readers. Her treatment of her characters is both tender and clear."

+ N Y Times p19 Ap 13 '30 180w

"The story, if at times lacking in restraint, is in the main capably told, with a skilful command of the dramatic situations arising from the peculiar bonds which bind the characters irrevocably to each other."

Sat R of Lit 6:971 Ap 19 '30 180w

PUTNAM, GEORGE PALMER. Andrée; the record of a tragic adventure. 239p il $2.50 Brewer

919.8 Arctic regions. Aeronautics—Flights 30-30667

A record of the life and expeditions of Andrée, the Swedish explorer who in 1897 with two companions attempted to reach the North pole by balloon, and was not heard of again until the summer of 1930, when the remains of the ill-fated expedition were found on White Island. The book describes the preparations for taking the balloon to the Arctic, the facts known about the trip thirty-three years ago, and the finding of the relics.

PUTNAM, G. P.—Continued

"This book is timely. It catches up all the threads of the recent newspaper accounts and weaves them into one story between covers. It will serve as a scrapbook for those who meant to cut out and save the press stories and yet didn't, or missed at least some of them. In giving permanent form to the news Mr. Putnam has done us a real service." C. L. Skinner

+ Books p2 N 9 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p5 N 29 '30 300w

"There is an undertone of melancholy in George Palmer Putnam's book. He does not pretend it to be anything but a sketch, but he has presented the psychological mesh in which Andrée was entangled and which brought about his death, and collected in more detail than has yet appeared in the recent accounts of the finding of Andrée's body, the events which led up to the flight. It is a sympathetic portrait of the Swedish scientist with no effort to conceal some of the defects of his character, which at the same time enabled him to command the respect and friendship of many able men and to carry out his project." Russell Owen

+ N Y Times p15 N 16 '30 900w

"Putnam writes with a newspaper man's objectivity, but the narrative profits by his knowledge of the north shown in descriptive passages about the conditions, the difficulties of traveling and the walrus encountered. It is a pity that Putnam could not have included the narrative of the finding written by Dr. Gunnar Horn, which I read in the London Times. That was a masterpiece of Arctic reporting." Harry Hansen

N Y World p12 N 7 '30 80w

"Mr. Putnam's account of this remarkable story is written in a straightforward journalistic fashion and is of value as a record of this tragic adventure."

+ Outlook 156:508 N 26 '30 180w

"It fills a gap in the bibliography of polar exploration, dealing with an event neglected in a generation which has seen both poles conquered by airplane and the two oceans spanned by dirigible. In human interest, it lacks nothing essential to the average layman's understanding and appreciation of the mighty task Andree undertook."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e D 28 '30 1200w

PUTNAM, SAMUEL. François Rabelais; man of the renaissance; a spiritual biography. 530p il $3.50 (15s) Cape

B or 92 Rabelais, François 29-23766

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Reviewed by W. E. Garrison

Christian Century 47:432 Ap 2 '30 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p60 Ap '30

"Mr. Putnam gives evidence of greater scholarship than Mr. Nock and C. R. Wilson, and his book is on the whole a more balanced one, though much less inspired. . . As an introduction to Rabelais it is hard to tell which of the two books is to be preferred. The jazzed scholarship of Putnam makes agreeable and informative reading, but it misses the significance of Rabelais to us; the admirable high-mindedness of Mr. Nock and C. R. Wilson, on the other hand, gives us a wry picture of that significance." Eliseo Vivas

+ — Nation 130:250 F 26 '30 200w

"Mr. Putnam shows himself a scholar, for he will accept nothing but fact proved by documentary evidence, and rejects all legends. The life does not for that become any the less picturesque. As indubitable statement of fact the book is admirable, but as a biography it has a great deal more than is desired. What it lacks, and cries out for, is a bibliography and index." Bonamy Dobrée

+ — Nation and Ath 46:776 Mr 8 '30 850w

Reviewed by Ramon Guthrie

New Repub 62:160 Mr 26 '30 400w

"His manner of exposition is by no means above criticism. The style is a little spasmodic, with a plentiful garnish of idioms not wholly agreeable to an Englishman's parochial taste. Nevertheless, there is, if we look for it, a sober and continuous narrative, with gaps no wider than the imperfectly chronicled life of Rabelais entails; there is abundance of genuine learning, a sufficiency of criticism, and a pleasing absence of extravagant praise. In a word, the frame and background are such as to encourage the spectator to advance hopefully towards the portrait itself." W. H. V. Reade

+ — New Statesman 34:sup x Mr 15 '30 1600w

"Mr. Putnam has no theory to indulge. He is content to make the most of what is known, and we rise from his book with a fresh interest in the man and an appreciation of the background that is the indispensable preliminary to the enjoyment of this author. Rabelais has often been called an enigma, but it is the enigma of simplicity. The simple-mindedness of Mr. Putnam's own approach is a quality to be welcomed." Osbert Burdett

+ Sat R 149:526 Ap 26 '30 1400w

"Anyone who cares to be whacked about the head with words and bewildered with display of erudition can tackle the job of reading Mr. Putnam. His opening tells us that criticism ought to be 'an enchanted hurricane.' Hurricane is a big word: a tempest in an ink-pot does not help us to that 'passionate and informing point of view' which Mr. Putnam desiderates in rival biographies."

— Spec 144:sup627 Ap 12 '30 420w

"There can be no questioning Mr. Putnam's wide reading nor the immense gusto with which he bursts upon the reader on the very first page. . . Mr. Putnam has made a very readable book. His style, and his startling chapter-headings, may offend the English reader at the start, but his good humour and healthy enthusiasm are likely to prevail in the end. Mr. Putnam takes it for granted that his readers know their Gargantua and Pantagruel; with some reason, for he has already published an American translation of them which is doubtless intended to be used in conjunction with his biography."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p182 Mr 6 '30 1000w

PYCRAFT, WILLIAM PLANE. Random gleanings from nature's fields. 210p il $2.50 Hale

590.4 Natural history 29-7475

Several short essays, simply written, on various aspects of animal and plant life, by the assistant curator of the zoological department of the British Museum of Natural History. The essays originally appeared weekly in the Illustrated London News.

"His little pieces contain a surprising amount of varied and sound information. And there are no less than ninety illustrations."

+ Books p16 D 7 '30 100w

"He is a distinguished naturalist but writes simply and pleasantly, with unusual wit and wisdom, of the common plants and insects, bird and beasts, that everybody sees and everybody knows."

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 22 '30 200w

N Y Times p46 D 7 '30 180w

PYLE, ROBERT; McFARLAND, JOHN HORACE; and STEVENS, GLENDON A. How to grow roses. 17th ed enl 210p il $2 (8s 6d) Macmillan

716.2 Roses 30-6

"A standard work on rose growing has been thoroughly revised and rewritten. The old glazed paper gives place to a rough finish, with fewer half-tone illustrations and more colored plates. Has an extensive analysis of varieties and a chapter on roses for special districts. The bibliography is much enlarged."—Wis Lib Bul

---

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 18 '30 130w

Pratt p22 summer '30

Wis Lib Bul 26:101 Mr '30

PYM, MICHAEL. Power of India. 317p il $3.50 Putnam

915.4 India 30-30704

Michael Pym, an American journalist who has lived for several years in India, and believes that India's power lies in the spiritual rather than the political, is much interested in Yogi philosophy. She does not like Gandhi, and has little sympathy with the nationalist movement.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 72:xviii D '30 500w

"The field she might have explored and treated more narrowly is the life of the upper-class women, many of whom live in purdah (seclusion). She knew a number of these intimately, lived in their homes, particularly in the Hyderabad state, and the experience is reflected throughout her book. But it is not clarified and developed into a significant study through single-minded purpose, searching analysis, hard thinking, wide reading and through exposition. Rather she writes of the general life of India as she saw it, religion, art, society, economics, politics." W. N. Brown
— Books p17 N 30 '30 600w

"The Power of India is an impressionistic picture of Indian ways and customs, semi-literary in approach and filled with such diversity of material as to lack form or synthesis. One might pardon this fault if the book had literary merit. This, however, it lacks. The author has tried hard to create an Indian atmosphere; what she has done is to create a stage India, not a real country." W. P. Hall
— Current Hist 33:xx D '30 80w

"Michael Pym supplies an excellent composite picture of the Indian landscape and the divergent types to be met there. . . Very little escapes her eye, and with her alert and restless mind she investigates everything—from the attitude of a prostitute plying her trade among the rough hillmen of the Afghan border to the Indian conception and understanding of God. What is distilled at the end is Mrs. Pym's appreciation of India's spiritual depth—this is 'the power of India.' The book is marred, in my opinion, by only one serious mistake. Belonging to the minority group that dislikes and distrusts Gandhi, she has devoted several pages to a vituperative and contemptuous portrayal of his character as she appraises it." Gertrude Emerson
+ — Nation 131:618 D 3 '30 500w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett
New Repub 65:106 D 10 '30 280w

Reviewed by L. H. Titterton
N Y Evening Post p4d D 27 '30 100w

Q

Q., pseud. See Quiller-Couch, A. T.

QUACKENBUSH, MRS ALICE T. A. Perennials of flowerland. 258p $1.50 Macmillan

716.2 Flowers 29-24894

A small practical handbook on perennials. The arrangement is alphabetically by families. For each of the thirty-seven families there are short descriptive general notes, followed by longer descriptions of the individual members of the families included. There is a list of families, with pronunciations, and an index.

Booklist 26:270 Ap '30

"Many more pretentious volumes give less practical instruction to the amateur gardener than does this small book. Always one wants to know when and where and in what soil to plant things, and here we have our questions answered."
+ Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '29 130w

St Louis 28:72 Mr '30

"Aside from the padding, the book is attractive in binding and contents."
+ Springf'd Republican p8 D 31 '29 300w

QUAIFE, MILO MILTON. Kingdom of Saint James; a narrative of the Mormons. (Amasa Stone Mather memorial publication fund) 284p il $4 Yale univ. press [18s Oxford]

289.3 Strang, James Jesse. Beaver Island, Michigan. Mormons and Mormonism 30-10360

An account of the life and labors of James J. Strang, a Mormon leader who tried in the middle of the last century to found a kingdom on an island in Lake Michigan with himself as king-lawgiver-priest.

"Seldom has a tale, offering so many opportunities for bias and levity in treatment, been handled so carefully, so fairly, so seriously. . . For those who have a taste for things elemental this is a valuable book. The sane way in which the story is told adds to the value of the materials presented."
+ Books p12 D 7 '30 300w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 16 '30 320w

"A scholarly work, based, for the most part, apparently, on primary sources, and showing a facility of prosody lacking in so much of the historical work of today. There is, however, one criticism which holds true not only of this volume, but of many other monographs. The Strangite movement was after all but a brief, lurid flash in Mormon history. To dedicate a whole volume to the story of this schismatic sect without a good explanation of the connection of this part with Mormon history as a whole tends to give the ordinary reader, who is unfamiliar with the details of that history, an exaggerated idea of the importance of the Beaver Island colony. To the reviewer, therefore, a chapter supplying this explanation seems necessary to the rounding out of the book." S. R. Nussenfeld
+ — Hist Outlook 21:291 O '30 450w

N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 5 '30 80w

"It is an extraordinary story of fanaticism, boldness and credulity very well told."
+ Outlook 154:590 Ap 9 '30 70w

St Louis 28:204 S '30

"Mr. Quaife has told his story lucidly and well."
+ Spec 144:836 My 17 '30 230w

"Mr. Quaife's book is an exact and circumstantial history, admirably documented, and perhaps even too scientific for the subject. All the trials of James Strang, the Mormon heresiarch, are set down, the myths and legends with which both his opponents and adherents surrounded him are investigated and dispelled, and none of the squalors of his life are omitted."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p447 My 29 '30 1250w

"Dr. Quaife has presented a charming human document. It has been, for many years, a labor of love for the author to assemble the fragments of testimony that he has put together with insight and criticism. He has thrown no muck, nor has he glossed over any solvent fact. His reputation as a wise historian of the West will be enhanced by this performance." F. L. Paxson
+ Yale R n s 19:848 summer '30 550w

QUEEN, ELLERY, pseud. French powder mystery; a problem in deduction. 316p $2 Stokes 30-18208

During a Fifth Avenue department store window demonstration, the murdered body of Mrs French, wife of the owner of the store, falls from a suddenly opened wall-bed. Inspector Queen and his clever son, Ellery, take charge of the case. Ellery regards as the chief clue the finding of finger-print powder on a pair of onyx bookends—and from this works to a solution.

QUEEN, ELLERY, pseud.—Continued
Booklist 27:31 S '30
Bookm 71:xix Ag '30 80w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p12 Jl 27 '30 200w

"There have been many successors to S. Holmes but never before to our knowledge a son and father combine. Father takes snuff and son wears 'well pressed tweeds' and they burst into French quotations at a moment's notice but notwithstanding are a most likeable and interesting pair." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 155:550 Ag 6 '30 250w

"A well built and original story." R. I. Center
+ Sat R of Lit 7:63 Ag 16 '30 220w
Reviewed by W. C. Weber
Sat R of Lit 7:94 Ag 30 '30 120w
Spec 145:859 N 29 '30 100w

QUENNELL, MRS MARJORIE, and QUENNELL, CHARLES HENRY BOURNE. Everyday life in Homeric Greece. (Everyday life ser.) 194p il $2.50 Putnam [7s 6d Batsford]

913.38 Greece—Social life and customs. Civilization, Homeric. Homer 30-10167

"The stories of the Argonauts, of the Iliad and the Odyssey told in outline with frequent translations of selected passages and a chapter on the details of everyday life as derived from recent excavations."—Pratt

Booklist 26:361 Je '30
Cleveland Open Shelf p136 N '30

"The book is intended not to take the place of the complete translations of the original classics but to serve as an introduction to the study of Greek life. . . The authors have drawn their materials from archaeological discoveries as well as from myths and legends. The seventy-three illustrations add much to the attractiveness of the book. Teachers of the upper grades will find the book a valuable addition to the list of supplementary reading books."
+ El School J 31:74 S '30 350w

"A book that is not only scholarly in character but written with such appreciation of the Greek spirit, such zest and interest, that it stands out among books designed to supply information. Intended for boys and girls of public school age in England (12-18), it should be equally useful here to give a background for stories from Greek literature, for a study of architecture and for supplementary material in history."
+ N Y Times p20 Ap 27 '30 100w
Pratt p30 summer '30

"There is room for such a book, but unfortunately the authors have not been quite so successful as in their earlier works. They are not sufficiently critical, and, what is more to the point, do not really succeed in making the period live. Several of the illustrations and reconstructions are not at all happy, and a few would be definitely misleading to boys of public school age."
— Spec 144:200 F 8 '30 220w

QUILLER-COUCH, SIR ARTHUR THOMAS (Q., pseud.). Poems. 198p $2.50 (7s 6d) Oxford

821 [29-27600]

"In addition to the many shorter pieces in the book there is a moderately long monologue, 'Columbus at Seville,' a one-act poetic drama, 'The Regent,' and several translations of Latin poems of a period rather little known and seldom found in translation."—N Y Times

Booklist 26:152 Ja '30

"Charming as many of these lyrics are, especially those which carry echoes of old balladry, there is a quality about them that places them as the product of a nineteenth century poet, certainly as that of a pre-war poet. They are quaint not merely in their adherence to old forms but in their tacit acceptance of sentiments that time and customs have challenged. . . One must cherish this little book rather for its reminders of an incredible past than for its immediate eloquence. For these reminders, in 'Q's' silvery tones, we cannot but be grateful."
+ — Books p16 Ja 26 '30 220w
Boston Transcript p2 Ja 29 '30 220w

"Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch ('Q') is, we feel, a derivative poet. But much of his work is, nevertheless, of high quality, moving with stately beauty, as befits the muse of one who has dwelt with the poets of the past and in close communion with them."
+ — N Y Times p16 F 23 '30 370w
Pratt p28 autumn '30

QUILLER-COUCH, SIR ARTHUR THOMAS (Q., pseud.). Studies in literature; third ser. 261p $2.50 Putnam [10s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

820.4 English literature—History and criticism 30-14831

The essays in this third volume of Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch's studies are selected for the most part from lectures to the author's pupils in the New arts schools at Cambridge. Contents: The English elegy; The journals of Dorothy Wordsworth; Shakespeare's comedies; Coventry Patmore; A note on Longinus; On reading for the English tripos; On "the new reading public"; W. S. Gilbert; Opening of Keats house, Hampstead; and The memory of Sir Walter Scott.

Booklist 26:350 Je '30

"Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch has the supreme gift of a great teacher, that of being able to charm while he instructs. Though most of these studies are cast in the form of lectures, which have once given pleasure to real audiences, there is a studied care and precision about them that, in the reading, leaves the sort of impression to be expected from the best English essays." John Cournos
+ Bookm 71:339 Je '30 350w
Cath World 131:629 Ag '30 450w
Christian Science Monitor p11 F 21 '30 800w

"Sir Arthur, in this new volume, is very chatty and good-humoured, as he always is, and repeats many of his former observations with a great deal of geniality . . . He has not much to say, and that little is not very profound, and he has no advantage of manner in expressing it, though he attempts manner. But his views are fairly sensible, his attitude is invariably 'nice,' and his jocularity, though not irresistible, an evidence of good will." K. J.
— + Nation and Ath 46:489 Ja 4 '30 150w

"The common quality of the essays is a store of reflection and learning conveyed in a lucid prose beyond the scope of most professors. . . It is a rich book, infectious in its enjoyment, and reminding us on every page that, to those who are not artists and of catholic sympathy by nature, there is no short-cut to the acquirement of good taste."
+ New Statesman 34:301 D 7 '29 800w

" 'Studies in Literature' reveals the familiar 'Q' of numerous scholarly lectures and articles, a learned, humorous, kindly guide whose love of the English language and literature is passionate and mellowed and who can discourse with equal ease and illumination on Longinus and Dorothy Wordsworth, on Shakespeare's comedies and W. S. Gilbert." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 8 '30 100w
Reviewed by S. A. Coblentz
N Y Times p10 Ap 6 '30 750w
Reviewed by T. E. Welby
Sat R 148:677 D 7 '29 1150w

" 'Q' is the least pedantic, the most humane and humble, of professors. His humility does not restrain him from the sometimes fierce expression of personal tastes, and even of personal prejudice. But he never speaks ex cathedra. He always reminds us that his opinion is merely his own, and that, since no book can ever make quite the same impression upon any two readers, 'all critical discernment, or taste, is relative.' Pontificality is, for Sir Arthur, the unforgivable sin; and omniscience is always a sham." Gilbert Thomas

Spec 143:917 D 14 '29 700w

Springf'd Republican p10 Je 21 '30 1100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1094 D 26 '29 1350w

QUINN, ARTHUR HOBSON; BAUGH, ALBERT CROLL; and HOWE, WILL DAVID, eds. Literature of America; an anthology of prose and verse; v 2, From the Civil war to the present. 717-1397,60p $3.50 Scribner

810.8 American literature—Collections (29-14190)

The second volume of an anthology of American prose and poetry. The material is brought down to the present. Compiled as a collection of source material for the study of American literature.

Booklist 26:111 D '29

"The second volume of what is, on the whole, an excellent anthology of American literature. The editors have preferred to be inclusive for historical purposes rather than exclusive for esthetic reasons. But they have not been inclusive enough. We fail to understand, for instance, why, in our own time, Robinson Jeffers and Hart Crane should be omitted altogether from the company of the poets or Sherwood Anderson and Ernest Hemingway among the writers of the short story; or why, among the essayists, we should have Carl Sandburg and not Paul Elmer Moore, Stuart Sherman and not Irving Babbitt; or why, finally, Eugene O'Neill's 'Lazarus Laughed' should be the sole representative of contemporary American drama." Edwin Seaver

+ — N Y Evening Post p12m N 2 '29 150w

"The only serious fault that can be found with the collection is that recent drama is represented solely by romantic examples."

+ — Springf'd Republican p6 O 21 '29 230w

R

RAABE, H. E. Krakatoa, hand of the gods. 352p $2 Brewer 30-28401

A fantastic story of the South Seas. A deserted ship, with everything in good order, is found off the coast of Krakatoa. For six years the mystery of the disappearance of its crew is unsolved. Then the captain of a trading vessel, warring upon the natives of Gana, finds a white man, who as he lies dying tells the story which explains the riddle.

Bookm 72:xii N '30 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p20 N 23 '30 100w

"A wild and gory adventure yarn. . . Captain Raabe's faculty for writing highly imaginative description far surpasses his technical craft, which is particularly weak in its ignoring of an orderly narrative method."

— Sat R of Lit 7:274 O 25 '30 250w

RADCLIFFE, GARNETT. Flower gang. 307p $2 Houghton 30-7784

A gang of crooks and murderers named, appropriately, for garden flowers, are captained by the fat and merciless Mr Harris, whose chief aim in life is the extorting of money from millionaires by the torture method. Captain Waring and his fiancée, Pamela, were caught in the fat monster's clutches, but the ingenuity of the young Englishman and his devoted Indian bodyguard, Cheeta Ram, saved the day.

"The tale moves forward rapidly and holds the attention. It is not especially credible, but the author makes up for this by evincing a very pleasant comedy touch. His American dialogue is none too successful."

— + Boston Transcript p2 Je 4 '30 300w

N Y Times p7 Jl 6 '30 150w

"Readers who require nothing more intricate in their thrillers than a combination of murder, abduction, diabolical inventions for torture, hairbreadth escapes from death, display of superhuman heroism and of monstrous cruelty should be enthralled by this story."

N Y World p10m Ap 13 '30 100w

RADL, EMANUEL. History of biological theories; tr. and adapted from the German by E. J. Hatfield. 408p $6 (17s 6d) Oxford

570.9 Biology—History. Darwin, Charles

Dr Rádl's work in this volume is largely a history and criticism of Darwinism. His discussion includes chapters on the influence of the Darwinian theory in other fields of intellectual activity, the cell theory after Darwin, the Lamarckians, and Darwinism in decline.

"Dr. Hatfield has translated only the half of Dr. Radl's work dealing with modern developments in biology. This half is occupied largely with a criticism of Darwinism. The criticism begins with impressive claims, but ends in demonstrating that Darwinism is a hypothesis as yet unproved, which leaves the issue exactly where it was on the day after the publication of 'The Origin of Species.' This and a tendency to explain in terms of nationality and race what can be explained in more tangible terms are the chief defects of the book, to counterbalance which there are a vivid and effective style and a full realization of the value of the historical method in the study of biology—and in any science."

+ — Nation 131:386 O 8 '30 200w

Reviewed by R. L. Duffus

N Y Times p4 Ag 17 '30 180w

St Louis 28:292 D '30

"The book has little value for serious students, but will provide amusing copy for those who dislike science or think it harmful."

Times [London] Lit Sup p739 S 18 '30 250w

RAEDER, OLE MUNCH. America in the forties; the letters of [the author]; tr. and ed. by Gunnar J. Malmin. (Norwegian-Am. hist. assn. Publications. Travel and description ser.) 244p $2.50; pa $2 Univ. of Minn.

917.3 United States—Description and travel. Norwegians in the United States 29-28792

"Early in 1847, Ole Raeder came to the United States to study the American jury system. As he travelled about the country he recorded his keen observations in letters to the editor of a newspaper in Christiania. His correspondence, here assembled, reveals the impressions made upon him by his journey by boat up the Hudson—for fifty cents—by the luxuriousness of travel in the mahogany-finished railway carriages of the period, by the American customs of dress, deportment and dining."—Bookm

"The translation has been done into clear and idiomatic English and the notes explain expressions and allusions to things Scandinavian that the average reader would find obscure. No attempt has been made to provide a commentary on the many suggestive features of contemporary politics and society, and propaganda is pleasantly lacking. The volume is primarily a source and one that no student of the 'forties' can neglect." M. L. Hansen

+ Am Hist R 35:676 Ap '30 750w

Reviewed by C. M. Rosenquist

Am J Soc 36:165 Jl '30 220w

"The letters contain shrewd observations upon the nature of American democracy (at that time) and upon economic conditions throughout the country."

RAEDER, O. M.—Continued
+ Bookm 70:xii F '30 100w
Books p17 Ap 6 '30 380w

"Mr. Raeder studied the American scene with the greatest good nature, with warm appreciation of the form of government and of the social structure that was developing and with cordial belief in the future of the country, and he reported all that he observed with frank but good-natured realism, with touches of friendly humor, even sometimes of mild sarcasm, and with a freshness of feeling, a keenness of interest and a liveliness of style that put color and life into his picture of this country as it was three-quarters of a century ago."
+ N Y Times p2 D 15 '29 700w
St Louis 28:78 Mr '30

"Of the East the author tells us little, though there is an interesting description of an evening at the home of Salmon P. Chase in Cincinnati. But on conditions in the Northwest these sympathetic and exceedingly careful letters by a cultured observer throw interesting light."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:747 F 15 '30 350w
Wis Lib Bul 26:103 Mr '30

RAINE, WILLIAM MACLEOD. Rutledge trails the ace of spades. 306p $1 Doubleday, Doran
30-19640

Young Jim Rutledge, a most accomplished Texas cowboy, is framed for murder by the nefarious Moss gang. Jim battles on the side of justice and the right, and is rewarded by winning the love of the beautiful girl.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p10 Ag 10 '30 120w

"The mystery element in Mr. Raine's book is extremely well done and his description of range life and characters will delight those who take their Westerns with great seriousness. All in all, it is pretty good." Bruce Rae
+ N Y Times p36 N 16 '30 150w

RAMSAY, ROBERT. Rough and tumble on old clipper ships. 297p il $3 Appleton
B or 92 Seafaring life. Clipper-ships
30-23648

An old shellback writes this simple account of his adventures on some of the famous old clipper ships in the 60's and 70's.

Booklist 27:157 D '30

" 'Captain Bob' Ramsay has given us an interesting, humorous, unvarnished tale of one of the most glorious periods of maritime history. The captain is a real old shell-back who has been knocking around on the seas ever since 1865, and he is probably one of the few living sailors who served on those crack sailing vessels that preceded the age of steam. . . The captain does not claim to be an author and candidly admits that story writing is one of the most daring things he has ever tried, but he has done a fine job of it. He combines in the narrative the enthusiasm of youth and the philosophy of age, with an unfailing sense of humor that has never deserted him." J. C. G.
+ Boston Transcript p1 N 1 '30 600w

"Of all the many things that went to the filling of his years at sea he writes with frank and simple straightforwardness. His book of graphic memories is a contribution of value to the chronicles of the clipper ship era."
+ N Y Times p24 N 2 '30 220w
St Louis 28:299 D '30

"It is difficult to reach any just appraisal of Captain Robert Ramsay's account of life in the sailing ship days as here set forth, for his style is as rough and tumble as the life and the title it pictures. To the casual reader there will, however, be much that is thrilling in the artless, first-hand account of square-rigger days. Those who read deeper will enjoy the portrait of a hardy, hard-drinking, sometimes pious Scotsman, who fought his way up from cabin boy to second mate, and then ruined his career through drinking."
Sat R of Lit 7:220 O 11 '30 100w

RAMSEY, LEONIDAS W. Landscaping the home grounds. 170p il $2 (8s 6d) Macmillan
710 Landscape gardening 30-9104

A practical little book on the art of landscaping, with particular attention given to careful planting plans for city and small country homes. The author is a professional landscape architect.

Booklist 27:19 S '30
N Y Times p21 Ap 20 '30 170w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:80 N '30
Pratt p23 summer '30
St Louis 28:213 S '30
Times [London] Lit Sup p498 Je 12 '30 30w

RAMSEY, LOGAN CARLISLE. Navigation of aircraft. (Ronald aeronautic lib.) 237p il $4.50 Ronald [20s Simpkin]
629.13 Aeronautics. Aeronautical instruments
29-28491

"A Lieutenant of the United States Navy describes maps, instruments, equipment, procedure, dead reckoning, piloting, and the applications of astronomy and aerology. Questions and answers."—N Y New Tech Bks

Cleveland Open Shelf p138 N '30
N Y New Tech Bks 15:3 Ja '30
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:29 Ap '30
St Louis 28:70 Mr '30

RAND, EDWARD KENNARD. In quest of Virgil's birthplace. 170p il $2.50 Harvard univ. press [11s 6d Oxford]
B or 92 Virgil (Publius Virgilius Maro). Italy—Description and travel 30-11413

Until recently it was thought that Virgil "was born at Pietole, a little town about three miles south of Mantua. But a famous Virgilian authority, Professor R. S. Conway, after long investigation and study, has come to the conclusion that the poet was not born there at all but in another province, thirty miles from the city of Calvisano. Professor Edward Kennard Rand, another Virgilian authority, disagrees with him and after extensive investigation has come to the conclusion that the old tradition should continue to be accepted. In this volume he tells how he motored about and studied the Virgilian country in the region bounded by Milan, Verona and Brescia and established his conviction that Professor Conway is mistaken and that to Pietole still belongs the honor." (N Y Times)

Boston Transcript p2 My 3 '30 700w
Cleveland Open Shelf p120 S '30

"His book is a charming combination of scholarly exposition and entertaining narrative of the sights and events of daily travel, mostly by automobile. It is copiously and interestingly illustrated with reproductions of photographs, maps, inscriptions and manuscripts."
+ N Y Times p27 Ap 27 '30 250w
Pratt p36 autumn '30
St Louis 28:273 N '30

"Prof Rand is a classical scholar of what may still be called humanistic temper, despite the claims of erudite American Puritans to their own interpretation of the term, and he gives the argumentative journey a spirited rendering, with the aid of profuse illustrations."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 20 '30 700w
Times [London] Lit Sup p436 My 22 '30 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p780 O 2 '30 400w

RAND, EDWARD KENNARD. Walk to Horace's farm. 78p il $2.50 Houghton

B or 92 Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus). Campagna di Roma—Description. Sabine mountains, Italy 30-14967

An account of a pilgrimage to the original site of the Sabine farm of the poet Horace, founded upon several leisurely walks thither and the most recent knowledge gained thru excavations. Professor Rand sums up the evidence for the authenticity of the location, describes Horace's villa and leads to the very spot where the poet enjoyed "those nights and banquets of the gods."

"Professor Rand modestly calls his booklet 'A Walk to Horace's Farm,' but it has a greater value than the record of his several visits to that interesting piece of real estate. It contains a brief but sufficient summary of the attempts, made since the days of the Italian humanists, to fix accurately the site of the poet's much loved home, and since it is well supplied with maps and photographs it will serve as a pleasant and authoritative guide for those who follow him on this classical pilgrimage to the Sabine country." G. M. Whicher

+ Books p12 Ag 3 '30 750w

"The account, written in the light of subsequent research, is not, confessedly, the standard work on the subject, but it is probably the most readable and informative one of its size in English. The smoothly flowing text winds its way through excerpts from the poet himself, sometimes in Latin, but mostly in neat translation, through an occasional map, and most agreeably, through numerous excellent little photographs taken by the author's friend on their memorable trip."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 25 '30 250w

N Y Times p3 Je 22 '30 380w

St Louis 28:273 N '30

"We shall read our Horace in future with all the more appreciation now that the beauty of the district has been so clearly revealed to us by Mr. Rand."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p894 O 30 '30 180w

RANDALL, JOHN HERMAN. Our changing civilization; how science and the machine are reconstructing modern life. 362p $3 Stokes [10s 6d Allen, G.]

901 Civilization. Science. Machinery 29-8279

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"It is an extraordinary piece of work, compact with sound thought. If a college education is worth while then this book is worth the attention of graduates, for it is an admirable up-to-date synthesis of a whole college course. If the economist, on putting it down, feels that he has not spent his time profitably over it, the reviewer would guess that he belongs to the class which needs it most." Clive Day

+ Am Econ R 20:93 Mr '30 230w

"The book contributes to a clearer understanding of the general background of change and readjustment against which all the problems of modern society must be viewed." P. F. Cressey

+ Am J Soc 35:851 Mr '30 360w

"The book is written with philosophic breadth and with some rhetorical flare. One has the feeling, particularly at times, of being hurried, with almost impatient assurance, over long periods and important matters. Some of the chapters seem 'dictated but not read,' for there is combined the vividness of the spoken style with sundry slips of carelessness. But there are minor matters, in view of the striking sense of perspective, the keen analytic spirit, and the comprehensive grasp which virtually every page reveals." J. H. S. Bossard

+ — Ann Am Acad 149:200 My '30 350w

New Statesman 34:546 F 1 '30 300w

RANDALL, JOHN HERMAN. World community; the supreme task of the twentieth century. (World unity lib.) 294p $2.50 Stokes

301 International cooperation 30-6030

"Dr. Randall does in his book what he has long so excellently done as a preacher and writer—drawn together from wide reading the best ideas of the time and woven them into a firm pattern of popular exposition. The author shows the new mechanical, economic and social forces which are creating today 'a world consciousness,' discusses the chief obstacles now standing in the way of 'a world community,' and emphasizes in conclusion how inevitable is the union of mankind in its political, economic and religious life, if the world is to survive at all."—Books

Booklist 26:343 Je '30

"Dr. Randall orders his thought with unerring skill, writes with clarity and ease and pitches his argument always to the key of high idealism. Nothing either original or profound can be discovered in this book, but as a popular introduction to the literature and thought of internationalism in our time it has great usefulness." J. H. Holmes

+ Books p13 Ap 27 '30 230w

"Dr. Randall treats the forces creating a world-consciousness crisply and entirely adequately, but it seems to the lay reader that he overemphasizes the attention the layman is giving to the 'emerging ideal of world unity.' The matter is still too tightly bound up in politics to concern the man on the street except as his party dictates." W. M. T.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 My 24 '30 530w

"There is nothing new in this, but the bringing of so much material from so many sources and its integration in a single book is of real value to the reader who cannot hope to cover everything that is being written on modern politics, science, economics, international law, education, religion."

+ Christian Century 47:465 Ap 9 '30 180w

Reviewed by C. M. Perry

Int J Ethics 41:133 O '30 220w

Reviewed by H. K. Norton

Sat R of Lit 6:1191 Jl 12 '30 250w

RANDELL, JACK. I'm alone; as told to Meigs O. Frost. 317p il $3.50 Bobbs

B or 92 Seafaring life. I'm alone (schooner) 30-9290

"The captain of the rum-running schooner I'm Alone, which was a headliner on the front pages of newspapers for so long a time last year, tells here the story of his whole life from boyhood to the end of the case against him and his crew, but he devotes a third of his narrative to his adventures and experiences as a seller of booze to American bootleggers. He entered that game early in the play and he tells a great deal about its development, its mechanism and methods and its profits."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '30 450w

Reviewed by C. A. Chapman

New Repub 63:352 Ag 6 '30 230w

N Y Times p31 Mr 23 '30 380w

St Louis 28:218 S '30

"There is an easy swagger about Captain Randell's reminiscences. He writes in the most casual way of hair-raising events, and though he does not actually say, 'I was the hell of a fine fellow,' it is quite clear that he was. He had the knack of life, could do anything he set mind or hand to, and tumbled into adventures as happily as a puppy."

+ Spec 145:696 N 8 '30 650w

"This narrative of the doings of Captain Jack Randell of Newfoundland is so closely packed with adventures and escapes that it is uncertain if it is to be taken as a record of what he actually did or of what such a man as he might have done. Either way the adventures make brisk reading; and in all of them the central figure is the same man and, what is more, such a man as would naturally consort with dare-devils and hold his own with them."

RANDELL, JACK—Continued
Times [London] Lit Sup p699 S 4 '30 850w

RANK, OTTO. Trauma of birth. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 224p il $3.75 Harcourt [10s 6d Routledge]
131 Psychoanalysis [29-20048]

A psychological treatise on the influences in the unconscious mind of the shock inevitably experienced by the child at the moment of birth. Professor Rank asserts that many forms of childhood, adolescent, and adult neuroses such as anxiety, hysteria, homosexuality and many sexual psychoses are grounded upon the fact that the individual still shrinks from the pain of his own birth. He proposes the suggestion of psychological "rebirth" as a cure for such cases.

Reviewed by W. A. White, M.D.
Books p16 Ja 19 '30 400w

"The book is a highly impressive effort to apply the psychoanalytic way of thinking for the comprehension of the whole development of mankind, even of the actual fact of becoming human—in other words, an attempt to make psychoanalytic thought productive for our entire conception of mankind and history. In the volume will also be found an account of the further development of psychoanalysis itself as it has proceeded from a consistent application of the method created by Freud, and from the doctrine based on that method."
+ Boston Transcript p10 N 16 '29 280w

"Like so very many examples of psychoanalytic writing, this work is almost purely speculative and the author allows himself to be carried away by theorising, seeing and believing what he wishes to see and believe. From a therapeutic point of view, experience with schizophrenics leads one to be very sceptical of analysis as a procedure of any value."
— Nature 126:273 Ag 23 '30 100w

"There can be no doubt of the illumination which Dr. Rank's thesis can cast on the neurotic psyche, but at one crucial point he fails to bring forward evidence, and even seems not to understand the necessity for evidence. Dr. Rank belongs to what we may call the left wing of psycho-analysis: he accepts the subjective evidence of fantasy almost at its face value."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1079 D 19 '29 650w

RANSOM, JOHN CROWE. God without thunder; an unorthodox defense of orthodoxy. 334p $3.50 Harcourt
215 God. Religion and science 30-29297

Mr Ransom prefers the thundering God of the Old Testament to the God that has been set up as the deity of the scientific world. He believes that man is taking too literally upon his own shoulders the responsibility of the universe—a thing which the old God would never have allowed. Hence, shorn of the best of its time-honored myths, the modern world is a most unhappy one.

Boston Transcript p8 N 29 '30 250w

"Unquestionably there is room for a book like this in an age whose emotions have been overstimulated until its heart-muscles are flabby and its valves are leaky. Personally, I cannot agree that the solution to our problem is a reversion to the God of Thunder. I had hoped we had outgrown that. There is but little of the didactic in Dr. Ransom's book. Wisely, it restricts itself mostly to diagnosis. On the last page, however, which one reluctantly arrives at, for it is really a stirring book, one reads: 'With whatever religious institution a man may be connected, let him try to turn it back towards orthodoxy. Let him insist on a virile and concrete God, and accept no Principle as a substitute. Let him restore to God the thunder.' " L. C. Douglas
Christian Century 47:1490 D 3 '30 950w

" 'God Without Thunder' has no other virtue besides its avoidance of theological dodges. It is full of fantastic Biblical exegesis; and its criticism of the modernist term 'moral religion' is limited to attacking the conception of God as a dispenser of good only—the old Calvinist attack, but no longer possible, for no religion today can do without a theodicy. . . A large part of Mr. Ransom's space is taken up with the usual religionist diatribe against science, the substance of it being that science is not omnipotent; a conclusion which presumably, should send us all looking for omnipotence in God. There is also the usual confusion of industrialism with the prevailing economic system of distribution, so that Science—the old Satan!—is blamed for the results of advertising and high-pressure salesmanship." Felix Morrow
— Nation 131:711 D 24 '30 850w

"If ever a book has struck me as wonderfully wrongheaded it is 'God Without Thunder.' . . I have absolutely no sympathy for his program of supernaturalism and agrarianism, but I recognize that he is a well-prepared opponent. It is up to somebody to present the case for science and industrialism with equal skill and fervor." C. H. Grattan
— + N Y World p3e D 7 '30 550w

RANSOM, WILL. Private presses and their books. ltd ed 493p il $15 Bowker [63s Bond]
655.1 Printing—Private presses. Privately printed books—Bibliography 29-24889

"This book tells the story of the development of the private press abroad and in the United States, and describes some of the men who are now engaged in fine printing, such as Frederic Goudy, D. B. Updike, Bruce Rogers, Dard Hunter, Elmer Adler, William A. Kittredge, William Edwin Rudge, Carl Purington Rollins, and others. A check list of publications of private presses takes up half of the book and will prove most useful to booksellers and librarians."—N Y World

Bookm 70:ix Ja '30 100w

"Will Ransom has undertaken the necessary recording of the enterprises and personalities that made up the private press movement and also the more recent fine-books movement that has grown out of it. Not only are the most important and outstanding set down, but those blasted hopes and frustrated ideals, here find their last place in the sun. In more than 240 pages of check lists of the issue of various private presses, great and small, he gives the most complete survey that has yet appeared in one volume. The job has been done conscientiously and thoroughly." Paul Johnston
+ Books p20 Ap 27 '30 400w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p14 D 20 '29 170w
Pratt p43 autumn '30

"The lists seem very complete and will be useful; and Mr. Ransom's introductory account of the movement since 1890 is pleasantly written and will enlighten English collectors upon the history of the American presses."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p90 F 6 '30 800w

RAPIN, RENE. Willa Cather. (Modern Am. writers) 115p $1.50 McBride
813 Cather, Willa Sibert 30-30426

"A study of Miss Cather which should be classed as an appreciation, rather than a biography or a final critical estimate of her work. However, the author gives us an outline of her career, and points out what he considers her limitations."—Bookm

Reviewed by Francis Fergusson
Bookm 72:437 D '30 350w

"Although Mr. Rapin realizes that neither Miss Cather's life nor her work is ready for definitive treatment, he has, in his enthusiasm for her writing, made an interesting essay toward bringing the facts of the one to bear on the other in such a way as to show the novelist's development æsthetically and in power of characterization. . . Although throughout this little book Mr. Rapin shows himself to have a keen appreciation of good writing, his own style is sometimes clumsy. He may not be entirely at home in the English idiom." Garreta Busey

+ — Books p10 D 21 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 3 '31 220w

"Mr. Rapin's study of Willa Cather is a very small contribution to criticism. Perhaps it was not the intent of the book to give more than the hastiest judgment of the subject's worth. But it should be possible to indicate, at least, why 'The Professor's House,' 'One of Ours,' 'Death Comes for the Archbishop' are 'truly to be called great.' Those are big words; they may be applicable to the excellent work of Willa Cather. But of her experimentation with the form of the novel, of the actual quality of her style, there is nothing in this book. Instead, we get beautiful writing and extreme, adjectival gush."

— Nation 132:22 Ja 7 '31 120w

RAPPARD, WILLIAM EMMANUEL. Uniting Europe; the trend of international coöperation since the war; with a pref. by Edward M. House. (Inst. of politics publications, Williams college, Williamstown, Mass.) 309p $3 Yale univ. press

341.1 International cooperation. League of nations. Europe—Politics. Europe—Economic conditions 30-5618

Professor Rappard, a historian who was among the representatives of Switzerland at the League of nations, deals in this book with the subject of international peace. He outlines the main political and economic changes which Europe has undergone since the War; and in the latter part of the book considers the possible cooperation of the various European states both without and within the framework of the League of nations.

"The book is the direct result of the author's Williamstown lectures given last summer, and one cannot but regret that neither Mr. Rappard nor the publishers have seen fit to make any changes whatever. The lecture form, for good or evil, is preserved throughout. But Uniting Europe, with its mastery of subject materials and its wanton optimism, will certainly be read with profit by many." G. Sudermann

+ — Ann Am Acad 150:302 Jl '30 150w

Booklist 27:13 S '30

Books p12 Ap 27 '30 80w

"Professor Rappard's orderly and interesting recital, prepared originally as a course of lectures at the Williamstown Institute, will clarify the ideas of those who are fairly familiar with the subject. For those who are discouraged and pessimistic, it will be an invaluable tonic." J. T. Gerould

+ Current Hist 32:198 Ap '30 400w

N Y Times p17 Jl 27 '30 480w

Reviewed by John Carter

Outlook 154:356 F 26 '30 240w

St Louis 28:132 My '30

"Professor Rappard does not try to plot the whole of the unknown path to the millennium but contents himself with a careful exploration of that part of it which can be explored. His long experience in and about the League of Nations and other centers of international coöperation has quickened his sense of proportion and given validity to his estimate of what is practical and what is merely sentimental. His volume is worth a dozen philosophical dissertations upon the glories of world unity." H. K. Norton

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1191 Jl 12 '30 250w

Spec 144:850 My 24 '30 1550w

Times [London] Lit Sup p418 My 15 '30 180w

RATEL, SIMONNE. Love's not enough; adapted from the French by Joseph Collins. 313p $2 Farrar

30-24345

Three feminine types are studied in this novel by a Frenchman, winner of the Grand prix Minerva—1929: Antoinette, the intellectual; Annonciade, dependent and emotional; and Suzon, the capricious flirt. The story's main interest centers about Antoinette and Annonciade, whose passionate friendship for each other is broken when they both fall in love with the same man.

Bookm 72:306 N '30 280w

"It is to be hoped that no impatient reader will throw up his hands at the rather formidable first chapter of this thoroughly interesting tale, a longish chapter of 'characterization' in formal, if not stilted, prose which faithfully reflects, one does not doubt, the mood of the original. . . The author has used the 'stream of consciousness' method to advantage; she varies it with a less successful employment of balanced incident involving the three young couples. And surrounding all is a refreshing background of the French countryside."

+ — Books p10 O 5 '30 300w

"The novel is an intimate, intense and altogether feminine study of three young women in friendship and love. . . Just what part Dr. Collins played in this adaptation is not quite clear, but there are passages in the novel so prosaically and even crudely written that it becomes a little difficult to believe a French author of some distinction was responsible for them." E. S

+ — N Y Evening Post p4d O 18 '30 120w

"If for no other reason, this novel is interesting for the picture that it affords of the generation in France which corresponds to our own much exploited younger generation. Comparisons are irresistible; and what stands out is the greater amount of intelligence of a hard ruthless sort that these young people of the Latin country bring to the major problems of life. . . Undoubtedly the success which this book has enjoyed in France is due to the uncommon exuberance of its style."

+ N Y Times p6 O 19 '30 400w

RATTRAY, ROBERT SUTHERLAND, comp. and tr. Akan-Ashanti folk-tales; il. by Africans of the Gold Coast Colony. 296p il $7.50 (21s) Oxford

398.2 Folklore—Ashanti [30-29465]

"Not content with composing a trilogy of elaborate studies on the social anthropology of Ashanti, Captain Rattray years ago provided a preliminary relish in the shape of a collection of the proverbs of the Akan-speaking people, and now by way of dessert supplies the text and translation of seventy-five of their highly characteristic Anansesem or 'Spider-stories.' "—Times [London] Lit Sup

"No more authentic or felicitous collection of primitive tales has been published than this last volume of Captain Rattray's great series of Ashanti materials, which has already included volumes on their religion and art, their proverbs and their law and constitution. The present volume of myths is published with the native text, and the translation is both literal and delightful. All the tales Captain Rattray has heard often around the native fires and has taken down next day from the lips of the tellers of the most successful of the evening's repertoire. Nothing has been omitted, and the native flavor in the telling has been delightfully retained." Ruth Benedict

+ Books p12 O 12 '30 700w

"This collection of tales whose central figure —mythological hero—is (when there is one) Ananse the Spider, reveals the people as keen observers of nature, early respecters of honesty, sincerity and loyalty as basic tribal virtues. They reveal the people further as instinctively dramatic as but few of the tales can be told, much less read, without accompanying gestures and animal calls. Illustrations are drawings by natives, themselves worthy of study by archeologists."

RATTRAY, R. S., comp.—Continued
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 11 '30 160w

"With this volume of folk-tales, Capt. Rattray completes a series of four works in which the customs, laws, and beliefs of the people of Ashanti have been surveyed. It is by no means the least valuable of the series, for in these stories the mentality of the people is revealed, more artlessly perhaps, but by no means less effectually, than in the analytical studies of the more formal investigations."
+ Nature 126:sup527 O 4 '30 400w

"We are only doubtful about the illustrations, which are by natives who appear to have had some artistic training along European lines. The idea is commendable, but the results are not in great harmony with the tales, and there is something alien about the drawings which almost merits the strictures which the author makes on the type of folk-tale collector who has his stories written down in English by mission-trained Africans. This is the only criticism which this admirable volume invites."
+ — Spec 145:385 S 20 '30 220w

Times [London] Lit Sup p725 S 18 '30 1600w

RAUTENSTRAUCH, WALTER. Successful control of profits. 239p $3 Forbes
658 Business. Manufactures—Accounting
30-7857

The author, professor of industrial engineering at Columbia university, demonstrates that every aspect of business may be searchingly analyzed, and shows what may be revealed by these analyses.

"The real merit of the book consists in the author's emphasis on the advisability of applying scientific method to business data, in order that the X's, the unknown factors in the business equation, may be eliminated or at least understood and controlled. . . The book is heartily recommended to all business executives." J. Lockwood
+ Ann Am Acad 151:295 S '30 450w

"The book is a very sane and stimulating elementary treatise of fundamental accounting purposes. It should be of particular value to the small manufacturing concern, which has frequently too poor a grasp of its own financial fundamentals."
Chem & Met Eng 37:376 Je '30 100w
St Louis 28:212 S '30

RAYMOND, CLIFFORD SAMUEL. Men on the dead man's chest. 255p $2 Bobbs
30-4296

"Six murders—the first one in Chicago, two somewhere in Wisconsin, one in San Francisco and two in France—surely these should be enough to satisfy the most blood-thirsty reader. The one who sends the publishers the most satisfactory explanation will win a prize. As for the first six murders, the man who was really responsible for them, even though he did not do the actual killing, is beyond the reach of the law before the story opens. There is a detective, although he insists that he is merely a policeman, who tries to find out how, why and by whom the six murders were committed; but he is not successful enough to bring any one to justice."—N Y Times

Bookm 71:xxxi Mr '30 50w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p18 F 16 '30 100w

"The story is ingenious and quite out of the ordinary."
+ N Y Times p20 Ap 6 '30 180w

"The beaten track is conspicuously avoided in this decidedly 'different' mystery novel, and there are several unique, successfully managed departures from the hackneyed in evidence. But regretfully we must report that the pace is not held and that the finish falls far below the mark set in the story's preceding portion."
+ — N Y World p11m F 9 '30 180w

RAYMOND, ERNEST. Family that was. 453p $2.50 Appleton
30-14193

The family of Dr. O'Grogan, vicar of St Austin's, consisted of five children. The story is chiefly about Tony: his school days, his adolescence, his early manhood and youthful ideals. He gets a job teaching, marries quite happily, but, being an idealist by nature, finds life a continuous series of disillusionments. The novel ends with the outbreak of the war.

Booklist 27:162 D '30
Bookm 71:545 Ag '30 300w
Books p12 S 14 '30 200w

"Mr. Raymond's style is lucid and carefully polished, unmarred by mannerism or affectation. Although 'A Family That Was' is a long and rather rambling narrative, relating in detail the lives of a variety of loosely connected characters, it displays few of the faults to which such histories are liable. The story is essentially direct and penetrating, and retains to the end a clear unity and a sense of progression."
+ N Y Times p6 Je 15 '30 550w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:70 O '30

"A better novel than the average. It is honest and often interesting, for all its lack of direction and discipline."
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:12 Jl 26 '30 320w

RAYMOND, MARGARET THOMSEN. Linnet on the threshold. 237p $2 Longmans
30-10812

A story for older girls in which Linnet Burd attempts to help out the family during her father's illness. She gives up going to high school and takes a position. Finally thru her loyalty she wins the friendship of an older woman, and the way is opened for her return to school.

"An unusual girls' book, not because of any glamor in its writing but because of a certain straightforward sincerity in dealing with modern life. . . Linnet's life is like thousands of others, but her story is well worth reading. It rings true. Almost the only treatment of a very young girl's experiences in the business world, it will give girls who are facing the same problems a better perspective and more fortunate girls a broader point of view." H. H. Owen
+ Books p8 Je 22 '30 600w
Reviewed by Lindsay Skinner
N Y Evening Post p7d N 15 '30 50w

"Here is a story for girls from 12 to 16 that one is glad to recommend, for it is neither sentimental nor overdrawn." A. T. Eaton
+ N Y Times p11 Ag 3 '30 200w
Sat R of Lit 7:254 O 18 '30 100w
Reviewed by A. D. Marvin
Survey 65:341 D 15 '30 80w

READ, HERBERT EDWARD. Sense of glory; essays in criticism. 228p $3 Harcourt [10s 6d Cambridge univ. press]
804 Literature—History and criticism
30-12416

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"A charming ease of manner is the first characteristic of Herbert Read's criticism that wins the reader over to pay close attention to his thought. He is a man of trained taste, an expert in discrimination among styles. His scholarship is extensive, yet accessible, without straining on his part."

+ Bookm 71:119 Mr '30 570w

"What ever else he is, he is readable. Precision without pedantry, grace without affectation, dignity without didacticism are characteristic of Mr. Read's style."
+ Books p20 Ap 6 '30 320w

Boston Transcript p3 F 21 '30 950w

"Herbert Read appeals to the writer as one of the most important of living English critics. For Read accomplishes the difficult task of combining four elements that are necessary to a complete criticism in this generation. He bases his critical methodology on science. He has a remarkable capacity for defining terms. He can live into the minds of diverse writers and clearly and sympathetically explain them. And he offers an ideal for the literary life which, while one may regard it with dubiety, still does not offend one." C. H. Grattan
+ Nation 130:188 F 12 '30 750w

"Mr. Read writes with suavity, learning and a genuine knowledge of the nooks and crannies in which good literature may be found. His flair for good style and his grasp of esthetic problems is far more certain than that of our own literary moralists. He has, moreover, the art of making the essay dramatic by representing the growth of both character and ideas, by building the form of his essay with deftness and vigor." Matthew Josephson
+ New Repub 62:250 Ap 16 '30 1100w

"Mr. Read's criticism (in this like the criticism of T. S. Eliot) is peculiarly rich and warm in suggestion. His writing enlists the full tradition and is never throttled by it." Vincent McHugh
+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Ja 25 '30 1000w

"He is sometimes confused and halting, but the confusion is, with one or two exceptions, the sort that springs from honesty of thought, and not from muddled thought." John Chamberlain
+ N Y Times p2 Ja 26 '30 1000w

"One's respect for Mr. Read's critical writing increases steadily with the slowly growing list of his books. He surprises us less but convinces us more than other contemporary critics, and he can be more fully depended upon than almost any other critical writer now at work in England for solid intellectual fare. He has an Arnoldian sobriety, with none of Arnold's irritating tricks of style. As compared with the younger American critics, he has a deeper sense of responsibility, and yet he is at the same time more robust and sanguine than they—more youthful, indeed, in every sense that does not imply crudity or arrogance." Odell Shepard
+ Yale R n s 20:185 autumn '30 750w

REBREANU, LIVIU. Forest of the hanged; tr. from the Rumanian by A. V. Wise. 406p $2.50 Duffield [7s 6d Allen, G.]
30-24951

Apostol Bologa, a young Rumanian who has joined the Austrian army, wins distinction as an officer on the Russian front. Then, when Rumania joins the allies, Apostol is torn between desire to remain with the army he loves and his duty to his native country. He knows he must desert—but his conscience is tormented by the fact that he himself has court-martialled deserters, and seen them die in the "forest of the hanged." A severe wound and ensuing illness prevent him from carrying out his decision.

Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '30 230w

" 'Forest of the Hanged' introduces to the American public the work of a veteran Rumanian novelist, author of several successful books and plays. It reveals a fine and mature talent and a polished technique. . . But the book as a whole does not quite realize the possibilities for tragedy which it contains. Bologa's conflict, deep and inescapable though it is, lacks something of the fundamental balance and clarity which the reader has a right to expect. This may be due less to Rebreanu's fault as an artist than to the existence of a national psychology which defies translation. If so, we may regret the circumstance, but we can hardly quarrel with it."
+ — N Y Times p6 S 28 '30 650w

"The novel is written with great sensitiveness." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 156:269 O 15 '30 150w

" 'Forest of the Hanged' has a kind of intensity. But it is derived less from effective handling—throughout, the work is marred by an emotional excess equivalent to hysteria, and moralizing—than from the tensity and gruesomeness inherent in the subject matter."
Sat R of Lit 7:398 N 29 '30 280w

Times [London] Lit Sup p892 O 30 '30 280w

RECHT, CHARLES. Manhattan made. 126p $2 Liveright
811 30-6266

"Like Dos Passos with his 'Manhattan Transfer,' like many another writer in prose or verse, Charles Recht is striving above all to catch and render intelligible some few of the thousand random and inharmonious notes of the Babel that is Manhattan."—N Y Times

---

"A book of verse which, whatever else may be said of it, is interesting in a contemporary sense. Mr. Recht's verses are not those of a poet so much as of a keenly analytical and critical mind." Ruth Lechlitner
Books p14 My 25 '30 550w

"Interesting as much of it is, 'Manhattan Made' contains a quantity of surprisingly inadequate versification."
+ — Boston Transcript p10 Ap 26 '30 220w

"The very refreshing manner in which Mr. Recht has approached the entangled phenomena he has encountered endows 'Manhattan Made' with novelty. Besides being good fun, the verses are not without some suggestion of profundity, although this is well concealed. It is a book many should enjoy."
+ N Y Times p18 Ap 27 '30 280w

"This has been said before, but Dr. Recht says it with a good deal of vigor and variety. If he is, as he says, 'less the singer and more the sage,' he has at least a gift for lively expression." Granville Hicks
+ N Y World p5m Jl 27 '30 200w

"What a preacher he would make if he believed anything or had any hope." L. T. Nicholl
Outlook 154:549 Ap 2 '30 100w

RECKLESS, WALTER C. Six boys in trouble. ² 150p pa $1.25 Edwards bros.
136.76 Juvenile delinquency. Boys

"This is a collection of six case records of delinquent boys in Nashville and represents the research work of sociologists with university facilities. The general outline of each record is as follows: statement of the problem, reproduction of the material on the face sheet, summary of juvenile court record and of charity record, medical report, psychological examination, interviews, summary of factors, and sociological analysis. Interviews are held with the delinquent, his parents, his teachers, and sometimes a neighbor. A condensed verbatim report of each interview is presented."—Am J Soc

---

"This procedure will certainly fail to satisfy many psychiatrists who insist that the mechanisms from which delinquency results are very subtle and can be discovered and isolated only by psychiatric methods. They are certain to believe that the essential root of the trouble has not been discovered in any one of these records. It is not evident that the methods used in these case-studies are especially unique or that they emphasize situational factors more in a different manner than, say, the Judge Baker Foundation records." E. H. Sutherland
— Am J Soc 36:159 Jl '30 320w

RECKLESS, W. C.—Continued

"These studies stop short of treatment. For this reason they are disappointing to the probation officer, the visiting teacher, the social case worker and even to the classroom teacher. The reviewer is not a psychiatrist or a sociologist; he is only a teacher. But what all of us who face the daily job of trying to change the behavior of the individual want to know is not only the best way to find out and describe how the boy got where he is, but also what to do about it. Please tell us next time how you got six boys out of trouble and kept them out." H. W. Thurston

— Survey 65:100 O 15 '30 380w

RECTOR, FRANK LESLIE. Health and medical service in American prisons and reformatories. 282p il $2.50 Nat. soc. of penal information, inc., 114 E. 30th st., N.Y.

365 Prisons—United States. Reformatories—United States 30-825

Tabulated results of the 1929 survey of American prisons and reformatories made by the National society of penal information. The various findings, as summarized in a chapter preceding the body of the report, indicated poor prison conditions in general, inadequate and understaffed medical administration, overcrowding, meagre treatment for diseases, and bad sanitation (chiefly in the case of older prisons). Evidences of improvement were to be found in diet, bedding, recreation and entertainment, and mental and physical examination.

"The volume presents a mass of reliable data on an important problem, and furnishes much for the prison-builders and the prison-administrators of the future to mark well." Winfred Overholser

+ Ann Am Acad 149:sup208 My '30 520w

"Too judicial in tone and suggestion—that is about the only verdict that can be rendered on this book. . . Most of the distressing facts about health and medical service in prisons are here stated, but they are softened and 'generalized' in a way to leave little vivid impression on the mind of the reader. One has to study the book to get its essence." W. D. Lane

— + Survey 64:103 Ap 15 '30 400w

Reviewed by H. E. Barnes

World Tomorrow 13:312 Jl '30 420w

REDFIELD, ROBERT. Tepoztlan, a Mexican village; a study of folk life. (Univ. of Chicago pub. in anthropology. Ethnological ser.) 247p il $3 Univ. of Chicago press

917.24 Tepoztlán, Mexico. Ethnology—Mexico. Mexico—Social life and customs 30-15556

A study of the daily round of life in a modern Mexican village, showing that the inhabitants constitute an intermediate group between tribal and city types of life. The author provides a carefully documented account of this pueblo, its communal organization, its methods of labor, its customs, medicine and magic, clothes, cookery and land tenure, and tells how its inhabitants live and die.

Booklist 27:153 D '30

Reviewed by Ruth Benedict

Books p24 N 2 '30 850w

Reviewed by Ernest Gruening

Nation 131:417 O 15 '30 420w

"A Mexican 'Middletown' of absorbing interest and, to my mind, of great importance. I have read, or looked into, all the recent books on Mexico obtainable in English, and this is the first one (except possibly Manuel Gamio's study of Teotihuacan) which really takes the cover off a typical community and allows us to see how it eats, sleeps, works, plays, worships and generally carries on through the cycle of the seasons. Perhaps the most interesting chapter is that which gives the calendar of fiesta, corn-planting, fiesta, harvest, day by day, the year around." Stuart Chase

+ New Repub 64:160 S 24 '30 550w

"Mr. Redfield brings us strange news of the ways of life in a contemporary Mexican village. His book is a study heavily documented with the scrupulous notations of the research scholar. It contains admirable chapters on the organization of the village and the community, the division of labor and the material culture, the fine distinctions where folkways end and urbanity begins. There are appendices of terms and painstaking enumerations to delight the academic heart. But for all that the book is a chronicle of adventure into an unknown country, abysmally primitive according to our standards." C. G. Poore

+ N Y Times p10 Jl 27 '30 1200w

St Louis 28:210 S '30

"Redfield's book is intensive and pioneering—the first modern, thorough investigation of a typical Mexican village. 'Tepoztlán' is of far greater importance for a proper understanding of Mexico than nearly all the books on political and institutional life which have appeared in English, though special attention should be called to Gruening's 'Mexico and Its Heritage.' 'Tepoztlán' is worthy to be included among the best scientific works written on Mexico." Carleton Beals

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1201 Jl 19 '30 4300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p613 Jl 24 '30 420w

REDLICH, JOSEF. Austrian war government. (Carnegie endowment for int. peace. Division of economics and history. Economic and social history of the World war. Tr. and abr. ser.) 175p $2.25 Yale univ. press

342.436 Austria—Politics and government. European war, 1914-1918—Austria 29-9754

A professor of law at Harvard university, formerly professor of law at the University of Vienna, is the author of this volume, which is one in the series on the Economic and social history of the World war published for the Carnegie endowment for international peace. The book surveys the Austrian Government as it was at the outbreak of the War, and the state organization of production and distribution during the war years. The last chapter describes the Austrian situation after the Armistice.

"A volume which amply merits its place in the Carnegie endowment's Economic and Social History of the World War. The study of war-time administration is a masterly corroborative interpretation of the impersonal factors leading to the downfall of the monarchy. Redlich's approach is that of a liberal constitutionalist, opposed to dualism—particularly as exploited by Tisza." M. W. Graham

+ Am Pol Sci R 23:1020 N '29 350w

"Professor Redlich's masterly account of war government in Austria deserves a wider reading than it is likely to attract in the elaborate 'Economic and Social History of the World War' to which it is contributed. Foreign critics who have dated the break-up of the Dual Monarchy from the outbreak of the war, on the theory that an outside blow was all that was needed to topple a rickety structure, will find a different view of the matter presented in Redlich's scholarly pages."

+ Books p23 S 15 '29 400w

Reviewed by W. C. Langsam

Hist Outlook 21:135 Mr '30 600w

Reviewed by Charles Seymour

Pol Sci Q 45:604 D '30 1350w

REDMAN, BEN RAY. Down in flames. 296p $2 Brewer

30-2761

Ten stories featuring episodes in the life of fighting flyers. The author, a scout pilot with the British expeditionary forces during the war, has had actual flying experience; as a critic and essayist, he has couched the material gathered from his experiences in commendable literary style. Among the stories are The Sausage, a description of the efforts of three planes to bring down a German balloon, and Ground mist, a psychological study of the mind of a pilot who is lost in a fog.

"These are direct, aspiring and interesting stories which will appeal to those who love flying and to those who love the honest and daring adventurer among writers." F. E. Hill

+ Books p5 Ja 19 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 29 '30 450w

Reviewed by Clinton Simpson

Nation 130:330 Mr 19 '30 100w

"Mr. Redman writes well, with both wit and feeling. These stories have a very distinct literary flavor and are obviously the work of one who is at home in the world of aviation. G. T. H.

+ New Repub 63:214 Jl 9 '30 250w

"The important thing about this book is that in a field where slushy mediocrity holds sway Redman has brought his gifts as a literary artist and shown fine performance as well as the promise of rarer things to come." Bruce Gould

+ N Y Evening Post p7m Ja 18 '30 550w

"Mr. Redman tells us what he has to say dispassionately but clearly and skillfully. Those interested in the aviator's side of the war should enjoy his stories."

+ N Y Times p16 F 2 '30 250w

"This group of stories unquestionably belongs among the very few volumes in which war aviation fiction attains the stature of creative art." E. C. Beckwith

+ N Y World p11m Ja 26 '30 550w

"Mr. Redman is more than a skillful maker of plots; he writes with feeling, with an unusually good but restrained sense of the dramatic, and with an unquestionable knowledge of human nature and of things aeronautical. These are excellent short stories."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1015 My 3 '30 130w

REED, RUTH. Modern family. 191p $3; text ed $2.50 Crofts [12s 6d Knopf]

392 Family 29-16878

A description of the functions of the family as a social institution under the changing conditions of modern life. The author traces the evolution of its structure and duties, and takes up the problem of its adjustment to the other elements in our social system.

"The majority of students of the family will welcome the work as a rare contribution of psychological insight into the maladjustment in family life. . . The Modern Family will satisfy a felt need for jarring loose the family from its traditions, and provoking a questioning attitude in regard to family problems." H. G. Duncan

+ Am J Soc 35:840 Mr '30 650w

"Dr. Reed's volume is a searching, and, at the same time, cool and tolerant, analysis of the institution of the family. One cannot be too grateful for such broadminded discussions of the factors involved as are embodied in Dr. Reed's admirable book."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p586 Jl 17 '30 1000w

"A sound, tolerant, enlightened study."

+ World Tomorrow 13:315 Jl '30 50w

REED, WILLIAM MAXWELL. The earth for Sam; the story of mountains, rivers, dinosaurs and men. 390p il $3.50 Harcourt

550 Earth. Geology—Juvenile literature. Paleontology—Juvenile literature 30-2497

A child's history of the earth thru successive geologic periods from the days "when the earth was hot," ending with an imaginary period which looks forward to our possible future. The book was written by a former professor of astronomy at Harvard, for his nine-year-old nephew.

Booklist 26:286 Ap '30

"A most informative and clearly written book on the formation of the world. It will satisfy the curiosity of ten-to sixteen-year-olds about stars, mountains and clouds, and deserves a lasting place in a child's library. The book increases in complexity toward the end, and can therefore be read with profit for several years."

+ Bookm 72:xxvii S '30 80w

"Had the book been as carefully prepared with respect to what children naturally wonder about the earth and have the capacity to assimilate as it has been in relation to the logical sequence of geologic periods 'The Earth for Sam' would, I think, take a unique and enviable place among books for children of ten years old and younger. As it stands, it is not always intelligible or acceptable. . . Mr. Reed has written a book from which an older reader will derive a considerable amount of accurate information provided he is not bored by the style." A. C. Moore

— + Books p8 Ja 19 '30 1250w

Boston Transcript p4 F 15 '30 300w

"Artists, working with the material provided by research, have made imaginative pictures of how the past would have looked had an artist been there to paint a landscape or depict the doings of prehistoric people. Many of these are reproduced among the photographic illustrations. The text is also helped by humorous comment in line drawings by Karl Mosely which merit a friendly word. Altogether an excellent book for young and older." R. B.

+ Christian Science Monitor p11 F 21 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p85 Je '30

"There is so little material in this field that can be used with children that it seems rather ungrateful to criticize in any degree such an accurate and valuable book. One cannot help but wish, however, that the author had had more trust in children's genuine interest in the topics of which he writes and had not felt that it was necessary to write down to them. . . Since the author is serious in his desire to put real knowledge within the reach of children, it seems to this reviewer that the facetious line drawings of Mr. Moseley strike a jarring note, clever and amusing as they are in themselves."

— + N Y Times p19 F 2 '30 300w

"An interestingly written and exceptionally well illustrated story of the earth, from the beginnings of life to the dawn of history. So many of these simplifications of science for children talk down to their young readers that it is a pleasure to find one which doesn't." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:189 Ja 29 '30 100w

Outlook 155:340 Jl 2 '30 50w

"The presentation is lively, with humor enough both in text and illustration to stimulate a story which at times might otherwise be somewhat dreary to youth. The restorations are reproductions of the best that have been produced under the supervision of experts but suffer at times in their printing and thus lack clarity of detail. The reading of the book will give great enjoyment and much instruction and may serve to encourage further excursion into the realm of past nature and thus attract more workers unto the abundant harvest of revealed science. Certainly Sam is to be congratulated that this story was written for him, and its presentation to a wide circle of readers both in youth and maturity is devoutly to be hoped for." R. S. Lull

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:863 Mr 22 '30 320w

Springf'd Republican p5e Ag 3 '30 120w

Wis Lib Bul 26:70 F '30

REES, ARTHUR JOHN. Pavilion by the lake. 310p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

30-24049

A wealthy shipping master discovers the body of a stranger in the old lake pavilion on his country estate, and the following morning the millionaire himself is found dead. The disappearance of a famous historical miniature links the two mysteries.

REES, A. J.—Continued

Booklist 27:210 Ja '31

Bookm 72:xxvi O '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 O 12 '30 170w

"The murderer of Mr. Altamount is obvious from the beginning, and Mr. Rees's manner of exposing him is tediously long. A poor story."
— New Statesman 35:686 S 6 '30 130w

"This is a suave and flowing story, a little wordy perhaps, but handled with skill and imagination." Bruce Rae
+ N Y Times p36 N 16 '30 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:80 N '30

Sat R 150:462 O 11 '30 100w

"Although it takes a while to get started (by one who likes his murders in the first chapter), 'The Pavilion by the Lake' is in what may be termed the best tradition of English mystery stories. . . Told in the quiet, unhurried, precise manner that distinguishes all Mr. Rees's stories. The detectives are amiable fellows, working in a businesslike way to a conclusion that is surprising but satisfactory." W. C. Weber
+ Sat R of Lit 7:232 O 11 '30 200w

"Although Mr. Rees has published several other novels, this one is somewhat amateurish. The murderer's motives, when revealed, are inadequate, and the deed does not fit his feeble character."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p737 S 18 '30 170w

REES, ROSEMARY FRANCES. Dear acquaintance. 316p $2 Farrar [7s 6d Chapman]
[29-9717]

A swiftly moving story of the adventures of a young English actress who was accused, tried and all but sentenced for a crime which she did not commit. And all this, strangely enough, brought to her the romantic love affair of which she had always dreamed.

Books p23 Mr 23 '30 350w

"Miss Rees knows life and knows also the places she describes so well. That her imagination stretches from the realistic to the highly improbable is forgivable in a story of this type. Somehow, she has the knack of making a seeming impossible situation sound plausible. Miss Rees has an emotional gift that should prove her stepping stone to more lasting literature."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 26 '30 280w

REESE, LIZETTE WOODWORTH. White April, and other poems. 67p $1.50 Farrar 811 30-23823

A new volume of lyrics that express, with gentle simplicity, the love for the familiar beauty of countryside things that has distinguished Miss Reese's work.

Bookm 72:87 S '30 350w

"This book will not be omitted from the bookshelves of a small number of people who care for the best in poetry, where it will invite comparison with the eight other volumes which have preceded it. The reader who cherishes 'Tears' and 'Telling the Bees' will search here for the qualities that first brought Miss Reese her quiet and durable fame." Genevieve Taggard
+ Books p2 O 19 '30 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p153 D '30

"In these fifty-three new poems Miss Reese does more than defend her claims as a lyrist of secure, if restricted, quality. She provides an explanation of her rare and long sustained lyric vitality. . . The tough fiber of beauty that persists in 'White April' is woven of Miss Reese's shrewd and tenacious sense of life. . . She is content to praise a living world whose changes she has watched without dismay and in whose richness of experience she has never lost faith. But unlike the average lyric optimism, her praise is marked by an authority that lends its virtue to her simple and distinguished art." M. D. Zabel
+ New Repub 64:240 O 15 '30 460w

"Miss Reese writes of simple things felt profoundly. Her lyrics summon the imagination, charming us with their fresh and poignant approach to strange familiar things." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p12 S 20 '30 50w

"Miss Reese vivifies anew the eternal message of beauty. . She is sensitive to elusive things, mist, and the soft patter of rain. Autumnal tints, the young green of Spring—these she conveys. Nor is she solely objective, she is equally sensitive to the human response to the delicate stimuli."
+ N Y Times p25 S 28 '30 260w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:90 D '30

St Louis 28:298 D '30

"Here is a woman in her mid-seventies writing with the verve and tenderness of a young girl; and so long and so consistently has she influenced more than a generation of women poets, that, read casually today, she seems one only slightly more gifted among a score of talented writers." J. S. Untermeyer
+ Sat R of Lit 7:283 N 1 '30 500w

REEVE, CHRISTOPHER. Toasted blonde. 308p $2 Morrow [7s 6d Collins]
30-22436

Rather than involve his nephew's wife in a scandal with Nikolai Barescu, a Seravian politician, Sir James Winthrop causes Garrett Scaithe to be arrested for a jewel theft. Following Scaithe's death in prison his partner, known as the Shadow, carries on a vendetta which results in a series of murders and grave danger to Vivien Lattrell, the beautiful "toasted blonde" of the story.

"A well-knit mystery romance with a charming picture of English country life."
+ Bookm 72:xxiv S '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 S 7 '30 100w

Boston Transcript p3 D 20 '30 280w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 156:160 S 24 '30 50w

Times [London] Lit Sup p577 Jl 10 '30 220w

REEVES, EARL. Lindbergh flies on! a story of a hero, and of the pioneers and "empire builders of the air" who followed him. 292p il $2 McBride
629.13 Lindbergh, Charles Augustus. Aeronautics 29-20781

The story of aviation, built chiefly around the life and achievements of Lindbergh. Written for boys.

Booklist 26:237 Mr '30

Cleveland Open Shelf p137 N '30

St Louis 28:9 Ja '30

"Mr. Reeves has been too eager to communicate the on-rush of progress in aviation to make literature, but his journalism is absorbing. If a book like this, if books like these, don't put the spark to the dynamite of ambition in a boy's make-up, something must be damp." T. M. Longstreth
+ Sat R of Lit 6:426 N 16 '29 100w

REEVES, MARGARET. Training schools for delinquent girls. 455p pl $3.50 Russell Sage foundation
364 Reformatories—United States. Juvenile delinquency. Children—Charities, protection, etc. Girls 29-13720

"A study by the Russell Sage Foundation of state, county and municipal training schools and a few private training schools for delinquent girls throughout the United States."—Pratt

"It would be hazardous to estimate the value of this book in the field of delinquency. Certain values seem fairly clear. It gives us a perspective on the field as we have never had it before. It will provide legislators, boards and staffs with a source of information that will leave no excuse for continuing to create a permanent social liability while temporarily safeguarding society. It willl provide suggestive material and analogies for those in other types of institution and other fields of social work. The defects of this treatise are largely the defects of the field itself." G. S. Stevenson
+ — Am J Pub Health 19:1392 D '29 600w

"The book is recommended to all interested in penology." Thorsten Sellin
+ Ann Am Acad 151:287 S '30 280w
Booklist 26:147 Ja '30
Pratt p11 winter '30
St Louis 28:207 S '30

REID, ANN ALEXANDER. Love lies bleeding. 310p $2 Smith, R.R. [7s 6d Constable]

The story of Isobel Pennant, a sensitive and serious girl, who is torn between her love for her father, and an adolescent passion for her school friend Dulcie.

Books p16 O 5 '30 180w

"The strength of this study lies in a lack of exaggeration that heightens every effect. . . Miss Reid's book bites deep: there is no escape from what it contains."
+ New Statesman 35:119 My 3 '30 300w

"Ann Reid brings to her analysis of adolescent emotions, great tenderness and reality and penetration, and nothing of exaggeration or overemphasis. Different in kind from her first novel, 'Love Lies Bleeding' may nevertheless be said to have fulfilled the author's not inconsiderable promise."
+ N Y Times p6 Ag 24 '30 680w

"There is beauty in much of the writing of this novel, there is the extra, sure knowing of the characters beyond the obvious psychological insight, and there is scene after scene of taut, adolescent reality that wavers between awkwardness and loveliness. And yet the book as a whole is not satisfactory. It has the poignancy of all eager and hurt youth; perhaps, in spite of naming and dating, the characters are too general. Every event that occurs is right, might have actually happened to any young girl, but in the end each remains just that—not essentially enough the fate of Miss Reid's people, not unthinkable as belonging to anyone else."
+ — Sat R of Lit 7:274 O 25 '30 350w

"The book is a grave and intelligent study in the limited field of school-girl passion. Miss Reid picks her way with delicacy and security through these adolescent miseries and delights and writes well." V. S. Pritchett
+ Spec 144:582 Ap 5 '30 180w

"The domestic scene, with its crowd of characters—the Pennants themselves, their friends, their odd and numerous relatives—is clearly felt and projected, informed with a quiet humour. This sureness of touch is less evident in the expression of Isobel's sudden passion for Dulcie. The emotional side of this relationship is conveyed with a lyrical vagueness which is not very convincing."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p497 Je 12 '30 320w

REILLY, HELEN. Thirty-first bullfinch. 292p $1 Doubleday, Doran
30-17939

John Bedford, an elderly invalid millionaire, was living with his family on an isolated island off the New England coast. Suddenly he sent for his lawyer in order to change his will. The new will was never made, for the next morning the invalid was found dead, poisoned with prussic acid which had been added to his midnight drink. And yet the tame bullfinch which he fed each night from his cup was alive. From this slender clue Sheriff Tilden built up his case, captured the murderer and saved several lives.

Booklist 27:31 S '30
Bookm 71:xxi Ag '30 100w

"Though obvious in spots, the tale has that readable quality and plenty of speed." Will Cuppy
+ — Books p14 Je 22 '30 120w

"The story is well written and holds the reader's interest."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 26 '30 250w

Reviewed by Dashiell Hammett
N Y Evening Post p4s Je 7 '30 200w

"A yarn quite satisfactorily filled with mystery and thrills."
+ N Y Times p15 Je 29 '30 130w

REINACH, SALOMON. Orpheus; a history of religions; from the French by Florence Simmonds. rev ed 487p $5 Liveright
290 Religions—History 30-5609

"A one-volume work [on the history of religions] that had wide circulation early in the present century, but went out of print in 1909. It went through thirty-eight French printings and has now been revised, enlarged, partly rewritten, translated into English, and published in the United States. Dr. Reinach had to rewrite his chapter on 'Christian Origins,' he tells us, because of the discoveries of the letter of Emperor Claudius to the Alexandrians and Jews and of the Slavonic text of Josephus. A final chapter on the period beginning with the World War and including the recent restoration of the Pope's temporal power was also added."—R of Rs

Booklist 26:409 Jl '30
Boston Transcript p2 Ap 2 '30 350w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 81:12 Ap '30 200w
St Louis 28:129 My '30

REISER, ANTON. Albert Einstein: a biographical portrait. 225p il $2.50 Boni
B or 92 Einstein, Albert 30-30300

The biographer of the great German physicist, who is intimately acquainted with Einstein, is more concerned with the tastes and personal habits of his subject than with his inner life or mind, or his great contribution to scientific thought.

"The announcement of a biography of Einstein is an event. Any one interested in understanding humanity would send for the book at once. Mr. Reiser's biography will be disappointing to those who are interested in these larger aspects. The facts are set down and they are illuminating, but the author is far too close to his subject to do more than furnish the factual outline, which must yet be filled in if we are to understand the phenomenon." Gerald Wendt
+ — Books p22 N 23 '30 950w

Reviewed by Edmund Noble
Boston Transcript p5 N 26 '30 2300w

"Reiser's book is most valuable for its biographical facts, particularly for its account of Einstein's precocity. But the Reiser volume is also valuable for its revelations of Einstein's character. The greatest scientific mind of our time seems devoid of vanity or contempt. In his humility, his shyness, his lack of desire for controversy, his generosity and simplicity, he reminds one strikingly of other great scientists, particularly Charles Darwin. Does science breed these virtues in her votaries, or is it only on those who possess these virtues that she showers her richest favors?" Henry Hazlitt
+ Nation 131:553 N 19 '30 1050w

REISER, ANTON—Continued

"This biography has the advantages and the disadvantages of having been written by a man who knows Einstein well. That is at once apparent. The author has been able to tell anecdotes about Einstein, quote passages from a diary of a trip around the world, and present his point of view about matters that were not common knowledge. On the other hand, he does not seem to have felt free to indulge in much analytic criticism. Perhaps he did not want to. At any rate, the result is valuable as a sympathetic account of the scientist's life." C. G. Poore

+ N Y Times p1 D 28 '30 750w

"Herr Reiser has written a most charming book about his friend and master. He gives us a full-length portrait of the man, and he does not omit from his pages a clear and popular description of the scientific contribution of Albert Einstein." Pierre Loving

+ N Y World p3e D 21 '30 1000w

"Straightforward, useful to future and more pretentious biographers of the scientist, written in simple, somewhat didactic style."

Outlook 156:388 N 5 '30 50w

REISER, OLIVER LESLIE. Humanistic logic
2 for the mind in action. 326p $3 Crowell

160 Logic 30-17007

An elementary textbook in logic which attempts a new approach to the subject by humanizing it. Part one treats of this process of humanization; part two, of the relation of logic to the sciences; part three, of how knowledge is organized; and part four, of the way new knowledge is obtained.

Boston Transcript p1 Ag 9 '30 450w

"The book represents a modern approach to the subject, at once scientific and sympathetic, and can be commended to the lay reader. Questions and exercises on the contents render it especially useful to students." N. M. Grier

+ Christian Century 48:29 Ja 7 '31 500w

"Pedagogically, his treatment of scientific method is the best portion of the book. The discussion of formal logic is too technical and contains too little illustrative material for beginners, and the treatment of the relation of logic to the other sciences would, I fear, mean little to a student having a scanty background in this field." E. W. Hall

+ Int J Ethics 41:282 Ja '31 220w

St Louis 28:257 N '30

REITZ, DENEYS. Commando; a Boer journal of the Boer war; with a pref. by J. C. Smuts. (Bonibooks) 313p 50c Boni

968 South African war, 1899-1902—Personal narratives 30-4862

"This remarkable book, written by a 21-year-old boy just after the South African war and now published after the boy has grown into middle life, fought side by side with his old enemies in the World War, and served as a Cabinet Minister and Member of Parliament under the British flag, is far more than an adventure story. . . Deneys Reitz was one of the five sons of a former President of the Orange Free State. At 17 he obtained leave from President Kruger himself to enlist in the Boer Army, and fought straight through until hostilities were ended three years later."—N Y Times

"The book is completely South African, slow moving, gently and simply beautiful in many passages, pleasantly stretching on and on interminably, concerned with neither time nor space. Throughout there are casual sentences of no calculated importance that give the essence and flavor of South Africa. . . Deneys Reitz is to be congratulated on the absence of that Boer bitterness which is still so prevalent in his country. It finds no place in his book." Rebecca Hourwich

+ Books p6 F 16 '30 400w

Boston Transcript p1 Mr 15 '30 450w

"'To me,' says General Smuts in his introduction, 'it is a wonderful book—wonderful in its simplicity and realism, its calm intensity and absorbing human interest.' The present reviewer would not strike out a word of this high commendation. Deneys Reitz's story is tragic, glamourous and moving. It is wholly worthy of the heroic episodes which it so powerfully and so unaffectedly records." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p6 Ja 26 '30 1050w

"Interesting, not only as a tale of adventure, but as a contrast with the flood of books on the Great War now submerging us. The story of the long ride from the Orange Free State to the Cape, through a country swarming with the enemy, is magnificent." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 154:268 F 12 '30 100w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 81:16 Mr '30 100w

"In view of the simple, yet strongly vivid, way in which the story is told, of the thrilling nature of the adventures and hairbreadth perils it recounts, of the revelation it offers of the soul of a people rightly struggling to be free, this book certainly achieves a greatness never before reached in the history of the Boers' fight against overwhelming odds." M. J. C. M.

+ Spec 143:sup673 N 9 '29 1300w

"Colonel Reitz can, with a minimum of detail, present an unforgettable picture. On every page, too, he reveals a fine spirit of modesty and chivalry, while the zest of youth is never wanting."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p837 O 24 '29 1500w

RENARD, MAURICE. Snake of Luvercy; tr. from the French by Florence Crewe-Jones. 283p $2 Dutton

30-30570

This mystery tale by the author of The Hands of Orlac concerns the death of Gilberta Laval's mother at her country home, Luvercy, following the escape of a particularly venomous adder; and the supposedly dual personality of Jean Mareuil, the young Frenchman who is Gilberta's fiancé.

Bookm 72:xxiv N '30 50w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books p14 N 9 '30 150w

"The characters are all individuals and possess characteristics of interest which authors of mystery stories do not habitually bestow upon their puppets. M. Renard conceals his hand exceedingly well, and it is a rare reader who will guess the guilty party until the author explodes his mine."

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '30 250w

Reviewed by Bruce Rae

N Y Times p32 N 30 '30 100w

"Mystery stories from the French are usually poor, and 'The Snake of Luvercy' is no exception. . . The tale would be better reading if the translation were better."

— Sat R of Lit 7:511 Ja 3 '31 100w

REUTER, GABRIELE. Daughters; tr. from the German by Roberts Tapley. 329p $2 Macmillan

30-28631

Family life in post-war Germany is portrayed in Frau Reuter's novel. Dorothea Cardenius brings up two daughters, Petra and Helge, under the traditions of the pre-war régime. Petra the tempestuous, after an unhappy marriage, takes up a public career; Helge, charming and tender, becomes the love-object of a perverted dancer named Lona, who is the cause of her death in a motor accident. The unsettled conditions in Germany just after the war form the background to the story.

"It is an interesting theme, on the whole drearily executed. The story has poignancy, but not as the author tells it." Eugene Lohrke

— + N Y Evening Post p4d N 8 '30 100w

"As a critic of life Frau Reuter handles her ideas well, but she does not capture the true emotional impulses behind her characters. Particularly her men are nothing but grotesque puppets with an array of professional labels." Harold Strauss
— + N Y Times p8 N 23 '30 550w

REYNOLDS, GERTRUDE M. (ROBINS) (MRS LOUIS BAILLIE REYNOLDS). Stranglehold. 308p $1 Doubleday, Doran
30-17704

The sinister mystery that surrounded and kept Kythe Dering prisoner puzzled her lover, Colonel Marsden. But when both met as guests at a house-party in Dartmoor, Kythe was able to communicate some particulars about her difficulties and her fears to Marsden. Detectives from Scotland Yard, in various disguises, came to their assistance. The case, which might have led to murder, turns upon blackmail and the bombing of famous cathedrals, instigated by anti-religious soviets.

Booklist 27:31 S '30
Bookm 71:xx Ag '30 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books p14 Je 22 '30 130w

"There is hardly any doubt about the identity of the criminal after the first hundred pages, but the charm of the English country background, the amusing comedy of the secondary characters, and the excellent sleuthing of the detective in charge hold up the interest until the end—when there is a surprise that bids fair to upset the whole yarn. Another good dollar's worth." W. C. Weber
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1164 Je 28 '30 120w

REYNOLDS, HELEN WILKINSON. Dutch [2] houses in the Hudson Valley before 1776; with an introd. by Franklin D. Roosevelt; prepared under the auspices of the Holland soc. of New York. 468p il $15 Brewer

728 Architecture, Domestic. Architecture, Colonial. Hudson Valley—Historic houses, etc. 30-12391

"A valuable record in text and picture of the Hudson Valley Dutch. The houses, all built before 1776, are studied in detail, and the one hundred and fifty rotogravure plates taken by Margaret de M. Brown have admirably caught the spirit in which the subject of the book was conceived. A complete index of the names of persons and families reads like a roll-call of generations of residents of the Hudson Valley, and renders the text immediately useful. A marked map accompanies the book, showing the exact location of all the houses included in the illustrations."—Publisher's note

"Miss Reynolds's survey represents a round-up of what is left in the Hudson River region, a round-up which is less valuable than it would have been if it had been undertaken fifty years ago. But an undertaking of the sort in another fifty years would have found lean pickings indeed. The photographs are admirable for effects of atmosphere—not always entirely satisfactory in the matters of detail which are important in a work of this sort." H. I. Brock
N Y Times p16 My 11 '30 1450w

"It is honestly just what its title promises, an accurate account of the kind of dwellings erected by the Hudson Valley people before the Revolution; full, complete, detailed as any history of door-knockers. But it will not stay on the library shelf to gather dust along with other histories of details, for Miss Reynolds has understood what the reader begins to understand as he advances in her book, that the history of the human habitations in any region casts much authentic, first-hand light on the people who built them. As honestly self-revelatory as diaries, are the houses of a people." Dorothy Canfield
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1204 Jl 19 '30 700w

REYNOLDS, SIR JOSHUA. Letters; coll. and ed. by Frederick Whiley Hilles. 274p $3.75 Macmillan [10s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

B or 92 Artists—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. [30-12008]

"This collection has been made by F. W. Hilles, a lecturer at Yale, after a rather relentless pursuit, during which he found forty-two letters of Sir Joshua which have not previously been published. The majority was obtained from catalogues of autograph collections and from biographies of Reynolds's contemporaries and are reproduced as written. Where the original letters were not available, or photographs obtainable, Mr. Hilles has printed from the earliest text. . . The collection comprises all the Reynolds letters so far brought to light. In the appendix, Mr. Hilles adds a group of interesting letters written to Reynolds."—N Y Times

"Dr. Hilles is to be congratulated on his care, his labour, his scholarly love of minute accuracy; but when this has been said one cannot help asking whether it is worth while. For Sir Joshua was no letter-writer. He put his pen to paper as seldom as possible, and by far the greater part of his correspondence is dull and uninteresting."
— + Nation and Ath 46:810 Mr 15 '30 480w

"Sir Joshua was a bad letter-writer, but we should be none the less grateful to Dr. Hilles. He has given us an admirable edition. Too many American compilations are overloaded with irrelevant marginalia and editorial loquacity. Here we have only a lucid text and exactly the right amount of notes. Considering the variety of Reynolds's activities and contacts, the worst kind of inflation was to be feared. Instead, we are provided with a compact piece of work which is a very model for editors."
+ New Statesman 34:272 N 30 '29 650w

Reviewed by Edwin Clark
N Y Times p7 Ja 19 '30 1250w

"Dr. Hilles has performed his editorial task with most careful, praiseworthy and obviously loving scholarship."
+ Sat R 149:18 Ja 4 '30 800w

"Not many collections of letters are edited with so much scrupulous care as is Dr. Hilles's edition of Reynolds's letters. . . His edition is certainly a model of its kind."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1023 D 5 '29 1150w

REYNOLDS, M. J. The terror (Eng title: The guillotine; a story of the French revolution). 295p $2 Macmillan [7s 6d Hutchinson]

France—History—Revolution—Fiction
30-21417

Elise, a French aristocrat, is aided by a young American, Bill, to escape the fury of hostile peasants and enter Paris. While the Revolution is at its height in Paris, she becomes Mme Tussaud's assistant in making death-masks of the guillotined victims. It is Bill himself who manages to save Elise from the guillotine.

Bookm 72:x O '30 100w
Books p32 S 28 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p3 S 20 '30 250w

"Considered as a historical novel, 'The Terror' leaves much to be desired. The heroine who tells the story has a series of hairbreadth escapes sufficiently well described to hold the attention, yet one's heart never misses a beat. There is little depth to the character drawing, neither hero nor villain quite achieving the semblance of life. The love interest is negligible. On the other hand, vignettes of historic personages are very well done, as are scenes like that of the doomed prisoners in the Conciergerie whiling away the few remaining hours with burlesques of trials and executions."
— + N Y Times p7 S 21 '30 500w

REYNOLDS, M. J.—Continued

"Quite a lot of blood in this book, and while we ordinarily like blood in shockers, there's something about the introduction of blood for its own sake that shocks us unpleasantly. Nor did we quite like or believe in the lack of emotion with which Elise, in her early teens, saw brutal murders committed." W. R. Brooks

— Outlook 155:678 Ag 27 '30 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p893 O 30 '30 180w

REYNOLDS, W. F. R. Fly and minnow; common problems of trout and salmon fishing. 156p il $5 Scribner [10s 6d Country life]

799.1 Fishing. Trout fishing. Salmon fishing [30-30587]

The technical aspects of equipment and its handling, and problems of habitat, weather, etc. in connection with trout and salmon fishing, are taken up by a master of the sport. Illustrated with drawings and diagrams by the author.

"A jolly book, and, if the art of angling can be acquired from the printed word, it is a useful book."

+ Spec 144:1012 Je 21 '30 250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p640 Ag 7 '30 450w

REZNIKOFF, CHARLES. By the waters of Manhattan; with an introd. by Louis Untermeyer. (Paper bks) 255p pa 50c Boni 30-17445

Sarah Yetta Volsky, a Russian Jewess, whose family struggled against poverty and oppression, came to America at the age of twenty, found work as a garment maker, and married. The second part of the novel takes up the fortunes of the eldest son of her marriage, Ezekiel, owner of a book store in Greenwich village.

"To the very small body of books about Jewish life, Mr. Reznikoff's 'By the Water of Manhattan' adds substance and beauty. I cannot recall any book that gives so clear, so unemotional a presentation. The book stands out among the interesting and important books of recent years; and considered in the light of an understanding of Jewish life, its publication is an event to be grateful for." Isidor Schneider

Books p3 Jl 20 '30 780w

"The story of Sarah Yetta and Saul and their children is told with a simple unassuming candor—a kind of saga-like avoidance of all save the essentials demanded by picture and narrative. In the second half of the book, which deals with the boy Ezekiel, this almost intoned simplicity relaxes, and there are flashes of beauty." M. S. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 2 '30 230w

"Mr. Reznikoff gives one an exact and vivid picture of Jewish life in old Russia. He is intelligent and sensitive. But to revitalize so old a story, to engage one's emotions actively in behalf of quite average people, he needs a keener, more discriminating sense of character than he possesses."

— + N Y Times p6 Jl 27 '30 630w

"The novel is not more than promising. Its structural faults are great, and annoying, too. . . Charles Reznikoff has little creative force and no great powers of characterization. Where he writes of Ezekiel, himself, perhaps, he puts a rounded character into print. But his other characters are not solid and show a lack of understanding for emotions outside his own experience. Furthermore, his lack of a sense of form may hamper him. But his strong feeling for color and his ability to get color into his writing, and his capacity for letting the pictures in his memory come pouring off the end of his pen make his book worth reading and his talent worth watching." F. L. Robbins

— + Outlook 155:468 Jl 23 '30 250w

"You will find flaws in 'By the Waters of Manhattan.' But as a whole work it is genuine and sensitive, with roots in actual living, and power to move." Leonard Ehrlich

+ — Sat R of Lit 7:39 Ag 9 '30 620w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 24 '30 150w

RHETT, MRS BLANCHE S. 200 years of Charleston cooking; ed. by Lettie Gay; introd. and explanatory matter by Helen Woodward. 289p il $2.75 Cape

641.5 Cookery

"Charleston cooking," writes Helen Woodward in the introduction to this unique cook book, "is like nothing else in the world." It is a heritage from the French Huguenots who settled in the city but has been improved upon by clever Negro cooks. The nearly 400 recipes in this book, gathered from old Charleston families and their cooks, have been tested and standardized in the kitchen of the New York Herald-Tribune institute.

Booklist 27:54 O '30

Reviewed by R. D. Cox

Books p16 Je 29 '30 680w

"They are not merely recipes—each is made personal by a little story of its history and sometimes we are made acquainted with some of the delightful personages of the town. If this little book does not make a good press-agent for Charleston, it will be because the public is charm-proof."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 25 '30 250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p123 S '30

N Y Times p26 Je 1 '30 200w

St Louis 28:211 S '30

RHODE, JOHN, pseud. See Street, C. J. C.

RHYNE, JENNINGS JEFFERSON. Some southern cotton mill workers and their villages. (Univ. of N.C. Social study ser.) 214p $2.50 Univ. of N.C. press

331.7677 Labor and laboring classes—North Carolina. North Carolina—Social conditions. Cotton growing and manufacture. Gaston county, North Carolina 30-9945

"Mr. Rhyne's book is the result of his personal, first-hand study of 500 families, comprising over 2,000 individuals, selected in a way to make them representative of North Carolina mill villages. He considered these villages as to location, size, form of government and tendencies toward paternalism and thus found that they resolved into four distinct types. From each type—the cotton mill town, the company or unincorporated mill town, the suburban mill village and the rural mill village—he selected a proportionate number of the 500 families to be surveyed, choosing those that were representative of all the phases of character, life and conditions furnished by each locality. Thus he endeavored to make his study an adequate portrayal of the heart of the textile area of North Carolina."—N Y Times

Reviewed by Broadus Mitchell

Am Econ R 20:527 S '30 650w

Books p15 Ag 31 '30 380w

Reviewed by A. W. Taylor

Christian Century 47:1486 D 3 '30 250w

"Dr. Rhyne's realistic description of the life of the North Carolina cotton-mill workers in their villages is important as a basis of judgment of future developments and policies. His sample is statistically adequate, and he has examined the social and economic characteristics of the groups and individuals with accuracy and ingenuity." Broadus Mitchell

+ Nation 130:550 My 7 '30 500w

"Mr. Rhyne is a native and through all his youth and young manhood was a resident of Gaston County, and therefore was well equipped from the start to make such a searching portrayal as this by his intimate knowledge of the characteristics and the spirit of the region. . . He has spent several years upon the collection, study and presentation of his material, and his book makes a beginning, as a concrete study, for a much needed wide survey of the cotton mill situation in the South."

+ N Y Times p10 Ap 20 '30 380w

St Louis 28:206 S '30

"If there is a criticism to be made of the study, it might be that it seems to lean too much toward the official statement of the case and to assess too little the attitude of the worker himself."

+ — Springf'd Republican p12 Ap 30 '30 400w

Reviewed by M. F. Nunn

Survey 65:101 O 15 '30 400w

RHYS, ERNEST, and SCOTT, MRS CATHARINE AMY (DAWSON), eds. Mainly horses. 384p $2.50 Appleton

Animals—Legends and stories. Horses—Legends and stories 29-14873

A selection of some thirty tales by English and American authors which recount the adventures of horses, dogs, elephants, baboons and other animals, including wasps and ants. Among the authors of the stories are Booth Tarkington, William Beebe, Percival Gibbon, Percy MacKaye, Carl Akeley, A. E. Coppard and Albert Payson Terhune.

Booklist 26:72 N '29

"Here one finds some thirty tales by authors as dissimilar as Percy MacKaye and Herbert Ravenel Sass, or as A. E. Coppard and Booth Tarkington, or as Ivan Turgenev and Carl Akeley. Oddly enough, one of the most fascinating items in the book is not fiction at all; it is William Beebe's account of the home life of army ants."

+ Books p10 D 29 '29 130w

"Most of the stories turn on the tragic note which possibly enhances their credibility. One or two, however, are humorous in nature—a wise provision—for the book as a whole is somewhat heavy and needs the lighter touch which these give."

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 18 '29 220w

Times [London] Lit Sup p103 F 6 '30 280w

Wis Lib Bul 25:374 N '29

2 RHYS, ERNEST, and SCOTT, MRS CATHARINE AMY (DAWSON), eds. Tales from far and near. 286p $3 (7s 6d) Appleton

Short stories—Collections 30-24846

An anthology of short stories representing the work of authors of many lands. Among the internationally known writers included are: Achmed Abdullah, Cecil Mann, Karel Capek, John Galsworthy, André Maurois, Thomas Mann, Liam O'Flaherty, Knut Hamsun, Maxim Gorky, Halidé Edib, Olive Schreiner, Mary Austin, Willa Cather, and Zona Gale.

Booklist 27:164 D '30

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 80w

"The collection of stories from all parts of the world here brought together is certainly varied and exciting, even if they do not all reach the same level of literary achievement. The editors have succeeded in selecting examples typical of various countries from whose literature they are taken. In their search for the 'lastingly good' they have, perhaps, concentrated too much upon the elementary, or as some would call it the primitive in theme, but there are, of course, exceptions, and many of the tales will serve well as an introduction to little known authors or literatures."

+ — Spec 145:952 D 13 '30 120w

RICE, CALE YOUNG. Early reaping. 314p $2.50 Century 29-19523

Clive Howell, the product of two generations of unfortunate marriages, repeats as a young man the mistakes of his parents by marrying Willa Bain, a selfish and weak-charactered young woman. Meanwhile Clive's father, always a ne'er-do-well, is convicted of crime and put in the state prison. Clive's secret marriage goes from bad to worse, and he has a difficult time getting free from the entanglement so that he can marry his new and ideal love, Sylvia.

Bookm 71:xxv Ap '30 100w

"It is all most unsatisfying, in its substance as well as in its manner. Mr. Rice has something of a reputation among younger poets, and once in a while we glimpse something of his sensitive spirit, but the evident desire to show the effect of mismating and heredity on the boy's life has been lost perhaps through a certain inertia of this same spirit." M. M.

— Boston Transcript p12 D 14 '29 370w

Cleveland Open Shelf p13 Ja '30

"Strange as it may seem, 'Early Reaping' is not a novel gloomy with lost souls. In fact it isn't hopeless at all, but full of that bright optimism, or spiritual hope, of the sort that finds prohibition working perfection. For in 'Early Reaping' things are lighted by radiance from Sylvia's pure soul. In the end, Clive turns to her, and that makes everything all right. It is not a convincing story."

— N Y Times p30 N 24 '29 180w

"The novel is uneven. Mr. Rice unflinchingly presents the tragic elements necessary to his story, but then he too often relents and loosens the tension with some idealization of life or love, an idealization which is not forceful or convincing enough to resolve the bitter compound he has made. When Mr. Rice is the observer and analyst, and sometimes when he is the interpreter, he might take his place beside the better realists of today. But when he philosophizes, or permits his philosophy to sift through the action and characters, he blurs his effects and slips most contradictorily into rather an 'uplift' attitude."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:678 Ja 25 '30 300w

RICE, CALE YOUNG. Seed of the moon. 122p $2 Century [7s 6d Hodder]

811 29-23335

This volume contains two melodramatic narrative poems, Life goes on, and Lorna Quade, and a number of brief lyrics describing the simple manifestations of nature.

"The two long narratives which make up part of 'Seed of the Moon' are full of the stress and fury of human beings caught in emotional situations. The poems have the flavor of melodrama and move fast; Mr. Rice's rhythmic line is easy in its flow. In the book's shorter lyrics, however, the reader finds a more genuinely appealing verse. Melodrama and its false ring do not intrude here—only a countryman's simple, lyric awe and wonder at life."

Books p16 Mr 23 '30 140w

Cleveland Open Shelf p92 Je '30

"The Tennessee poet writes of people and for people with a homely negligence which has an apparent naturalness, even if perhaps a little consciously assumed. He likes the more simple manifestations of nature—rain, wheat growing, the surf rolling up the beach. Mr. Rice is not a profound thinker, and it is our guess that he prefers not to be one, feeling, perhaps, that he who pursues thought too far loses contact with his neighbors." Percy Hutchison

N Y Times p22 F 2 '30 380w

St Louis 28:107 Ap '30

"Mr. Rice is of the older school of poets. His tradition is fundamentally classical. He is honestly preoccupied with simplicity, though he is often inclined to say certain old things in obviously old ways. He exercises admirable control and is an evidently competent craftsman." David McCord

+ Sat R of Lit 7:22 Ag 2 '30 280w

"Listening to his poetry we are caught into its motion and carried along most agreeably and with a certain persuasive inevitability. But its meaning is so little concentrated that it seldom penetrates beyond the suburbs of mind and sense. This defect is particularly noticeable in his lyrics."

RICE, C. Y.—Continued
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p146 F 20 '30 200w

RICE, ELMER L. See Naples and die. 182p $2
2 French
812 30-5142

A comedy in three acts, by the author of Street Scene. The scene is laid on the terrace of the Albergo-Pensione de' Medici near Sorrento. The story, patterned much in the manner of comic opera, concerns the dilemma of Nanette, an American heiress who has married a blackmailing Russian prince and is trying to get rid of him. Charlie, a valiant young American, and two equally valiant Rumanian patriots, come to the aid of charming Nanette.

Booklist 27:198 Ja '31

"Elmer Rice, in 'Street Scene' and 'The Adding Machine,' showed himself a dramatist of ability and of humanitarian passion. In 'See Naples and Die' he is merely a second rate deviser of unreal and would-be comic complications. It is a sad feature of our theater that men who have a talent to develop are tempted into byways of ephemeral popularity—and usually in vain." W. P. Eaton
— Books p24 O 26 '30 80w
St Louis 28:215 S '30

RICE, ELMER L. Voyage to Purilia. 298p $2.50
Cosmopolitan bk.
30-7191

"A satire on moving picture art. The story tells of a voyage by plane to the planet Purilia, where the atmosphere is a rosy, sweetish mist, and the people are standardized emotional types who move thru waves of music and act according to the pronouncements of an impersonal voice, the Presence. The Purilians are not equipped with digestive or reproductive organs, apparently; and the act of marriage results in a supreme smile of bliss on the face of participants, followed by complete annihilation.

"The author of 'Street Scene,' in a moment of giddiness or perhaps of ennui, has brought forth a fledgling satire. But it does not flutter into print on wings of fantasy. It belongs to that recent flock of fantasies which, without élan and without lightness, swoop from the heights of a tenuous mockery to the depths of a gangling burlesque. . . He who walks so well on the pavement should not attempt to fly." V. P. Ross
— Books p17 Mr 9 '30 600w
Cleveland Open Shelf p112 Jl '30

"Mr. Rice's satire is admirably sustained, with its intricate plot, its absurd solemnity, and its mordacious irony. He has surmounted what must have been enormous difficulties with such apparent ease that never for a moment does the writing threaten to go off key. It is to be hoped that the motion pictures acquire the rights." F. T. Marsh
+ Nation 130:426 Ap 9 '30 300w

"It is a short book, gracefully and gaily written." Hubert Griffith
+ New Statesman 35:764 S 27 '30 250w

Reviewed by Ben Wasson
N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 8 '30 500w

"Here in a satire which is both nimble-witted and pervasive, and which at times attains the implacable complexity of a nightmare, the author of 'Street Scene' pays his respects to that planet known to astronomers as Purilia. This is satire of a high order, so high that it at times suggests the Golden Ass of Apuleius, so consummate as to be a little too good for its subject." John Carter
+ N Y Times p2 Mr 23 '30 1500w

"The book is a gorgeous satire. It is subtle. It is full of humor and innuendo." Bellamy Partridge
+ N Y World p11m Mr 16 '30 350w

"Unfortunately, the hackneyed devices of producers at Hollywood do not provide enough material for 288 pages of sober irony, and Mr. Rice did not make us laugh."
— Sat R 150:318 S 13 '30 420w

"The story is quite amusing, and there are a few delightful 'hits.' But the book is too long drawn out, and its humour, on the whole, is too broad and explicit."
— + Spec 145:808 N 22 '30 180w
Springf'd Republican p7e My 11 '30 350w
Times [London] Lit Sup p717 S 11 '30 230w

RICE, MRS LOUISE (GUEST). By whose
2 hand? 381p $2 Macaulay
30-31596

The science of graphology plays an important part in this story of murder and international intrigue.

Bookm 72:xxvi D '30 100w

"Enter Mary Smith, noted graphologist, who unriddles murders by analyzing specimens of handwriting. . . Miss Rice gets full measure of incident into her thriller, and her graphological sleuth is something of a novelty." Will Cuppy
+ Books p10 D 21 '30 130w
Boston Transcript p2 D 27 '30 260w

"It's exciting in spite of its errors—and they are many and incredibly stupid—and in spite of the fact that it is two times too long, and very badly written." W. R. Brooks
— + Outlook 156:585 D 10 '30 120w

RICHARDSON, EDWIN HAUTONVILLE. Forty years with dogs. 288p il $5 McKay [21s Hutchinson]
636.7 Dogs. Dogs—Training [30-19169]

An interesting account of one man's experiences in the study and training of dogs. Colonel Richardson tells how he came to take up this work, and how he has trained various breeds of dogs for special tasks. The final chapter describes the work of police and messenger dogs during the war.

Christian Science Monitor p7 Ag 30 '30 100w
N Y Times p18 O 26 '30 300w

RICHARDSON, HENRY HANDEL, pseud. Australia felix (Eng title: Fortunes of Richard Mahony). 483p $2.50 Norton
30-4660

A small edition of this book was previously published in the United States under the title, "The fortunes of Richard Mahony" (Book Review Digest, 1917). The success of the author's "Ultima Thule," third in the trilogy of which "Australia Felix," in the first, has led to its reprinting. Richard Mahony first appears as a young man coming from Ireland to Australia at the time of its gold rush. He marries the sixteen-year old Mary Turnham, and after a trial at storekeeping, returns to his profession of medicine. Richard builds up a successful practice, but already he has begun to show signs of the weakness which is to develop so tragically in "Ultima Thule." Restless and depressed, unable to adapt himself to his environment, he turns his back on Australia and boards ship for the old country.

Reviewed by Mary Ross
Atlantic Bookshelf p22 Je '30 120w
Booklist 26:242 Mr '30

"A fine, sweeping narrative which contains some memorable descriptive passages. It affords us an unforgettable picture of the development of Australia, the gigantic chaos of the gold rush, and the growth of an immature society. But, as a unit in the history of Richard Mahony, it lacks the power and inevitability of Ultima Thule." Margaret Wallace
+ Bookm 71:101 Mr '30 220w

"'Australia Felix' is the exception which proves the rule that an old book should never be re-issued to float on the success of a later one. It is every whit as sure, as rich and as simple as 'Ultima Thule,' though it has not the fullness of tragedy reserved for the climax of the concluding volume." Mary Ross

+ Books p4 Ja 26 '30 1400w

"Written in the staid, conservative manner of the later nineteenth century, it nevertheless radiates quiet power, imaginative color and the ability to paint unforgettable pictures both of men and of places." W. E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 19 '30 1350w

Cath World 131:759 S '30 250w

Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 22 '30 450w

Reviewed by Henry Hazlitt

Nation 130:153 F 5 '30 850w

"New readers have the privilege of beginning, with this volume, a trilogy of novels that is certain to be acknowledged of large importance in the prose literature of this time." W. B.

+ New Repub 62:80 Mr 5 '30 350w

Reviewed by Vincent McHugh

N Y Evening Post p11m My 3 '30 360w

"'Australia Felix' is not quite so moving or so full of human pity as 'Ultima Thule,' but it bears all the marks of the same writer, it is no less ripe in knowledge of human beings, and no less sure in its presentation of that knowledge." Louis Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p9 Ja 26 '30 1200w

"To me, as a specialist in Australian literature, 'The Fortunes of Richard Mahony' is of immense importance. It is by far the most important piece of literature having its setting in Australia that has yet been produced." C. H. Grattan

+ N Y World p10m F 9 '30 750w

"Henry Handel Richardson's work is not dated, not typical of twentieth century fiction. The art of its composition is so pure that it is imperceptible. In these days when readers are so generally interested in the mechanics of the writer's craft such work refreshes one's knowledge that the delineation of man's inner nature is not a question of new methods in psychology, the portrayal of his struggle against fate not a matter of changing fashions in prose." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 154:186 Ja 29 '30 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:23 Mr '30

Pratt p41 summer '30

"'Australia Felix' is a considerable piece of work. Throughout, the mind of its author never nods; every possibility of theme and background is realized; every difficulty envisaged and guarded against. And though it is only a fragment, it never seems purposeless or disproportionate. It is a little too deliberate, its characters do not move of their own accord, its descriptions show more observation than imagination. It never sounds the authentic note of a first-hand creative imagination." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 148:302 S 14 '29 500w

"The novel is like the first act of a good play: events have taken place, but their significance is not yet visible; characters have been laid bare, but implicit difficulties and stresses have been neither solved nor relieved. However, in spite of this essential and necessary incompleteness, 'Australia Felix' can be read by itself with a good deal of satisfaction. There are no loose ends, except the one great, central loose end of character." R. B. Macdougall

+ Sat R of Lit 6:773 Mr 1 '30 1150w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 9 '30 850w

"Within the circumference of this novel a whole world moves, not on the periphery alone, but created from vital sources that make even small actions significant. The same simplicity, profound and true, welling out of the human heart, weighted by circumstance, fraught with mystery, likens this work to the major Russian novelists. It is the writing of one who has pondered deeply, yet who has chosen to chronicle with insight rather than to philosophize at random over the secrets of an insoluble and invincible fate." Halle Schaffner

+ Survey 64:35 Ap 1 '30 350w

RICHARDSON, HENRY HANDEL, pseud. Maurice Guest. rev ed 566p $2.50 Norton
30-24056

A republication of one of the author's earlier books (Book Review Digest, 1909). The scene is mainly in Leipzig. It is the story of a young English musical student's love for a passionate and faithless woman, and his final ruin and suicide on her account.

Booklist 27:117 N '30

"No one has depicted so ably as Henry Handel Richardson the bitterness and irony of failure. The chronicles of Maurice Guest and Richard Mahony will endure side by side as records of brilliant and pitifully wasted lives. But Richard Mahony is undoubtedly the greater characterization. The tortured and hypersensitive doctor is a less appealing figure than the romantic musician, but he is infinitely better conceived and more completely realized."

+ — Bookm 72:72 S '30 580w

"'Maurice Guest' is as whole, as alive and as impersonal as the view from a headland looking out to sea." Mary Ross

+ Books p29 N 16 '30 600w

"'Maurice Guest' comes back in a new edition which should remind the reading public of the value of absolute aesthetic integrity. Such integrity has become so rare a commodity that Henry Handel Richardson's name may stand secure in any record of modern fiction. She has triumphantly survived the test of a revival within her own lifetime, and has restored to the English novel the quality of compassion which, though long surrendered to Continental writers, is really its own proper heritage." M. D. Zabel

+ Nation 131:380 O 8 '30 900w

"'Maurice Guest' is a masterly work. . . . We can only hope that the reissuance of Mrs. Richardson's book after so many years can have some significance in our day when the pathetic is still too often mistaken for the genuinely tragic." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p4d D 27 '30 200w

RICHARDSON, HENRY HANDEL, pseud. The way home. 321p $2.50 Norton
30-10981

The middle volume of the trilogy takes up the story of Richard Mahony where Australia Felix left it, with Richard's decision to give up his comfortable practice in Ballarat and return to England. Once back in the old country, which in absence he had idealized, he is disappointed. He dislikes England and English conservatism. Australia has become home to him, so back he goes. Arrived there he finds himself a rich man, thanks to some profitable mining shares. He buys a home, Ultima Thule. Life expands. Three children are born. But Richard's restlessness will not be stilled. He takes his family to travel on the continent, and in Venice the crash comes. Faced with financial ruin, Richard again leaves for Australia, to be followed by Mary and the children.

Reviewed by Mary Ross

Atlantic Bookshelf p22 Je '30 120w

Booklist 26:358 Je '30

"Mrs. Richardson has not been writing about people and places; with that infinite taking of pains which may be the hands of genius, and the breadth and depth of understanding which are surely its soul, she has been slowly creating them. For me they exist more vividly than the little girl who is bouncing her ball this minute on the pavement across the way." Mary Ross

+ Books p8 Ap 13 '30 850w

Boston Transcript p2 My 21 '30 660w

"It has been objected that the story is too tragic, too packed with woe, that no single life could know such an accumulation of sorrow.

RICHARDSON, H. H., pseud—Continued
To that we can only reply that they have been blessed in their experience who can say so. It is true, however, that the gloom is unrelieved by anything like humor and that is the one respect in which Miss Richardson falls short." B. M. K.

Cath World 131:759 S '30 250w

Christian Science Monitor p12 Ap 19 '30 650w

"'The Way Home' is probably the most important single piece of literature ever to come out of Australia; it takes its place among the handful of fiction masterpieces in English that have so far appeared in this century. . . The character portrayal, particularly of Mary and Richard, but of many of the minor figures as well, is masterly. . . Mahony, in the eyes of the world, never becomes distinguished; he dies a failure, even a madman; yet we never lose sight of his inner nobility and latent powers, and when we rise from this chronicle, life itself seems to have gained something in significance." Henry Hazlitt

+ Nation 130:548 My 7 '30 750w

"Any comparisons that might be made concerning 'The Way Home' and its predecessors would be irrelevant, for the three books are, to an unprecedented degree, identical in materials, treatment and tragic portent. It is this consummate unity which enabled the trilogy to survive the illogical order of its appearance." N. L. R.

+ New Repub 63:214 Jl 9 '30 250w

Reviewed by Vincent McHugh

N Y Evening Post p11m My 3 '30 360w

"Now that their whole tale is told, husband and wife stand fully revealed before us. They are utterly real to a measureless, unfading extent, as people can never be in life but only as, without secrets and hidden corners on their part and without blind spots and dulled sensibilities on ours, they appear to us occasionally in fiction. Their life together, founded on a love that affirms the value of existence, is what gives this work all its unstressed but singular pathos and beauty and what stirs in us that deep response which we call the spiritual force of true literature." Louis Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 27 '30 600w

Reviewed by Gertrude Diamant

N Y World p11m Ap 27 '30 800w

"There is no social criticism here, no propaganda, no mood, no fine writing. There is wisdom and pity and truth and the essence of art. The characters in Henry Handel Richardson's novel take on for us such reality, that her book becomes not so much a novel as a history of friends whom we loved and over whose fate we brood and grieve. To those who read the end of the tale before the beginning, this reality became, as they read backwards, pain. They wanted to fend off that end, to warn those friends, to take the part of Richard and Mary Mahony against their pitiful but inexorable historian." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 154:706 Ap 30 '30 450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:40 My '30

Pratt p41 summer '30

"There is no need to restate in detail the excellence of the characterizations in the Mahony novels, the strength of the style, the vividness of the Australian background. In this book, as in the other two, Mahony is a profoundly moving figure, tragic and universal. He evokes the Aristotelian pity and terror; he is in many ways Everyman, and hence he strikes close home to each one of us. To read the trilogy from first page to last is a vastly satisfying emotional experience."

+ Sat R of Lit 7:12 Jl 26 '30 320w

RICHARDSON, HILARY GOODE. Life and the Book. 179p $1.75 Macmillan

220 Bible.Whole 29-22407

This record of a spiritual adventure relates the effect the reading and study of the Bible had upon the author during the various stages of his life: as a boy, as a student, and as a minister of the gospel.

"The author of this interesting book has written a kind of confession of the influence at various stages of his life which the Bible has had upon him. The confession is a kind of spiritual adventure in those vast realms that record the history of a people who, under a special dispensation, walked with God."

+ Boston Transcript p10 N 30 '29 320w

"A straightforward, simple, concise presentation to those intelligent readers of today who neglect the Bible to their loss. The reason for their neglect is given added piquancy by the personal narrative that threads the book. The author's intellectual eagerness in the thorough scholarship that compelled him warrants the most sympathetic appreciation of the sane and wholesome point of view he gives of the contribution of the Bible to literature, history and religion. There is an excellent bibliography." L. L. R.

+ Churchman p15 D 28 '29 70w

Reviewed by J. G. Matthews

Crozer Q 7:138 Ja '30 320w

"In some respects the volume is suggestive and perhaps even stimulating. At the same time, the reviewer cannot escape the impression that the author has been more successful in revealing the irritation of his own experience than in describing the experience in such a way as to be helpful for others whose early relations to the Bible have been somewhat similar to his own and who are endeavoring to work through the problems for themselves. If Mr. Richardson could have preserved, both in his own experience and in the composition of the book, a more equable temperament and a more sympathetic reaction as his life was being remade, a book he might then have produced would doubtless have been of distinct assistance to many. One can only hope the present book will be that." F. G. Lewis

— + J Religion 10:405 Jl '30 420w

RICHBERG, DONALD RANDALL. Tents of the mighty; with a foreword by Paul U. Kellogg. 267p il $2.50 Willett

973.91 United States—Politics and government. United States—Social conditions. Progressive party 30-19070

As a "flaming youth" in 1902, as a man who helped form and direct the activities of the Progressive party in 1912, and as a lawyer of national reputation, Mr Richberg is well qualified to write this chronicle of the social and political development of the country during the last thirty years. He describes, as he has known them, the leaders in national life: Roosevelt, Newton Baker, Michelson, LaFollette, Jane Addams, Bryan and others. The final chapter contains a discussion of the situation today.

"In spite of Paul Kellogg's foreword which describes this book as a 'fascinating prose ballad of the leadership of yesterday,' I find this account of the generation of 'progressives' which preceded my own neither good humored nor epic. And yet the book is a document which will summon memories to many readers who took part in the movements and events he describes and will agitate as with tambourines many of the discontented middle class. I regard more highly than I did before I read this book and the Trotzky memoirs the Russian taboo against memoirs in general." Ernestine Evans

— Books p13 Ag 3 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 30 '30 450w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 64:185 O 1 '30 850w

"Having been more or less intimately associated with many of the Progressive leaders of the second decade of the century, Mr. Richberg's sketches and glimpses of them in action are vivid and interesting. He writes in a lively, rather impressionistic style, with touches of sardonic humor and disillusioned realism, and his book, although it is largely personal in its approach to its theme, is a valuable contribution to the history of the Progressive movement."

+ N Y Times p26 My 25 '30 400w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 82:8 Ag '30 120w
St Louis 28:219 S '30

"From the first to the last page his is a fascinating prose ballad of the leadership of yesterday and today, shot through with prophetic glimpses of the future that may well inspire others to follow the 'new captaincies' under whose standards he hopes that mankind may yet realize some of its 'old dreams.' Whether they agree or disagree with his philosophy, readers of every variety of social and political faith will enjoy this racy, good-humored tale which he describes with ironic inaccuracy as the biography of an Unknown Soldier." P. U. Kellogg
+ Survey 64:238 Je 1 '30 1000w

Reviewed by H. Y. Williams
World Tomorrow 13:521 D '30 450w

RICHMOND, MRS GRACE LOUISE (SMITH). High fences. 343p $1 Doubleday, Doran 30-17708

Two writers, David MacRoss who loved the country, and Ross Collins who loved the city, met at a dinner party and the conflict began. Many chapters later they decide to declare an armistice and live happily ever afterwards.

Booklist 27:106 N '30
Books p23 S 14 '30 150w
Boston Transcript p5 N 1 '30 250w

"In spite of dim characterization, the book is passably entertaining, refrains from screeching or twittering when the temptation is keenest and is fully worth the cost of a dollar." E. C. B.
+ — N Y Evening Post p5s Jl 5 '30 150w

"A typical Grace S. Richmond story, but one which lacks this author's customary lightness of touch. The characters of both locales are charming, motivated only by the nobler sentiments; they move through the pages only to state a thesis. David particularly fails to come alive. The reader is told again and again of his charm, that he is beloved by those of both the city and the country, but he remains a rather heavy person of stodgy virtues."
— + N Y Times p16 Jl 20 '30 170w
Pratt p39 autumn '30

"Though Mrs. Richmond's plot is highly elementary, it is not quite bad enough to be silly. Minor characters are sometimes well conceived, and certain details of background come out clearly. These qualities, together with a careful avoidance of all reference to sex or other supposedly unpleasant aspects of human life, will doubtless make this novel a typical Richmond succes."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:1195 Jl 12 '30 150w

"There are many good character sketches of village worthies, but a little malice now and then would enliven a book kindly almost to excess."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p785 O 2 '30 180w

RICKERT, EDITH. Severn woods. 344p $2.50 Harcourt
30-7106

Olwen Bream lived with her father, the village doctor, in a small settlement on the outskirts of the Severn woods. Her early years were spent contentedly in reading, riding in the forest, and gardening, but at twenty-four she began to wish for the life beyond the forest. Then Anthony Kingsland returned to his ruined estate nearby. That was the beginning of a new life for Olwen, ending, after much soul searching, in love and marriage.

"Olwen's love for Anthony is of that unswerving variety which seems, in literature at least, to be forever bestowed upon the undeserving. Miss Rickert has made her a lovely, living character, compounded of spring and the spirit of the ancient forests. The beauty of the book is attained largely through the unity of its conception; it is so wholly Olwen and her Severn Woods."
+ Books p19 My 4 '30 380w

"With all its conscious workmanship, 'Severn Woods' keeps the boldness of outline and frankness of detail which Miss Rickert's work never lacks." R. M. L.
New Repub 64:108 S 10 '30 200w

"'Severn Woods' is disappointing; it lacks vitality; in its attempt to encompass a larger spirit, there is a heaviness, a dragging, an unwillingness to allow the reader imaginative scope. The narrative is impeded by warnings of an impending calamity. The descriptions, however, are exceedingly well-written."
— + N Y Times p22 Mr 9 '30 400w

"Miss Rickert chooses to deal with petty foibles and selfishness rather than with love or any other passion except purely physical desire. There is no nobility in either character. Despite the modern terms of physical necessity their attitude is the merest romanticism, and romanticism trying to cope with an unshaven husband at breakfast may be pitiful, but it is not thrilling, while a whole book of such struggles is depressing and monotonous." Catherine Woodbridge
— Sat R of Lit 6:1127 Je 14 '30 600w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 27 '30 320w

RIDDELL, MRS FLORENCE. House of the dey; a story of Algiers. 307p $2 Lippincott [7s 6d Bles]
30-8780

The story of Anne Boyce, whose descendants looked up to her as the perfect embodiment of Victorian womanly virtues. They did not know that grandmother Anne had spent three years of her youth in a Turkish harem, two years of that time as the reigning favorite of the Dey of Algiers. Nor did they know that Anne had committed murder, not once but twice, for the sake of her English lover. No one knew but the man who tells the story, and he never passed it on to spoil the reputation of "prim grandmother Anne."

"A tall tale, intended but to amuse and, if possible, to shock."
Books p19 My 4 '30 100w
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 5 '30 250w

"These adventures, told in a quiet and commonplace fashion are rather oddly decked at either end with a more melodramatic account of the narrator's knowledge of her secondary exploits. We learn that she married and murdered a dull and unfaithful Englishman, attempted for a second time the conquest of Christopher Slade, and was considered a very restricted person by her grandchildren. The shifting of focus from her time to ours is not a success."
Times [London] Lit Sup p1061 D 12 '29 160w

RIDDELL, JOHN, pseud. See Ford C.

RIDGE, LOLA. Firehead. 218p $2.50 Brewer
811 30-1145
For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

Booklist 26:231 Mr '30
Boston Transcript p3 Ja 25 '30 520w
Cath World 130:763 Mr '30 380w

Reviewed by Raymond Kresensky
Christian Century 47:758 Je 11 '30 200w
Cleveland Open Shelf p105 Jl '30

"The power of the poet's imagination, the beauty of innumerable passages, and the sus-

RIDGE, LOLA—Continued
tained force of the poem as a whole impress the most critical reader as evidences of an uncommon talent." Granville Hicks
+ — Nation 130:303 Mr 12 '30 470w

"What she has done is to penetrate the material with the recreative power of her imagination, tempered and informed by her own suffering. As a result, an old story, long since made almost meaningless by repetition, acquires the personal significance of immediate experience." Granville Hicks
+ N Y World p10m Ja 12 '30 620w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:14 F '30

"The opening section of about an hundred and fifty lines, entitled He, seems to me quite wonderful in its suggestion of slow remorseless pain strained beyond pain, so to speak, into a void where feeling ceases. . . Her rhythms move swiftly as a rule, sometimes in long, swinging lines, almost Hebraic in their movement, again in blank verse or even lyric rhyming measures. Thus she sustains the grandeur of the subject without monotony, and carries in responsive measures its changing moods and passing procession of characters." H. M.
+ Poetry 36:36 Ap '30 1270w
St Louis 28:107 Ap '30
Reviewed by V. D. Scudder
World Tomorrow 14:26 Ja '31 480w

RIEGEL, ROBERT EDGAR. America moves ^{2} west. 595p $3.75; student's ed $3 Holt
978 West—History. Mississippi Valley—History 30-22384

In this history of the ever westward moving America Professor Riegel covers a period of more than two hundred years—the first slow movement to the Appalachian barrier, the more rapid progress to the Mississippi river, and the rush to California. The author stresses the social and economic elements which influenced the move from frontier to frontier and marked the character of the frontier settlements. In his final chapters, on the now-vanished frontiers, Professor Riegel suggests that new outlets must be found for those restless and adventuresome people who, up to the present, could pack their kits and "move on west."

"In America Moves West, the saga of American history is re-expressed and in places at least all the old color of American life before the country had become blasé and sophisticated is recreated." E. F. Brown
Current Hist 33:vi O '30 200w

"Robert E. Riegel has provided an invaluable documentation of the political and social influence of the West upon the nation." John Carter
+ Outlook 156:628 D 17 '30 80w

RIES, ESTELLE H. Mother wit. 301p il $2.50 Century
901 Civilization—History. Inventions—History 30-13257

The book pictures the daily life of our ancestors who lived without the conveniences of modern civilization—without clocks, coal, illuminants, money, soap, glass, etc.—and shows how mother wit has evolved the commonplaces and conveniences of today.

Books p14 Je 8 '30 100w

"A pleasing and satisfying volume for the curious, who like their information condensed and not too abstrusely worded."
+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '30 250w
Cleveland Open Shelf p109 Jl '30

" 'Adventures in ingenuity,' she calls these stages of progress from one achievement to the next. She tells the story of the successive victories of each line of these adventures with knowledge of how they came about and with admirable skill in making them breezy and interesting."
+ N Y Times p27 My 11 '30 400w
St Louis 28:210 S '30

RIGGS, LYNN. Iron dish. 63p $2 Doubleday, Doran
811 30-25656

"The poems in Lynn Riggs's first volume fall into two groups, one of which is concerned with 'this sharp incredible beauty', the other with 'the yellow calendulas and sun-baked patios of southern California and New Mexico.' "—New Repub

"The verses in The Iron Dish display an artistic feebleness like that in Mr. Riggs's play, Roadside. They have, however, a finish which Roadside lacks. Further, they are written with economy and a commendable lack of bombast. . . Certainly there is nothing objectionable in the volume. Neither is there any depth of thought or emotion. Mr. Riggs's poems remain, after much reading and reflection, precisely what they appeared at first—pleasant and well polished trifles." Eugene Armfield
— + Bookm 72:189 O '30 280w

"The compact lyric with the short line has seldom been used more expertly than in Lynn Riggs's poems. Emotion and intellect are very nicely balanced and the impact of the two has a perfect fusion. But these lyrics are not mere personal outcries, rather they are impersonal, brief but intense reflections of an emotion discovered in some high moment in life to clarify the meaning of human existence and experience." E. L. Walton
+ Books p28 D 7 '30 300w
Christian Century 48:29 Ja 7 '31 80w

"The surfaces of Lynn Riggs's poetry are clean and cool. One derives casual pleasure from the graceful gestures of his particular lyric gift. He has, however, given us little more than his quick, intelligent grasp of external design. It is not often that we find him committing himself beyond the expression of purely decorative effects. On occasions when he does cross the lines of his self-imposed limitations he is clear and vivid." Horace Gregory
+ — Nation 132:22 Ja 7 '31 280w

"In his highly decorative celebrations of beauty, Mr. Riggs is not easy to distinguish from five or six other young poets whose shining images have soon degenerated into a kind of lyric confectionery—brilliant, polished, but devoid of tone and, despite its neat epigrams, notably weak in concepts. . . Few of Mr. Riggs's poems employ his native Southwestern forms, colors and landscapes, but those that do are easily the most convincing and graceful essays in the volume." M. D. Zabel
— New Repub 65:25 N 19 '30 320w

"From 'The Iron Dish' it becomes apparent that he is one of the few younger Americans who has the true lyric gift. This gift is, fortunately, not marred by softness in thinking or in the choice of images, but is rather tempered by a (to use a word of which Mr. Riggs is a trifle overfond) brittle intellectuality. . . It is probable that if he continues to write verse, as he should, no matter how his talent matures and his technique advances, he will write no finer lyrics than a half dozen in this small volume." John Farrar
+ N Y Evening Post p4d O 11 '30 480w

"In 'The Iron Dish' Lynn Riggs gives some evidence of possible accomplishment in the future. He writes meticulously, though every once in a while he widely misses his effect. Interwoven with his own accent is a phantom accent from Emily Dickinson. The poet can, however, accomplish in his own right some extremely neat things, such as 'Admonition in Ivory' and 'Wonder,' and his Santa Fé poems glow with color." W. R. Benét
— + Sat R of Lit 7:270 O 25 '30 120w

RIGNANO, EUGENIO. Nature of life; [tr. by M. Mallinson]. (Int. library of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 168p $2.75 Harcourt [7s 6d Routledge]
570.1 Life (biology) [30-11960]

That organic life is purposive as distinguished from inorganic existence is the contention of

Professor Rignano in his study of the nature of vital phenomena.

Boston Transcript p4 D 3 '30 600w
New Statesman 35:130 My 3 '30 180w
St Louis 28:292 D '30

"Professor Rignano's book is difficult reading on account of the careful aridity with which most of it is expressed. His book is, of course, deserving of all respect, but can only be profitably criticized by and for specialists."
+ — Spec 144:870 My 24 '30 150w

"The critical chapters on the 'Nature of Life' are admirable, but we are bound to say that the constructive theory does not convince us."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1078 D 18 '30 1000w

RIHANI, AMEEN FARES. Arabian peak and desert; travels in Al-Yaman. 280p il $5 Houghton

915.3 Arabia—Description and travel

Mr Rihani, a Christian Syrian and a citizen of the United States, describes the Yaman, a particularly interesting section of Arabia,—its peoples, its history and its customs. This is Mr Rihani's third book upon modern Arabia.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 72:xix D '30 150w

"Mr. Rihani's descriptions of the Yaman and its peoples, its present and its past, are full of life and colour; and although the British Resident at Arden welcomed him without enthusiasm, and consented to his journey with reluctance, Mr. Rihani seems to have talked politics with discretion, and in the end to have won the respect of the native ruler and the thanks of the British authorities."
+ Sat R 150:456 O 11 '30 280w

"Mr. Rihani has a gift for description, and can make what he sees live for us in a few concise sentences, and generally his English is turned with grace and facility. Though Mr. Rihani has some shrewd observations to make on Eastern diplomacy and political intrigues, the main value of this volume (and its conspicuous charm) is the account it gives of a new country and of the customs and behaviour of its inhabitants."
+ — Spec 145:737 N 15 '30 350w
Times [London] Lit Sup p821 O 16 '30 700w

RIHANI, AMEEN FARES. Around the coasts of Arabia. 364p il $6 Houghton [21s Constable]

915.3 Arabia—Description and travel 30-26377

The author, by birth a Syrian Arab, now a resident of New York, tells the story of King Husein, who wanted to establish, with the aid of Great Britain, an Arabian empire, and who is now an exile in Cyprus. The districts of Arabia to which the author gives particular attention are Tihamah, Aden, Hadhram and Asir. He not only describes the countries and cities of Arabia, but gives interesting accounts of the various classes and types of people living in them.

Booklist 26:309 My '30

"There are many angles besides the political to Mr. Rihani's comprehensive book. In its pages the East and the West at once blend and conflict. The narrative abounds in strange exchanges of views."
Bookm 71:xvii Je '30 150w

"The language of the book is entertainingly conversational. It is simple, direct, realistic, with now and then a dip into philosophy and an indulgence of the poetic fancy. If here and there the phraseology is not exactly 'anglo-Saxon,' it nevertheless has a pleasant 'flavor' of its own." A. M. Rihbany
+ Books p12 Ag 24 '30 450w

"Mr. Rihani manages to pack into his pages a great many things which are not purely descriptive of Arabia. He finds time to get in many shrewd blows at the English; he moralizes, descants and apostrophizes, but all of it without committing the sin of dullness. He is not always quite accurate. And, not unnaturally, he does not altogether understand the deep and perennial conflict of policy between the two great British departments of State, the India Office and the Foreign Office, with regard to the Persian Gulf. But if the chef has occasionally mishandled his ingredients, the bill of fare as a whole is eminently palatable."
+ — Christian Science Monitor p9 Ap 12 '30 350w
Cleveland Open Shelf p104 Jl '30

"The book is full of interesting information on the little-known states of the eastern and Persian Gulf coasts."
+ Foreign Affairs 8:681 Jl '30 30w

"A narrative that is long, varied, often amusing, and interesting throughout. It reveals a familiarity with Arab customs, history, and religious cults, interspersed pleasantly with personal incidents and encounters. If there is a fault it is the author's tendency to become at times as flowery and expansive in his writing as the Arabs' speech." Sylva Norman
+ — Nation and Ath 46:805 Mr 15 '30 230w

"It is nearly two years since Mr. Rihani published his admirable account of Ibn Saoud and the Wahabis. The present book will not rank quite so high as its predecessor, we think, partly because of the lesser interest and importance of its subject-matter, partly because it tends to be rather more of a scrap-book. But if it is a scrap-book, the scraps are on the whole very good. Mr. Rihani has a lively style —with an inclination at times to be high-flown— and considerable descriptive power."
+ — New Statesman 34:473 Ja 18 '30 1200w

"A Syrian Arab by birth, now resident in New York, Mr. Rihani has made a singularly complete intellectual surrender to the land of his adoption. He approaches Arabia with the air of a Columbus. He describes local customs, food and so forth with precisely that mixture of naïve astonishment and good-humoured contempt which is the hall-mark of the American tripper. His style, however, is that of the American high-brow, at once affected and obscure; yet he seems to have a deliberate preference for splitting his infinitives, for no apparent cause, a trick which soon becomes irritating."
— Sat R 149:204 F 15 '30 200w
Spec 145:223 Ag 16 '30 400w

"Mr. Rihani is very informative and often provides historical summaries of the little-known wars, but at times he makes a slip."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p345 Ap 24 '30 1350w

RILEY, JAMES WHITCOMB. Letters; ed. by William Lyon Phelps. 349p il $5 Bobbs

B or 92 31-26110

"In collecting and editing the letters of James Whitcomb Riley, William Lyon Phelps has chosen and arranged with one purpose constantly in view. Well aware that only a small portion of the verse of the Hoosier poet has in it the seed of survival, Professor Phelps has striven throughout his volume less to display the poet than to make living the man. One relinquishes the pages with the feeling of having sat in the company of as kindly, as upright and as humane a person as one might hope to find atop this burdened earth, and to have listened, at least now and again, to moderately spritely conversation."—N Y Times

---

Booklist 27:205 Ja '31

"Those who enjoyed James Whitcomb Riley's verse will welcome this substantial volume of his letters, 'cause, as Riley would say, they're jes' as sweet and wholesome and sunny as the child-rhymes, although, especially in the epistles to Bill Nye, they may be a little more vigorous and profane. Nevertheless, in these letters Riley is before us in all his childlike tenderness; or, to be more exact, that tenderness that we call childlike, overlooking the fact that nine out of ten children are much tougher than those who write about them." Garreta Busey

RILEY, J. W.—Continued

Books p7 D 28 '30 750w

Boston Transcript p3 D 13 '30 320w

"Assuming that most Americans know Riley's verse in a vague sort of way, I advise them not to read Riley's letters. Let a vague, pleasant impression remain. Don't reread the verse. Don't read the letters. The disillusionment is too horrible to bear. It is not so much that the ideas Parrington saw stemming from Riley seem hopelessly uncritical, but that he was such a vacuous old fellow himself. These letters are as devoid of intellectual content as a drum. All they give us is a kindly man with a gift for a sort of rhyme and a wide and accurate knowledge of Hoosier dialect." C. H. Grattan

— Nation 131:655 D 10 '30 600w

"As a revelation of Riley's personality these letters collected by Professor Phelps are valuable. They show us a man who cared nothing for things of the mind, but who did have an abiding interest in making verses for the plain people. He had a wide and accurate knowledge of Hoosier dialect and a 'wholesome' humor. These letters have a heavy dust upon them which their intrinsic interest does nothing to scatter." C. H. Grattan

N Y Evening Post p4d D 6 '30 380w

N Y Times p2 N 2 '30 1150w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p9 N 4 '30 900w

"The letters reveal not only the beloved poet, but also the culture of a nation and a period. Riley's kindliness, optimism, humor, sentiment, mawkish taste in poetry, distrust of the sensual, and eager willingness to believe in and to over-praise the work of friends are perfectly characteristic of the American, artist or not, of his day. And inasmuch as Professor Phelps has many of the same qualities, he is the man to edit the letters. The letters are more than readable, they are delightful. Even if you were not brought up in the days when Riley's verses were a part of household speech, you will enjoy this book."

+ Outlook 156:548 D 3 '30 120w

RILEY, WOODBRIDGE. Meaning of mysticism. 102p $1.25 Smith, R.R.

149.3 Mysticism 30-11394

This brief study of mysticism first clears the subject of its confusion with the occult and shows what mysticism is and what it is not. The author then traces the ideas of the mystics from the Greeks to the Romans, thru the great mystics of the church, and shows the contributions of Germanic and Anglo-American mysticism.

" 'The Meaning of Mysticism' should serve as a valuable introduction to a field of thinking which may tomorrow be more highly esteemed than today, or even more usefully as a kind of reminder or chart for those who already have done some adventuring in the country with which it is concerned." Lorine Pruette

Books p12 Ag 31 '30 450w

"Dr. Riley has given concisely, and with amazing clarity, a resume of a philosophy which could profitably be traced in volumes many times the size of this one. He has blazed a straight path through the maze, and has managed, with the facts of history, to leave as well the true spirit of all mysticism: a vision of 'the light of nature within, and the light of nature without.' " P. E. R.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 26 '30 700w

Reviewed by W. K. Wright

Int J Ethics 41:131 O '30 320w

N Y Times p18 Jl 6 '30 330w

St Louis 28:201 S '30

Sat R of Lit 7:255 O 18 '30 500w

RILKE, RAINER MARIA. Journal of my other self; tr. by John Linton. 243p $3 Norton 30-30579

This autobiography of a mystical soul is in form a series of recollections of the author's life. It is a sort of shadow-picture of a boy growing up in the big ancestral German home, with many relatives around him, equally shadowy, and finally, of Malte Brigge in a room in Paris, a writer twenty-eight years old, remembering and reflecting on things. This is the first translation into English of a book regarded in Germany as a classic. The author, a poet, died in 1926.

"The prose of an authentic poet is sometimes as beautiful, as rich in divination, as his poems. In Rilke's case that is admirably true. His prose is as quiet, as delicately lovely as a golden autumn leaf lying on the water of a dark, unmoving pool. His subject matter is the stuff of poems and philosophy; love, death, folk-ways, inheritance, memories, ghosts. This ancient gold he has reworked and stamped with his own seal into a new and beautiful currency. . . The book closes with one of the greatest short stories ever written—an extended, poetic, reversed version of the parable of the Prodigal Son." Coley Taylor

+ Bookm 72:429 D '30 680w

"One wishes that the poet had thrown off all disguises and written this piece of prose frankly in the first person. As it is, the book confuses the reader by carrying him from Paris to Denmark and back again, introducing all manner of people who seem to have no excuse for being except the author's wish to present yet another kind of strangeness. . . The value of the book, which must not be denied, is in the extreme subtlety of emotion which the author reveals in exploring common events. He unites to the mystic's alert reverence, the psychologist's sensitive curiosity." Babette Deutsch

+ — Books p7 D 14 '30 600w

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 3 '31 500w

"It is a strange work: an autobiography, a journal, but never chronological. It reaches back from the present to memories of earliest childhood; moves forward again, then back. It makes no distinction between the inner and the outer worlds; the reader must divine for himself how much of what is set down is imagined and how much remembered, where reality ends and hallucination begins. There is no building tward a climax, no progression, no transition; episode and reverie succeed each other without warning. Separated events are constantly narrated as if the writer were resuming a prior narrative, and as if the reader already knew the necessary facts. The book passes through the mind like a series of uneasy dreams. 'The Journal of My Other Self' is too original and personal to fit into any established genre." Henry Hazlitt

Nation 131:679 D 17 '30 850w

"Rainer Maria Rilke is described as a mystic. But he is really a literary artist first of all, of unique power. He is a writer of highly imaginative, highly contemplative, prose fiction. . . It is his reflecting on the meanings of what he has seen that makes both the bulk and the worth of the book." Oakley Johnson

+ N Y Evening Post p5d D 6 '30 600w

Reviewed by Anita Moffet

N Y Times p14 D 28 '30 750w

"This book, his prose masterpiece, and, in this reviewer's opinion, a work of great beauty, is now put into English for the first time. It is an introspective journal of a not unfamiliar type. . . His work has that inward illumination which is often found in the work of incurable invalids, although, so far as we know, he was not one. Because of the fixity of his gaze, turned inward, the field of his vision is small."

+ Outlook 156:506 N 26 '30 300w

RINEHART, MARY (ROBERTS) (MRS STANLEY MARSHALL RINEHART). The door. 314p $1 Farrar [7s 6d Hodder]
30-10613

Elizabeth Jane Bell, middle-aged spinster, tells this story about the mysterious and well-planned murders centering about the members of her household. Sarah Giddings, family nurse, is the first victim; her obscure friend Florence Gunther is next. Because he is the possessor of a sword-cane with which the original murder was committed, Jim Blake, Elizabeth's cousin, is arrested and convicted on circumstantial evidence. Then come two more killings, and a mystery concerning a real will and a bogus will, plus a family skeleton, comes to light. A final shooting, and the position of a door in a hotel bedroom, are the clues that bring about the solution of this greatly complicated case.

Bookm 71:xx Je '30 70w

"The most exciting of the current bafflers, a work fairly stuffed with sanguinary ends, tantalizing clues, family skeletons, first-rate sleuthing and graceful English." Will Cuppy
+ Books p14 Mr 30 '30 280w

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 23 '30 280w

"Mrs. Rinehart has the delightful gift of writing about creepy things with the kind of insouciance that makes them alluring—amusing, almost—instead of grewsome."
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 My 31 '30 300w

"It is very easy to find a lot of things wrong with the story. It is certainly too long, too wordy as well as too cluttered up with nowise important action put in merely to make it more confusing. The final explanation is unnecessarily weak, implausible, and, what is worse, leaves several loose ends not accounted for though Mrs. Rinehart does not sin here in that respect so much as she did in her earlier 'The Red Lamp.' It is simply impossible to believe in the arch-criminal. When all this fault-finding has been done, however, there is this to be said for 'The Door': nobody who begins it is at all likely, barring acts of God, to leave it unfinished. He may hoot at its soft spots, he may be irritated by its old-fashioned cast but he will read it through." Dashiell Hammett
— + N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 5 '30 550w

"Once more Mary Roberts Rinehart has proved that she has the technique of the mystery story at her fingers' ends. Whether 'The Door' is better than 'The Circular Staircase' is a question for her readers to decide." Isaac Anderson
N Y Times p5 Mr 30 '30 550w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p11 Mr 31 '30 750w

"A very ingenious story, and though complex, not confusing. Marred slightly by the author's regrettable habit of hinting at the future, telling of events which won't happen for a month or two." W. R. Brooks
+ — Outlook 154:548 Ap 2 '30 130w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:40 My '30

Pratt p39 autumn '30

"A mystery novel that is well construoted, well sustained, and told with ease and grace."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:983 Ap 26 '30 80w

"It has everything a really good mystery needs. All the characters are introduced at the beginning, the situations and crimes are complicated but plausible. The narrative is smooth and at all times entertaining, and the solution, although not entirely satisfactory, is certainly well concealed." Eugene Reynal
+ Sat R of Lit 6:997 Ap 26 '30 380w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 30 '30 200w

"An enjoyable book, written with some vigour and charm. . . We have to accept a set of circumstances somewhat improbable, but having done so, the story moves forward excitingly."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p517 Je 19 '30 150w

RIPLEY, CLEMENTS. Devil drums. 313p $2 Brewer
30-10077

"Mongolia is the setting of this adventure story. It concerns itself with Conn Scott, hard-boiled American ex-cavalry lieutenant, Vera Kharkova, the well educated but ferocious daughter of the Free People, and what happened when they escaped from the hunghutzes, joined Garine and his troop of wild Mongols, and rode to Ta Kure, to take the Chinese High Commissioner's treasure away from him."—Outlook

"Mr. Ripley provides the story with sufficient local color to make it continuously picturesque, so why worry about whether the hero is one of nature's noblemen or a dangerous crook?" Will Cuppy
+ Books p10 Jl 6 '30 130w

"Mr. Ripley makes his story convincing and vivid, with action that just gallops along, and characters in keeping with the wildness of the plot."
+ Boston Transcript p2 My 21 '30 300w

"Mr. Clements Ripley has done it again. 'Devil Drums' is a lusty, swirling, stirring and immensely refreshing adventure story, a worthy successor to the author's recent 'Dust and Sun.' . . The plot of 'Devil Drums' is a bit stale. The situations have been sadly worn by dozens of other authors. But these things hardly matter. In 'Devil Drums' there is competence on every page."
+ N Y Times p24 My 4 '30 380w

"One of the best adventure stories we have read in a long time." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 154:668 Ap 23 '30 140w

RIPLEY, SHERMAN, ed. Beyond; an anthology of immortality. 171p $2.50 Appleton

808.81 Poetry—Collections. Immortality—Poetry
30-25855

An anthology of poems on death and immortality selected from poets both ancient and modern.

"All times and tongues are represented in this collection. The doubters as well as the believers are present. The jury is not packed to bring in a verdict for the orthodox faith. But the composite picture that all the poets together produce is one of hope. If the fact of physical death has been the first and greatest stimulus to philosophy, so has death and the desire to transcend it been the stimulus of much great poetry. The best of it is here." W. E. G.
Christian Century 47:1387 N 12 '30 250w

"A number of good poems are included. But we've read almost all of them before." W. R. Benét
— Sat R of Lit 7:288 N 1 '30 80w

RIPPY, JAMES FRED. Rivalry of the United States and Great Britain over Latin America (1808-1830). (Albert Shaw lectures on diplomatic hist., 1928) 322p $2.75 Johns Hopkins

973.5 United States—Foreign relations—Great Britain. Great Britain—Foreign relations—United States. United States—Foreign relations—Spanish America. Spanish America—Foreign relations—United States. Great Britain—Foreign relations—Spanish America. Spanish America—Foreign relations—Great Britain
29-5260

For descriptive note see Annual for 1929.

"Professor Rippy's book is a scholarly contribution to the literature of diplomatic history. In addition, it furnishes an illuminating background for present-day analysis of the political and economic relations of the United States and Great Britain in Latin America." John Donaldson
+ Ann Am Acad 147:208 Ja '30 800w

RIPPY, J. F.—Continued
"While it is clearly evident that the volume deals with an historical period which has been widely exploited, the author has introduced a new and wider angle of approach and has synthesized many pertinent facts obtained from a study of the sources in the British Public Record Office and the United States Department of State." A. C. Wilgus
+ Hist Outlook 21:131 Mr '30 230w
St Louis 27:261 S '29

RISLEY, MRS ELEANOR (DE LA VERGNE). Road to Wildcat. 266p il $2.50 Little 917.5 South—Description and travel. Mountain whites (Southern states) 30-10945

The author and her husband, accompanied by their dog, with their small equipment in a marvelous homemade cart named Sisyphus, spent several months tramping and camping in the southern mountains of the United States. These sketches are concerned with their experiences, both grave and gay, during the trip.

Booklist 27:23 S '30

"Mrs. Risley gained much besides strength in this wandering journey, as these chapters reveal. She came in sympathetic contact with the lives of the mountaineers, and has set down her impressions with a simplicity which makes the book very much alive. She has caught the pathos of their thoughts. And she has a good homely philosophy with which they make the best of things, the earthly humor which gives flavor to their thoughts. And she has a good ear for the mountain dialect, which she carefully transcribes."
+ Books p17 Ag 24 '30 200w
Boston Transcript p8 My 10 '30 930w
Cleveland Open Shelf p103 Jl '30

"We regret to say that 'The Road to Wildcat,' for all the interest that attaches to the material on which it is based, does not make the most of that material. Mrs. Risley has not Percy Mackaye's faculty for making these hill people stand out distinctly. She tells us that the men are stalwart and the women beautiful; but we do not see the beauty. One wonders if perhaps the writer has overdone the matter of the dialect. The pages require a degree of concentration on the printed word that perhaps blinds one to the virtues of the book."
— + N Y Times p4 Ap 20 '30 900w

"The language of the mountaineers, their rich, strange seventeenth century English is not so rhythmically treated as by Maristan Chapman or Lucy Furman. But the character sketches, the brief, vivid accounts of incidents, sad, melodramatic, and absurd are lovely."
+ — Outlook 154:589 Ap 9 '30 150w

"A graceful, sprightly style, an unerring flair for the vivid and interesting, and an effective use of mountain dialect all conspire to make this a most realistic and absorbing account of these backwoods people of eastern America." N. N. Puckett
+ Sat R of Lit 6:1088 My 31 '30 480w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 27 '30 450w

RISNER, HENRY CLAY. Pinnacles of personality. 344p $3.50 (18s) Putnam
914 Europe—Description and travel. Reconstruction (European war) 29-29716

A narrative of the experiences which came to the author while he was traveling around Europe in the years after the war. For a year after the war he was associated with the American army of occupation, where he was special speaker to the men in Coblentz. Following that he traveled in England, Germany, Russia, visited the cities of Paris, Rome, Vienna, Prague, and made many friends among both rich and poor.

Reviewed by Stephen Bloore
Books p10 Ag 31 '30 380w
Boston Transcript p1 Mr 1 '30 600w

"This volume is written in much the way its author talked to the 'doughboys' in France and Germany. It is a mixture of reminiscences, travel experiences, casual meetings with all sorts of persons, interviews with men high in office, letters to and from great leaders in war and peace, illustrative 'stories' and anecdotes. And yet, it is made worth-while by reason of the author's complete and deep sincerity of purpose."
+ N Y Times p4 Ap 13 '30 750w

"Dr. Risner had the knack of getting to know celebrated Europeans and talking generalities with them. His aptness in quotation, anecdote and moral reflection has helped him to make a book of his experiences."
Times [London] Lit Sup p518 Je 19 '30 100w

RITCHIE, ALICE. Occupied territory. 228p $2
² Harcourt [7s 6d Hogarth] 30-23555

The story is set among a group of British officers in the occupied territory of Germany after the war. The colonel's daughter comes from a convent school to join her father and falls in love, a first intense love, with a handsome young officer. Quite wordlessly on the part of both, her love and the fact that it is unrequited are revealed, and the officer is sent away by her father.

"There is delicacy and distinction in her writing. . . In such a story much depends upon the ability of the author to uncover the vital moments of emotion, and in this Miss Ritchie does not disappoint us." L. L. Irvine
+ Nation and Ath 46:866 Mr 22 '30 130w

"When Miss Ritchie has had a little more experience she will probably write really well. . . For Miss Ritchie is writing in the right direction."
+ — New Statesman 34:810 Mr 29 '30 450w

"The story is fairly interesting and would be more so if the characters had more vitality; it is difficult to be very interested in them, which is a pity, for much care has been given to the story and especially to the psychology of these same characters. The style may perhaps contribute something to this, for it is indefinite and rather jerky and gives the impression of straining after an effect it does not quite create."
— + Sat R 149:398 Mr 29 '30 120w

"In her first book, The Peacemakers, Miss Ritchie proved her worth as an observer and in her second she displays the same careful faculty. She has a knack of describing the small details of life, and at the same time keeping her readers aware of the larger issues. . . Miss Ritchie writes with an exquisite simplicity about this collection of English people: there is not one false note in a book so quiet that one may say of the author, 'her strength is to be still.' "
+ Spec 144:792 My 10 '30 130w

"We are sorry for Christina. But we are more absorbed in Miss Ritchie herself; the occupation of the fertile territory of her mind is well worth a journey."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p294 Ap 3 '30 550w

RITCHIE, JOHN MACGREGOR. Concerning the blind. 244p il $1.85 Am. foundation for the blind [7s 6d Oliver]
362.4 Blind—Asylums and education. Blind —Printing and writing systems [30-22333]

A historical sketch of organized effort on behalf of the blind of Great Britain, and some thoughts concerning the mental life of the blind from birth. An account of printing systems for the blind is included.

Booklist 27:94 N '30
New Statesman 35:88 Ap 26 '30 40w

"It is a historical sketch of the organized effort to help the blind, giving special attention to the work of teachers of the blind, and some analysis of methods, and of the advantages of the various kinds of type which have been used to enable the blind to read. It is certainly a book which should be added to the library of all engaged in this work, and concludes with some reflections on the mental life of the blind, which remove many of the misapprehensions of those who can see, and outlines roughly some of the conclusions of modern research."

+ Spec 145:418 S 27 '30 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p419 My 15 '30 400w

RITTENHOUSE, JESSIE BELLE (MRS CLINTON SCOLLARD). Secret bird. 99p $2 Houghton

811 30-10498

Short, graceful lyrics of love and nature written in the conventional manner, grouped under the following descriptive headings: The happy earth, The drift of years, A pier in the foam, The dark night, Challenge, The silver bird, My Italy, Memorial, Songs of an old house.

Booklist 26:388 Jl '30

"These verses may very well be compared with the song of a bird. They have the same air of being a release of emotion, and their notes vary within a narrow range; the accent, the rhythm, is constant. It is a gentle voice, singing quietly of love."

+ Bookm 71:viii Je '30 80w

Reviewed by Ruth Lechlitner

Books p14 Ag 24 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 21 '30 300w

Cath World 131:754 S '30 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p105 Jl '30

"It will probably be the feeling of most that in many particulars American poetry, which Miss Rittenhouse did so much to revive, has gone beyond its solicitous nurse. But it is never likely to exceed in gentle purity her own reticent contributions. Seldom is it given to one and the same individual to be both guide and master. Jessie B. Rittenhouse will always be remembered as the guide who engaged in a work of salvation at a moment of need."

N Y Times p18 Ap 27 '30 220w

"Miss Rittenhouse has a delicate feeling for natural beauty, but her lines are sometimes padded and her phraseology is often commonplace." Granville Hicks

— N Y World p10m My 4 '30 50w

"This book goes deeper than her others—it shelves suddenly into deep water, like a shallow beach. She longs for stronger art, stronger faith. Few poets, even great ones, have spoken more barely, more honestly, than she speaks here. When a soul can be seen so plainly through them, even inadequate verses take on dignity." L. T. Nicholl

+ Outlook 155:147 My 28 '30 110w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:73 O '30

St Louis 28:298 D '30

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 27 '30 100w

RIVAL, PAUL. Madcap queen; the story of Marguerite of Navarre; tr. from the French by Marvin McCord Lowes. 266p $3.50 Putnam

B or 92 Marguerite de Valois, queen consort of Henry IV, king of France 30-15760

Marguerite of Navarre, daughter of Catherine de Medici, and the sister of four kings, began her checkered, colorful, and romantically mad career when her wedding to the low-born Henry of Navarre was celebrated, at the time of the massacre of St Bartholomew. Marguerite avenged herself by taking one lover after another, most of whom—thru political intrigue, counterplot, and jealousy—came to a premature end on the guillotine or at the hands of assassins. M. Rival follows the course of Marguerite's career thru all its triumphs and vicissitudes up to her lonely death in 1615.

"No more colorful character than Marguerite of Valois, queen of Navarre, ever lived, but in his biography of her P. Rival has seen fit to paint the lily. This riotous record of lust, debauchery, intrigue and gore will please no sober historian; its appeal will be to those who are graduating, or resting, from the bloodier mystery stories."

— Bookm 72:vi S '30 80w

Books p15 Ag 3 '30 100w

"With characteristic Gallic precision of detail and touch, M. Rival paints verbally what appears to be an uncommonly life-like portrait of Marguerite of Navarre, born Valois. Without illusions regarding either her or any of the historical characters of the background against which her figure is projected, he permits his readers none. M. Rival makes clear also the good lying in the heart of this French Lucretia Borgia, the long list of whose lovers proves the catholicity of her taste as well as the license that at times shocked a not easily shocked age." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 21 '30 950w

"M. Rival gives us an excellent picture of Catherine de Medici and her brood: Henry, Charles, Francis and Margaret; of the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and of the numerous plots and counterplots in which the Valois kings were involved." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Je 7 '30 100w

"Taking the picture as a whole, there is no denying that P. Rival has limned her well and truly. The gravest injustice he does her is to omit all mention of the 'Memoirs' she wrote at Usson. The omission is rather extraordinary when one considers that it is by her memoirs that she is best known to posterity. But the woman as she lived must have been very much as she is here drawn—and that is a good deal to say of any biography." H. L. Matthews

+ — N Y Times p10 O 19 '30 220w

Times [London] Lit Sup p708 S 11 '30 650w

RIVERA, DIEGO. Frescoes; introd. by Ernestine Evans. 144p il $10 Harcourt

747 Mural painting and decoration. Decoration and ornament 29-29116

Ninety reproductions in black and white of the frescoes, murals, sketches, etc. of Diego Rivera, the Mexican artist. An introduction by Ernestine Evans tells the story of the artist's life and describes his work.

Booklist 26:228 Mr '30

"We are indebted to Miss Ernestine Evans for this first collection of photographs of the murals and an interesting introduction to the artist. The reproductions are very fine and preserve to a degree the values of the subdued grays, brick reds, silvery greens and deep blues of the paintings. The color is secondary, for Rivera emphasizes structure and rhythm. It is a very timely and valuable book." K. A. Porter

+ Books p5 D 22 '29 690w

Nation 129:726 D 11 '29 70w

"The introduction by Ernestine Evans adds very appreciably to the book's importance. It is a clearly and sympathetically prepared account of Rivera's career to date." E. A. Jewell

+ N Y Times p16 Ja 19 '30 280w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p11 D 18 '29 600w

"It is regrettable that all the reproductions are not as good as the best ones, and that there is not at least one colored plate, for the book is otherwise well-made. Miss Evans's foreword includes a sympathetic account of her friend's artistic training, his revolutionary activities, and his coming-of-age as a painter who speaks a new language. As the proponent of a political creed he is no less effective than as a creator of magnificent illustration and decoration." Winslow Adams

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:671 Ja 25 '30 300w

Reviewed by Frederick Morton

Theatre Arts Mo 14:87 Ja '30 350w

RIVES, AMELIE. See Troubetzkoy, A.

ROBECK, NESTA DE. See De Robeck, N.

ROBERTS, CARL ERIC BECHHOFER (EPHESIAN, pseud.). Corn in Egypt (Eng title: Coat of many colours). 318p $2.50 Bobbs [7s 6d Lane]

Joseph, patriarch—Fiction 29-20434

"In 'Corn in Egypt' Mr. Roberts sets forth the Biblical story of Joseph, his coat of many colors, his brothers who sell him to the Egyptians, his years of service in Potiphar's palace, his steady rise to fame and fortune. Joseph is shown as clever and handsome, slightly unscrupulous where it will serve his own or his master's best interest, ambitious and egotistical."—Books

"The story and characterizations are deftly handled, yet there persists a 'made to order' impression about the whole book. . . As a story the book is lacking in suspense. It is too familiar. The burden on the novelist was to make his hero so vital and sympathetic a character as to enthrall the reader quite apart from the action of the story and this Mr. Roberts has failed to do."

— Books p21 Ja 26 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p10 N 16 '29 330w

"For those who like their ancient lore left untouched 'Corn in Egypt' may seem devastating. The author tells his tale skillfully and tellingly, but some may prefer a gentler, more poetic treatment of Joseph, the dreamer."

— + N Y Times p28 N 17 '29 300w

"Starting with the thesis that human beings are exactly the same to-day as they were several thousand years ago, it is rather easy to make of the story of Joseph and his brethren a success epic of which no magazine in the field would need to be ashamed. Mr. Bechhofer-Roberts does not write in the manner of Horatio Alger. His is more the style of Erskine without so much dialogue. He has built his story up in the same graceful manner, and it is every bit as good fun."

N Y World p10m D 1 '29 280w

"A most enjoyable book, vivid to the eye and satisfying to the mind. Its defect is that 'Ephesian,' like many modern novelists, is apt to condescend to his characters. With the exception of the King of Egypt, the figures of the story emerge shorn of much of the dignity with which the Bible invested even the meanest of them." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 149:204 F 15 '30 100w

"The delicate task of handling a subject that has become interwoven with the religious belief of a large part of the race is achieved without undue sentimentality or undue ridicule. Mr Roberts endeavors with much success to present the characters of this drama merely as men and women, animated by human passions of love, hate, jealousy, greed, charity, enmity, or justice according to the measure of their enlightenment and circumstances."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 12 '30 420w

Times [London] Lit Sup p98 F 6 '30 700w

ROBERTS, CECIL. Havana bound. 411p $2.50 Appleton [7s 6d Hodder]

30-24246

On a ship bound for Havana are Gerald Brodie, nephew of the fabulously wealthy Prince Cravelli, whom he proposes to visit; an exotically beautiful Spanish dancer, La Cubana; and a German diamond merchant, Herr von Müller. During the voyage the latter mysteriously disappears thru a porthole. Once on his uncle's estate in Cuba, affairs move at a rapid pace for Gerald, and he finds his uncle, the girl he is to marry, and himself in grave danger from a conspiracy against them. Tragedy commingles with a happy ending for the tale.

Bookm 72:viii N '30 80w

"Whether you classify this colorful item as mystery-nautical, nautical-adventurous-tropical or hit-and-run travel, you are sure to find entertainment in its lively style and still livelier matter." Will Cuppy

+ Books p18 O 5 '30 150w

Boston Transcript p2 O 22 '30 1000w

Cleveland Open Shelf p149 D '30

"In this book all the conventional characters and situations of mystery and of the sort of romance termed 'high' are held together by a web of intelligence which saves them from banality. The author is frankly 'pretending.'"

+ N Y Times p22 O 5 '30 180w

"A lively story this, told with a light touch and an agreeable wit, painting in warm colours, as it does, life in the Cuban capital, and giving fascinating descriptions of Caribbean scenery. But, at the same time, lightly told as the tale is, it touches the deeps of tragedy—spectacular tragedy, that is to say, of the sort that is so common in the tropical latitudes of South America."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p701 S 4 '30 420w

ROBERTS, CECIL. Pamela's spring song. 372p $2.50 Appleton [7s 6d Hodder]

30-1699

Pamela Kemp, London typist, inherits just enough money to take her on a glorious vacation in the Austrian Tyrol. She becomes a paying guest at Schloss Edelstein. Pamela's Tyrolese adventure brings to her health and beauty and romance.

Booklist 26:314 My '30

Books p18 Mr 2 '30 230w

"While highly romantic, and set in a regular McCutcheon setting, there is nothing fanciful about the story, and the reader who can't get a thrill of pleasure following Pamela's adventures on her vacation in the Tyrol is as devoid of romance as Pamela believed herself to be when she first was admonished to 'Spend Spring in the Tyrol.'"

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 1 '30 350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p64 Ap '30

N Y Times p25 F 9 '30 200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:32 Ap '30

"Such light-hearted, enjoyable novels disarm criticism from the start; but it does seem that Mr. Cecil Roberts transformed Pamela, the typist, into Pamela, the complete woman of the cultured world, a little too quickly. Still the fairy godmother in 'Cinderella' did not waste much time, and 'Pamela's Spring Song' is in the honourable tradition of that great story."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p653 Ag 22 '29 300w

Wis Lib Bul 26:68 F '30

ROBERTS, ELIZABETH MADOX. Great meadow. 338p $2.50 Viking press [7s 6d Cape, J.]

30-7676

Fusing the art of poetry with her prose, and the art of the weaver of tapestries with her character portraiture, Miss Roberts, as in The Time of Man, works again with native Kentucky types. The Great Meadow tells the heroic story of early pioneer life. Berk Jarvis and his wife Diony are members of a pilgrimage from Virginia into the wild, new land surrounding the stockade at Harrod's fort in Kentucky—the "great meadow." These pioneer homebuilders suffer Indian attack, even torture and death at the hands of the red men; they know all the vicissitudes of hunger and the most primitive conditions of life. Diony, as a type of the pioneer woman, bears her child, marries again when convinced that Berk is dead, and on his return is forced to make, according to primitive law, a choice between him and her new husband and baby. This, the external action of the novel, is less compelling in significance than the mental and spiritual reactions of the characters to their environment and to each other.

Reviewed by Mary Ross
Atlantic Bookshelf p30 Ap '30 320w
Booklist 26:314 My '30

"Miss Roberts has a keen sense for color and an exquisite feeling for nature, a feeling which she expresses with freshness and poetic imagery. In her writing there are neither solecisms nor clichés. In short, she is both a craftsman and an artist. Then again she has an admirable historic sense. In The Great Meadow we feel the country, the time and the people—that is, the people taken generically. Moreover the writing is vivid and the dialogue always racy and often eloquent without being rhetorical. Why is it then, that judged by the highest standards, The Great Meadow fails to satisfy? The answer is that which must be given to similar questions asked about the work of most modern American novelists. Admirable as many of them are in the non-essentials of the novel, they fail when brought to the supreme test—that of vividness and inevitability of personality." Grenville Vernon
+ — Bookm 71:97 Mr '30 900w

"Here again is the Elizabeth Madox Roberts of 'The Time of Man,' drawing in epic strokes the people of her native Kentucky. . . 'The Great Meadow' is strong and stirring poetry." Mary Ross
+ Books p1 Mr 2 '30 1150w

Reviewed by H. F. McDade
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 29 '30 1300w

"There is no question about the epic beauty of 'The Great Meadow.' It is like one of those large pictorial tapestries that take one so by the spirit back into the days of their weaving. It has color and majesty and beauty caught forever. . . It is a fine, a beautiful, a noble piece of work." Fanny Butcher
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 Mr 8 '30 850w

"Her control over words is unusual, her use of them unique. She visualizes sharply, not only the visible but the invisible. Her descriptions of men and women—except Diony—are all external, but acutely significant of the being within. There is an effect about her scenes of being in space, set in the midst of a great transparency, far-off but lucid. It is, we suppose, the effect produced by one who is a poet even when she writes in prose."
+ Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 15 '30 580w

Cleveland Open Shelf p79 My '30

"Miss Roberts tells [the story] bravely, in rich detail, with insight, with tenderness, with a kind of slow candor that is very comforting in a day of books that tell their tale too swiftly. She never raises her voice. . . If Miss Roberts has a serious fault, it is an evenness of tempo that descends sometimes to monotony. She gives herself so unreservedly to understatement as to lose often the force of her remarks." Dorothy Van Doren
+ — Nation 130:300 Mr 12 '30 900w

"Diony's girlhood, her daily life on her father's farm, with each season bringing its ordained task, weaving linen during the winter months for use in the summer and spinning wool in the summer ready for the winter, is exquisitely described. These chapters are a joy to read; but even more memorable are the pictures of the almost mediæval life in Harrod's Fort. 'The Great Meadow' is an event in today's literary history. If it is comparable at all, it might be compared with Knut Hamsun's 'Growth of the Soil.' Even then, Miss Robert's vision is nearer to the heart of truth. Her writing shows love for the 'lucky' word, and there is genius in the economy with which she gains her effects." K. C. Tomlinson
+ Nation and Ath 47:738 S 13 '30 400w

"Like all of Miss Roberts' work, 'The Great Meadow' is, fundamentally, lyricism. Again Miss Roberts has taken the common speech of the Scotch Irish and the English who pushed over the blue wall of the southern Appalachians to fill the coves and lands beyond, and again she has beaten it into her own delightful rhythm, doing for it something analogous to what John Millington Synge did for the English of 'The Playboy' and 'Deirdre of the Sorrows.' Her prose is unencumbered with the words that an industrial order has brought into the language; it retains the pristine freshness of the Elizabethan songs. One does not have to be a philologist to realize that Miss Roberts' sentences are largely from the Saxon side of the tongue." John Chamberlain
New Repub 62:197 Ap 2 '30 700w

"Miss Elizabeth Madox Roberts can write, and has a beautiful gift of description. In The Great Meadow there are passages describing the scenery, both of Virginia itself and of the road travelled by the pioneers, which catch one's breath with their delicacy. Also, she is a very careful writer; she has studied her period with affection; and without pretending to specialist knowledge one may feel confident that her dialogue and her 'properties' are correct. The only thing that her book lacks—and, unfortunately, it is a very great lack—is the essence of the pioneering spirit, the real breathless excitement of the unending struggle with the wilderness, with the Indians, with famine, and death."
+ — New Statesman 35:474 Jl 19 '30 230w

"Working in material that is native to the core, master of a style perfect for the uses to which it is put, Elizabeth Madox Roberts is giving to her work a universal value. For no writer of prose fiction in America does the future seem to hold less of uncertainty." J. D. A.
+ N Y Times p1 Mr 2 '30 1500w

"The Great Meadow has a double virtue. It may be read as the finest type of historical novel, vividly dependent upon action, setting and character; powerful in sentiment; dramatic in quality; richly colored; and written in a style deep and sensuous as warm grass; then it may be read as a woman poet's revery upon the past of her people, a lovely sing-song chant upon the old theme of the pioneer woman's life. All the qualities of her earlier books are heightened in this novel by the flowing sweep of the magnificent story." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 154:386 Mr 5 '30 500w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 35:32 Ap '30
Pratt p42 summer '30

"The style is lifted above the plain prose of narrative into a poetical diction which is often homely but sometimes almost a chant. The problem of dialogue, always troublesome in historical romance, she has solved by taking what seems to be the living speech of the Kentucky hills, with strong emphasis upon its archaisms and its racy figurativeness. . . Miss Roberts's first book, 'The Time of Man' was less organized than 'The Great Meadow.' It was simpler, more natural, less complete. There was a vigor of beauty in it which impressed all its readers. If there is a criticism to be made of 'The Great Meadow' it is that some of this vigor has gone. The artifice is much more able, the craftsmanship finer, the organization far more subtle and complete. But the book for all its perfection goes a little dead." H. S. Canby
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:821 Mr 15 '30 750w

"I feel there is something lacking in the book as a whole. I am sorry not to be able to be enthusiastic and feel I am missing something by not being able to accept the hospitality of this book. Yet, try as I did, and admire Miss Roberts' work though I do, for me Diony demains a woman who lives an exciting life in a dull way." B. E. Todd
Spec 145:106 Jl 19 '30 180w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 13 '30 750w

"Here is history become poetry, lit with the high hopes and sustained by the simple endurance that made the conquest of the wilderness possible." Mary Ross
+ Survey 64:405 Ag 1 '30 300w

"It is not easy to convey the rhythm and pattern of this admirable narrative, all the more

ROBERTS, E. M.—Continued

